William Rowlie, and their company of England, to come in shippes into this kingdome, and that merchants, William Garrard and his company, haue required of vs that we would grant and licence them to come into our country of Dwina, with all kinde of wares at will, to our citie of Mosco, and to all our castles in our kingdomes, we for our sisters sake Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, haue licenced her merchants, William Garrard and his company to passe in shippes to our kingdome of Colmogro, and to the land of Dwina, and to all other our inheritances in the North parts, with all kinde of wares to our citie of Mosco, and to all castles and townes in our kingdome. And sir William Garrard and his company desired of vs, that we would grant them licence to passe to our inheritance of Cassan and Astracan, and into our inheritance of Nouogrod the great, and to our inheritance of Liffe land to Narue and Dorpe, and to other our castles and townes of Liffe land, with all kinde of wares, and the trade to be without custome, which request we haue granted to sir William Garrard and his company, and haue giuen them licence to passe to our inheritance of Cassan and Astracan, and Nouogrod the great, and into our inheritance of Liffe land, Narue and Dorpe, and other places of our inheritance in Liffe land with all kinde of wares, to buy, barter and sell at will, without custome: and what wares soeuer they bring out of England, or out of any other countrey, needfull or necessary, that they shall bring all those wares needfull or necessary to our treasury, & those wares there to be opened, and then to take out of the same, such wares as shalbe needfull for our treasury, and the rest being deliuered againe, to sell and barter at their pleasure, and to sell none of the fine wares before they be seene by our chanceler, except soaping clothes, and other wares not meete for our treasurie: and when our chanceler will send our treasure out of our treasurie with them, they shall take it with them, and so sell and barter it for wares meete for our treasurie, and bring it to our treasurie, and they to take no other mens wares to barter or sell with them, nor yet our people to buy or sell for them their wares: and if those English merchants do desire to passe out of our kingdome of Astracan to Boghar, Shamakie, Chaday, or into any other countreys, or els to goe into their owne country, then they to take their treasure with them, and to barter and sell it for wares necessarie for our treasure, and to bring it and deliuer it to our chanceler, and when they come backe againe to our inheritance of Cassan and Astracan, or to any other of our castles and townes, that then our captaine of Cassan and Astracan, and all other our people of charge shall not holde them, but with speed let them passe without taking custome of them, or their wares, and without opening or looking vpon them in any wise: and when they haue not our treasure with them, that then like wise no custome shall be taken of them nor their wares to be seene of any man.

And likewise we haue granted them to buy and sell in all our kingdomes and castles, with all kinde of wares: and we haue also licenced them, that when those English merchants doe desire to buy and sell with our merchants wholly together, that they shall haue libertie so to do wholly together: and they that doe desire to sell their owne wares by retaile in their owne house, that then they sell it in their owne house by retaile to our people, & other strangers, as they can agree: and weights and arshends to be kept in their house with our seale, and they themselues to barter and sell their owne wares: and no Russe merchant in Mosco, or any other place in our kingdome, not to sell for them any wares, nor to buy or barter any wares for them, nor couler any strangers goods. And whereas those merchants of England, sir William Garrard and his company, do desire to sell their wares at Colmogro, Dwina, Vologda, Yeraslaue, Costrum, and in Nouogrod the lower, Cassan, Astracan, great Nouogrod, Plasko, Narue, Dorpe, and in other our townes and castles, they shall haue their will to sell it: and of their wares of England and Russe land no custome shall be taken, neither they nor their wares shalbe stayed in any place: and when they depart out of Mosco, to aduertise our chancelor thereof, and not to giue any note or inuentory of any kinde of their wares they carry away: and when the English merchants, sir William Garrard and his companie, doe come vpon the sea, and by misfortune haue their shippes cast away vpon those coasts of the North parts, then we will their goodes to be sought out with truth, and to be deliuered to sir William Garrard and his company, which as then shall be found in our countrey: and if that sir William Garrardes company be not in the Mosco nor in our countrey, then we will and command that those goodes of theirs shall be layd vp in a place of safegard vntill such time as the said sir William Garrard or his company come to demand the same: and then at their comming wee will that it shall be deliuered. And whereas heeretofore wee haue giuen sir William Garrard and his companie in this our kingdome of Mosco, the new castle by the church of S. Maxim, behinde the market, they shall there still holde their house as heeretofore wee haue giuen them paying no custome for the same: and wee also doe licence them to keepe one Russe porter or two, or els of their owne country, and those porters shall dwell with them, and not sell for them them, nor barter, nor buy for them: And alſo I haue graunted them to buy a houſe at Vologda, and at Colmogro, or in any other place, where they can chooſe for themſelues any good harbour, and there they to ſet vp thoſe houſes in thoſe places at their owne charges: and in Vologda or the other houſes to keepe two or three porters of their owne, or els two or three Ruſſes, and their wares to be layed vp in thoſe houſes, and to ſel their owne wares at wil: and the porters without them to ſell none of their wares, neither yet to buy any for them. And our officers of Colmogro, and Dwina, and of other our caſtles and townes ſhall not looke ouer their wares, nor take any cuſtome thereof: neither ſhall thoſe Engliſh Marchants ſir William Garret, and his company be iudged by any of them. And when the Engliſh Marchants ſhall ſende from our kingdome their owne people into their owne Countrey by lande ouer other kingdomes whatſoeuer they be, they may without ware ſend their owne people at their pleaſure. And when any matter of lawe doeth fall out in their trade of Marchandiſe, then they ſhall be iudged by our Chancellours, and lawe ſhalbe done with equitie betwixt our people and them. And when they cannot be iudged by law, they then ſhalbe tried by lots, and whoſe lot is firſt taken out, he ſhall haue the right: And if it happen any of thoſe Marchants to haue any matter of lawe in any other part of our Dominions for trade of Marchants, then our Captaines. Iudges and chiefe officers, ſhall heare the matter, and adminiſter Juſtice with equitie and trueth, and where lawe can take no place to be tried by lots, and his lot that is firſt taken out to haue the right, and for their matters of lawe no cuſtome to bee payde.

Furthermore, wee for our ſiſters ſake Elizabeth haue graunted, that none beſide ſir William Garret and his Companie, out of what kingdome ſoeuer it bee, England or other, ſhall not come in trade of Marchandiſe nor otherwiſe to Colmogro, nor to the Riuer Ob nor within Wardhouſe, nor to Petzora, nor Cola, nor Mezen, nor to the Abbey Petchingam, nor to the Iſlands of Sallawye, nor to any mouth of the riuer of Dwina, nor to any part of the North Countrey of our coaſt: and if any Marchant, out of what Countrey ſoeuer it be, doe come with ſhippe or ſhipp's, buſſes, or any other kinde of veſſell to any of our harbors, within all our North parts, wee will, that then the people, and goods, ſhippe or ſhippes, ſhalbe confiſcate, and forfeited to vs the Emperour and great Duke.

Giuen in our kingdome and houſe of Moſco, the yeere from the beginning of the world 7000. threeſcore and ſirteene, in the moneth of September, and in the 34. yeere of our raigne, and in our conqueſt of Caſſan 16, and in our conqueſt of Aſtracan 15.

The Ambaſſage of the right worſhipfull M. Thomas Randolfe Eſquire, to the Emperour of Ruſsia, in the yeere 1568. Briefly written by himſelfe.

In this voyage went Thomas Bannister, and Geofrey Duckett, for their voyage into Perſia.

THe 22. day of June, in the yeere of our Lord 1568. I went aboorde the Harry, lying in the roade at Harwich with my companie, being to the nomber of 40. perſons or there about: of which the one halfe were Gentlemen, deſirous to ſee the world.

Within one dayes ſayling, we were out of the ſight of all lande, and following our courſe directly North, till wee came to the North Cape, wee ſailed for the ſpace of 12. dayes with a proſperous winde, without tempeſt or outrage of ſea: Hauing compaſſed the North Cape, we directed our courſe ſlatte Southeaſt, hauing vpon our right hande Norway, Wardhouſe, Laplande, all out of ſight till wee came to Cape Gallant: And ſo ſayling betweene two Bayes, the two and thirtieth day after our departure from Harwiche, wee caſt ancre at S. Nicholas roade. In all the time of our voyage, more then the great nomber of Whales ingendering together, which wee might plainely beholde, and the Sperma Cetæ, which we might see swimming vpon the sea, there was no great thing to be wondered at. Sometimes we had calmes, wherein our Mariners fished, and tooke good store of diuers sorts. At S. Nicholas wee landed the 23. of July, where there standeth an abbey of Monkes (to the number of 20.) built all of wood: the apparel of the Monkes is superstitious, in blacke coates as ours haue bene. Their Church is faire, but full of painted images, tapers, and candles. Their owne houses are lowe, and small roomes. They lie apart, they eate together, and are much giuen to drunkennesse, vnlearned, write they can, preach they doe neuer, ceremonious in their Church, and long in their prayers.

The abbey of S. Nicholas of 20. Monks.

At my first arriuall I was presented from their Prior with two great rye loaues, fish both salt and fresh of diuers sorts, both sea fish and fresh water, one sheepe aliue, blacke with a white face, to be the more grateful vnto me, and so with many solemne words inuiting me to see their house, they tooke their leaue.

The English house at S. Nicholas.

Towne or habitation at S. Nicholas there is none more then about 4. houses neere the abbey, and another built by the English Companie for their owne vse.

This part of the Countrey is most part wood, sauing here and there pasture & arable ground, many riuers and diuers Ilands vnhabited, as the most part of the Countrey is, for the coldnesse in winter.

The riuer of Dwina.

S. Nicholas standeth Northeast: the eleuation of the pole 64. degrees. The riuer that runneth there into the sea is called Dwina, very large but shallow. This riuer taketh his beginning about 700. miles within the cõtrey, and vpon this riuer standeth Colmogro, & many prettie villages, well situated for pasture, arable land, wood, and water. The riuer pleasant betweene high hils of either side inwardly inhabited, and in a maner a wildernes of high firre trees, and other wood.

Colmogro.

At Colmogro being 100. verstes, which we accompt for 3. quarters of a mile euery verst, we tarried 3. weekes, not being suffered to depart before the Emperour had worde of our comming: who sent to meete vs a Gentleman of his house to conuey vs, and to see vs furnished of victuals, and all things needefull vpon his owne charge.

The allowance of meate and drinke was for euery day 2. rubbles, besides the charge of boates by water, and 4. score post horses by lande, with aboue 100. cartes, to carrie my wines, and other carriage.

Colmogro is a great towne builded all of wood, not walled, but scattered house frõ house. The people are rude in maners, & in apparell homely, sauing vpon their festiuall, and marriage daies.

The people of this towne finding cõmoditie by the English mens traffique with them are much at their commandement, giuen much to drunkennes and all other kinde of abominable vices.

An English house with lands at Colmogro.

In this towne the Englishmen haue landes of their owne giuen them by the Emperour, and faire houses with offices for their commoditie very many.

Of other townes vntil I come to Vologda, I write not, because they are much like to this, and the inhabitants not differing from them.

I was 5. whole weekes vpon the riuer of Dwina till I came to Vologda, being drawen with men against the streame, for other passage there is none.

Vologda standeth vpon the riuer of Vologda, which commeth into Dwina. The towne is great and long, built all of wood, as all their townes are.

In this towne the Emperour hath built a castle inuironed with a wall of stone, and bricke, the walles faire, and high rounde about. Here (as in all other their townes) are many Churches, some built of bricke, the rest of wood, many Monkes and Nunnes in it: A towne also of great traffique, and many rich Marchants there dwelling.

From hence we passed by land towardes Mosco in poste, being 500. verstes great, which are equall with our miles. In their townes we baited or lay, being post townes.

The description of the maland of Moscouia.

The Countrey is very faire, plaine & pleasant, wel inhabited, corne, pasture, medowes, many riuers, and woods, faire and goodly.

At Yeraslaue, wee passed the riuer of Volga, more then a mile ouer. This riuer taketh his beginning at Beatla Ozera, & descendeth into Mare Caspium, portable thorow of very great vessels with flat bottomes, which farre passe any that our Countrey vseth.

To saile by this riuer into Mare Caspium, the English Companie caused a barke to be built of 27. tunne, which there was neuer seene before: This barke built, and readie rigged to the sea with her whole furniture, cost not the companie aboue one hundreth markes there.

His arrival at Mosco.

To Mosco wee came about the ende of September, receiued by no man, not so much as our owne Countreymen suffered to meete vs, which bred suspicion in mee, of some other matter intended, then we had hitherto found.

The

We were brought to a house built of purpose by the Emperour for Embassadours, faire, and large, after the fashion of that Countrey. A special house at Moico built for Embassadours.

Two gentlemen were appointed to attend upon me, the one to see vs furnished of victuals, and that we lacked nothing of the Emperors allowance: the other to see that we should not goe out of the house, nor suffer any man to come vnto vs, in which they left nothing vndone that belonged to their charge. But specially he that looked to our persons, so straightly handled vs, that we had no small cause to doubt that some euill had bene intended vnto vs. No supplication, suite, or request, could take place for our libertie, nor yet to come to his presence.

Having passed ouer 17. weekes in this sort, the Emperour sendeth word that we should be ready against tuesday the 20. of February, at 8. a clocke in the morning.

The houre being come that I should go to the Court, the two Gentlemen, Pristaues (as they cal them) came vnto me apparelled more princely, then before I had euer seene them. They presse vs to depart, and mounted vpon their owne horses, and the Embassadour vpon such a one as he had borrowed, his men marching on foote, to their great griefe. 2. Pristaues.

The Embassadour (being my selfe) was conueyed into an office where one of the Chancellors doeth vse to sit, being there accompanied with the 2. foresaid Gentlemen: I tarried 2. long houres before I was sent for to the Emperour. In the ende message being brought that the Emperour was set, I was conueyed by my gentlemen vp a paire of staires through a large roome, where sate by my estimation 300. persons, all in riche attire, taken out of the Emperours wardrobe for that day, vpon three rankes of benches, set round about the place, rather to present a Maiestie, then that they were either of qualitie or honour.

At the first entrie into the Chamber, I with my cappe gaue them the reuerence, such as I iudged their stately sitting, graue countenances, and sumptuous apparel required, and seeing that it was not answered againe of any of them, I couered my head, and so passing to a chamber where the Emperor was, there receiued mee at the doore from my 2. Gentlemen or gouernours, two of the Emperors Counsellers, and shewed me to the Emperor, and brought mee to the middle of the chamber, where I was willed to stand still, and to say that which I had to say. His admission to the Emperors presence.

I by my Interpreter opened my message as I receiued it from the Queene my Mistresse, from whom I came, at whose name the Emperour stood vp, & demaunded diuers questions of her health and state: whereunto answere being made, he gaue me his hand in token of my welcome, & caused me to sit downe, and further asked me diuers questions.

This done, I deliuered her Maiesties present, which was a notable great Cuppe of siluer curiously wrought, with verses grauen in it, expressing the histories workmanly set out in the same. The Queenes present.

All being said and done, (as appeared) to his contentment, he licensed mee and my whole company to depart, who were all in his presence, and were saluted by him with a nodde of his head, and said vnto me: I dine not this day openly for great affaires I haue, but I wil send thee my dinner, and giue leaue to thee, and thine, to goe at libertie, and augment our allowance to thee, in token of our loue and fauour to our sister the Queene of England. The Emperors speach to the Embassadour.

I with reuerence tooke my leaue, being conueyed by 2. other of greater calling, then those that brought me to the Emperors sight: who deliuered me to the two first Gentlemen, who conducted me to the office where I first was, where came vnto mee one called the long Duke, with whom I conferred a while, and so returned to my lodging.

Within one houre after, in comes to my lodging a duke richly apparelled, accompanied with 50. persons, eche of them carrying a siluer dish with meate, & couered with siluer. The duke first deliuered 10. loaues of bread of the Emperors owne eating, hauing tasted the same, & deliuereth euery dish into my hands, and tasted of euery kinde of drinke that he brought.

This being done, the duke and his companie sate downe with me, and tooke part of the Emperors meate, and filled themselues well of all sorts, and went not away from me vnrewarded.

Within few nights after the Emperor had will to speake secretly with mee, and sent for me in the night by the Long duke; The place was farre off, and the night cold, and I hauing changed my apparell into such as the Russes doe weare, found great incommoditie thereby.

Hauing talked with him aboue 3. houres, towards the morning I was dismissed, and so came home to my lodging, where I remained aboue 6. weekes after, before I heard againe from the Emperor, who went the next day to Slouoda, the house of his solace. A second conference with the Emperor.

After the ende of which 6. weekes, which was about the beginning of April, the Emperor returned frō Slouoda aforesaid, and sent for me againe to make repaire vnto him. And being come, I dealt effectually wᵗ him in the behalfe of our English Marchants, & found him so gratiously inclined towards them, ꝑ I obtained at his hands my whole demaunds for large priuileges in general, together wᵗ al the rest my particular requests.

And then hee commended to my conduct into England, a noble man of his, called Andrewe Sauin as his Embassadour, for the better confirmation of his priuiledges graunted, and other negotiations with her Maiestie. And this being dispatched with full contentment, the saide Embassadour and my selfe departed, and imbarked at S. Nicholas about the ende of July, and arriued safely at London in the moneth of September following.

A Copie of the priuiledges graunted by the right high and mightie Prince, the Emperour of Russia, &c: vnto the right wor. shipful felowship of English Marchants, for the discouerie of new trades: And hither sent by Thomas Randolfe Esquire, her Maiesties Embassadour to the said Emperour, And by Andrew Sauin his Embassadour in the yeere of our Lord God 1569.

ONe God euerlasting, and without, and before the beginning, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, the blessed Trinitie, our onely God, maker, and preseruer of all things, and replenisher of all things euery where, who by thy goodnesse dost cause all men to loue the giuer of wisedome our onely Mediatour, and leader of vs all vnto blessed knowledge by the only Sonne his word our Lord Iesus Christ holy and euerlasting Spirit; And now in these our dayes tracket vs to keepe Christianitie, and sufferest vs to enioy our kingdome to the happie commoditie of our land, and wealth of our people in despite of our enemies, and to our fame with our friends.

We Iohn Vasiliwich by the grace of God, great Lord Emperour and great duke of all Russia, Volodemaria, Moscouia, Nouogrode, Emperor of Cazan, Tuerkie, Vgorskie, Permiskie, Vaskie, Bulgaria, and many others; Lord & great duke of the low Countreis of Nouogorode, Chenigoskie, Rasanskie, Polotiskie, Rastow, Yeraslaue, Belloforo, Owderskie, Condinski, and all Siberland, Great commaunder of all the North parties, Lord of Leifland, and many other Northward, Southward and Westward.

Whereas our sister Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, Fraunce & Ireland, defender of the faith, hath written vnto vs her letters for her marchants, who hath made suite that we should graunt our goodnes to the Marchants which are of our Companie, and giue them licence to come to trafique in our kingdome to Colmogorode, and to the Countrey of Dwina, and to our great Citie of Moscouia, and to all the cities in our Dominions, and through our Country to Bowhair, to Persia, Casbine, and Chardaye, and to all other Countreis.

1 We Iohn Vasiliwich Emperour and great duke of all Russia, (for our sister Elizabeths sake, Queene of England) haue giuen and graunted to the English Marchants, the Gouernours, Consuls, assistants and felowship, sir Wil. Garrard knight, Rowland Hayward Alderman, Ioh. Thamworth Esquire, Iohn Riuers Alderman, Henry Beacher Alderman, Consuls, Sir Wil. Chester knight, Edward Iackman Alderman, Lionel Ducket Alderman, Edward Gilbert, Laurence Huse, Francis Walsingham, Clement Throgmorton, Iohn Quarles, Nicholas Wheeler, Thomas Banister, Iohn Harrison, Francis Burneham, Anthony Gamage, Ioh. Somers, Richard Wilkinson, Ioh. Sparke, Richard Barne, Robert Woolman, Thomas Browne, Thomas Smith, Thomas Allen, Thomas More, William Bully, Richard Yong, Thomas Atkinson, assistants, Iohn Mersh Esquire, Ieffrey Ducket, Francis Robinson, Matthew Field, and all the rest of their Companie and fellowship, and to their successours and deputies, to come with ships, and other vessels into our Countrey, at Colmogorod, & Dwina, and to all the North parts now being ours, or that hereafter shall at any time be in our possession, by sea, riuer or land, euen to our great Citie of Moscow, in al the townes of our Countrey, to Cazan and Astracan, to Nouogorode the great, to Pleskow & Leifland, Vriagorod, to Narue, and all other townes of Leifland; 2 And to passe through our land to Bowghair, Persia, Casbin, Chardaye, and other Countreis; And wheresoeuer they come there to be and abide freely, and to barter and bargaine freely all wares of sale, without custome of all people, and Marchants strangers whatsoeuer.

And if so be they bring any fine wares out of England, or any other Countrey from Bowhair, Persia, Casbine, or from any other place, and those their wares that come by the way of Narue, or any other part into our Dominion, to bring ỳ same wares into our treasure, & our Treasurers to view the same wares, and to take into our Treasurie of the same such as shalbe needful for vs. And all such wares as we shal not need, our Chancellour to redeliuer þ same, And after the view of our Chancellours, to barter it freely to whome they will, not selling any of their wares needfull for vs, before our Chancellour haue seene the same. And all other grosse and heauy wares that shalbe needfull to our vse, not being brought to Mosco to declare and tell our Chancellour of the same wares: And to giue a note thereof by name, and how much they leaue there, not brought to Mosco: and then if we neede not the said wares, the English Marchants, their seruants & Factors, to conuey their wares the neerest way to Vstiuge the great, and so to Colmogorod, or elsewhere at their pleasure, there to barter and sell the same. But those wares that shalbe needeful for our Treasurie, they shall not hide from vs in any case.

And when our Chauncellours shall send our aduenture, with the said Marchants or their Factors they to take our aduentures with them, and to sell, & to barter for such wares as shalbe meete for our Treasurie, and to returne it into our Treasurie.

And when wee shall sende any aduenture into England then our Chancellour to giue them a perres warning, that their ships may be prouided thereafter, that by taking in of our wares, they leaue not their owne behinde them.

And to take our aduenture yeerely when they goe into Persia.

Neither shal þ English marchants receiue or colour any of our peoples goods, nor barter nor sel it in any wise: likewise our people not to barter for the said English marchants or occupy for them.

3 And when they shall come into our Empire of Casan and Astracan, and other places of our Dominions, then our Captaines of Casan and Astracan, and our authorised people, quietly to let them passe, not taking any toll or custome of their wares, nor once to make search thereof.

And when we shall send no aduenture with them, yet to suffer them freely to passe, not viewing their wares, nor taking any kinde of custome. And whatsoeuer English marchant will bargaine with our Marchants or Factors ware for ware to barter the same at their pleasure.

And whatsoeuer their Marchant or Factors wil sel their wares at their house at Mosco, which house I granted them at S. Maxims at the Mosco, they to sel þ ware to our people, either strangers as they may best veter it, keeping within their house, arshines, measures, & waights vnder seales.

4 We haue graunted them the said house at S. Maxims in the halfe free, and without standing rent, as heretofore we did graunt it the said English Marchants, sir Wil. Garrard, and the Companie, maintayning in the said house one housekeeper a Russe, and two Russe seruants, or some of their owne countrey men, and none other Russes besides they aforesaid. And the said housekeepers that shall liue at their house with the English marchants, neither to bye nor sel any wares for them, but that the said marchants themselues or their factors, shall bye, sell, and barter their owne wares; And our Moscouie marchants not to take the said Englishmens wares to sell them in our townes, nor to bye any wares for them, neither the English marchant to colour any Russes wares at any towne.

5 And whatsoeuer English marchant wil sel his wares at Colmogorod, Dwyna, Vologda, Yeraslaue, Castran, Nouogrode, the lower Casan, Astracan, Nouogorode the great, Vapska, the Narue, Vriagorod, or at any other townes, they to sel their wares there at their pleasure, And of al wares aswell of other countreis as of Russia, no officer or other to take any custome, neither in any place to stay them in any wise, neither take any kinde of toll of them for their wares whatsoeuer.

6 And whatsoeuer marchant shal bargaine or bye any wares of English marchants: The said Russe not to returne those wares vpon the marchants handes againe, but to giue readie money for the said wares, otherwise they to craue the Iustice to giue right, and to execute the lawe vpon the same with all expedition. And when the English marchants or factors shal trauaile from Moscouie after the dispatche of their wares and busines, then to shewe themselues vnto our Chancellours, whatsoeuer wares of theirs shall goe from Mosco, they not to shewe the same wares to any our officers, nor pay no custome nor toll in any place.

7 If it so happen the English marchants haue any wracke, and the shippes be brought to any port of our Dominions, we to command the saide goods to be enquired and sought out, and to bee giuen to the English marchants, being here abiding at that time in our Countrey, the factors, seruants, or deputies, of the Companie aforesaid, to whom we haue graunted this our gratious letter.

And if there happen none of the English marchants, factors, seruants, or deputies to bee in our Countreis at such time, then we will all the said goods to be sought out and bestowed in some conuenient place, and when any of the Companie afore written, bringing these our letters, shall come for their goods, we to commaund their goods to be restored vnto them.

8 Likewise wee haue granted leaue to the English marchants, their Gouernours, Consuls, and assistants, namely, sir William Garrard knight, Rowland Hayward, and the Companie to builde houses at Vollogda, Colmogro, and the seaside, at Iuangorode, at Cherell, and in all other places of our Dominions, as shall bee needefull for their trade. And they to keepe at the saide house one housekeeper, a Russe, and two or three men to keepe their wares at the said houses, making sale thereof to whome they will, they, their Factors or deputies: the said housekeeper not to buy or sell for them.

9 Also wee haue giuen and graunted to the English Marchants, their house which they haue by our goodnesse at S. Maximes in the Zenopskie, and other their houses in the towne of Zenopskie, made for the better assurance of their goods, and all such as they shall set vp hereafter shalbe of the ‖Oprissini, and will make them knowen to all them of Oprissini.

10 And whereas by our goodnes we haue graunted them a Ropehouse at Vologda, being farre from the English Marchants house, nowe we haue giuen them to builde a house for that vse by the said English house, and haue giuen and graunted them (of our goodnesse) ground, one hundreth and fourescore fadome long, and fiftie fadomes in breadth, according to their owne request.

11 Also, we haue of our goodnesse giuen and graunted to the English Marchants, leaue to buy them a house at Witchida, and there to search out mines of yron. And where they shal happily finde it, there to set vp houses for the making of the same yron: and to make the same, of our goodnesse haue graunted them woods, fiue or sixe miles compasse about the said houses, to the making of the saide yron, and not to exceede these bounds and limits: And where they shall cut the saide wood, not to set vp any village or farme there, bringing the artificers for making of their yron, out of their owne Countrey, and to learne our people that arte, and so freely occupying the saide yron in these our Dominions, transporting also of the same home into England, allowing for euery pound one dingo, or halfe penie.

12 And if any of the said yron shalbe needfull for our workes, then we to take of the saide yron to our worke, vpon agreement of price, paying money out of our Treasurie for the same; And when the said English Marchants or Factors shall send their owne people out of our Realme into their Countrey, ouer land through any Countrey whatsoeuer, freely to send the same with our words.

13 Also, we of our goodnesse haue graunted, that if any man misuse the saide English, the Factors or seruants, Or the saide English Marchants, their Factors or seruants abuse any other at Moscouie, or any other our townes whatsoeuer within our Dominions in trade of Marchandize or otherwise, then they to haue vpright iustice in all such matters of our counsaile the Oprissini without all let or delay; But if our Justice may not agree the parties, then lots to be made, and to whose lotte it shall fall, to him the right to bee giuen, and that onely our counsaile at Moscouie, and none of our Captaines, or authorised people, or officers in any other our townes, giue iudgement vpon the said English Marchants for any thing.

14 Also, if any stranger shal haue matter of controuersie with any English Marchant, Factor or seruant, abiding within these our Realmes, or contrary wise any English Marchant, Factor or seruant, against any other stranger, in all those causes our Counsaile of the Oprissinie, to giue them Justice, and to make an agreement & ende betweene the parties, without all delaye; And none to deale therein, saue our Counsaile of the Oprissinie: 15 And if any man haue action against any English Marchant being absent, that then in his absence it shalbe lawful for any other Englishman at his assignation to answere his cause.

16 If any Englishman happen to be wounded or beaten to death, or any Russe or stranger slaine or beaten, 17 Or any stollen goods to be found in the saide English houses, then our Counsellers to cause the guiltie persons to be sought out, and to doe right and Justice in the cause, and the partie that is guiltie, if he deserue punishment, to be corrected accordingly after his offence, That the said English Marchants, factors and seruants, sustaine thereby no hinderance or damage.

18 And whatsoeuer English Marchant, Factor, seruant, or deputie, shalbe guiltie of any fault, deseruing our displeasure, then our Counsailers to cause the guiltie partie to goe vnder sureties, and their goods to be sealed and kept, vntill our pleasure bee further knowen, and our Counsaile to examine their offence, and so to report it vnto vs, that wee may command what shall bee done therein, and none other to be arrested or haue their goods sealed, which are not guiltie of that offence, nor to stay or apprehend them in any of our Dominions for the same.

19 If any English Marchant, Factor or seruant shal offend, it shalbe lawfull for their Agent to doe iustice vpon the said partie, or to send him home into England at his pleasure.

20 If any English Marchant, Factor or seruant, haue lent or hereafter shall lende money to any of our people, or credite them with wares, and so depart into any forreigne Country, or die before the debt bee due to be paide, then our people and Marchants to paye the saide debt, to whome soeuer shall be appointed to the said roome or charge, and the said English Marchant, factor, or seruant, to bring his bill of debt to our Counsell, to shewe them what is due, and what money is owing them for any wares: and thus to doe truly, not adding any whit to the debt, and our Counsel to command the debt to be discharged vnto the English Marchant, factor, or seruant, without delay.

to

21 And whatsoeuer English Marchant shall be arrested for debt, then our Counsell to command the partie vnder arrest to be deliuered to the Agent: and if he haue no suertie, to bind the Agent with him, for the better force of the bond.

And if any Englishman be endebted, we will the Creditor not to call him in prison, or to deliuer him to the Sergeant, lest the officer lose him, but to take ware in pawne of the debt.

22 Also of our goodnes, we haue granted the English Marchants to send our Commission to all our Townes, Captaines, and authorised men, to defende and gard the saide Marchants from all theeues, robbers, and euill disposed persons.

23 If in comming or going to and fro our dominions, the Merchants, the factors, or seruants be spoiled on the sea, our Counsell shall send our letters, and will them to be sought out, and where they shall finde the goods, cause it to be restored againe, and the offender to be punished, according to our commandement.

24 Also of our goodnes, we haue granted the saide Merchants to take vp Brokers, Packers, Wayers, and such like labourers, as shall be needefull for them, paying for their hier as the laborers and they shall agree.

25 We likewise of our goodnes, haue licensed the English Merchants in our Townes of Mosko, Nouogorode the great, and Pasko, that the Coiners of the said Townes shall melt Dollers, and coine money for them, without custome, allowing for coales, and other necessaries, with the workemanship.

26 Also of our goodnes, wee haue granted to the said English Merchants, to take poste horse at needefull times, leauing with our officers a note how many they take, and not els, in no case hindering or diminishing our treasurie.

27 Also for our sister Queene Elizabeths sake, we of our goodnes haue granted to the merchants within written, this our letter, and to their successors, that no Englishman, nor any other stranger, come without the Queenes leaue to Colmogorode, the riuer of Vob, Vasiagy, Pechora, Cowlaye, Meseyne, Pechmecoue, Zeleuetskyes Island, the riuer of Shame, nor to no other hauen of Dwina, nor to any part of the north side of Dwina, by hether ward of Wardhouse, to any hauen, with shippe, Busse, or any other vessell, nor to occupie in any kind of waies, but onely the said English companie, and their successors, to whome we of our goodnes haue granted this priuiledge.

28 Also that no English Merchant, without the Queenes leaue, shall come with any wares, to the Narue, or Vriogorode.

29 And whatsoeuer English Merchant, stranger, or other, of whatsoeuer Countrey he be, shall come with any shippe, Busse, or any other vessell, to any of the said hauens of the north side, to any part of Dwina, by North the Narue, or Vriagorode, without the Queenes leaue or knowledge, not being of the company aboue written, wee to apprehende and take the same vessell from those strangers and Merchants, the one halfe to vs the Emperour, and great Duke, and the other halfe to the companie of English Merchants.

30 Also of our goodnes, we haue granted the said companie of English merchants, that no English merchants or strangers shall passe through our dominions, to Boghare, Persia, Casbin, Chardaye, or other Countreies, saue onely the companie of English merchants, and our owne messengers.

31 Also whatsoeuer Englishman, comming out of England or any other Countrey, into our dominions, without the Queenes leaue, and knowledge, not being of the said companie, written within those our letters, mind, and purpose, to abide in our Realme, contrary to the Queenes will and pleasure, or any way abuse himselfe, the Agent shall freely send him home, to the Queene his Soueraigne: which if the Agent of himselfe be vnable to do, let him pray for aide of the Captaines and officers of our Townes there being, and so send him to prison, and will the saide Captaines not to hinder the said Agent from sending home such euill persons into England.

32 And if any man within our Countrey, runne away to any other towne, or place, the English merchants, and factors, to haue free libertie to apprehende him, and take their goods from him againe.

33 And as for our priuiledge, giuen to Thomas Glouer, Ralfe Rutter, Christopher Bennet, Iohn Chappell, and their adherents, we haue commanded the same priuiledges to be taken from them.

34 Also

34 Also we of our goodnes haue granted the said company of English merchants, their successors seruants and deputies, that doe or shall remaine at Musko, or elsewhere within our dominions freely to keepe their owne lawe: and in any wise none of ours to force them to our lawe or faith against their will.

Moreouer, besides and with the companie of English merchants, we permit all strangers, to trade to our towne of Narue, Vtiogorode, and other our townes of Leifland, as they haue done before time, from the beginning of the world 7077. in the moneth of June 20. indiction, 12. The yeere of our Lordship & reigne 35. and of our Empire of Rusland 23, Casan 17. Astracan 15.

A graunt vnto the companie that at what time soeuer, they send to the discouery of Catay a, they shalbe licensed to repaire vnto this countrey and haue such conducts and guides, Barriners, vessels, Men, and victuals as they shall stand in neede of.

It is also promised by Kneez Alfanas, and Peter Gregoriwich in the Emperours name, that if Benet Butler or any Englishman complaine, deface, hinder in way of traffique, or otherwise goe about to discredite the worshipfull companie, and their doinges, that therein they shall not bee harde, and the doers to bee punished, as in such cases they shalbee iudged to haue deserued.

Certaine persons graunted to be sent home into England that serued the company, and were practisers against them in that countrey.

A Commission giuen by vs Th. Randolph, Embassadour for the Queenes Maiestie in Russia, and Th. Bannister, &c. Vnto Iames Bassendine, Iames Woodcocke and Rich. Browne, the which Bassendine, Woodcocke, and Browne we appoint ioyntly together, and ayders, the one of them to the other, in a voyage of discouery to be made (by the grace of God) by them, for searching of the sea, and border of the coast, from the riuer Pechora, to the East wardes, as hereafter followeth Ann. 1588. The first of August.

IN primis, when your barke with all furniture is ready, you shall at the beginning of the yeere (as soone as you possible may) make your repaire to the Easterne part of the riuer Pechora, where is an Island called Dolgoieue, and from thence you shall passe to the East wardes alongest by the Sea coast of Hugorie or the mayne lande of Pechora, and sayling alongst by the same coast, you shall passe within seuen leagues of the Island Vaigattes which is in the straight, almost halfe way from the coast of Hugorie, vnto the coast of Noua Zembla, which Island Vaigattes and Noua Zembla, you shall finde noted in your plat, therefore you shall not neede to discouer it: but proceede on alongest the coast of Hugorie, towardes the riuer Obba.

There is a Bay betweene the saide Vaigattes, & the riuer Obba, that doth byte to the South wardes, into the lande of Hugorie, in which Bay are two small riuers, the one called Cara Reca, the other Narmsye, as in the paper of notes which are giuen to you herewith, may appeare in the the which Baye you ſhall not neede to ſpende any time for ſearching of it, but to direct your courſe to the riuer Ob, (if otherwiſe you be not conſtrained to keepe alongſt the ſhoare,) and when you come to the Riuer Ob, you ſhall not enter into it, but paſſe ouer, vnto the Eaſterne parte of the mouth of the ſaid riuer.

And when you are at the Eaſterne part of the mouth of Obba Reca, you ſhall from thence paſſe to the Eaſtwards, alongſt by the border of the ſaid coaſt, deſcribing the ſame in ſuch perfect order, as you can beſt doe it. You ſhall not leaue the ſaide coaſte or border of the land, but paſſe alongſt by it, at leaſt in ſighe of the ſame, vntill you haue ſailed by it ſo farre to the Eaſtwards, and the time of the yeere ſo farre ſpent, that you doe thinke it time for you to returne with your barke to Winter, which trauell may well be three or 400. leagues to the Eaſtwards of the Ob, if the ſea doe reach ſo farre, as our hope is it doth: but and if you finde not the ſaid coaſt and ſea to trende ſo farre to the Eaſtwards, yet you ſhall not leaue the coaſt at any time, but proceede alongſt by it, as it doth lie, leauing no part of it vnſearched, or ſeene, vnleſſe it be ſome baye, or riuer, that you doe certainly know by the report of the people, that you ſhall finde in thoſe borders, or elſe ſome certaine tokens, whereby you of your ſelues may iudge it to be ſo. For our hope is, that the ſaid border of land, and ſea, doth in ſhort ſpace after you paſſe the Ob, incline Eaſt, and ſo to the Southwardes. And therefore we would haue no part of the land of your ſtarreboord ſide, as you proceede in your diſcouerie, to be left vndiſcouered.

But and if the ſaid border of land doe not incline ſo to the Eaſtwards, as we preſuppoſe it, but that it doe prooue to incline, and trende to the Northwardes, and ſo ioyne with Noua Zembla, making the ſea from Vaigats to the Eaſtwards but a baye: yet we will that you doe keepe alongſt by the ſaid coaſt, and ſo bring vs certaine report of that forme and manner of the ſame baye.

And if it doe ſo prooue to be a baye, and that you haue paſſed rounde about the ſame, and ſo by the trending of the land come backe vnto that part of Noua Zembla, that is againſt Vaigats, whereas you may from that ſee the ſaid Iſland Vaigats, if the time of the yeere will permit you, you ſhall from thence paſſe alongſt by the ſaid border & coaſt of Noua Zembla, to the Weſtwards, and ſo to ſearch whether that part of Noua Zembla doe ioyne with the lande, that ſir Hugh Willoughbie diſcouered in anno 53. and is in 72. degrees, and from that part of Noua Zembla, 120. leagues to the Weſtwards, as your plat doth ſhewe it vnto you: and if you doe finde that lande to ioyne with Noua Zembla, when you come to it, you ſhall proceede further along the ſame coaſt, if the time of the yeere will permit it, and that you doe thinke there will be ſufficient time for you to returne backe with your barke to winter, either at Pechora, or into Ruſſia, at your diſcretion: for we referre the ſame to your good iudgements, truſting that you will loſe no time, that may further your knowledge in this voyage.

Note you, it was the 20. of Auguſt, 56. ere the Serchethrift began to returne backe from her diſcouerie, to winter in Ruſſia, and then ſhe came from the Iſland Vaigats, being forcibly driuen from thence, with an Eaſterly winde, and yce, and ſo ſhe came into the riuer Dwina, and arriued at Colmogro, the 11. of September, 56. If the yce had not bene ſo much that yeere, as it was, in the Streights, on both ſides of the Iſland Vaigats, they in the ſaid pinneſſe, would that yeere haue diſcouered the partes that you are nowe ſent to ſeeke: which thing (if it had pleaſed God) might haue bene done then: but God hath reſerued it for ſome other. Which diſcouerie, if it may be made by you, it ſhall not onely proue profitable vnto you, but it will alſo purchaſe perpetuall fame and renowme, both to you, and our Countrey. And thus not doubting of your willing deſires, and forwardnes towards the ſame, we pray God to bleſſe you, with a luckie beginning, fortunate ſucceſſe, and happily to ende the ſame. Amen.

Neceſſarie notes to be obſerued, and followed in your diſcouerie, as hereafter followeth.

When your barke with all furniture, and neceſſaries, ſhall be in readines for you to depart to the ſea (if it be that you take your barke at S. Nicholas, or any part of Dwina Reca) you ſhall from thence, euen as timely in the ſpring as the yce will permit you, ſaile, & make all expedition that may be, vnto the mouth of the riuer Pechora, (as your commiſſion doth leade you) and as you paſſe by the coaſt all alongſt, notwithſtanding the plat that ſhewth you the deſcription of the ſaid coaſt, from Dwina vnto Vaigats,) yet you ſhall ſeeke by all the meanes that you can, to amend the ſame plat, vſing as many obſeruations, as you poſſibly can doe: and theſe notes following, are to be obſerued by you principally.

1. Firſt, that you doe obſerue the latitude as often, and in as many places, as you may poſſibly bly doe it, noting diligently the place where you doe so obserue the same.

2 Also that you doe diligently set with your compasse, how ꝑ land doth lie from point to point, all alongst as you goe, and to vse your iudgements howe farre there may bee betweene eche of them.

3 Item, that you doe alwayes vse to drawe the proportion and lyeing of the land, as well the lying out of the poyntes, and head lands, vnto the which you shall giue some apt names (at your discretion) as also the forme of the Bayes, and to make some marke in drawing the forme, and border of the same, where the high cliffes are, and where lowe lande is, whether sandie hilles, or whatsoeuer: omitte not to note any thing, that may be sensible, and apparant to you, which may serue to any purpose.

4 In passing along by any coast, that you keepe your lead going often times, and sound, at the least once euery glasse, and oftener if you thinke good as occasion doth serue, and note diligently the depth with the maner of the grounde, and at euery time, howe farre the same sounding may be from the next shore to it: and howe the next poynt or head land doth beare from you. And in the sea after you set off from your porte, you shall orderly at the end of euery foure glasses sound, and if you finde ground, note the depth and what grounde, but if you can finde no ground, you shall also note in what depth you could finde no ground.

5 Also that you doe diligently obserue the flowing, & ebbing in euery place, and how the tides do set, which way the flood doth come, and how much water it doth high in euery place, and what force the same tide hath to driue a ship in an houre, as neere as you can iudge it.

6 Also that you doe seeke to obserue with the Instrument, which I deliuer you herewith, according as I taught you at Rose Island, the true platformes, and distances, in as many places as conueniently you may, for it serueth very aptly your purpose.

7 Also that you take with you paper and inke, and keepe a continuall iournall, or remembrance day by day, of all such things as shal fal out worth the knowledge, not forgetting, or omitting to write it, and note it, that it may be shewed and read at your returne.

8 These orders if you shall diligently obserue, it will bee easie for you to make a plaine, and perfect description of your discouerie, and so shall your notes bee sufficient to answer that which is looked for at your handes. But withall you may not forgette, to note as manie thinges as you can learne and vnderstande by the reporte of anie people whatsoeuer they be, so that it appertaine any way to our desires. And thus the Lord God prosper your voyage. Amen.

Certaine letters in verse, written by Master George Turberuile out of Muscouia, which went as Secretarie thither with Master Tho. Randolph, her Maiesties Embassadour to the Emperour 1568, to certaine friends of his in London, describing the manners of the Country, and people.

To his especiall friend Master Edward Dancie.

MY Dancie deere, when I recount within my brest,
My London friends, and wonted mates, and thee about the rest:
I feele a thousand fittes of deepe and deadly woe,
To thinke that I from land to sea, from blisse to bale did goe,
I left my native soyle, full like a reckelesse man,
And vnacquainted of the coast, among the Russies ran:
A people passing rude, to vices vile inclinde,
Folke fitte to be of Bacchus trayne, so quaffing is their kinde.
Drinke is their whole desire, the pot is all their pride,
The sobrest head doeth once a day stand needfull of a guide.
If he to banquet bid his friends, he will not shrinke
On them at dinner to bestowe a douzen kindes of drinke:
Such licour as they haue, and as the country giues,
But chiefly two, one called Kuas, whereby the Mouske liues.
Small ware and waterlike, but somewhat tarte in taste,
The rest is Meade of honie made, wherewith their lippes they baste.
And if he goe vnto his neighbour as a guest,

ye

Pe cares for litle meate, if so his vinke be of the best.
No wonder though they vse such vile and beastly trade,
Sith with the hatchet and the hand, their chiefest gods be made.
Their Idoles haue their heartes, on God they neuer call,
Unlesse it be (Nichola Bough) that hangs against the wall.
The house that hath no god, or paynted Saint within,
Is not to be resorted too, that roofe is full of sinne.
Besides their priuate gods, in open places stand
Their crosses vnto which they crooche, and blesse themselues with hand.
Deuoutly downe they ducke, with forehead to the ground,
Was neuer more deceit in ragges, and greasie garments found.
Almost the meanest man in all the countrie rides,
The woman eke against our vse, her trotting horse bestrides.
In sundry colours they both men, and women goe,
In buskins all, that money haue on buskins to bestoe.
Eche woman hanging hath a ring within her eare,
Which all of auncient vse, and some of very pride doe weare.
Their gate is very haute, their countenance wise and sadde,
And yet they follow fleshly lustes, their trade of liuing badde.
It is no shame at all accounted to defile
Anothers bedde, they make no care, their follies to conceile.
Is not the meanest man in all the land but hee,
To buy her paynted colours doth allow his wife a fee.
Wherewith she deckes her selfe, and dyes her tawnie skinne,
She prankes and paintes her smoakie face, both browe, lippe, cheeke, and chinne.
Yea those that honest are, if any such there bee
Within the lande, doe vse the like: a man may plainely see Upon some womens cheekes the paynting how it lyes,
In plaister sort for that too chirke, her face the harlot dies.
But such as skilfull are, and cunning Dames indeede,
By daily practise doe it well, yea sure they doe exceede.
They lay their colours so, as he that is full wise,
May easly be deceiu'd therein, if he doe trust his eyes.
I not a little muse, what madnes makes them paine
Their faces, saying how they keepe the stoute by meere constraint.
For seldome when, vnlesse on Church or marriage day
A man shall see the Dames abroade, that are of best aray.
The Russie meanes to reape the profit of her pride,
And so he mewes her to be sure, she lye by no mans side.
Thus much friend Dancie, I did meane to write to thee,
To let thee weete in Russia land, what men and women bee.
Hereafter I perhaps of other thinges will write
To thee, and other of my friendes, which I shall see with sight:
And other stuffe besides, which true report shall tell,
Meane while I ende my louing lines, and bid thee now farewell.

To Spencer.

If I should now forget, or not remember thee,
Thou Spencer mightest a foule rebuke, and shame impute to mee.
For I to open shew did loue thee passing well,
And thou wert he at parture, whom I loathde to bid farewell.
And as I went thy friend, so I continue still,
No better proofe thou canst then this desire of true good will.
I doe remember well when needes I should away,
And that the Poste would licence vs, no longer time to stay:
Thou wrongst me by the fist, and holding fast my hand,
Didst craue of me to send thee newes, and how I liked the land.

It is a sandie soile, no very fruitfull vaine,
Woze waste and wooddie grounds there are, then closes fit foz graine.
Yet graine there growing is, which they vnmely take,
And cut oz eare the corne be ripe, they mowe it on a stake.
And laying sheafe by sheafe, their harueft so they vse,
They make the greater haste, foz feare the frost the corne destroy.
Foz in the winter time, so glarie is the ground,
As neither grasse, noz other graine, in pastures may be found.
In comes the cattell then, the sheepe, the colt, the cowe,
Fast by his bed, the Mowsike then, a lodging doth allowe,
Whom he with fodder feedes, and holds as deere as life:
And thus they weare the winter with the Mowsike, and his wife.
Seuen months the winter dures, the glare it is so great,
As it is May before he turne, his ground to sowe his wheate.
The bodies eke that die, vnburied lie they then,
Laid vp in coffins made of firre, as well the poozeft men,
As those of greater state: the cause is lightly found,
Foz that in winter time, they can not come to breake the ground.
And wood so pleuteous is, quite throughout all the land
As rich, and poore, at time of death allurd of coffins stand.
Perhaps thou museft much, how this may stand with reason,
That bodies dead can vncozrupt abide so long a season.
Take this foz certaine trothe, as soone as heate is gone,
The force of colde the bodie binds as hard as any stone.
Without offence at all to any liuing thing:
And so they lye in perfect state, till next returne of spzinge.
Their beasts be like to ours, as farre as I can see Foz shape, and shewe, but somewhat leste of bulke, and bone they be.
Of watrish taste, the flesh not firme, like English beefe,
And yet it serus them very well, and is a good releefe:
Their sheepe are very small, sharpe singled, handfull long,
Great stoze of fowle on sea and land, the moozish reedes amonge.
The greatnes of the stoze, doth make the pzices lesse,
Besides in all the land they knowe, not how good meate to dreffe.
They vse neither broach noz spit, but when the stoue they heate,
They put their victuals in a pan, and so they bake their meate.
No pewter to be had, no dishes but of wood,
No vse of trenchers, cups cut out of byrche are very good.
They vse but wooden spoones, which hanging in a case,
Eache Mowsike at his girdle ties, and thinkes it no disgrace.
With whitles two oz three, the better man the moe,
The cheefest Russies in the land, with spoone and knines doe goe.
Their houses are not huge of building, but they say,
They plant them in the loftiest ground, to shift the snowe away.
Which in the winter time, eache where full thicke they lie,
Which makes them haue the moze desire, to set their houses high.
No stone worke is in vse, their roofes of rafters be,
One linked in another fast, their wals are all of tree.
Of masts both long, and large, with mosse put in betweene,
To keepe the force of weather out. I neuer earst haue seene
A grosse deuise so good, and on the roofe they lay
The burthen barke, to rid the raine, and sudden showres away.
In euery roome a stone, to serue the winter turne,
Of wood they haue sufficient stoze, as much as they can burne.
They haue no English glasse, of slices of a rocke
Hight sluda, they their windowes make, that English glasse doth mocke.
They cut it very thinne, and sowe it with a thzed
In pzetie ozder like to panes, to serue their pzesent neede.

B

No other glaſſe good faith, doth giue a better light:
And ſure the rocke is nothing rich, the coſt is very light.
The chiefeſt place is that, where hangs the god by it.
The owner of the houſe himſelfe doth neuer ſit,
Unleſſe his better come, to whom he yeelds the ſeat,
The ſtranger bending to the god, the ground with bow muſt beat.
And in that very place which they moſt sacred deeme,
The ſtranger lyes: a token that his gueſt he doth eſteeme.
Where he is woont to haue a beares ſkinne for his bed,
And muſt in ſtead of pillow, clap his ſaddle to his head.
In Ruſſia other ſhift there is not to be had,
For where the bedding is not good, the boalſters are but bad.
I muſed very much, what made them ſo to lie,
Sith in their countrey downe is rife, and feathers out of crie:
Unleſſe it be becauſe the countrey is ſo hard,
They feare by niceneſſe of a bed their bodyes would be mard,
I wiſht thee oft with vs, ſaue that I ſtood in feare
Thou wouldſt haue loathed to haue layd thy limmes vpon a beare,
As I and Stafford did, that was my mate in bed:
And yet (we thanke the God of heauen) we both right well haue ſped.
Loe thus I make an end: none other newes to thee,
But that the countrey is too colde, the people beaſtly bee.
I write not all I know, I touch but heere and there,
For if I ſhould, my pen would pinch, and eke offend I feare.
Who ſo ſhall read this verſe, coniecture of the reſt,
And thinke by reaſon of our trade, that I do thinke the beſt.
But if no traffike were, then could I boldly pen
The hardneſſe of the ſoile, and eke the maners of the men.
They ſay the Lions paw giues iudgement of the beaſt:
And ſo may you deeme of the great, by reading of the leaſt.

To Parker.

My Parker, paper, pen, and inke were made to write,
And idle heads, that little do, haue leiſure to indite:
Wherefore, reſpecting theſe, and thine aſſured loue,
If I would write no newes to thee, thou might'ſt my pen reproue.
And ſithence fortune thus hath ſhou'd my ſhippe on ſhore,
And made me ſeeke another realme vnſeene of me before:
The maners of the men I purpoſe to declare,
And other priuate points beſides, which ſtrange and geaſon are.
The Ruſſie men are round of bodies, fully faſte,
The greateſt part with bellies bigge that ouerhang the waſte,
Flat headed for the moſt, with faces nothing faire,
But browne, by reaſon of the ſtoue, and cloſeneſſe of the aire:
It is their common vſe to ſhaue or els to sheare
Their heads, for none in all the land long lolling locks doth weare, Unleſſe perhaps he haue his ſouereigne prince diſpleaſ'd,
For then he neuer cuts his haire, vntill he be appeaſ'd.
A certaine ſigne to know who in diſpleaſure be,
For euery man that viewes his head, will ſay, Loe this is he.
And during all the time he lets his locks to grow,
Dares no man for his life to him a face of friendſhip ſhow.
Their garments be not gay, nor handſome to the eye,
A cap aloft their heads they haue, that ſtandeth very hye,
Which colpacke they do terme. They weare no ruffes at all:
The beſt haue collers ſet with pearle, which they Rubaſca call.
Their ſhirts in Ruſſie long, they worke them downe before,

And on the sleeues with coulered silks, two inches good and more
Aloft they weare shirts, a garment iacket wise
Right onoriadka, and about his burlie waste he tyes
His portkies, which in stead of better breeches bee:
Of linnen cloth that garment is, no codpiece is to see.
A payre of parnen stocks to keepe the colde away,
Within his boots the Russie weares, the heeles they vnderlay
With clouting clamps of steele sharpe pointed at the toes,
And ouer all a suba furd, and thus the Russies goes.
Well buttned is the sube, according to his state,
Some silke, of siluer other some, but those of poorest rate
Do weare no subes at all, but groller gownes to sight,
That reacheth downe beneath the calfe, and that Armacha hight:
These are the Russies robes. The richest vse to ride
From place to place, his seruant runnes, and followes by his side.
The cassacke beares his felt, to force away the raine:
Their bridles are not very braue, their saddles are but plaine.
No bits but snaffles all, of birch their saddles bee,
Much fashioned like the Scotish seats, broad flacks to keepe the knee
From sweating of the horse, the pannels larger farre
And broader be then ours, they vse short stirrups for the warre:
For when the Russie is pursued by cruell foe,
He rides away, and suddenly betakes him to his boe,
And bends me but about in saddle as he sits,
And therewithall amids his race, his following foe he hits.
Their bowes are very short, like Turkie bowes outright,
Of sinowes made with birchen barke, in cunning maner dight.
Small arrowes, cruell heads that fell and forked bee,
Which being shot from out those bowes, a cruell way will flee.
They seldome vse to shoo their horse, vnlesse they ride
In post vpon the frozen fluds, then cause they shall not slide,
He sets a slender calke, and so he rides his way.
The horses of the countrey go good foure score verstes a day,
And all without the spurre, once pricke them and they skippe,
But go not forward on their way, the Russie hath his whippe
To rappe him on the ribbes, for though all booted bee,
Yet shall you not a payre of spurres in all the countrey see.
The common game is chesse, almost the simplest will Both giue a checke and eke a mate, by practise comes they skill.
Against the dice as fast, the poorest roges of al
Will sit them downe in open field, and there to gaming fall.
Their dice are very small, in fashion like to those Which we do vse, he takes them vp, and ouer thumbe he throwes
Not shaking them a whit, they cast suspiciously,
And yet I deeme them void of art that dicing most applie.
At play when siluer lacks goes saddle, horse and all,
And eche thing els worth siluer walkes, although the price be small.
Because thou louest to play friend Parker other while,
I wish thee there the weary day, with dicing to beguile.
But thou weart better fare at home, I wist it well,
And wouldest be loath among such lowts so long a time to dwell.
Then iudge of vs thy friends, what kinde of life we had,
That neere the frozen pole to waste our weary dayes were glad.
In such a sauage soile, where lawes do beare no sway,
But all is at the king his will, to saue or els to slay.
And that sans cause God wot, if so his minde be such,
But what meane I with kings to deale, we ought no saints to touch.
Conceiue the rest your selfe, and deeme what liues they lead,

Wher

Where lust is law, and subiects liue continually in dread,
And where the best estates haue none assurance good
Of lands, of liues, nor nothing falles vnto the next of blood,
But all of custome doth vnto the prince redowne,
And all the whole reuenue comes vnto the king his crowne.
Good faith I see thee muse at what I tell thee now,
But true it is, no choice, but all at princes pleasure bow.
So Tarquine ruled Rome as thou remembrest well,
And what his fortune was at last, I know thy selfe canst tell.
Where will in common weale doth beare the onely sway,
And lust is law, the prince and realme must needs in time decay.
The strangenesse of the place is such for sundry things I see,
As if I would I can not write ech priuate point to thee.
The colde is rare, the people rude, the prince so full of pride,
The realme so stored with moonks and nunnes, and priests on euery side:
The maners are so Turkie like, the men so full of guile,
The women wanton, temples stuft with idols that defile
The seats that sacred ought to be, the customes are so quaint,
As if I would describe the whole, I feare my penne would faint.
In summe, I say I neuer saw a prince that so did raigne,
Nor people so beset with saints, yet all but vile and vaine.
Wilde Irish are as ciuill as the Russies in their kinde,
Hard choice which is the best of both ech bloudy, rude and blinde.
If thou be wise, as wise thou art, and wilt be ruled by me,
Liue still at home, and couet not those barbarous coasts to see.
No good befalles a man that seeks, and findes no better place,
No ciuill customes to be learnd, where God bestowes no grace.
And truelie ill they do deserue to be belou'd of God,
That neither loue nor stand in awe of his assured rod:
Which though be long, yet plagues at last the vile and beastly sort
Of sinfull wights, that all in vice do place their chiefest sport.
Adieu friend Parker, if thou list, to know the Russes well,
To Sigismundus booke repayre, who all the trueth can tell:
For he long earst in message went vnto that sauage king,
Sent by the Pole, and true report in ech respect did bring.
To him I recommend my selfe, to ease my penne of paine,
And now at last do wish thee well, and bid fare well againe.

The fourth voyage into Persia, made my M. Arthur Edwards Agent, Iohn Sparke, Laurence Chapman, Christopher Faucet, and Richard Pingle, in the yeere 1568, declared in this letter written from Casbin in Persia, by the foresayd Laurence Chapman to a worshipfull merchant of the companie of Russia in London. Anno Domini 1569. Aprill 28.

WOrshipfull sir, my dutie alwayes remembred, and your prosperous health, and good successe in all your affayres wished, to the glory of God, and your owne hearts desire, &c. May it please you to vnderstand that your Agent M. Arthur Edwards & we departed from Yeraslaue in July 1568, & the 14 of August arriued at our port called Bilbill, with your ship the Grace of God, & the goods in her in good safetie, God be thanked for it, finding there neither ỳ people so ready to aid vs for the bringing of her in, & vnlading of the goods, nor yet so obedient to the Shaughs priuilege, as the worshipfull company haue beene informed. Our goods brought vpon land, we were compelled to open and sell as they would set the price, or otherwise it would haue bene worse for vs. Being so satisfied to their contentment, we were speedily ayded with camels by the prince Eraisbecke Sultan his appointment, to carry our goods to Shamakie, to which place we attayned the first of September, finding it so throughly furnished with all maner of commodities by occasion of our late comming, and by such as came before vs, that no man would alke to buy any one piece of karſie of vs, and lying then the ſpace of one whole moneth before your Agent Arthur Edwardes would diſperſe vs abroad with the goods, ſuch as came out of Ruſſia afterwardes, had brought theyr goods to that and other places, and ſpoyled thoſe ſales we might haue made, being ſent abroad in time conuenient, being no little hinderance to the worſhipfull, as alſo great griefe vnto vs to ſee. To conclude, through our daply calling vpon him, he bent himſelfe for Casbin, taking with him the greateſt ſumme of the goodes, and two of the worſhipfuls ſeruants, to witte, Iohn Sparke and my ſelfe, to helpe and procure the better ſale for the ſame: and leauing at Shamakie Chriſtopher Faucet and Richard Pingle with three hundred and fiftie pieces of karſies in theyr hands, ſuppoſed to be ſolde there or in Arraſh before he ſhould be able to make his returne from Casbin, which ſo farre forth as I can vnderſtand, lie for the greateſt part vnſolde. And being vpon our way, at a certayne towne called Ardowill, we chanced to barter nine pieces of karſies with thoſe merchants for foureſcore and foure batemans of cynnamom, ſelling the karſies at one hundred and fiftie ſhawghs the piece.

Their arriuall at Bilbill the 14 of August 1568.

Chriſtopher Faucet and Richard Pingle.

And being at that preſent not farre from Teueris, called the principall place in this countrey for vttering of cloth or karſies, by much intreaty I perſuaded your Agent to ſend thither to proue what might be done, and receiuing from him foure and fiftie pieces of karſies, as alſo his commiſſion for ſale of the ſame, I proceeded on that voyage my ſelfe, and one Tolmach in company with me, finding in that place great ſtore of broade cloth and karſies, brought thither, ſome part by the Turkes, who be reſident there, ſome by the Armenians, who fetch them at Aleppo, and ſome by the townelmen, who trauell vnto Venice, and there buy them, ſo that no man offered me one penie more then a hundred and fortie ſhawghs for a karſie: and hauing ſpeciall commiſſion and charge from your Agent not to ſtay there aboue the ſpace of ſeuen dayes after my arriuall there, but to repayre to Casbin with all ſpeed, and furthermore, hauing regard to keepe vp the price of the worſhipfuls commodities, according to theyr deſire, I found meanes to barter them away for ſpices, ſuch as were there to be had, neither in goodneſſe nor yet in price to my content: neuertheleſſe, conſidering the colde ſales which were there, as well for your karſies, as alſo the hotneſſe, that Ormuz way was ſhut vp by occaſion that the Indians do warre againſt them, which is true in deed: and againe the deſire that the worſhipfull hath to haue ſuch commodities bought, I thought it neceſſarie to buy them, the prices and weight whereof appeareth at large by my account ſent to the worſhipfull, and is, as I thinke, the whole ſumme of ſpices bought at this time.

War againſt the Portingals at Ormus.

It chanced me in that place to meet with the gouernours merchant of Grozyne, who was not a little deſirous to bargen with me for a hundred pieces of karſies for his maiſter called Leuontie, and offering me ſo good bands for the payment of the money or ſilke to the merchants contentment vpon the deliuery of them, as in any place within all this countrey is to be had: and offering me beſides his own letter in the behalfe of his maiſter, that no cuſtome ſhould be demanded for the ſame, and the obtaining alſo at his maiſters hand as large a priuiledge for the worſhipfull to trauell into all parts of his dominion, as the Shaugh had giuen them, and hearing good report made of him by the Armenians alſo, and that he was a Chriſtian, I was much more the willing to bargen with him, and ſolde him a hundred pieces for a hundred and threeſcore ſhawghs a piece, to be paid to the merchant in Grozine either in money or ſilke to his contentment, within three dayes after the deliuerie of the karſies there, hauing a band of him made by the Metropolitanes owne hand, for the performance of the ſame, which is as ſure as any heere is to be deuiſed: and vpon the ſame I ſent my Tolmach from me backe to Shamakie, with ſuch goodes as I bought at Teueris, and to the end he might cauſe the worſhipfuls ſeruants there to ſee this bargen accompliſhed. At whoſe arriuall there, as I do perceiue, the captaine would not accompliſh his bargen to take them, but ſaith he hath no need of them: ſuch is the conſtancie of all men in this countrey, with whomſoeuer you ſhall bargen. If the ware be bought, and they doe miſlike it afterwardes, they will bring it againe, and compell you to deliuer the money for it againe, regarding the Shawghs letters, which manifeſteth the contrary, as a ſtraw in the winde: by meanes whereof, the worſhipfull may know whether all be true that hath beene written of this countrey people or not.

The gouernor of Grozyne his merchant.

The generall inconſtancy in the merchants and dealers of thoſe parts.

I am informed by all the brokers in Teueris, that the way once open to Ormuz, from whence commeth no ſuch ſtore of ſpices as the worſhipfull doth looke for, that heere will be put away in Teueris, ſome for money, and other ſome for barter, to the number of three hundred or foure hundred pieces of karſies, being in coulers and goodneſſe to the examples here ſent you, the reſt of the karſies to make them vp a thouſand, and broad clothes to the ſumme of a hundred, be as many as will be put away yeerely in this countrey, ſo farre as yet I can perceiue.

The trade betweene the Venetians and the Armenians not eaſily to be broken.

To breake the trade betwixt the Venetians and the whole company of the Armenians, it is not poſſible, vnleſſe the worſhipfull will finde ſome meanes to receiue them yeerely to the number of 100 catters or mules lading, and deliuer them for the same one third part money, the rest cloth and karsies fitted in couleres meet for this countrey: the examples, as aboue said, are sent vnto you.

At Amadia sixe dayes iourney from Teueris, grow abundance of galles, which are brought by perrely by the Venetians, and be solde there for two bilhes the Teueris bateman, which as your Agent heere sayth, maketh sixe pound English weight, but I doubt it will not so be prooued. Nevertheless it is supposed much good will be done by buying of them: which might at this present haue partlie beene prooued, if so be that some could doe but halfe that which hath beene written.

Touching drugges, I finde many as well at Teueris, as also in Casbin, but the goodnesse nothing like to such as be brought into England out of other places: and the price is so high, that small gaine will be had in buying of them: albeit, if I had beene furnished with money, as I might haue beene, if some would, I would haue bought some, to the end the goodnesse of them might haue beene seene in England. At my comming to Casbin, I found no maner of sales of any commoditie made, but all lying there whole, and newes giuen out (as your Agent saith) that the Shawgh would buy all such commodities as he had, and giue him silke & spices for the same: but by report the Shawgh neuer tooke cloth into his treasurie all the dayes of his life, and will not now beginne: his whole trade is in raw silke, which he selleth alwayes for money to the Armenians and Turkes, and such other as vse to buy it: thus hoping of that which is not like to be had, he hath driuen off the time, not sending to any other places: by meanes whereof the worshipfuls goodes lye vnsolde to this day to their great hinderance, which I for my part am not a little sorrie to see.

Babylon is from hence fifteene dayes iourney, whereas by true report, be great store of dates, and solde for a bille the bateman, the commoditie fit for England: and the place so neere vnto vs, might easily haue beene knowne, if he, whose deeds and sayings differ much, had beene willing to the same. Cashan also is but seuen dayes iourney from hence, and a place by report, where most store of spices be at all times to be had, ouer and aboue any place in this countrey: it could not be granted by him to be seene and proued at this time: if this be loste to the worshipfull, referre it to the want of one which can do that which he speaketh in words. Babylon 15 dayes iourney from Casbin.

To trauell in this countrey, is not onely miserable and vncomfortable, for lacke of townes and villages to harbour in when night commeth, and to refresh men with wholesome victuailes in time of need, but also such scarsitie of water, that sometime in three dayes iourney together is not to be found any droppe fit for man or beast to drinke, besides the great danger we stand in for robbing by these infidels, who do account it remission of sinnes, to wash their hands in the bloud of one of vs. Better it is therefore in mine opinion to continue a begger in England during life, then to remaine a rich merchant seuen yeeres in this countrey, as some shall well finde at their comming hither.

By commandement of the Agent also, I went to Gillan, as well to see what harbor was there for your shippe, as also to vnderstand what commoditie is there best solde, and for what quantitie. I found the way from hence so dangerous and troublesome, that with my penne I am not able to note it vnto you: no man trauelleth from hence thither, but such poore people as need constraineth to buy Rice, for their reliefe to liue vpon, and they lay not aboue twentie batemans vpon a catter, and it lyeth no lower then the skirts of the saddle, and he escapeth very hardly that commeth there with the same. His voyage to Gillan.

The towne of Layghone, which was the chiefest place in all that land, haue I seene, and Langroe and Rosare also, which be now latelie ouerrunne by the Shawgh and his power, and be so spoyled, and the people so robbed, that not one of them is able to buy one karsie. The best commoditie there to be bought, is rawe silke, and is solde in the Summer time for eight and thirtie shawghs the Layghone bateman, which is little aboue foxtie pound weight, and for readie money: also there is to be had what store of Allome you will, and solde there for one bille the Teueris bateman.

In these partes be many Turkie merchants resident, which giue an outward shew, as though they were glad of our comming hither, but secretlie they be our mortall enemies, searching by all meanes to hinder our sales, because we should the sooner giue ouer our trade thither, which in processe of time I hope will grow to better perfection. They wish vs to go to Hallape with the rest of our commodities vnsolde, where they say we shall haue good intertainement in spight of the great number of Venetians which be there resident, and the custome but two in the hundred, and our karsies to be solde presently, had we neuer so many, for twelue duckets, which makes of this money one hundred sixe and fiftie shawghs: but by such as know the place, market & custome, The malice of the Turkish merchants.

it is repoxed to vs credibly to the contrary, and that such karsies as ours be are not solde for aboue eight duckets there: the custome thirtie in the hundred, & more, that no place in the world is so well furnished with good cloth, and karsies, & of so braue couler, as that place is, supposing it to be craftily purposed of them, to bring vs into trouble, which God defend vs from.

4 The price of spices.

The prices of spices be these, at this present inhansed by reason the way is shut to Ormuz, which when God shall send open, I purpose (God willing) to see, and at my returne to aduertise the worshipfull what benefit is there to be had in all points, so neere as I can learne: Pepper 25 shawghs the Teueris bateman: Cloues 50 shawghs, Long pepper 25 shawghs, Maces large 50 shawghs, Ginger 24 shawghs, ready money all, or els looke not vpon them. And the best sort of raw silke is solde for 60 shawghs the Teueris bateman. Thus for want of further matter to inlarge, I end by this time, beseeching God to preserue you in continuall health.

By your obedient seruant
Laurence Chapman.

Notes concerning this fourth voyage into Persia, begunne in the moneth of Iulie 1568, gathered by M. Richard Willes from the mouth of M. Arthur Edwards which was Agent in the same.

WHen he came first to the Sophies presence, at his court in Casbin, bringing his interpretour with him, and standing far off, the Sophie (sitting in a seat royall with a great number of his noble men about him) bad him come neere, and that still, vntill he came so neere him that he might haue touched him with his hand. Then the first demand that he asked him, was from what countrey he came: he answered, that he came from England. Then asked he of his noble men, who knew any such countrey? But when Edwards saw that none of them had any intelligence of that name, he named it Ingilterra, as the Italians call England. Then one of the noble men said Londro, meaning thereby London, which name is better knowen in farre countries out of Christendome, then is the name of England. When Edwards heard him name Londro, he said that that was the name of the chiefe citie of England, as was Teueris of the chiefe citie of Persia. He asked him many thinges more, as of the realme of England, maruelling that it should be an Iland, of so great riches and power, as Edwards declared vnto him, of the riches & abundance of our merchandize, as he further vnderstood by our traffike in Moscouia, and other countries. He demanded also many things of the Queenes Maiestie, and of the customes and lawes of the realme: saying oftentimes in his owne language, Bara colla (that is to say) Well said. He asked also many things of king Philip, & of his wars against the Turke at Malta. Then he demanded of him what was the chiefe cause of his resort into his realme. And being certified that it was for the trade of merchandize, he asked what kinde of merchandize he could bring thither. Such (said he) as the Venetian merchants do, which dwelling in our country in the citie of Londro, send to Uenice, & from thence into Turkie by Halepo and Tripoli in Syria, from whence, as by the second and third hands, with great charges of many customes and other thinges thereunto pertaining, they are at the length brought into your countrey and cities of Persia. What merchandize are those? sayd the Sophie. Edwards answered, that they were great abundance of fine karsies, of broad clothes, of all sorts and coulers, as scarlets, violets, and other of the finest cloth of all the world. Also that the Venetians brought out of England, not onely such clothes ready made, but furthermore great plenty of fine wooll to mingle with their woools, of which they could not otherwise make fine cloth: affirming that there went out of England yeerly that wayes, aboue two hundred thousand karsies, and as many broad clothes, beside fine wooll and other merchandize, beside also the great abundance of like clothes, the which were carryed into Spaine, Barbarie, & diuers other countries. The Sophie then asked him by what meanes such merchandize might be brought into Persia. Right well sir (said he) by the way of Moscouia, with more safetie and in much shorter time then the Venetians can bring them: first from England to Uenice, and from thence into Persia, by the way of Turkie. And therefore if it shall please your Maiestie to grant vs free passage into all your dominions, with such priuileges as may appertaine to the safegard of our liues, goods, and merchandize, we will furnish your countries with all such merchandize, and other commodities, in shorter time, and better cheape then you may haue the same at the Turks hands. This talke and much more was betweene the Sophie and Edwardes for the space of two houres, all which thinges liked him so well, that shortly after he granted to the saide Arthur Edwardes other priuileges, for the trade of merchandize into Persia, Londro. London.

The Venetians traffike in England.

all written in Azure and gold letters, and deliuered vnto the lord keeper of the Sophie his great ſeale. The lord keeper was named Coche Califay, who ſayd that when the Shaugh (that is the king or prince) did ſit to ſeale any letters, that laſt priuiledge ſhould be ſealed and deliuered to Laurence Chapman. In this priuiledge is one principall article for ſeruants or merchants: That if the Agent do perceiue that vpon their naughtie doings, they would become Buſor men, that then the Agent whereſoeuer he ſhall find any ſuch ſeruant or ſeruaunes, to take them and put them in priſon, and no perſon to keepe them or maintaine them. This article was granted in reſpect of a cuſtome among the Perſians, being Mahumetans, whoſe maner is friendly to receiue and welentertaine both with gifts and liuing, all ſuch Chriſtians, as forſaking their religion, will become of the religion of the Perſians. Inſomuch that before this priuiledge was granted, there was great occaſion of naughtie ſeruants to deceiue and rob their maſters, that vnder the colour of profeſſing that religion, they might liue among them in ſuch ſafetie, that you might haue no lawe againſt them, either to punish them or to recouer your goods at their hands, or elſewhere. For before the Sophie (whom they ſay to be a maruelous wiſe and gracious prince) ſeemed to fauour our nation, and to graunt them ſuch priuiledges, the people abuſed them very much, and ſo hated them, that they would not touch them, but reuiled them, calling them Cafars and Gawars, which is, infidels or miſbeleeuers. But after they ſaw how greatly the prince fauoured them, they had them afterward in great reuerence, and would kiſſe their hands, and vſe them very friendly. For before they tooke it for no wrong to rob them, defraud them, beare falſe witneſſe againſt them, and ſuch merchandizes as they had bought or ſold, make them take it againe, and change it as often as them liſted. And if any ſtrauger by chance had killed one of them, they would haue the life of two for one ſlaine, and for the debes of any ſtranger, would take the goods of any other of the ſame nation, with many other ſuch like abuſes, in maner vnknowen to the prince, before the complaints of our men made vnto him for reformation of ſuch abuſes: which were the cauſe that no merchant ſtrangers of contrary religion, durſt come into his dominions with their commodities, which might be greatly to the profite of him and his ſubiects.

The Articles of the ſecond priuiledge deliuered to Lawrence Chapman, which are to be annexed vnto the former priuiledge.

10 Item that the merchants haue free libertie, as in their firſt priuiledge, to goe vnto Gillan, and all other places of his dominions, now or hereafter when occaſion ſhall be giuen.

11 Item, if by miſfortune any of their ſhips ſhould breake, or fall vpon any part of his dominions on the ſea coaſt, his ſubiects to helpe with all ſpeed to ſaue the goods and to be deliuered to any of the ſaid merchaunts that liueth: or otherwiſe to bee kept in ſafetie vntill any of them come to demaund them.

12 Item, if any of the ſaid merchants depart this life in any citie or towne, or on the high way, his gouernours there to ſee their goods ſafely kept, and to bee deliuered to any other of them that ſhall demaund them.

13 Item, the ſaid merchants to take ſuch camell men as they themſelues will, being countrey people, and that no Kiſſell Baſh doe let or hinder them. And the ſaid owners of the camels to bee bound to anſwere them ſuch goods as they ſhall receiue at their hands, and the camell men to ſtand to the loſſes of their camels or horſes.

14 Item more, that the ſaid carriers do demaund no more of them, then their agreement was to pay them.

15 Item more, if they be at a price with any carriers, & haue geuen earneſt, the Camel men to ſee they keepe their promiſe.

16 Item, if any of the ſaid merchants be in feare to trauell, to giue them one or more to go with them, and ſee them in ſafetie with their goods to the place they will goe vnto.

17 Item, in all places, to ſay, in all cities, townes or villages on the high way, his ſubiects to giue them honeſt roume, and vitails for their money.

18 Item, the ſayd merchants may in any place where they ſhall thinke beſt, build or buy any houſe or houſes to their owne vſes. And no perſon to moleſt or trouble them, and to ſtand in any Caruan where they will, or ſhall thinke good.

THe commodities which the merchants may haue by this trade into Perſia, are thought to be great, and may in time perhaps be greater then the Portugals trade into the Eaſt Indies, for ſmuch as by the way of Perſia into England, the returne may be made euery yeere once: where as the Portugals make the returne from Calecut but once in two yeeres, by a long and dangerous voiage all by sea: for whereas the citie and Iland of Ormus, lying in the gulfe of Persia, is the most famous marte towne of all East India, whither all the merchandises of India are brought, the same may in shorter time and more safely, be brought by land and riuers through Persia, euen vnto the Caspian sea, and from thence by the countreis of Russia or Moscouia by riuers, euen vnto the citie of Yeraslaue, and from thence by land a hundred and foure score miles to Vologda, and from thence againe all by water, euen vnto England.

The merchandises which be had out of Persia for the returne of wares, are silke of all sortes and colours, both rawe and wrought. Also all maner of spices and drugs, pearles and precious stones, likewise carpets of diuers sortes, with diuers other rich merchandises. It was told me of them that came last from Persia, that there is more silke brought into some one citie of Persia, then is of cloth brought into the citie of London. Also that one village of Armenia named Gilgat, doth carie yeely fiue hundred, and sometime a thousand mules laden with silke to Halepo in Soria of Turkie, being foure daies iourny frō Tripoli, where the Venetians haue their continual abiding, and send from thence silkes which they returne for English karsies and other clothes into all partes of Christendome.

The maner how the Christians become Busor men, and forsake their religion.

I Haue noted here before that if any Christian will become a Busor man, that is, one that hath forsaken his faith, and be a Mahumetan of their religion, they giue him many gifts, and sometime also a liuing. The maner is, that when the deuill is entred into his heart to forsake his faith, he resorteth to the Soltan or gouernour of the towne, to whom hee maketh protestation of his diuilish purpose. The gouernour appointeth him a horse, and one to ride before him on another horse, bearing a sword in his hand, and the Busor man bearing an arrow in his hand, and rideth in the citie, cursing his father and mother: and if euer after he returne to his owne religion, hee is guiltie of death, as is signified by the sword borne before him. A young man, a seruant of one of our merchants, because he would not abide the correction of his maister for his faultes, was minded to forsake his faith. But (as God would) he fell suddenly sicke and died, before he gaue himselfe to the deuill. If he had become a Busor man, he had greatly troubled the merchants, for if he would then haue said that halfe their goods had bene his, they would haue giuen credite vnto him. For the auoiding of which inconuenience, it was granted in the priuileges that no Busor man, &c. as there appeareth.

In Persia in diuers places, oxen and kine beare the tents and houshold stuffe of the poore men of the countrey, which haue neither camels nor horses.

Of the tree which beareth Bombasine cotton, or Gossampine.

IN Persia is great abundance of Bombasine cotton, & very fine, this groweth on a certaine little tree or briar, not past ỳ height of a mans waste or litle more: the tree hath a slender stalk like vnto a briar, or to a carnation gilleflowre, with very many branches, bearing on euery branch a fruit or rather a cod, growing in round forme, conteining in it the cotton: & when this bud or cod commeth to the bignesse of a wallnut, it openeth and sheweth foorth the cotton, which groweth still in bignesse vntill it be like a fleece of woll as big as a mans fist, and beginneth to be loose, and then they get it as it were the ripe fruit. The seeds of these trees are as big as peason, and are blacke, and somewhat flat, and not round: they sowe them in plowed ground, where they grow in the fields in great abundance in many countries in Persia, and diuers other regions.

The writing of the Persians.

ARthur Edwards shewed me a letter of the Sophie, written in their letters backward, subscribed with the hands both of the Sophie and his Secretarie. The Sophies subscription was only one word (his name I suppose was Shaugh) written in golden letters vpon red paper. The whole letter was also written on the same piece of red paper, being long and narow, about ỳ length of a foote, and not past three inches broad. The priuate signet of the Sophie, was a round printed marke about the bignes of a riall, onely printed vpon the same paper without any ware or other seale, the letters seeme so misshapen and disordered, that a man would thinke it were somewhat scribbled in maner at aduentures. Yet they say that almost euery letter with his pricke or circumflex, signifieth a whole word. Insomuch that in a piece of paper as big as a mans hand, their writing doth containe as much as doth ours almost in a sheete of paper.

The

The firſt voyage into Perſia made by M. Thomas Baniſter, and M. Ieffrey Ducket Agents for the Moſcouie companie, begun from England in the yeere 1568. and continuing to the yeere 1574. following. Written by P. I. from the mouth of M. Lionell Plumtree.

VPon the 2. day of July 1568. they embarked themſelues at Yeraſlaue, being accompanied with Lionell Plumtree, and ſome 12. Engliſhmen more, in a Barke called the Thomas Bonauenture of the burden of 70. tunnes, taking alſo along with them of Ruſſes to the number of 40. for their vſe and imploiments. It fell out in the way, before they came to Aſtracan by 40. miles, that the Nagaian Tartares, being a kind of theeuiſh and cruell people, made an aſſault vpon them with 18. boates of theirs, each of them being armed, ſome with ſwords, ſome with ſpeares, and ſome others with bowes and arrowes, and the whole number of them they diſcouered to bee about 300. men. They for their partes, although they could haue wiſhed a quiet voiage and iourney without blowes and violence, yet not willing to be ſpoiled with ſuch Barbarians as they were, began to defend themſelues againſt their aſſaule, by meanes whereof a very terrible and fierce fight followed and continued hote & ſharpe for two howers, wherein our men ſo well plaid their parts with their caliuers, that they forced the Tartares to flee with the loſſe of 120. of them, as they were afterwards enformed by a Ruſſe priſoner, which eſcaped from the Nagaians, and came to them to Aſtracan, at which towne they arriued the 20. of Auguſt.

In this towne of Aſtracan they were ſomwhat hindered of their iourney, and ſtaied the ſpace of 6. weekes by reaſon of a great armie of 70000. Turkes and Tartares which came thither vpon the inſtigation of the great Turke, hoping either to haue ſurpriſed it ſuddenly or by continuance of ſiege to win the ſame. But in the end by reaſon that the Winter approched, as alſo, becauſe they had receiued newes of a great expedition, which the Emperour of Ruſſia was in prouiding for the defence of the ſayde place, they were conſtrained to raiſe their ſiege, and to leaue the towne as they found it.

Vpon their departure our men had opportunitie to proceed on their voyage, and vſing the occaſion, they left Aſtracan, and came to Bilbill towards the ende of October: from whence they went to Shauaran, where (as they lodged in their tents) they were greatly moleſted with ſtrange troopes of Iholcaues or foxes, which were ſo buſie with them that they tooke their meate and victuals out of their lodgings, and deuoured to the bare bones in one night a mightie wild Boze that was ſent vnto them for a preſent from the gouernour of the countrey.

Hauing ſtaied here ſome three or foure dayes in prouiding of cartages and other neceſſaries for their iourney, they departed thence and came to Shamachie, which is foure dayes iourney from the aforeſayd Shauaran. In this towne of Skamachie their whole company ſpent out the Winter, and from thence in Aprill following, they tooke their iourney towards Ardowill a place of great account and much eſteemed, by reaſon of the ſepulchres of the Emperours of Perſia, which for the moſt part lie there buried, and ſo is growen to be a place of their ſuperſtitious deuotion. In this towne of Ardowill they ſoiourned the ſpace of 5. or 6. moneths, finding ſome traffique and ſales, but to no purpoſe, the towne being more inhabited and frequented with gentlemen and noblemen then merchants.

The difference of religion bred great broiles in this towne whiles they remained there: for the brother ſought the deſtruction of the brother, and the neereſt kinſemen roſe vp one againſt another, inſomuch that one of their companie Lionell Plumtree hath ſeene in one day ſometimes 14. ſleine in a garboile. And he being further deſirous to ſee their maner of fight, or rather ſomewhat more curious to behold, then miſtruſtfull of their blowes, was like to haue borne a ſhare in their bloodie tragedie, being twiſe wounded with their ſhot and arrowes, although not to the death.

At this towne the Shaw Thamas ſent a meſſenger for our men to come to his preſence at Caſbin, to whom Thomas Baniſter failed not to goe, although maſter Ducket lay very ſicke at Ardowill, and in ſuch caſe that they almoſt deſpaired of his recouerie. Hee being come to the Shawgh, was receiued and entertained of him with great fauour and ſpeciall countenaunce, and had the moſt part of all his requeſts graunted him, this onely excepted, that whereas he entreated a priuiledge or ſufferance to tranſport and carie through his dominions certaine horſes into India, the Shawgh ſeemed loth to yeeld thereunto, and yet did not altogether denie it, but referred it to ſome further time. As for the point of traffique, hee could not make that motion or requeſt that was not ſo ſoone graunted as it was preferred: and the Shaugh himſelfe bought there of him many horſes, and made him as good paiment as any man could wiſhe, and oftentimes would ſend his money for the wares before the wares were deliuered, that he might bee the surer of this honourable intended dealing.

One thing somewhat straunge I thought good in this place to remember, that whereas hee purposed to send a great summe of money to Mecca in Arabia, for an offering to Mahomet their prophet, hee would not send any money or coine of his owne, but sent to the English merchants to exchange his coyne for theirs, according to the value of it, yeelding this reason for the same, that the money of the merchaunts was gotten by good meanes, and with good consciences, and was therefore woorthie to bee made an oblation to their holy prophet, but his owne money was rather gotten by fraud, oppression, and vnhonest meanes, and therefore was not fit to serue for so holie a vse.

After sixe moneths spent in Casbin, the sayd Thomas Banister departed towards the great citie of Tauris, where being arriued, hee found master Ducket well recouered of his sickenesse, whom he had left ill at Ardowill.

At this Citie the foresayde master Ducket made sales of the English commodities, remayning there to that purpose the space of two yeeres and a halfe. And besides other kindes of merchandises of that countrey, he bought great store of gals which grow in great abundance at a place within one dayes iourney of the aforesaid Tauris.

The death of M. Banister.

After this Thomas Banister departed from Tauris, and went to Shamakie, to giue order in the transporting of those commodities which were bought for England. And hauing dispatched them away, hee went there hence to Arrash, a towne foure dayes iourney with camels from Shamachie, for the buying of rawe silke. But there by reason of the vnwholesomnesse of the ayre, and corruption of the waters in the hote time of the yeere, hee with Lawrence Chapman and some other English men vnhappily died: which being knowen of master Ducket, hee immediately came from Tauris to Arrash, to take possession of the goods, for otherwise by the custome of the countrey, if there had bene no merchaunt or other friend of his to enter vpon that which hee left, all had fallen into the Shaughs hands, which goods notwithstanding could not bee recouered from the officers which had sealed and sealed vp the same, vntill master Ducket had bene in person with the Shaugh, and had procured his order for the deliuerie thereof.

Lionell Plumtree in the meane time that master Ducket was at Casbin in sute by goodes vpon the perswasion of certayne Bogharians, made prouision for a iourney to Cathaya, with cariages and commodities, and hauing all things readie, departed secretly with a Caruan: but being gone forwards on his way sixe dayes iourney, some fiftie horsemen by the procurement of Humfrey Greensell (who afterwardes being at Ormuz in the East Indias, was there cruelly burnt in the Inquisition by the Portingals) were sent after him in poste from Soltan Eraslbecke, the Shawghs Lieuetenaunt, to fetche him backe againe, not suffering him to passe on so perillous and dangerous a iourney for feare of diuers inconueniences that might follow.

After this master Ducket returned from Casbin to Shamachie againe, and immediately made preparation for a iourney to Cashan, being about foure dayes iourney from Shamachie, and caried with him 4. mules laden with money.

In the way of his trauell hee passed through Persipolis, sometime the royall state of the Emperours of Persia, but now altogether ruined and defaced, whereof remayne to be seene at this day two gates onely that are distant one from the other the space of 12. miles, and some few pinnacles in the mountaines and conueiances for fresh water.

The foresayde Cashan is a Towne that consisteth all together of merchandise, and the best trade of all the lande is there, being greatly frequented by the merchaunts of India.

Heere our men bought great store of all maner of wrought Silkes, and some Spices, and good store of Turkie stones.

The towne is much to bee commended for the ciuill and good gouernement that is there vsed. An idle person is not suffered to liue amongst them.

The childe that is but fiue yeeres olde, is set to some labour. No ill rule, disorder or vice by gaming or otherwise, is there permitted. Playing at Dice or Cardes is by the lawe present death.

At this Cashan they remayned about the space of tenne weekes, and then came downe againe to Shamachie, and after some time spent in diuers places of the countrey for buying of rawe silke silke and other commodities, they came at last to Shauaran againe, where their ship was in harbour, and then they shipt all their goods and embarked themselues also, setting saple the eight day of May, in the yeere 1573. intending to fetch Astracan. By reason of the varietie of the windes and dangerous flats of the Caspian sea, they beat it vp and downe some 20. dayes. And the 28. day riding at anker vpon the flats, certaine Russe Cassaks, which are outlawes or banished men, hauing intelligence of their being there, and of the great wealth that they had with them, came to them with diuers boates vnder the colour of friendship, and entred their ship, but immediately they tooke their hatchets and slew diuers of the Russes that were of the ship vpon the hatches: Whereupon master Ducket, Lionell Plumtree, William Smith, the master, a man of singular valure, and Amos Riall being vnder the Spardecke, did so well behaue themselues, that they skowred the hatches, and slew 14. of the Cassaks gunners, and hurt and wounded aboue 30. more, being of them all in number 150. at the least, armed with caliuers and other weapons fit for so vilanous a purpose.

M. Ducket notwithstanding and the rest aforesayd, receiued diuers wounds from the enemie, and were so hurt, and withall so oppressed with the multitude and force of them, that they were at last constrained to make an agreement with the Cassaks by rendring the ship into their hands, hauing receiued first their othes sworne by their crucifixes, not to doe any further harme to their persons.

Thus the shippe beyng taken, and all the English greuously hurt, the Cassaks immediately discharged the ship of them, putting them all into the ship boate with two or three Persian targets full of horse flesh and swines flesh, without further victuals or relefe: they being in that case, made the best hast they could to get to Astracan: and being come to the towne, master Ducket made great sute to the captaine, to haue men and boates set out for the rescuing and recouering of the ship if it were possible, who immediately sent out his sonne with fortie boates and fiue hundred men to pursue the Pirats, and by good hap came to the place where they rid at anker with the ship, but by reason of their foolishnesse in striking vp their drummes before they were come neere them, the Cassaks discouering the boates, cut their cables, and put out to Sea, whereupon the boates not being able to follow them, returned againe to Astracan. After which, three score boates more were sent out to pursue them agayne the second time: and that second armie came to a place where they found many of those Cassaks, and slew them and found out the places where they had hid certaine parcels of their goods in the earth in the chestes of the ship: all which they recouered againe for the English merchants, to the valew of 5000. li. of 30. or 40. thousand pound, but all the rest the Cassaks in the ship had caried away.

In the same place they found further, diuers of the Cassaks which the English men had slaine, buried in the earth, and wrapt some in fortie or fiftie yardes of Sattin, and Taffataes, and some in Turkie carpets cut and spoyled by those vilanous Pirats, of whom afterwardes as many as could be taken by the Persians, who entirely loued the English merchants, were put to most cruel tormentes in all places according to their deserts.

But our men being thus spoyled of their goods, and wounded in their bodies, remained about two moneths at Astracan, for their better recouerie: and hauing gotten some reasonable strength, they then prouided boates, and went vp the riuer Volga to Cazan, with such goods as they had recouered from the Cassaks. From Cazan they went towards Yeraslaue, but in the way the ice intercepted them about the beginning of October, where suddenly in the night they were taken with a cruell and vehement frost, and therewithall the waters so congeled, that their boates were crushed and cut in sunder with the ice, whereby they sustained both a further daunger of life and losse of goods: but as much as they could preserue with much adoe, they conueyed ouer land in sleds to Vologda, and from thence sent much of it to S. Nicholas, to bee laden in the shippes for England.

But master Ducket, Lionell Plumtree, and Amos Riall went with some parcels to the Mosko, and there sold certaine quantities of it to the Emperour, who pitying the mightie losse that they had sustained by his owne rebellious people and subiects, bought himselfe as much as hee liked, and paied present money for the same. So that Winter beyng spent out in Mosko, and such wares prouided by them as serued for England, they departed to S. Nicholas, and there embarked in the moneth of August: and hauing indured a very terrible passage in nine weekes and three dayes, with some hardnesse of victuals, contrary and furious windes, and other sea accidents, they arriued at London in the moneth of October one thousand fiue hundred seuentie and foure, and so made an ende of an vnfortunate voyage, which if it had pleased God to prosper, that all things had come home as safely as they were carefully prouided, and painfully laboured for, ichao proued the richest voyage and most profitable returne of commoditie, that had euer bene vndertaken by English merchants, who notwithstanding all misfortunes, lost nothing of their principall aduenture, but onely the interest and gaine that might haue risen by the vse of their stocke in the meane time.

Further obseruations concerning the state of Persia, taken in the foresayd fift voyage into those partes, and written by M. Ieffrey Ducket, one of the Agents employed in the same.

SHamachie is the fairest towne in all Media, and the chiefest commoditie of the countrey is rawe silke, and the greatest plentie thereof is at a towne three dayes iourney from Shamachie called Arash: and within three dayes iourney of Arash, is a countrey named Groisine, whose inhabitants are Christians, and are thought to bee they which are otherwise called Georgians: there is also much silke to bee solde. The chiefe Towne of that countrey is called Zegham, from whence is caried yeerely into Persia, an incredible quantitie of Hasell nuts, all of one sort and goodnesse, and as good and thinne shaled as are our Filberds. Of these are caried yeerely the quantitie of 4000. Camels laden.

Of the name of the Sophie of Persia, and why he is called the Shawgh, and of other customes.

THe king of Persia (whom here we call the great Sophi) is not there so called, but is called the Shawgh. It were there daungerous to call him by the name of Sophi, because that Sophi in the Persian tongue, is a begger, and it were as much as to call him, The great begger. He lieth at a towne called Casbin, which is situate in a goodly fertile valley of three or foure dayes iourney in length. The towne is but euill builded, and for the most part all of bricke, not hardened with fire, but onely dried at the Sunne, as is the most part of the building of all Persia. The king hath not come out of the compasse of his owne house, in three and thirtie or foure and thirtie yeeres, whereof the cause is not knowen, but as they say, it is vpon a superstition of certaine prophesies to which they are greatly addicted: hee is now about fourescore yeeres of age, and very lustie. And to keepe him the more lustie, hee hath foure wiues alwayes, and about three hundred concubines, and once in the yeere he hath all the faire maidens and wiues that may be found a great way about, brought vnto him, whom he diligently perviseth, feeling them in all partes, taking such as he liketh, and putting away some of them which hee hath kept before, and with them that he putteth away, he gratifieth some such as hath done him the best seruice. And if he chance to take any mans wife, her husband is very glad thereof, and in recompence of her, oftentimes he giueth the husband one of his olde store, whom he thankfully receiueth.

How strangers are vsed.

If any stranger being a Christian shall come before him, he must put on a new paire of shoes made in that countrey, and from the place where he entereth, there is digged as it were, a caue all the way, vntill he come to the place where he shall talke with the king, who standeth alwayes aboue in a gallerie, when he talketh with any strangers: and when the stranger is departed, then is the caue cast downe, and the ground made euen againe.

Of the religion of the Persians.

THeir religion is all one with the Turkes, sauing that they differ who was the right successour of Mahumet. The Turkes say that it was one Homer and his sonne Viman. But the Persians say that it was one Mortus Ali, which they would proue in this maner. They say there was a counsell called to decide the matter who should bee the successour: and after they had called vpon Mahumet to reueale vnto them his will and pleasure therein, there came among them a litle Lizard, who declared that it was Mahumets pleasure that Mortus Ali should bee his successour. This Mortus Ali was a valiant man, and slew Homer the Turkes prophet. He had a sword that he fought withall, with the which he conquered all his enemies, and killed as many as he stroke. When Mortus Ali died, there came a holy prophet, who gaue them warning that shortly there would come a white Camell, vpon the which hee charged them to lay the body & sword of Mortus Ali, and to suffer the Camel to carie it whither he would.

A goodly and well grounded religion.

The

The which being perfourmed, the said white camell caried the sword and body of Mortus Ali vnto the sea side, and the camell going a good way into the sea, was with the sword and body of Mortus Ali taken vp into heauen, for whose returne they haue long looked in Persia. And for this cause, the king alwayes keepeth a horse readie sadled for him, and also of late kept for him one of his owne daughters to be his wife, but she died in the yeere of our Lorde 1573. And say furthermore, that if hee come not shortly, they shalbe of our beliefe: much like the Iewes, looking for their Messias to come and reigne among them, like a worldly king for euer, and deliuer them from the captiuitie which they are nowe in among the Christians, Turkes, and Gentiles.

The Shaugh, or king of Persia, is nothing in strength and power comparable vnto the Turke: for although he hath a great Dominion, yet is it nothing to be compared with the Turkes: neither hath hee any great Ordinance or gunnes, or harquebusses. Notwithstanding, his eldest sonne Ismael, about twentie and fiue yeeres past, fought a great battaile with the Turke, and slew of his armie about an hundreth thousand men, who after his returne, was by his father cast into prison, and there continueth vntil this day: for his father the Shaugh, had him in suspition that he would haue put him downe, and haue taken the regiment vnto himselfe.

Their opinion of Christ is, that hee was an holy man, and a great Prophete, but not like vnto Mahumet: saying, that Mahumet was the last prophet, by whome all things were finished, and was therefore the greatest. To proue that Christ was not Gods sonne, they say that God had neuer wife, and therefore could haue no sonne or children. They goe on pilgrimage from the furthest part of Persia, vnto Mecha in Arabia, and by the way they visit also the Sepulchre of Christ at Ierusalem, which they now call Couche Kalye. Their opinion of Christ.

The most part of spices which commeth into Persia, is brought from the Islande of Ormus, situate in the gulfe of Persia, called Sinus Persicus, betweene the maine lande of Persia and Arabia, &c. The Portingals touche at Ormus both in their voyage to East India, and homeward againe, and from thence bring all such spices as are occupied in Persia and the regions there about: for of pepper they bring very small quantitie, and that at a very deare price.

The Turkes oftentimes bring pepper from Mecha in Arabia, which they sell as good cheape as that which is brought from Ormus. Silkes are brought from no place, but are wrought all in their owne countrey. Ormus is within two miles of the maine lande of Persia, and the Portingals fetche their fresh water there, for the which they pay tribute to the Shaugh or king of Persia.

Within Persia, they haue neither golde nor siluer mines, yet haue they coyned money, both of golde and siluer, and also other small moneis of copper. There is brought into Persia an incredible summe of Dutch dolers, which for the most part are there employed in rawe silke. Their money.

They haue fewe bookes, and lesse learning, and are for the most part very brutish in all kinde of good sciences, sauing in some kind of silke workes, and in such things as pertaine to the furniture of horses, in the which they are passing good. Their bookes and learning.

Their lawes are, as is their religion, wicked and detestable. And if any man offend the prince, he punisheth it extreemely, not onely in the person that offendeth, but also in his children, and in as many as are of his kinne. Theft and murther are often punished, yet none otherwise then pleaseth him that is ruler in the place where the offence is committed, and as the partie offending is able to make friends, or with money to redeeme his offence. Such was the lawe of the Macedonians for treason.

There is oftentimes great mutenie among the people in great townes, which of Mortus Ali sonnes was greatest: Insomuch that sometimes in the towne two or three thousande people are together by the eares for the same, as I haue seene in the towne of Shamaky and Ardouill, and also in the great citie of Teueris, where I haue seene a man comming from fighting, in a brauerie hanging in his hande foure or fiue mens heads, carrying them by the haire of the head: for although they shaue their heads most commonly twise a weeke, yet leaue they a tuft of haire vpon the crowne, about two foote long. I haue enquired why they leaue that tuft of haire vpon their heads. They answere, that thereby they may easlyer bee caried vp into heauen, when they are dead. Dissention for religion.

For their religion, they haue certaine priestes, who are apparelled like vnto other men. They vse euery morning and afternoone, to goe vp to the tops of their Churches, and tell there a great tale of Mahumet & Mortus Ali: and other preaching haue they none. Their Lent is after Christmas, not in abstinence from flesh onely, but from all meates and drinkes, vntill the day be off the same: but then they eate sometimes the whole night. And although it be against their religion to drinke wine, yet at night they will take great excesse thereof, and be wonken. Their priests, and preaching. Their Lent.

Their lent beginneth at the newe Moone, and they doe not enter into it vntill they haue seene the same: Neither yet doeth their lent ende, vntill they haue seene the next newe Moone, although the same (through close weather) should not be seene in long time.

Their saints and holy men.

They haue among them certaine holy men, whome they call Setes, counted holy for that they or any of their auncestours haue bene on pilgrimage at Mecha in Arabia, for wholoeuer goeth thither on pilgrimage to visite the sepulchre of Mahumet, both hee and all his posteritie, are euer after called Setes, and counted for holy men, and haue no lesse opinion of themselues. And if a man contrary one of these, hee will say that hee is a Saint, and therefore ought to be beleeued and that hee cannot lie, although he lye neuer so shamefully. Thus a man may be to holy, as his pride is greater then spirituall pride, of a minde puffed vp with his owne opinion of holinesse.

Pilgrimage.

These Setes doe vse to shaue their heads all ouer, sauing on the sides a little aboue the temples, the which they leaue vnshauen, and vse to braide the same as women doe their haire, and to weare it as long as it will growe.

Their prayer and worshipping of God and Mahumet.

Euery morning they vse to worship God, Mahumet, and Mortus Ali, and in praying turne themselues toward the South, because Mecha lieth that way from them. When they be in trauaile on the way, many of them will (as soone as the Sunne riseth) light from their beastes, turning themselues to the South, and will laye their gownes before them, with their swoordes and beades, and so standing vpright, worship to the South: And many times in their prayers kneele downe and kisse their beades, or some what els that lieth before them.

Washing and outward cleanlinesse.

The men or women doe neuer go to make water, but they vse to take with them a potte with a spoute, and after they haue made water, they flash some water vpon their priuie parts, and thus doe the women as well as the men: and this is a matter of great religion among them, and in making of water, the men doe cowe downe as well as the women.

Their swearing.

When they earnestly affirme a matter, they will sweare by God, Mahumet, or Mortus Ali, and sometimes by al at ones: as thus in their owne language, saying, Olla Mahumet Ali. But if he sweare by the Shaughes head, in saying Shaugham bashe, you may then beleeue him if you will.

The kings magnificence.

The Shaugh keepeth a great magnificence in his court: and although sometimes in a moneth or fiue weekes, none of his nobilitie or counsaile can see him, yet goe they dayly to the court, and tarie there a certaine time, vntill they haue knowen his pleasure whether he will commaund them any thing or not. He is watched euery night with a thousand of his men, which are called his Curshes, who are they that hee vseth to sende into the Countreis about his greatest affaires. When he sendeth any of them (if it be to the greatest of any of his nobilitie) he will obey them, although the messenger should beate any of them to death.

Pursiuants.

The kings company with his wiues and concubines.

The Shaugh occupieth himselfe alwayes two dayes in the weeke in his Bathstoue, and when hee is disposed to goe thither, hee taketh with him fiue or sixe of his concubines, more or lesse, and one day they consume in washing, rubbing, and bathing him, and the other day in paring his nailes, and other matters. The greatest part of his life, hee spendeth amongst his wiues and concubines. Hee hath nowe reigned about fiftie and foure yeeres, and is therefore counted a very holy man, as they euer esteeme their kings, if they haue reigned fiftie yeeres or more: for they measure the fauour of God by a mans prosperitie, or his displeasure by a mans misfortune or aduersitie. The great Turke hath this Shaugh in great reuerence, because hee hath reigned king so long time.

The succession of the kingdome.

I haue saide before that hee hath foure wiues, and as many concubines as him listeth: and if he chaunce to haue any children by any of his concubines, and bee minded that any of those children shall inherite after him, then when one of his wiues dieth, the concubine whome hee so honoureth hee maketh one of his wiues, and the childe whome hee so loueth best, hee ordaineth to be king after him.

Circumcision.

What I heard of the maner of their marriages, for offending of honest consciences and chaste eares, I may not commit to writing: their fasting I haue declared before. They vse circumcision vnto children of seuen yeeres of age, as doe the Turkes.

Their houses and maner of eating.

Their houses (as I haue said) are for the most part made of bricke, not burned but only dried in the Sunne: In their houses they haue but little furniture of household stuffe, except it be their carpets, and some copper worke: for all their kettles and dishes wherein they eate, are of copper. They eate on the ground, sitting on carpets crosse legged as doe tailers. There is no man so simple but he sitteth on a carpet better or worse, and the whole house or roome wherein hee sitteth is wholy couered with carpets. Their houses are all with flat rooles, couered with earth: and in the sommer time, they lie vpon them all night.

They haue many bond seruants both men and women. Bond men and bond women, is not of the beſt kinde of Marchandiſe that any man may bring. When they buy any mayds or yong women, they vſe to feele them in all partes, as with vs men doe horſes: when one hath bought a young woman, if hee like her, hee will keepe for his owne vſe as long as him liſteth, and then ſelleth her to an other, who doeth the like with her. So that one woman is ſometimes ſolde in the ſpace of foure or fiue yeeres, twelue, or twentie times. If a man keepe a bonde woman for his owne vſe, and if hee finde her to be falſe to him, and giue her bodie to any other, hee may kill her if her will. Bondmen and bond women.

Women bought and ſold, and let to hire.

When a marchant or trauailer commeth to any towne where he entendeth to tary any time, he hireth a woman, or ſometimes 2. or 3. during his abode there. And when hee commeth to an other towne, he doeth the like in the ſame alſo: for there they vſe to put out their women to hire, as wee doe here hackney horſes.

There is a very great riuer which runneth through the plaine of Iauar, which falleth into the Caſpian ſea, by a towne called Backo, neere vnto which towne is a ſtrange thing to behold. For there iſſueth out of the ground a marueilous quantitie of Oyle, which Oyle they fetch from the vttermoſt bounds of all Perſia: it ſerueth all the Countrey to burne in their houſes. Abundance of Oyle iſſuing out of the ground.

This oyle is blacke, and is called Neſte: they vſe to cary it throughout all the Countrey vpon kine & aſſes, of which you ſhall oftentimes meete, with foure or fiue hundred in a companie. There is alſo by the ſaid towne of Backo, an other kinde of oyle which is white and very precious: and is ſuppoſed to be the ſame that here is called Petroleum. There is alſo not farre from Shamaky, a thing like vnto tarre, and iſſueth out of the ground, whereof wee haue made the proofe, that in our ſhips it ſerueth well in the ſtead of tarre. Oleum Petroleum.

In Perſia are kine of two ſorts, the one like vnto ours in theſe partes, the other are marueilous euill fauoured, with great bones, and very leane, and but little haire vpon them: their milke is paſſing ſweete: they are like vnto them which are ſpoken of in the Scripture, which in the meane of Pharao ſignified the ſeuen deare yeeres: for a leaner or more euill fauoured beaſt, can no man ſee. Two ſorts of kine.

In the Countrey of Shiruan (ſometime called Media) if you chaunce to lye in the fields neere vnto any village, as the twilight beginneth, you ſhall haue about you two or three hundred fores, which make a marueilous wayleing or howling: and if you looke not well to your victuals, it ſhall ſcape them hardly but they will haue part with you. Fores in great plentie.

The Caſpian ſea, doeth neither ebbe nor flowe, except ſometimes by rage of winde it ſwelleth vp very high: the water is very ſalt. Howbeit, the quantitie of water that falleth out of the great riuer of Volga, maketh the water freſh at the leaſt twentie leagues into the ſea. The Caſpian ſea is marueilous full of fiſh, but no kinde of monſtrous fiſh, as farre as I could vnderſtand, yet hath it ſundrie ſortes of fiſhes which are not in theſe partes of the world.

The mutton there is good, and the ſheepe great, hauing very great rumps with much fat vpon them.

Riſe and mutton is their chiefe victuall.

The Copie of a letter ſent to the Emperour of Moſcouie, by Chriſtopher Hodſdon, and William Burrough, Anno 1570.

MOſt mightie Emperour, &c. Whereas ſir William Garrard and his fellowſhip, the Companie of Engliſh Marchants this laſt winter, ſent hither to the Narue, 3. ſhips laden with marchandiſe, which was left here, & with it Chriſtopher Hodſdon one of the ſaide fellowſhip and their chiefe doer in this place, who when hee came firſt hither, and vntill ſuch time as hee had diſpatched thoſe ſhippes from hence, was in hope of goods to lade twelue or thirteene ſailes of good ſhippes, againſt this ſhipping, wherefore hee wrote vnto the ſaide ſir William Garrard and his companie to ſende hither this ſpring the ſaide nomber of thirteene ſhippes. And becauſe that in their comming hither wee founde the Freebooters on the ſea, and ſuppoſing this yeere that they would be very ſtrong, hee therefore gaue the ſaide ſir William and his Companie aduiſe, to furniſh the ſaide nomber of ſhippes ſo ſtrongly, as they ſhoulde bee able to withſtande the force of the Freebooters: Whereupon they haue according to his aduiſe ſent this yeere thirteene good ſhippes together well furniſhed with men and munition, and all other neceſſaries for the warres, of which 13. ſhippes William Burrough one of the ſaid fellowſhip is Captaine generall, vnto whome there was giuen in charge, that if hee mette with any the Danske Freebooters, or whatsoeuer robbers and theeues, that are enemies to your highnesse, hee should doe his best to apprehende and take them: It so happened that the tenth day of this moneth the saide William with his fleete, mette with sixe shippes of the Freebooters neere vnto an Iſlande called Tuttee, which is about 50. leeks from Narue, vnto which Freebooters he with his fleete gaue chase, and tooke of them the Admirall, wherein were left but 3. men, the rest were fledde to shoare in their boates amongst the woods vpon Tuttee, on which shippe hee set fire and burnt her. Hee also tooke foure more of those shippes which are nowe here, and one shippe escaped him: out of which foure shippes some of the men fled in their boates and so escaped, others were slaine in fight, and some of them when they sawe they coulde not escape, cast themselues willingly into the Sea, and were drowned. So that in these 5. shippes were left but 83. men.

Fiue shippes of Freebooters taken.

The saide William Borough when hee came hither to Narue, finding here Christopher Hodsdon aforenamed, both the saide Christopher and William, together in the name of sir William Garrard, and the rest of their whole Companie and fellowship, did present vnto your highnesse of those Freebooters taken by our shippes 82. men, which wee deliuered here vnto Kneze Voivoda, the 13. of this moneth. One man of those Freebooters we haue kept by vs, whose name is Haunce Snarke a Captaine. And the cause why we haue done it is this: When we should haue deliuered him with the rest of his felowes vnto the Viouodaes officers, there were of our English men more then 50. which fell on their knees vnto vs, requesting that hee might be reserued in the shippe, and carried backe into England: and the cause why they so earnestly intreated for him, is, that some of those our Englishmen had bene taken with Freebooters, and by his meanes had their liues saued, with great fauour besides, which they found at his hands. Wherefore if it please your highnesse to permit it, we will carry him home with vs into England, wherein wee request your Maiesties fauour: notwithstanding what you command of him shalbe obserued.

Wee haue also sent our seruant to your highnesse with such bestellings and writings, as we found in those shippes: whereby your Maiestie may see by whome, and in what order they were set out, and what they pretended, which writings wee haue commended vnto Kneze Yorive your Maiesties Viouoda at Plasco, by our seruant. And haue requested his furtherance for the safe deliuerie of them to your Maiesties handes: which writings when you haue perused, wee desire that they may be returned vnto vs by this our seruant, as speedily as may be: for these shippes which we now haue here, will be soone dispatched from hence, for that wee haue not goods to lade about the halfe of them. And the cause is, we haue this winter (by your Maiesties order) bene kept from trafiquing, to the companies great losse. But hoping your Maiestie will hereafter haue consideration thereof, and that we may haue free libertie to trafique in all parts of your Maiesties Countreis, according to the priuiledge giuen vnto vs, wee pray for your Maiesties health, with prosperous successe to the pleasure of God. From Narue the 15. of July. Anno 1570.

Your Maiesties most humble and obedient,

{ Christopher Hodsdon,
{ William Borough.

A note of the proceeding of M. Anthonie Ienkinson, Ambassadour from the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, to the Emperour of Russia, from the time of his arriuall there, being the 26. of Iuly 1571. vntill his departure from thence the 23. of Iuly, 1572.

THe said 26. day I arriued with the two good shippes called the Swallow and the Harry in safetie at the bay of S. Nicholas in Russia aforesaide, and landed at Rose Island, from whence immediatly I sent away my Interpreter Daniel Silvester in poste towardes the Court, being then at the Mosco, whereby his Maiestie might as well be aduertised of my arriuall in his Dominions, as also to knowe his highnesse pleasure for my further accesse. And remaining at the saide Iland two or three dayes, to haue conference with your Agent about your affaires, I did well perceiue by the wordes of the saide Agent, and others your seruants, that I was entred into into great perill and danger of my life, for they reported to mee that they heard ſaide at the Moſco, that the Princes diſpleaſure was ſuch againſt mee, that if euer I came into his Countrey againe I ſhould looſe my head, with other wordes of diſcouragement: Whereat, I was not a little diſmayde, not knowing whether it were beſt for mee to proceede forwards, or to returne home againe with the ſhippes for the ſafegard of my life. But calling to minde mine innocencie and good meaning, and knowing my ſelfe not to haue offended his Maieſtie any maner of wayes either in word or deede, or by making former promiſes not performed, hereto fore by mine enemies falſely furniſhed, and being deſirous to come to the triall thereof, whereby to iuſtifie my true dealings, and to reprooue my ſaid enemies as well here as there, who haue not ceaſed of late by vntrue reports to impute the cauſe of the ſaide Emperours diſpleaſure towards you to proceede of my dealings, and promiſes made to him at my laſt being with him (although by his letters to the Queenes Maieſtie, and by his owne wordes to mee the contrary doeth appeare) I determined with my ſelfe rather to put my life into his handes, and by the prouidence of God to proſecute the charge committed vnto mee, then to returne home in vaine, diſcouraged with the wordes of ſuch, who had rather that I had tarried at home, then to bee ſent ouer with ſuch credite, whereby I might ſift out their euill doings, the onely cauſe of your loſſe.

Wherefore, leauing the ſaide ſhippes the nine and twentieth day of the moneth, I departed from the ſeaſide, and the firſt of Auguſt arriued at Colmogro, where I remayned attending the returne of my ſaide meſſenger with order from his Maieſtie.

But all the Countrey being ſore viſited by the hande of God with the plague, paſſage in euery place was ſhutte vp, that none might paſſe in paine of death: My meſſenger being eight hundreth miles vpon his way, was ſtayed, and kept at a towne called Shasko, and might not bee ſuffered to goe any further, neither yet to returne backe againe, or ſende vnto mee: by meanes whereof in the ſpace of foure moneths, I could neither heare nor knowe what was become of him, in which time my ſaide meſſenger founde meanes to aduertiſe the Gouernour of the Citie of Vologda, as well of his ſtay, as of the cauſe of his comming thither, who ſent him worde that it was not poſſible to paſſe any neerer the Prince without further order from his Maieſtie, who was gone to the warres againſt the Swethens, and that hee would aduertiſe his highneſſe ſo ſoone as hee might conueniently: And ſo my ſaide meſſenger was forced to remaine there ſtill without anſwere. During which time of his ſtay through the great death (as afore ſaide,) I founde meanes to ſende another meſſenger, with a guide by an vnknowen way through wilderneſſe, a thouſande miles about, thinking that way hee ſhould paſſe without let: but it prooued contrary, for likewiſe her being paſſed a great part of his iourney, fell into the handes of a watche, and eſcaped very hardly, that hee and his guide with their horſes had not bene burnt, according to the lawe prouided for ſuch as would ſeeke to paſſe by indirect wayes, and many haue felt the ſmart thereof, which had not wherewith to buy out the paine: neither coulde that meſſenger returne backe vnto mee.

And thus was I kept without anſwere or order from his Maieſtie, and remained at the ſaide Colmogro, vntill the 18. of Januarie following, neither hauing a Gentleman to ſafegard me, nor lodging appointed me, nor allowance of victuals according to the Countrey faſhion for Ambaſſadours, which argued his grieuous diſpleaſure towards our nation. And the people of the Countrey perceiuing the ſame, vſed towards mee and my companie ſome diſcourteſies: but about the 28. day afore ſaid, the plague ceaſed, and the paſſages being opened, there came order from his Maieſtie that I ſhould haue poſte horſes, and be ſuffered to depart from Colmogro to goe to a Citie called Peraſlaue neere to the Court, his Maieſtie being newly returned frō the ſaid warres. And I arriued at the ſaid Peraſlaue the 3. of Februarie, where I remained vnder the charge of a gentleman, hauing then a houſe appointed me, & allowance of victuals, but ſo ſtraitly kept, that none of our nation or other might come or ſend vnto me, nor I to them. And the 14. of March following, I was ſent for to the Court, and being within 3. miles of the ſame, a poſte was ſent to the Gentleman which had charge of mee to returne backe againe with mee to the ſaid Peraſlaue, and to remaine there vntill his Maieſties further pleaſure, wherewith I was much diſmayed, and maruelled what that ſudden change meant, and the rather, becauſe it was a troubleſome time, and his Maieſtie much diſquieted through the ill ſucceſſe of his affaires, (as I did vnderſtand.) And the twentieth of the ſame, I was ſent for againe to the Court, and the 23. I came before his Maieſtie, who cauſed mee to kiſſe his hande, and gaue gratious audience vnto my Oration, gratefully receiuing and accepting the Queenes Maieſties princely letters, and her preſent, in the preſence of all his nobilitie. After I had finiſhed my Oration to long here to rehearſe, and deliuered her highneſſe letters, and preſent (as afore ſaid) the Emperour ſitting in royal eſtate ſtood vp and said, How doth Queene Elizabeth my sister, is she in health? to whom I answered, God doth blesse her Maiestie with health, and peace, and doeth with the like vnto thee Lord, her louing brother. Then his Maiestie sitting downe againe, commanded all his nobilitie and others to depart, and auoyde the chamber, sauing the chiefe Secretarie, and one other of the Counsell, and willing me to approch neere vnto him with my Interpretor, said vnto me these words.

Anthonie, the last time thou wast with vs heare, wee did commit vnto thee our trustie and secret Message, to bee declared vnto the Queenes Maiestie herselfe thy Mistresse at thy comming home, and did expect thy comming vnto vs againe at the time we appointed, with a full answere of the same from her highnesse. And in the meane time there came vnto vs at seuerall times three messengers, the one called Manly, the other George Middleton, and Edward Goodman, by the way of the Narue about the Marchants affaires: to whome we sent our messenger to knowe whether thou Anthonie, were returned home in safetie, and when thou shouldest returne vnto vs againe: but those messengers could tell vs nothing, and did miscall, and abuse with euill wordes, both our messenger and thee, wherewith wee were much offended. And vnderstanding that the saide Goodman had letters about him, wee caused him to be searched, with whome were found many letters, wherein was written much against our Princely estate, and that in our Empire were many vnlawfull things done, whereat wee were much grieued, and would suffer none of those rude messengers to haue accesse vnto vs: and shortly after wee were informed that one Thomas Randolfe was come into our Dominions by the way of Dwina, Ambassadour from the Queene, and wee sent a Gentleman to meete and conduct him to our Citie of Mosco, at which time wee looked that thou shouldest haue returned vnto vs againe. And the saide Thomas being arriued at our saide Citie, wee sent vnto him diuers times, that hee shoulde come and conferre with our Counsell, whereby wee might vnderstande the cause of his comming, looking for answere of those our princely affaires committed vnto thee. But hee refused to come to our saide Counsell: wherefore, and for that our saide Citie was visited with plague, the saide Thomas was the longer kept from our presence. Which being ceased, forthwith wee gaue him accesse and audience, but all his talke with vs, was about Marchants affaires, and nothing touching ours. Wee knowe that Marchants matters are to bee heard, for that they are the staye of our Princely treasures: But first Princes affaires are to bee established, and then Marchants. After this the saide Thomas Randolfe was with vs at our Citie of Vologda, and wee dealt with him about our Princely affaires, whereby amitie betwixt the Queenes Maiestie and vs, might be established for euer, and matters were agreed and concluded betwixt your Ambassadour and vs, and thereupon wee sent our Ambassadour into England with him to ende the same, but our Embassadour returned vnto vs againe, without finishing our said affaires, contrary to our expectation, and the agreement betwixt vs, and your said Ambassadour.

Thus when his Maiestie had made a long discourse, I humbly beseeched his highnesse to heare me graciously, and to giue me leaue to speake without offence, and to beleeue those words to be true which I should speake. Which he graunted, and these were my wordes.

Most noble and famous Prince, the message which thy highnesse did sende by mee vnto the Queene her most excellent Maiestie touching thy Princely and secret affaires, immediatly, and so soone as I came home, I did declare both secretly and truely vnto the Queenes Maiestie herselfe, word for word, as thou Lorde diddest commaunde mee. Which her highnesse did willingly heare and accept, and being mindefull thereof, and willing to answere the same, the next shipping after her Maiestie did sende vnto thee Lorde, her highnesse Ambassadour Thomas Randolfe, whose approoued wisedome and fidelitie was vnto her Maiestie well knowen, and therefore thought meete to bee sent to so worthy a Prince, who had Commission not onely to treate with thy Maiestie of Marchants affaires, but also of those thy Princely and secret affaires committed vnto mee. And the cause (most gracious Prince) that I was not sent againe, was, for that I was imployed in seruice vpon the Seas against the Queenes Maiesties enemies, and was not returned home at such time as Master Thomas Randolfe departed with the Shippes, to come into thy Maiesties Countrey, otherwise I had bene sent. And whereas thy Maiestie sayeth, that Thomas Randolfe would not treate with thy Counsell of the matters of his Legation, hee did (Lord) therein according to his Commission: which was: First to deale with thy Maiestie thy selfe, which order is commonly vsed among all Princes, when they sende their Ambassadours about matters of great waighe. And whereas the saide Thomas is charged that hee agreed and concluded vpon matters at the same time, and promised the same should bee performed by the Queene her Maiestie: Whereupon (Lorde) thou diddest send thy Ambassadour with him into Englande, for answere thereof: It may please thy Maie-

ſtie to vnderſtand, that as the ſaid Thomas Randolfe doth confeſſe, that in deede he had talke with thy Highnes, and counſell diuers times about princely affaires: euen ſo he denieth that euer he did agree, conclude, or make any promiſe in any condition or order, as is alleaged otherwiſe then it ſhould pleaſe the Queene her Maieſtie to like of, at his returne home, which he did iuſtifie to thy Highnes Ambaſſador his face in England. Wherefore moſt mightie Prince, it doth wel appeare, that either thy Ambaſſador did vntruly enforme thy Maieſtie, or els thy princely minde, and the true meaning of the Queenes Highnes her Ambaſſador, for want of a good Interpretor, was not well vnderſtoode: and how thankefully the Queene her Maieſtie did receaue thy Highnes commendations, and letters ſent by thy Maieſties Ambaſſador, and how graciouſly ſhe gaue him audience ſundry times, vſing him with ſuch honour in al points for thy ſake Lord, her louing brother, as the like was neuer ſhewed to any Ambaſſador in our Realme, and how honorably with full anſwere in all things, her Maieſtie diſmiſſed him, when he had finiſhed all thy princely affaires (as it ſeemed) to his owne contentation, it may well appeare by a true certificate lately ſent with her Highnes letter vnto thee Lord, by her Meſſenger Robert Beaſt, and her Maieſtie did ſuppoſe that that thy Ambaſſador would haue made report accordingly, and that by him thy Highnes would haue bene ſatisfied in all things: otherwiſe ſhe would haue ſent her Maieſties Ambaſſador with him vnto thee Lord againe. But now her Highnes perceauing that thy Maieſtie is not fully ſatisfied in thy Princely affaires, neither by Thomas Randolfe, her Highnes Ambaſſador, nor by thine owne Ambaſſador Andrea Sauyne, nor yet by her Maieſties letter, ſent by the ſaid Andrea: and alſo vnderſtanding thy great griefe and diſpleaſure towards ſir William Garret, and his company, merchants trafficking in thy Maieſties dominions, hath thought good to ſend me at this preſent vnto thee Lord Emperour, and great Duke, as wel with her Highnes ful mind, touching thy princely affaires, as alſo to knowe the iuſt cauſe of thy Maieſties ſaid diſpleaſure towards the ſaid company of merchants: and hath commanded me to anſwere to all things in their behalfe, and according to their true meanings. For her Highnes doth ſuppoſe thy Maieſties indignation, to proceede rather vpon the euill, and vntrue reports of thy late Ambaſſador in England, and of ſuch wicked perſons of our nation reſident here in thy Highnes dominions, rebels to her Maieſtie, and their countrie, then of any iuſt deſerts of the ſaid merchants, who neuer willingly deſerued thy highneſſe diſpleaſure, but rather fauour in all their doinges and meaninges. And ſince the firſt time of their trafficking in thy Maieſties dominions, which is now nineteene yeeres, the ſaid merchants haue bene, and are alwaies readie and willing truely to ſerue thy highneſſe of all thinges meete for thy treaſurie, in time of peace and of warre in deſpite of all thy enemies: although the Princes of the Eaſt ſeas were agreed to ſtoppe the ſounde, and the way to the Narue, and haue brought, and do bring from time to time ſuch commoditie to thee Lord, as her Maieſty doth not ſuffer to be tranſported forth of her Realme to no other Prince of the world. And what great loſſes the ſayd Sir William Garret, with his companie hath ſuſtained of late yeeres in this trade, as wel by ſhipwracke, as by falſe ſeruants it is manifeſtly knowen: and what ſeruice the ſaid companies ſhips did vnto thy Maieſtie againſt thy enemies, two yeeres paſt in going to the Narue, when they fought with the king of Poles ſhippes Freebutters, and burnt the ſame and ſlew the people, and as many as were taken aliue deliuered vnto thy Captaine at the Narue, I truſt thy Highnes doth not forget. Wherefore moſt mighty Prince, the premiſes conſidered, the Queene her moſt excellent Maieſtie thy louing Siſter, doeth requeſt thy Highnes to reſtore the ſaide Sir William Garret with his companie vnto thy princely fauour againe, with their priuiledges for free traffike with thy accuſtomed goodnes and iuſtice, to be miniſtred vnto them throughout all thy Maieſties dominions, as afore time: and that the ſame may be ſignified by thy Princely letters, directed to thy officers in all places, any thy highneſſe commandement or reſtraint to the contrarie notwithſtanding. And further that it will pleaſe thy Maieſtie, not to giue credite to falſe reports, and vntrue ſuggeſtions of ſuch as are enemies, and ſuch as neither would haue mutuall amity to continue betwixt your Maieſties, nor yet entertourſe betwixt your countries. And ſuch rebels of our nation, as Ralfe Rutter, and others which lye lurking here in thy Highnes dominions, ſeeking to ſowe diſſentions betwixt your Maieſties by falſe ſurmiſes, ſpending away their maſters goodes riotouſly, and will not come home to giue vp their accounts, auaunсing themſelues to bee merchants, and able to ſerue thy Highnes of all thinges fitte for thy treaſurie, whereas indeede they be of no credite, nor able of themſelues to doe thy Maieſtie anie ſeruice at all: the Queenes Highneſſe requeſt is, that ſo would pleaſe thy Maieſtie to commaunde that ſuch perſons may bee deliuered vnto me to be carried home, leaſt by their remaining here, and hauing practiſes & friendſhip with ſuch as be not thy highneſſe friends, their euill doing might be a cauſe hereafter to withdraw thy goodnes from Sir William Garret and his companie, who haue true meaning in all their doings, and are ready to serue thy Highnes at all times, vsing many other wordes to the aduancement of your credits, and the disgracing of your enemies, and so I ended for that time.

Then said his Maiestie, we haue heard you, and will consider of all things further, when we haue read the Queene our sisters letters: to whome I answered, that I supposed his Maiestie should by those letters vnderstand her Highnes full mind to his contentation, and what wanted in writing, I had credite to accomplish in word. Wherewith his Maiestie seemed to be well pleased, and commanded me to sit downe. And after pawsing a while, his Maiestie said these wordes vnto me, It is now a time which we spend in fasting, and praying, being the weeke before Easter, and for that we will shortly depart from hence, towards our borders of Nouogrode, we can not giue you answere, nor your dispatch here, but you shall goe from hence, and tary vs vpon the way, where we will shortly come, and then you shall knowe our pleasure, and haue your dispatch. And so I was dismissed to my lodging, and the same day I had a dinner ready dyght sent me from his Maiestie, with great store of drinkes, of diuers sortes, and the next day following, being the foure and twentieth of March aforesaide, the chiefe Secretarie to his Maiestie, sent vnto mee a Gentleman, to signifie vnto mee, that the Emperours Maiesties pleasure was, I should immediatly depart towards a Citie, called Otwer, three hundred miles, from the aforesaid Sloboda, and there to tary his highnes comming vnto a place called Staryts, three score miles from the said Otwer.

Then I sent my Interpretor to the chiefe Secretarie, requesting him to further, and shewe his fauour vnto our said merchants in their suites, which they should haue occasion to moue in my absence: who sent me word againe, that they should be well assured of his friendship, & furtherance in all their suites. And forthwith post horses were sent me, with a Gentleman to conduct me. And so departing from the saide Sloboda, I arriued at the saide Otwer, the 28. of March aforesaide, where I remained till the eight of May following. Then I was sent for, to come vnto his Maiestie, to the saide Staryts, where I arriued the tenth of the same, and the twelfth of the same, I was appointed to come to the chiefe Secretarie, who at our meeting sayde vnto mee these wordes.

Our Lord Emperour, and great Duke, hath not onely perused the Queene her Highnes letters sent by you, and thereby doth perceaue her mind, as well touching their princely affaires, as also her earnest request in the merchants behalfe, but also hath well pondered your wordes. And therefore his Maiesties pleasure is, that you let me vnderstand, what suites you haue to moue in the merchants behalfe, or otherwise, for that to morrowe, you shall haue accesse againe vnto his Highnes, and shall haue full answere in all things, with your dispatch away.

Then after long conference had with him of diuers matters, I gaue him in writing certaine briefe articles of requests, which I had drawen out ready, as followeth.

1. First the Queenes Maiestie her request is, that it would please the Emperours Highnes to let me knowe the iust cause of his great displeasure fallen vpon sir William Garret, & his companie, who neuer deserued the same, to their knowledge.

2. Also that it would please his Highnes, not to giue credite vnto false and vntrue reports, by such as seeke to sowe dissention, and breake friendshippe, betwixt the Queenes Highnes, and his Maiestie.

3. Also that it would please his Maiestie to receaue the said sir William Garret, with his companie, into his fauour againe, and to restore them to their former priuiledges, and liberties, for free traffike in, and through, and out of all his Maiesties dominions, in as ample manner as aforetime, according to his princely letters of priuiledge, and accustomed goodnes.

4. Also it would please his Highnes to grant, that the said companie of merchants may haue iustice of all his subiects, as well for money owing vnto them, as other their griefes and iniuries, throughout all his dominions suffred since the time of his displeasure, during which time, the merchants were forced by seuere iustice to answer to all mens demands, but theirs could not be heard.

5. Also that his Maiestie would vnderstand, that much debts are owing to the said merchants, by diuers of his Nobilitie, whereof part are in durance, and some executed, and the said merchants know not how to be paid, and answered the same, except his Highnes pitie their case, and command some order to be taken therein.

6. Also it would please his Highnes to command that the saide merchants may be paide all such summe, or summes of money as are owing, and due vnto them by his Maiestie, for wares, as well English, as Shamakye, taken into his Highnes treasurie by his officers in sundry places, the long forbearing whereof hath bene, and is great hinderance to the said companie of merchants.

7 Also it would please his Maiestie to vnderstand, that at this present time there are in Persia of English merchants, Thomas Banister, and Geofrye Ducket, with their companie, and goods, ready to come into his Maiesties Countrey of Astracan, and would haue come the last yeere, but that the ship, with our merchants, and marriners, appointed to goe for them, were staied at Astracan by his Highnes Captaine there, to the great hinderance of the said merchants. Wherefore it may now please his Maiestie, to direct his princely letters vnto his Captaines, and rulers, both at Astracan, and Cazan, not onely to suffer our people, as well merchants, as marriners, quietly, and freely to passe and repasse with their shippes, barkes, or other vessels downe the riuer Volga, and ouer the Mare Caspium, to fetch the said English merchants, with their companie, and goods, out of the said Persia, into his Maiesties dominions, but also that it would please his Highnes streightly to command, that when the said Thomas Bannester, and Geofrye Ducket, with their charge, shall arriue at the saide Astracan, his Maiesties Captaine there, and in all other places, vppon the riuer Volga, shall so aide and assist the said merchants, as they may be safely conducted out of the danger of the Crimmes, and others their enemies.

8 Also it may please his Highnes to vnderstand, that lately our merchants comming from Shamakye, haue bene ill vsed by his Maiesties Customers, both at Astracan, and Cazan, at both which places they were forced to pay custome for their wares, although they solde no part thereof, but brought the same into his Highnes treasurie at Sloboda: and the said Customers did not only exact, and take much more custome then was due by his Maiesties lawes, but also for want of present monie, tooke wares much exceeding their exacted custome, and doe keepe the same as a pawne. It may therefore please his Highnes to direct his princely letters to the said Customers, to signifie vnto them his great goodnes againe restored vnto the saide English merchants, as also to command them to send the said merchants their said goods so detained, vp to the Musko, they paying such custome for the same, as shall be by his Maiestie appointed.

9 Also that it would please his Highnes to grant, that sir William Garret, with his companie, may establish their trade for merchandise at Colmogro in Dwina, and that such wares as shal be brought out of our Countrey fit for his treasurie might be looked vpon, and receaued by his officers there: and that his Maiesties people trafficking with our merchants, may bring downe their commodities to the said Colmogro, by meanes whereof the saide English merchants auoiding great troubles, and charges, in transporting their goods so farre, and into so many places of his dominions, may sell the same better cheape, to the benefite of his Maiesties subiects.

10 Also if it seemed good to his Highnes, that the whole trade likewise from Persia, Boghar, and all other those Countreies beyond the Mare Caspium, might be established at Astracan, the ancient marte towne in times past, which would be both for the great honour, and profite of his Maiestie, and subiects, as I am well able to proue, if it will please his Highnes to appoint any of his counsell to talke with me therein.

11 Also forasmuch as it pleased his Maiestie immediatly after the burning of the Musko, to command that the said English merchants should giue in a note into his treasurie, for their losses sustained by the said fire, which was done by William Rowlye, then cheefe Agent for sir William Garret, and his company, and the particulars in the same note consumed with the said fire, did amount to the summe of 10000. rubbles, and aboue: It may please his Highnes of his accustomed goodnes, and great clemencie, to consider of the same, and to giue the saide companie so much as shall seeme good vnto his Maiestie, towards their said losses.

12 Also that it will please his Highnes, to vnderstand that the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, at the earnest suite and request of Andrea Sauyne his Maiesties Ambassador, did not onely pardon and forgiue Thomas Glouer, his great and grieuous offences towards her Highnes committed, only for his Maiesties sake, but also commanded sir William Garret, with his companie, to deale fauourably with the said Glouer, in his accompes, to whome he was indebted greatly, and being their seruant, detained their goods in his hands a long time: whereupon the said sir William Garret, with his companie, counted with the saide Glouer, and ended all thinges, euen to his said contentation, and was found to be debter to the said companie, 4000. robbles, and aboue, and bound him selfe both by his solemne othe, and his hand writing, to pay the same immediatly after his returne into Russia, with the said Andrea Sauyne, vnto Nicholas Proctor, cheefe Agent here, for the said companie of merchants. But although it is now two yeeres past, since the saide agreement, and that the said Nicholas hath diuers, and sundry times requested the said monie of the said Thomas, yet will he not pay the same debt, but maketh delay from time to time, alleaging that his Maiestie oweth him a great summe of money, without the paiment whereof, he can not be able to pay the said merchants his due debt long forborne, to their great hinderance. In consideration

tion of the premisses, It may please his Highnes, to giue order that the said Glouer may be paid, and that he may discharge his debt to the saide company of merchants, and the rather for that he found such mercie and fauour in England, onely for his Maiesties sake.

13 Also forasmuch as Ralfe Rutter, a rebell to the Queenes Maiestie, and an enemie to his Countrey, and to sir William Garret, and his company, hath of long time remained here, living of the spoiles and goods of the said merchants, which he wrongfully detained in his hands, riotously spending the same, during the time that he was their seruant, and would not come home when he was sent for, and also for that the Queenes Maiestie doth vnderstand, that the said Ralfe, with other his adherents, doe seeke by all false meanes, to sowe dissention, and breake amitie betwixt their Maiesties, and to ouerthrowe the trade of the said merchants: her Highnes request is, that the said Ralfe, with his complices, may be deliuered vnto me, to be carried home, and none other of her Maiesties subiects, not being of the societie of the said sir William Garret, and his compaine, to be suffered to traffike within his Highnes dominions, but to be deliuered to their Agent to be sent home: for that the said merchants with great charges and losses, both by shipwracke, and riotous seruants, did first finde out this trade, and haue continued the same, these 19. yeeres, to their great hinderance.

14 Also whereas diuers Makers, and artificers of our nation, are here in his Maiesties seruice, and doe finde themselues grieued that they can not haue licence to depart home into their natiue Countrey, at their will and pleasure: the Queenes Maiesties request is, according to her Highnes writing in that behalfe, that not onely it will please his Maiestie to permit, and suffer such artificers, here resident in the seruice of his Highnes, to haue free libertie to depart, and goe home with mee, if they request the same, but also all other the like, which shall come hereafter to serue his Maiestie, to haue free libertie to depart likewise, without any let or stay.

15 Also it may please his Maiestie to vnderstand, that during the time of my long being at Colmogro, attending his Highnes pleasure, for my further accesse, I with my company, haue not onely bene ill vsed, and intreated there, and likewise the merchants there, but one Besson Mysserueye, his Maiesties chiefe officer, who hath dishonored me, and smitten my people, and deteth the said merchants much money, and will not pay them: but also the saide Bessone hath spoken wordes of dishonor against the Queenes Maiestie. Wherefore it may please his Highnes to send downe with me to Colmogro, a Gentleman, as well chiefly to serch foorth his euill behauiour towards her Maiestie, as towards me her Highnes Amballador, and to punish him accordingly: and also that it would please his Maiestie to sende downe his letter of iustice, by vertue whereof, the said Bessone may be forced to pay all such money as he oweth to the saide merchants, without delay.

These articles being deliuered to the chiefe Secretarie, as aforesaide, and our talke ended for that time, I departed to my lodging, accompanied with certaine Gentlemen. The next day, being the 13. of May aforesaid, I had warning earely in the morning, to prepare my selfe to be at the Court, betwixt the howres of 10. and 11. of the clocke, where I should haue accesse vnto the presence of the Prince, as well to receaue answere of all things, as to be dismissed to goe home. At which howres I was sent for to the Court, and brought into the Chamber of presence, where his Maiestie did sit apparelled most sumptuously, with a rich Crowne vpon his head, garnished with many pretious stones, his eldest sonne sitting by him, and many of his Nobilitie about him: and after my dutie done, his Highnes commanded me to approch very neere vnto him, and saide vnto me these words.

Anthony, the Queene our louing sister her letters wee haue caused to be translated, and doe well vnderstande the same, and of all things as well therein contayned, as by worde of mouth by you to vs declared, wee haue well considered, and doe perceaue that our secrete message vnto you committed, was done truely according to our minde (although wee haue aduertiſed to the contrarie) and now we are by you fully ſatisfied. And when we did ſend our Ambaſſador into England, about thoſe our great, and waighтie affaires, to conclude the ſame with the Queene our ſiſter, our Ambaſſador could ende nothing for want of ſuch aſſurance as was requiſite in princely affaires, according to the manner of all Countreyes, but was diſmiſſed vnto vs againe, with letters of ſmall effect, touching the ſame, and no Ambaſſador ſent with him from the Queene: which cauſed vs to thinke, that our princely affaires were ſet aſide, and little regarded, wherewith we were at that time much greeued: for the which cauſe, and for the euill behauiour of your merchants, reſident in our dominions (who haue diuers wayes tranſgreſſed and broken our lawes, liuing wilfully in all their doings) we did lay our heauie diſpleaſure vpon them, and did take away from them their priuiledge, commanding that the ſame throughout all our dominions, ſhould be void, and of none effect: and thereupon did write to the Queene our ſiſter, touching our griefes.

And now her Highnes hath ſent vnto vs againe, you her Ambaſſador, with her louing letters, and full minde, which we doe thankefully receaue, and are thereby fully ſatiſfied. And for that our princely, and ſecret affaires were not finiſhed to our contentation at our time appointed, according to our expectation, we doe now leaue of all thoſe matters, and ſet them aſide for the time, becauſe our minde is nowe otherwiſe changed, but hereafter when occaſion ſhall moue vs to the like, we will then talke of thoſe matters againe. And for that it hath pleaſed the Queene, our louing ſiſter, to ſende vnto vs at this preſent, and doeth deſire to continue in friendſhippe with vs for euer (which wee doe gratefully accept, and willingly agree to the ſame) we of our goodnes for her Highnes ſake, will not onely from henceforth put away, and forget all our diſpleaſure towardes the ſame Sir William Garret, and his companie (as though they had neuer offended vs) but alſo will reſtore them to their priuiledges, & liberties, in, and through our all our dominions, and will ſignifie the ſame by our letters, in all townes and cities, where the ſaid merchants doe traffike, and we will ſhewe them fauour as afore time, if they deſerue not the contrary. And if the Queene our ſiſter had not ſent thee Anthony vnto vs, at this preſent, God knoweth what we ſhould haue done to the ſaid merchants, or whether we would haue called backe our indignation.

Then I humbly beſeeched his Maieſtie, to let me know the particular offences committed by the ſaid merchants, and the offendors names, to the intent I might make report thereof, vnto the Queenes Maieſtie, my miſtres, accordingly, that the ſaide offendors might receaue iuſt puniſhments for their deſerts: but he ſaid, I ſhould not know them, becauſe he had cleerely remitted all offences: and further, that it was not princely to forgiue, and after to accuſe the parties, whereby her Maieſties diſpleaſure might fal vpon them at home. Notwithſtanding I did after vnderſtand ſome part thereof, by other meanes.

Then his Maieſtie proceeding in talke, ſaide: As touching the articles of requeſt, concerning the merchants affaires, which you did yeſterday deliuer vnto our Secretarie, we haue not onely read the ſame our ſelfe, but alſo haue appointed our ſaid Secretarie to declare vnto you our mind, and anſwere to the ſame. And for that we are now vpon our iourney towards our borders, and will depart from hence ſhortly, we will diſmiſſe you to the Queene our louing ſiſter, your miſtres, with our letters, and full mind by word of mouth, touching all your requeſts, & will ſend a Gentleman one of our houſhold with you, to ſafeconduct you to your ſhips: and of our goodnes wil giue you victuals, boates, men, and poſt horſes, ſo many as you ſhall neede. And therewith his Maieſtie ſtanding vp, and putting off his cappe, ſaid vnto me theſe words. Doe our hartie commendations vnto our louing ſiſter, Queene Elizabeth, vnto whome wee wiſh long life, with happie ſucceſſe: and therewith his Highnes extended his hand to me to kiſſe, and commanded his ſonne, ſiting by him, to ſend the like commendations, which he did, whoſe hand likewiſe I kiſſed. And then his Maieſtie cauſed me to ſit downe, and commanded wine, and drinkes of diuers ſortes to be brought, whereof he gaue me to drinke, with his owne hand, and ſo after I departed.

Then the next day, being the 14. of May aforeſaid, I was ſent for to come to the cheefe Secretarie, and one other of the Counſell with him, who at our meeting ſaid vnto me theſe words: We are appointed by the Emperour his Maieſtie, to giue you anſwere from his Highnes, touching your requeſts deliuered in writing, which his Maieſtie himſelfe hath peruſed, and anſwered as followeth.

1 To the firſt requeſt it is anſwered, that all his Maieſties greefes and diſpleaſure (now put away from the merchants) did grow, becauſe the Queenes Maieſtie did not accompliſh and ende with his Ambaſſador, his ſecrete and waighтie affaires, according to his expectation, and the promiſe made by Thomas Randolph, at his being here: and alſo of the ill behauiour of your merchants chants resident here in our Countrey, as his Maiestie did himselfe yesterday declare vnto you.

2 To the second, his Maiestie willeth you to vnderstand, that he hath not, nor will not hereafter be moued to breake friendship with the Queenes Maiestie, without good, and iust cause.

3 To the third, you are answered by the Emperours Maiestie himselfe, that his great goodnes and fauour againe vnto the merchants, shall be restored, and the same to be knowen by his gratious letters of priuiledge, now againe granted.

4 To the fourth, his Maiestie hath commanded, that your merchants here resident shall exhibite, and put in writing vnto me his Maiesties Secretarie, all their griefes, and complaints, as well for debts, as other iniuries offred them since the time of his Highnes displeasure, and they shall haue iustice truly ministred throughout all his Maiesties dominions without delay.

5 To the fifth, his Maiestie doth not know of any debts due vnto the merchants, by any of his Noblemen, as is alleaged: and whether it be true or no, he knoweth not, the trueth whereof must be tried out, and thereupon answere to be giuen: and hereafter his Maiestie would not haue the merchants to trust his people with too much.

6 To the sixth, it is answered, that his Maiestie hath commanded search to be made, what money is owing to the merchants, for wares receaued into his treasurie, as in the articles (the most of the bookes of accompt being burnt in the Musko:) and such as is due, and founde meete to be paide, shall be paide foorthwith to the merchants, their factors, or seruants, which shall come for the same. And for paiment of the rest, his Maiesties further pleasure shall be signified hereafter.

7 To the seuenth, his Maiesties answere is, that letters shall be written foorthwith to his Captaines of Astracan, and Cazan, and other his officers, vpon the riuer Volga, to whome it appertaineth, not onely to suffer your people, both merchants, and mariners, to passe with their ships, or barkes, from Astracan, ouer the Mare Caspium, to fetche Thomas Bannister, and George Ducket, with their companie, and goods, out of Persia, but also when they shall arriue within his Maiesties dominions, to ayde, and assist them, and see them safely conducted vp the riuer Volga, from danger of enemies.

7 To the eight, his Maiestie hath commanded letters to be written to the Customers, both at Astracan, and Cazan, to make restitution to the English merchants of their goods so detained by them for custome, and to take custome for the same, according to his Maiesties letters of priuiledge.

9 10 To the ninth and tenth articles, his Maiestie will consider of those matters, and hereafter will signifie his princely pleasure therein.

11 To the eleuenth, as touching an inuentorie giuen into the treasurie, what goods the merchants had burnt in the Musko, in their houses there, his Maiesties pleasure was, to vnderstand the same, to the intent he might knowe the losses of all strangers at that present, but not to make restitution, for that it was Gods doing, and not the Emperours.

12 To the twelfth, concerning Thomas Glouer, his Maiestie was enformed by his Ambassador, of the Queenes great mercie and clemencie towards the said Thomas, for his sake, which his Highnes receaued in good part, but what agreement or dealings was betwixt the said sir William Garret, and his companie, and the said Glouer, or what he doth owe vnto the saide merchants, his Maiestie doth not know. And as for the money which the saide Thomas sayth is owing vnto him by the Emperour, his Maiesties pleasure is, that so much as shall be found due, and growing vpon wares deliuered vnto the treasurie, out of the time of his Maiesties displeasure, shall be paid foorthwith to the saide Thomas, and the rest is forfeited vnto his Maiestie, and taken for a fine, as appertaining to Rutter, and Bennet, accompted traytors vnto his Highnes, during the time of his displeasure.

13 To the thirteenth article, concerning Rutter to be deliuered vnto you, to be caried home, the answere was, that as his Maiestie will not detaine any English man in his Countrey, that is willing to goe home, according to the Queenes request: euen so will he not force any to depart, that is willing to tary with him. Yet his Highnes, to satisfie the Queenes Maiesties request, is contented at this present, to sende the saide Ralfe Rutter home with you, and hath commanded that a letter shall be written vnto his cheefe officer at the Musko, to send the said Rutter away with them, that he may be with you at Vologhda, by the fine of Maye, without faile: and touching the rest of your request in the said article, his Maiesties pleasure shall be signified in the letters of priuiledge, granted to the said merchants.

14 To the foureteenth, touching artificers, his Maiestie will accomplish all the Queenes Highnes request in that behalfe, and now at this present doth licence such and so many to depart to their natiue Countrey, as are willing to goe.

15 To the 15. touching Beſſon Meſſeriuey, the Emperors maieſtie is much offended with him, and wil ſend downe a gentleman with you to inquire of his ill behauior, as wel for ſpeaking of vndecent words againſt the Queens maieſtie as you haue alleaged, as alſo againſt you, and the merchants for his outrages mentioned in the article, and the ſaid Beſſone being found guiltie, to bee impriſoned and puniſhed by ſeuere iuſtice accordingly, and after to put in ſuerties to anſwer ẏ Emperours high diſpleaſure, or els to be brought vp like a priſoner by the ſaid gentleman, to anſwere his offences before his maieſtie. And his highnes doth requeſt that the Queenes highneſſe would doe the like vpon Middleton and Manlie her meſſengers ſent hither two yeeres paſt, and of all others for their ill behauiour towards his maieſtie, as may appeare by the letters ſent by Daniel Siluеſter by his highneſſe, leaſt by the bad demeanor of ſuch lewd perſons, the amitie and friendſhip betwixt their maieſties might be diminiſhed.

16 To the 16 and laſt article touching the corne brought into the Emperours dominions by the merchants, his maieſtie doth greatly commend them for ſo well doing, and hath commanded to giue you a letter forthwith in their behalfe, directed to his officers of Dwina, to ſuffer the ſaid merchants to ſell their corne, by meaſure great or ſmall at their pleaſure without cuſtome.

Thus I receiued a full anſwere from his maieſtie by his chiefe Secretarie and one other of his counſell, to the 16. articles afore rehearſed, by me exhibited in writing touching your affaires, with his letter alſo ſent by me to the Queenes maieſtie. Which being done, I requeſted that the new letters of priuiledge granted by his highnes vnto you, might be forthwith diſpatched to the intent I might carie the ſame with me. Alſo I requeſted that ſuch money due to you, which it had pleaſed his maieſtie to command to be paid, might be deliuered to me in your behalfe.

Touching the letters of priuiledge, the Secretarie anſwered me, it is not poſſible you can haue them with you, for they muſt be firſt written and ſhewed vnto the Emperour, and then three to bee written of one tenour according to your requeſt, which cannot be done with ſuch ſpeed, for that his maieſties pleaſure is, you ſhall depart this night before him, who remoueth himſelfe to morrow towards Nouogrode: but without faile the ſaid letters ſhall be diſpatched vpon the way, and ſent after you with ſpeed to Colmogro. And as touching the mony which you require, it cannot be paid here becauſe we haue not the bookes of accounts: for want whereof wee know not what to paie, wherefore the beſt is that you ſend one of the merchaunts after the Emperour to Nouogrode, and let him repaire vnto me there, and without faile I will pay all ſuch money as ſhall be appointed by his maieſtie to be paied, after the bookes ſeene.

But foraſmuch as there was none of your ſeruaunts with mee at that preſent (although I had earneſtly written vnto your Agent Nicholas Proctor by Richard Pingle one of your owne ſeruaunts, one moneth before my comming to Starites, where I had my diſpatch, that he ſhould not faile to come himſelfe, or ſend one of your ſeruaunts to me hither, to follow all ſuch ſutes as I ſhould commence in your behalfe, which he neglected to doe to your great hinderance) I requeſted the ſaid Secretarie that I might leaue Daniell my interpreter with him, as well for the receit of money, as for the ſpeedie diſpatch of the letters of priuiledge, but it would not bee granted in any wiſe that I ſhould leaue any of mine owne companie behind me, and thereupon I did take my leaue with full diſpatch, and departed to my lodging, and forthwith there came vnto me a gentleman who had charge as well to conduct me, and prouide boates, men, poſt horſes and victuals for me all the way to the Sea ſide, being a thouſand and three hundred miles, as alſo to doe iuſtice of the ſayd Beſſone, as afore ſayd. And he ſayd vnto me, the Emperours pleaſure is, that you ſhall preſently depart from hence, and I am appointed to goe with you. And that night I departed from the ſayd Starites, being the fourteenth of May afore ſayd. And paſſing a great part of my iourney, I arriued at the citie of Vologda the laſt of the ſayd May, where I remayned fiue dayes as well expecting a meſſenger to bring vnto mee the new letters of priuiledge, as the comming of Rutter, whom the Emperours maieſtie himſelfe commaunded before my face, ſhould be ſent vnto me without faile, and I did ſee the letters written to the chiefe officers at the Poſko for the ſame. Neuertheleſſe the ſayd Rutter did not come, neither could I heare of him after, nor know the ſudden cauſe of his ſtay contrary to the princes owne worde and meaning, as I ſuppoſe. But I could not helpe the matter being farre from the prince, neither could I tell how to haue redreſſe, becauſe by abſence I could not complaine. Notwithſtanding, I vſed all my indeuour, and ſent a meſſenger John Norton one of your ſeruaunts from Vologda to Nouogrode, where the court then lay expreſſely with letters, as well to aduertiſe his maieſtie that the ſayd Rutter was not ſent vnto me according to his highneſſe commaundement and order, as alſo about the diſpatch of the ſaid letters of priuiledge and receit of your money, with ſtraight charge that he ſhould in any wiſe returne vnto me againe before the departing of the ſhips.

And the first day of June I departed from the said Vologda by water towards Colmogro, where I arriued the 21. of June aforesaid, and remained there vntill the 23. of Julie, looking for the said John Horton to haue returned vnto me in all that time, which had respite fully inough in that space both to goe to the court to dispatch his businesse, and to haue returned againe vnto me, but he came not, for it was otherwise determined before his going, as I did after vnderstand, & can more at large by word of mouth declare vnto your worships, the occasion thereof.

Neuertheless, I am well assured before this time your Agent hath receiued into his hands the said letters of priuiledges, and shall haue dispatch with expedition in all things touching your affaires, according to his maiesties graunt by me obtained, and as her hath written to the Queenes maiestie at this present, wishing that as now by my going the Emperour hath withdrawen his grieuous displeasure from you, and restored you againe into his fauour, so your Agent and others your seruants there resident may behaue, and endeuour themselues to keepe & augment the same, whose euill doings haue bene the onely occasion of his indignation now remitted.

The names of such countries as I Anthonie Ienkinson haue trauelled vnto from the second of October, 1546. at which time I made my first voiage out of England, vntill the yeere of our Lord, 1572. when I returned last out of Russia.

FIrst, I passed into Flanders, and trauelled through all the base countries, and from thence through Germanie, passing ouer the Alpes I trauelled into Italy, and from thence made my iourney through Piemont into France, throughout all which realme I haue throughly iourneied.

I haue also trauelled through the kingdoms of Spaine and Portingall, I haue sailed through the Leuant seas euery way, and haue bene in all the cheefe Islands within the same sea, as Rhodes, Malta, Sicilia, Cypres, Candie, and diuers others.

I haue bene in many partes of Grecia, Morea, Achaia, and where the olde citie of Corinth stood.

I haue trauelled through a great part of Turkie, Syria, and diuers other countreys in Asia minor.

I haue passed ouer the mountaines of Libanus to Damasco, and trauelled through Samaria, Galile, Philistine and Palestine, vnto Jerusalem, and so through all the holy land.

I haue bene in diuers places of Affrica, as Algiers, Cola, Bona, Tripolis, the Goulet within the gulfe of Tunis.

I haue sailed farre Northward within the Mare glaciale, where wee haue had continuall day, and light of the Sunne ten weekes together, and that nauigation was in Norway, Lapland, Bomagotia, and other very strange places.

I haue trauelled through all the ample dominions of the Emperour of Russia and Moscouia, which extende from the North sea, and the confines of Norway, and Lapland, euen to the Mare Caspium.

I haue bene in diuers countries neere about the Caspian sea, Gentiles, and Mahometans, as Cazan, Cremia, Rezan, Cheremisi, Mordouiti, Vachin, Nagaia, with diuers others of strange customes and religions.

I haue sailed ouer the Caspian sea, and discouered all the regions there about adiacent, as Chicassi, Comul, Shascall, Shiruan, with many others.

I haue trauelled 40. daies iourney beyond the said sea, towards the Orient all India, and Cathaia, through diuers deserts and wildernesses, and passed through 5. kingdomes of the Tartars, and all the land of Turkeman and Zagatay, and so to the great citie of Boghar in Bactria, not without great perils and dangers sundry times.

After all this, in An. 1562, I passed again ouer the Caspian sea another way, and landed in Armenia, at a citie called Derbent, built by Alexander the great, and from thence trauelled through Media, Parthia, Hircania, into Persia to the court of the great Sophie called Shaw Tamasso, vnto whom I deliuered letters from the Queenes maiestie, and remayned in his court 8. moneths, and returning homeward, passed through diuers other countreys. Finally I made two voyages more after that out of England into Russia, the one in the yeere 1566. and the other in the yeere 1571. And thus being wearie and growing old, I am content to take my rest in mine owne house, cheerfully comforting my selfe, in that my seruice hath bene honourably accepted and rewarded of her maiestie and the rest by whom I haue bene employed.

The deposition of M. William Burrough to certaine Interrogatories ministred vnto him concerning the Narue, Kegor, &c. to what king or prince they doe appertaine and are subiect, made the 23. of Iune, 1576.

These articles seeme to haue bene ministred vpon the quarell betwene Alderman Bond the elder, and the Moscouie companie, for his trade to the Narue without their consent.

The first Interrogatorie.

FIrst, whether the villages or townes vulgarely called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingam and Cola, and the portes of the same towne, as well at the time of the grant of the letters of priuiledge by the Emperour to our merchants, as also in the yeres of our Lord, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1569, 1570, 1571, 1572, 1573, 1574, and 1575. respectiuely were (as presently they be) of the iurisdiction, and subiect to the mightie prince the Emperour of Russia: and whether the sayd Emperour of Russia by all the time aforesayd, was chiefe lord and gouernour respectiuely of the sayd places, and so vulgarly known, had, and reputed: and whether the said townes and places, and either of them be situated towards the North and Northeast or Northwest, and betweene the North and the East point: and be the same places whereunto by force of the foresayd priuiledge, it is forbidden to any other subiect to haue traffique, sauing to the societie aforesaid.

The deponents answer

To this Interrogatorie the deponent saith, that it is true that the villages, townes and places vulgarly called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingam and Cola, and the portes thereof, at the time of the grant of the said priuiledge (as he iudgeth) were reputed respectiuely to bee vnder the iurisdiction, and subiect to the Emperour of Russia, and so from the time of the sayde graunt, vnto the yere, 1566, and that in the yeres of our Lord, 1566, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, and 1575. respectiuely they were (as presently they be) of the iurisdiction, and subiect vnto the mightie prince the Emperour of Russia, and the same Emperour of Russia by all the time aforesaid, was chiefe gouernour respectiuely of the said places, and so vulgarly known, had and reputed. And that all the said places are situated from London Northwards, betweene the East and the North, and within within the grant of the letters patents, and priuiledges of the said companie of merchants for the discouerie of new trades, and the same places whereunto by force of the said letters patents, it is forbidden to any other subiect to haue traffique sauing to the societie aforesayd.

Notwithstanding the Deponent saith, that hee hath heard it credible reported by diuers, that the king of Denmarke of late yeeres, or euery yeere once, hath had one of his subiects or more by himselfe, or with his guide a Lappian, that hath at the places, Cola, Kegor, and diuers other places in Lappia, taken of the Lappies certaine tribute or head pence, which the said Lappies haue willingly giuen to win fauour of the said prince, and to liue quietly by his subiects, the people of Finmarke which border vpon their countrey, whereof Wardhouse is the strongest hold, & bordereth neere vnto them. He hath also heard that in the time of peace betweene the said Emperor of Russia, and the kings of Sweden, there was yeerely for the king of Sweden one or more that came into Lappia vnto diuers places, in maner as the king of Denmarkes seruaunt vseth to doe, and did demaund of them some tribute or dutie which they willingly paid: but since the late wars betweene the said Emperour and king of Sweden, he hath not heard of any thing that hath bin paid by them to the king of Sweden: such is the simplicitie of this people the Lappies, that they would rather giue tribute to all those that border vpon their countrey, then by denying it haue their ill wils.

But the truth is, as this Deponent saith, that the said mightie prince the Emperour of Russia is the chiefe lord and gouernour of the said countrey of Lappia, his lawes and orders are obserued by them, he takes toll and custome &c. of them. They are infidels, but if any of them become christians, it is after the Russe law. If there happen any controuersie betweene those people, such as cannot be ended amongst themselues, or by the Emperours deputies in that countrey, they repaire to the Polco as their highest court, & there haue it ended. Betweene the place specified Kegor, & the confines of Finmarke aforesaid in Lappia, is the monasterie Pechingam, which are monkes, and vse the Russe law, the chiefe or head of that abbey is alwaies appointed by the clergie in Polko. Pechingam abbey.

Also in the yeere of our Lord, 1557. the said Deponent was at the place Kegor, in the moneth of June, the 29. day being S. Peters day, at which time was a great assembly of people, at a Mart there, the Russes, Kerils and Lappians, on the one side subiects to the said mightie prince ỳ Emperour of Russia, and the Norwegians or Norles and people of Finmarke, subiects to the king of Denmarke on the other part, they did barter and exchange fish for other commodities. The deputie for the Russe had the chiefe gouernment of the said Mart, and tooke toll of those people that were subiect to his master, and the captaine of Wardhouse, had then the gouernment of the people subiect to his master the king of Denmarke. He saith also, that betweene the abbey Pechingam, and the abbey of S. Nicholas in Russia, vpon the border of the said coast of Lappia, he hath bene vpon the shore at diuers places, where fresh riuers fall into the Sea, where are commonly taken fresh Salmons, all which places he doth know for certaine, that they were farmed out to the subiects of the said Emperour, and he the said Emperour receiued yeerely the rent for them. And further he saith, that it hath bene further credibly reported vnto him, that there is not any such riuer or creeke of fresh water which falleth out of the said countrey of Lappia into the sea, betweene the said abbey Pechingam, and the baie of S. Nicholas, but they are all and euery of them farmed out, and the Emperour receiueth the rent for them.

Item, whether as well before, as also within the memory of men, till the time of the grant of the said letters patents any of the English merchants (sauing the merchants of the said societie) subiects of this realme of England, haue commonly exercised or frequented busines or trade in the said villages or townes called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingam, & Cola, or in any of them, or in any ports or territories of the said Emperour of Russia. The second Interrogatorie.

To this Interrogatorie the Deponent answereth, that the subiects of this Realme before the graunt of the said letters patents did not commonly exercise, neither frequent or trade to any of the said places called the Narue, Kegor, Pechingam or Cola, or to any of them. The deponents answer.

Certaine reasons to disswade the vse of a trade to the Narue aforesayd, by way through Sweden.

THe merchandise of the Narue are grosse wares, viz. flaxe, hempe, waxe, tallow & hides.

The traffique at that place standeth vpon the agreement and liking of the Emperour of Russia, with the king of Sweden: for all these merchandizes that are brought thither come from Plescoue, Nouogrode, and other parts of the Emperours dominions.

For transporting those merchandizes from Narue to Stockholm, or what other place shall bee thought conuenient in Swede, it must be in vessels of those countries, which will be of small force to resist

Freebooters, or any other that shall make quarell or offer violence against them.

When the goods are brought into Sweden, they must be discharged, and new laden into smaller vessels, to carry the same by riuer or lake a part of the way, and againe to bee vnladen and transported by land to Newles.

So as the ordinarie charges for transporting of goods from Narue to Newles by way as aforesaid, besides the spoile by so often lading and vnlading, cariage by land, and the dangers of the seas, pirats, &c. will be such as when it shal be so brought to Newles, it will be as deare to the merchants in that place as it shall be worth to be sold in London, wherefore the trade that waies can not be profitable to our nation.

Note. Moreouer, when the goods shall be in Newles, it may bee thought doubtful to bring it thence quietly without disliking or forcible resistance of the king of Denmarke, forasmuch as he maketh quarell, and alleageth damage vnto him in his tolles of the Sound by our trade to S. Nicholas, how much more will he now doe by this way, and with how much greater aduantage may he performe it? The danger that may grow in our trade to Russia by way of S. Nicholas, though the displeasure that the Emperour may conceiue by our trade with the Sweden to Narue, is also to be considered.

A remembrance of aduise giuen to the merchants, touching a voyage for Cola abouesayd. 1578.

WHere as you require my counsell after what order the voyage for Cola is to be set forth, I answere that I know no better way then hath bene heretofore vsed, which is after this maner. First of all we haue hired the ship by the great, giuing so much for the wearing of the tackle and the hull of the ship, as the ship may be in bignesse: as if she be about the burden of 100. tunnes, we pay 80. pound, and so after that rate: and thereunto we doe victuall the ship our selues, and do ship all our men our selues, shipping no more mē, nor giuing them more wages then we should doe if they went of a merchants voyage, for it hath bene a great helpe to our voiage hitherto, to haue our men to fish with one boate, & colling vs no more charges then it should do, if our men should lie & doe nothing sauing the charges of salt, & of lines, which is treble paid for againe. For this last yeere past our men killed with one boat betwixt 9. and 10. thousand fish, which yeelded to vs in mony with the oile that came of it, about 15. or 16. score pounds, which is a great helpe to a voyage. And besides all this our ship did take in so much oile and other commodities as we bestowed 100. whole clothes in. But because, as I do suppose, it is not the vse of London to take ships to fraight after that order before prescribed, neither I thinke that the mariners will take such paines as our men will: Therefore my counsell is, if you thinke good, to freight some ship of Hull or Newcastle, for I am sure that you may haue them better cheape to freight, then here at London. Besides all this, one may haue such men as will take paines for their merchaunts. And furthermore when it shall please God that the ship shal returne to come to discharge at Hull, which will be the most for your profite for the sales of all such like commoditie as comes from that place, as for fish, oile, & Salmon chiefly, he þ will seeke a better market for the sales then at Hull, he must seeke it out of England, for the like is not in England. This is the best way that I can deuise, and most for your profite, and if you will, I will also set you downe all the commodities that are necessary for such a voiage, and which way also that the Hollanders may within two or three yeeres be forced to leaue of the trade of Cola which may easilie be done. For if my abilitie were to my will, I would vse the matter so that they should either leaue of the trade, or els cary light ships with them home againe.

Hull the best market of England for sale of fish.

Aduertisements and reports of the 6. voyage into the partes of Persia and Media, for the company of English merchants for the discouerie of new trades, in the yeeres 1579. 1580. and 1581. gathered out of sundry letters written by Christopher Burrough seruant to the said company, & sent to his vnkle M. William Burrough.

FIrst it is to be vnderstood, that the ships for the voiage to S. Nicholas in Russia, in which the factors & merchandise for the Persian voiage were transported, departed from Graues end the 19. of June, 1579. which arriued at S. Nicholas in Russia the 22. of July, where the factors and merchants landed, and the merchandize were discharged and laden into dolshnikes, that is, barkes of the countrey, to be caried from thence vp by riuer into Vologda. And the fiue and twentie day of the sayde Julie, the Dolshnikes departed from Rose Island by Saint Nicholas vp the Riuer Dwina, Peremene, that is to say, poste by continuall sayling, rowing, setting with poles, or drawing of men, which came to Colmogro, the the 27 day, and departed thence the 29 day of Julie vp the sayd riuer Dwina, and came to Vstyoug (which is at the head of the riuer Dwina, and mouth of Sughano) the 9 of August, where they stayed but a small time, prouiding some victualles, and shifting certaine of their carkes or barkemen, and so departed thence the same day vp the riuer Sughano, and came to Totma, (which is counted some what more then halfe the way from Vstioug) the 15 day, where they shifted some of their carkes, and departed thence the same day, and came to the citie Vologda the 19 of August, where they landed their goods, and stayed at that place till the 30 of the same. Hauing prouided at Vologda, Telegas, our wagons, whereupon they laded their goods, they departed thence with the same by land towards Yeraslaue the sayd 30 of August, at eight of the clocke in the morning, and came to the East side of the riuer Volga ouer against Yeraslaue, with 25 Telegas laden with the said goods the seuenth of September at fiue of the clocke afternoone. Then the three stroogs or barks prouided to transport the said goods to Astracan (where they should meet the shippe that should carrie the same from thence into Persia) came ouer from Yeraslaue vnto the same side of the riuer Volga, and there tooke in the said goods. And hauing prepared the said barks ready with all necessarie furniture they departed with them from Yeraslaue downe the riuer Volga, on the 14 day of September at nine of the clocke in the morning, and they arriued at Niznouogrod, the 17 day at three of the clocke afternoone, where they shewed the Emperours letters to passe free without paying any custome, and tarryed there about three houres to prouide necessaries, and then departing, arriued at Cazan (or neere the same towne) on the 22 of September at fiue of the clocke afternoone, where (through contrary windes, and for prouiding new carkes in the places of some that there went from them) they remayned till the 26 day, at what time they departed thence about two of the clocke after noone, and arriued at Tetushagorod, which is on the Crim side of Volga, and in latitude 55 degrees 22 minuts the 28 day at ten in ỹ forenoone, where they auckered, and remained about three houres, and departing thence came to Oueak, which is on the Crims side (on the Westerne side of Volga) the fift of October about fiue of the clocke in the morning. This place is accounted halfe the way betweene Cazan, and Astracan: and heere there groweth great store of Licoras: the soile is very fruitfull: they found there apple trees, and cherrie trees. The latitude of Oueake is 51 degrees 30 minuts. At this place had beene a very fayre stone castle called by the name Oueake, & adioyning to the same was a towne called by Russes, Sodom: this towne & part of the castle (by report of the Russes) was swallowed into the earth by the iustice of God, for the wickednesse of the people that inhabited the same. There remaineth at this day to be seene a part of the ruines of the castle, and certain tombs, wherein as it seemeth haue beene laid noble personages: for vpon a tombe stone might be perceiued the forme of a horse and a man sitting on it with a bowe in his hand, and arrowes girt to his side: there was a piece of a scutchion also vpon one of the stones, which had characters grauen on it, whereof some part had beene consumed with the weather, and the rest left vnperfect: but by the forme of them that remained, we iudged them to be characters of Armenia: and other characters were grauen also vpon another tombe stone. Now they departed from Oueake the said fift of October, at fiue of the clocke after noone, and came to Perauoloke, the 10 day about eleuen or twelue of the clocke at night, making no abode at that place, but passed alongst by it. This word Perauoloke in the Russe tongue, doth signifie a narrow straight or necke of land, betweene two waters, and it is so called by them, because from the riuer Volga, at that place to the riuer Don, or Tanais, is counted thirtie versts, or as much as a man may well trauell on foot in one day. And seuen versts beneath, vpon an Iland called Tsaritsina, the Emperour of Russia hath fiftie gunners all the summer time to keepe watch, called by the Tartar name Carawool. Betweene this place and Astracan are fiue other Carawools or watches.

Yeraslaue.

Great store of Licoras.

1 The first is named Kamenie Carawool, and is distant from Perauoloke 120 versts.
2 The second named Stupino Carawool, distant from the first 50 versts.
3 The third called Polooy Carawool, is 120 versts distant from the second.
4 The fourth named Keezeyur Carawool, is 50 versts distant from the third.
5 The fift named Ichkeebre, is 30 versts distant from the fourth, and from Ichkebre to Astracan is 30 versts.

The 16 of October they arriued at Astracan with their three stroogs in safetie about nine of the clocke in the morning, where they found the shippe prouided for the Persia voyage in good order and readinesse. The 17 day the foure principall factors of the company, Arthur Edwards, William Turnbull, Matthew Talboys, and Peter Garrard, were inuited to dine with the chiefe duke or secretarie of Astracan (Vasilie Pheodooruich Shelepin) who declared then vnto them the troubles that were in Media and Persia: and how the Turke with helpe of the Crims had conquered, and did possesse the greatest part of Media: also he laid before them that winter was at hand, and if they should put out with their shippe to the sea, they should be constrayned to take what hazards might happen them by wintring in the parts of Media, or els where, for backe againe to that place there was no hope for them to atchieue: whereupon the said factors determined to stay there all winter to learne further of the state of those countries.

Ice at Astracan for foure moneths.

The 19 of November the winde being Northerly, there was a great frost, and much ice in the riuer: the next day being the 20 of November the ice stood in the riuer, and so continued vntill Easter day.

The 22 of December departed this life John Hoore the gunner of the shippe.

Thursday the seuenth of Januarie betweene eight & nine of the clocke at night there appeared a crosse proceeding from the moone, with two galles at the South and North end thereof.

The first of January being Twelfe day (which they call Chreshenia) the Russes of Astracan brake a hole in the ice vpon the riuer Volga, and hallowed the water with great solemnity according to the maner of their country, at which time all the souldiors of the towne shotte off their small pieces vpon the ice, and likewise to gratifie the captaine of the castle being a duke, whose name is Pheodore Michalouich Troiocouria, who stood hard by the shippe, beholding them as they were on the riuer, was shot off all the ordinance of our shippe being fifteene pieces, viz. two faulcons, two faulconets, foure fowlers, foure fowlers chambers, and three other small pieces made for the strooges to shoot hailestones, and afterwards the great ordinance of the castle was shot off.

On the 31 of January there happened a great eclipse of the moone, which began about twelue of the clocke at night, and continued before she was cleare an houre and a halfe by estimation, which ended the first of February about halfe an houre past one in the morning: she was wholly darkened by the space of halfe an houre.

The 26 of February the towne of Nagay Tartars, called the Yourt, which is within three quarters of a mile of the castle of Astracan, by casualtie was set on fire about ten of the clocke at night, & continued burning till midnight, whereby one halfe of it was burnt, and much cattell destroyed. The Nagayes that inhabit that towne, are the Emperour of Russia his vassals: It is supposed there are of them inhabiting that place, of men, women, and children, the number of seuen thousand. That night the Allarum was made in the castle and towne of Astracan. The captaine thereof had all his souldiors in very good order, and readinesse, being of them in number two thousand gunners, and cassaks, that is to say, a thousand gunners, which are accounted meere souldiours, and are not put to any other seruice then the vse of their pieces, watch, &c. as souldiors which alwayes keepe the castle, and the cassaks also bring their pieces, do keepe the towne, and are commonly set to all kinde of labors.

The seuenth of March 1580, the Nagayes and Crims came before Astracan to the number of one thousand foure hundred horsemen, which incamped round about, but the neerest of them were two Russe verstes and a halfe off from the castle and towne: some of them lay on the Crims side of Volga, and some on the Nagay side, but none of them came vpon the Island that Astracan standeth on. It was sayd that two of the prince of the Crims his sonnes were amongst them. They sent a messenger on the eight day to the captaine of Astracan, to signifie that they would come and visit him: who answered, he was ready to receiue them: and taking a great shotte or bullet in his hand, willed the messenger to tell them that they should not want of that geare, so long as it would last. The ninth day newes was brought that the Crims determined to assault the towne or castle, and were making of fagots of reede, to bring with them for that purpose. The tenth day two Russes that were captiues, and two of the Tartars bondmen ranne away from the Nagayes, and came into Astracan. The same day word was brought to the duke of two Nagayes, which were seene at Gostine house, supposed to be spies, but were gone againe from thence before they were suspected. This Gostine house is a place a little without the towne where the Tisiks (or Persian merchants) do vsually remaine with their merchandize. The 11 day the sayd Nagayes, and one more with them, came againe to that house earely in the morning, where they were taken by the Russes, and brought to the captayne of the castle, and being examined, confessed that their coming was onely to seeke two of their bondmen that were runne from them: whereupon their bondmen were deliuered to them: which fauor the sayd captaine commonly sheweth if they be no Russies, and they were set at liberty. The 15 day they brake vp their camps, and marched to the North wards into the countrey of Nagay.

Astracan stands vpon an Island.

The variation of the compas in Astracan was 13 deg. 40 minuts.

The 17 of Aprill the variation of the compasse obserued in Astracan was 13 deg. 40 min. from North to West. This spring there came newes to Astracan that ye queene of Persia (the king being blinde, blinde) had beene with a great armie against the Turks that were left to possesse Media, and had giuen them a great ouerthrow: yet notwithstanding Derbent, and the greatest part of Media were still possessed and kept by the Turks. The factors of the company consulting vpon their affayres, determined to leaue at Astracan, the one halfe of their goods with Arthur Edwards, and with the other halfe the other three factors would proceed in the ship on their purposed voyage to the coast of Media, to see what might be done there, where if they could not finde safe traffike, they determined to proceed to the coast of Gilan, which is an Iland in the Caspian sea bordering vpon Persia: and thereupon appointed the said goods to be laden aboord the shippe, and tooke into her also some merchandize of Tisiks or Persian merchants.

The 29 of April Amos Riall, and Anthony Marsh, the companies seruants were sent from Astracan by the said factors, vp the riuer Volga to Yeraslaue, with letters of aduise to be sent for England, and had order for staying the goods in Russia that should come that yeere out of England for maintaining the trade purposed for Persia, vntill further triall were made what might be done in those parts.

The first day of May in the morning, hauing the shippe in readinesse to depart, the factors inuited the duke Pheodore Micalouich Proiocoorow, and the principall secretary Vasilie Pheodorouich Shelepin, with other of the chiefest about the duke to a banket aboord the ship, where they were entertained to their good liking, and at their departure was shot off all the ordinance of the ship, and about nine of the clocke at night the same day they weyed anker, and departed with their ship from Astracan, and being but little winde, towed her with the boat about three verstes, and then ankered, hauing with them a pauos or lighter to helpe them at the flats. The second day at foure of the clocke in the morning they weyed & plyed downe the riuer Volga toward the Caspian sea. The seuenth of May in the morning they passed by a tree that standeth on the left hand of the riuer as they went downe, which is called Mahomet Agatch, or Mahomets tree, and about three verstes further, that is to say, to the Southwards of the said tree is a place called Vchoog, that is to say, the Russe weare: (but Ochoog is the name of weare in the Tartar tongue) where are certaine cotages, and the Emperour hath lying at that place certaine gunners to gard his fishermen that keepe the weare. This Vchoog is counted from Astracan 60 verstes: they proceeded downe the said riuer without staying at the Vchoog. The ninth and tenth dayes they met with shoald water, and were forced to lighten their shippe by the pauos: the 11 day they sent backe to the Vchoog for an other pauos: This day by mischance the shippe was bilged on the grapnell of the pauos, whereby the company had sustained great losses, if the chiefest part of their goodes had not beene layd into the pauos: for notwithstanding their pumping with three pomps, heauing out water with buckets, and all the best shifts they could make, the shippe was halfe full of water ere the leake could be found and stopt. The 12 day the pauos came to them from the Vchoog, whereby they lighted the shippe of all the goods. The 13 day in the morning there came to them a small boat, sent by the captaine of Astracan, to learne whether the shippe were at sea cleere off the flats. The 15 day by great industrie and trauell they got their shippe cleare off the shoales and flats, where with they had beene troubled from the ninth day vntill then: they were forced to passe their shippe in three foot water or lesse. The 16 day they came to the Chetera Bowgeri, or Iland of Foure Hillocks, which are counted fortie verstes from Vchoog, and are the furthest land to wards the sea. The 17 day they bare off into the sea, and being about twelue verstes from the Foure hillocks, riding in fiue foot and a halfe water about eleuen of the clocke in the forenoone, they tooke their goods out of the pauoses into the shippe, and filled their shippe with all things necessary. The 18 day in the morning about seuen of the clocke, the pauoses being discharged, departed away toward Astracan, the winde then at Southeast, they road still with the shippe, and obseruing the eleuation of the pole at that place, found it to be 45 degrees 20 minuts. The 19 day, the winde Southeast, they road still. The 20 day the winde at Northwest they set saile about one of the clocke in the morning, and steered thence South by West, and Southsouthwest, about three leagues, and then ankered in fiue and a halfe water, about nine of the clocke before noone, at which time it fell calme: the eleuation of the pole at that place 45 degrees 13 minuts. The 21 hauing the winde at Northwest, they set saile, and steered thence South by West, and South vntill eleuen of the clocke, and had then nine foote water: and at noone they obserued the latitude, and found it to be 44 degrees 47 minuts: then had they three fathoms and a halfe water, being cleare off the flats. It is counted from the Foure hillocks to the sea about fiftie verstes. From the said noone tide vntill foure of the clocke they sayled South by East fiue leagues and a halfe: then had they fiue fathoms and a halfe and blackish water: from that till twelue at night they sayled South by East halfe a league East tenne leagues: then had they eleuen fathome, and the water saltet. From that till the 22 day three of the clocke in the morning they sayled three & fiftie leagues, then had they sixteene fathome water: from thence they sailed vntill noone South and by West seuen leagues and a halfe, the latitude then obserued 43 degrees 15 minuts, the depth then eight and twentie fathoms, and shallow ground: from thence vntill eight of the clocke at night, they sayled South by East fiue leagues and a halfe, then had they three and fortie fathoms shallow ground. From thence till the 23 foure a clocke in the morning, they sailed Southsouthwest three leagues and a halfe: then could they get no ground in two and fiftie fathoms deepe. From thence vntill noone they sailed South nine leagues, then the latitude obserued was 42 degrees 24 minuts. From thence till the 24 day at noone they sayled South by West seuenteene leagues and a halfe, then the latitude obserued was 41 degrees 32 minuts. From noone till seuen of the clocke at night, they sailed Southsouthwest foure leagues, then had they perfect sight of high land or hilles, which were almost couered with snowe, and the mids of them were West from the shippe, being then about twelue leagues from the nereest land: they sounded but could finde no ground in two hundred fathoms. From thence they sailed Southwest vntill midnight: about three leagues from thence till the 25 day foure of the clocke in the morning, they sailed West three leagues, being then little winde, and neere the land, they tooke in their sayles, and lay hulling: at noone the latitude obserued, was 40 degrees 54 minuts: they sounded but could get no ground in two hundred fathoms. At foure of the clocke in the afternoone, the winde Northwest, they set their sayles, and from thence till the 26 day at noone they sailed Eastsoutheast foure leagues. From thence they sailed till eight of the clocke at night Southwest three leagues, the winde then at North. From thence they sailed vntill the 27 day two of the clocke in the morning, Westsouthwest eight leagues, the winde blowing at North very much. From the said two till foure of the clocke they sayled South by West one league: then being day light, they saw the land playne, which was not past three leagues from them, being very high ragged land. There were certaine rocks that lay farre off into the sea, about fiue leagues from the same land, (which are called Barmake Tash) they sayled betweene those rocks and the land, and about fiue of the clocke they passed by the port Bilbill, where they should haue put in but could not: and bering longst the shoare about two of the clocke afternoone, they came to Bildigh in the countrey of Media or Sheruan, against which place they ankered in nine foot water. Presently after they were at anker, there came aboord of them a boat, wherein were seuen or eight persons, two Turks, & rest Persians, the Turks vassals, which bade them welcome, and seemed to be glad of their arriuall, who tolde the factors that the Turke had conquered all Media, or the countrey Sheruan, and how that the Turks Basha remayned in Derbent with a garrison of Turks, and that Shamackie was wholly spoyled, and had few or no inhabitants left in it. The factours then being desirous to come to the speech of the Basha, sent one of the Tatks (or merchants that went ouer with them from Astracan, passingers) and one of the companyes seruants Robert Golding, with those louldiours, to the captaine of Backow, which place standeth hard by the sea, to certifie him of their arriuall, and what commodities they had brought, and to desire friendshippe to haue quiet and fair traffike for the same. Backow is from Bildih, the place where they road, about a dayes iourney, one foote easily to be trauelled, which may be sixe leagues the next way ouer land: it is a walled towne, and strongly fortified. When the sayd messenger came to the captaine of Backowe, the said captaine gaue him very friendly intertainement, and after he vnderstood what they were that were come in the shippe, and what they had brought, he seemed to reioyce much thereat: who gaue the sayd Golding licence to depart backe the next day, being the eight and twentith day: and promised that he would himselfe come to the shippe the next day following: with which answere the sayd Golding returned and came to the shippe the sayd eight and twentith day about nine of the clocke at night. The nine and twentith day in the morning the factours caused a tent to be set vp at shoare neere the shippe, against the comming of the sayde captayne: who came thither about three of the clocke after noone, and brought about thirtie souldiours, that attended on him, in shirts of male, and some of them had gauntlets of siluer, others of steele, and very fayre. The factours met him at their tent, and after very friendly salutations passed betweene them, they gaue him for a present a garment of cloth of veluet, and another of scarlet, who accepted the same gratefully: after they had talked together by their interpretours, as well of the state of the voyage and cause of their comming thither, as also learned of the sayde captaine the state of that countrey, the factours made request vnto him, that he would helpe them to the speeche of the Basha, who answered that their demaund was reasonable, and that hee would willingly shew them therein what pleasure he could, and sayd because the way to Derbent, where the Basha remayned, was dangerous, he would send thither, and certifie him of their arriuall, and what commodities they had brought, and such commodities as they would desire to exchange or barter the same for, ſir he would procure the ſaid Baſha to prouide for them: and therefore willed the factors to conſult together, and certifie him what they moſt deſired, and what quantitie they would haue prouided: ſo whileſt the factors were conſulting togither thereupon, the captaine talked with a Tiſike merchant that came ouer in the ſhip with them from Aſtracan, which Tiſike among other matters in talke, certified the captaine, that the night before the factors and their company were determined to haue returned backe againe to Aſtracan, and that they were about to way their ankers, which in deed was true, but the maiſter of the barke, Thomas Hudſon of Limehouſe, perſuaded them that the winde was not good for them to depart, &c. When the factors came againe to talke with the captaine, they deſired to go to the Baſha, and that he would ſafely conduct them thither: he granted their requeſts willingly, deſiring them to goe with him to a village hard by, and there to abide with him that night, and the next day they ſhould go to Backow, and from thence proceed on their iourney to Derbent. They were vnwilling to go that night with him, becauſe their prouiſion for the way was not in readineſſe, but requeſted that they might ſtay till the morning. Thereupon the captaine ſayd it was reported vnto him, that they ment the night before to haue gone away: and if it ſhould ſo happen, he were in great danger of looſing his head: for which cauſe he requeſted to haue ſome one for a pledge: wherefore M. Garrard one of the factours offered himſelfe to go, who becauſe he could not ſpeake the Ruſſe tongue, tooke with him Chriſtopher Burrough, and a Ruſſe interpretour: that night they road from the ſea ſide, to a village about ten miles off, where at ſupper time the captaine had much talke with M. Garrard of our countrey, demanding where about it did lie, what countries were neere vnto it, and with whom we had traffike, for by the Ruſſe name of our countrey he could not coniecture who we ſhould be: but when by the ſituation he perceiued we were Engliſhmen, he demanded if our prince were a mayden Queene: which when he was certified of, then (quoth he) your land is called Engleterra, is it not? anſwere was made it was ſo: wherof he was very glad when he knew the certainty. He made very much of them, placing M. Garrard next to himſelfe, and Chriſtopher Burrough, with the Ruſſie interpretour for the Turkie tongue hard by. There was a Gillan merchant with him at that preſent, of whom he ſeemed to make great account: him he placed next to himſelfe on the other ſide, and his gentlemen ſate round about him talking together. Their ſitting is vpon the heeles, or croſſe legged.

Supper being brought in, he requeſted them to eat. After their potage (which was made of rice) was done, and likewiſe their boyled meat, there came in platters of rice ſodden thicke, and hony mingled withall: after all which, came a ſheepe roſted whole, which was brought in a tray, and ſet before the captaine: he called one of his ſeruitours, who cut it in pieces, and laying therof vpon diuers platters, ſet the ſame before the captaine: then the captaine gaue to M. Garrard and his company one platter, and to his gentlemen another, and to them which could not well reach he caſt meat from the platters which were before him. Diuers queſtions he had with M. Garrard and Chriſtopher Burrough at ſupper time, about their diet, inquiring whether they eat fiſh or fleſh voluntarily, or by order. Their drinke in thoſe parts is nothing but water. After ſupper (walking in the garden) the captaine demanded of M. Garrard, whether the vſe was in England to lie in the houſe or in the garden, and which he had beſt liking of: he anſwered, where it pleaſed him, but their vſe was to lye in houſes: thereupon the captaine cauſed beds to be ſent into the houſe for them, and cauſed his kinſman to attend on them in the night, if they chanced to want any thing: he himſelfe with his gentlemen and ſouldiors lying in the garden.

In the morning very early he ſent horſe for the reſt of the company which ſhould go to Derbent, finding by them that went tenne ſheepe for the ſhippe. In that village there was a Stoue, into which the captaine went in the morning, requeſting M. Garrard to go alſo to the ſame to waſh himſelfe, which he did. Shortly after their comming out of the Stoue, whileſt they were at breakfaſt, M. Turnbull, M. Taylboyes, and Thomas Hudſon the M. of the ſhippe, came thither, and when they had all broken their faſts, they went to Backow: but Chriſtopher Burrough returned to the ſhip, for that he had hurt his leg, and could not well endure that trauell. And from Backow they proceeded towards Derbent, as it was by the captaine promiſed, being accompanyed on their way for their ſafe conduct, with a gentleman, and certaine ſouldiors, which had the captaine of Backow his letters to the Baſha of Derbent, very friendly written in their behalfe. In their iourney to Derbent they forſooke the ordinary wayes, being very dangerous, and trauelled through woods till they came almoſt to the towne of Derbent: and then the gentleman road before with the captaines letters to the Baſha, to certifie him of the Engliſh merchants comming, who receiuing the letters, and vnderſtanding the matter, was very glad of the newes, and ſent forth to meete them, certaine ſouldiors gunners, who met them about two miles out of the towne, ſaluting them with great reuerence, and afterwardes road before them: then againe met them other souldiours, somewhat neerer the castle, which likewise hauing done their salutations road before them, and then came forth noble men, captaines, and gentlemen, to receiue them into the castle and towne. As they entred the castle there was a shot of twenty pieces of great ordinance, and the Basha sent M. Turnbull a very fayre horse with furniture to mount on, esteemed to be worth an hundred markes, and so they were conueyed to his presence: who after he had talked with them, sent for a coate of cloth of golde, and caused it to be put on M. Turnbulles backe, and then willed them all to depart, and take their ease, for that they were weare of their iourney, and on the morrow he would talke further with them. The next day when the factors came againe to the presence of the Basha, according to his appointment, they requested him that he would grant them his priuilege, whereby they might traffike safely in any part and place of his countrey, offering him, that if it pleased his Maiesty to haue any of the commodities that they had brought, and to write his minde therof to the captaine of Backow, it should be deliuered him accordingly. The Bashaes answere was, that he would willingly giue them his priuilege: yet for that he regarded their safetie, hauing come so farre, and knowing the state of his country to be troublesome, he would haue them to bring their commodity thither, & there to make sale of it, promising he would prouide such commodities as they needed, and that he would be a defence vnto them, so that they should not be iniured by any: wherupon the factors sent Thomas Hudson backe for the ship to bring her to Derbent, and the Basha sent a gentleman with him to the captaine of Backow, to certifie him what was determined, which message being done, the captaine of Backow, and the Bashaes messenger, accompanied with a doozen souldiours, went from Backow with Thomas Hudson, and came to the ship at Bildih the 11 day of June. After the captaine and his men had beene aboord and seene the ship, they all departed presently, but the gentleman, messenger from the Basha, with three other Turkes, remained aboord, and continued in the shippe till she came to Derbent: the latitude of Bildih by diuers obseruations is 40 degrees 25 minuts: the variation of the compasse 10 degrees 40 minuts from North to West. After the returne of Thomas Hudson backe to Bildih, they were constrayned to remayne there with the shippe through contrary windes vntill the 16 day of June foure of the clocke in the morning, at which time they weyed anker, set saile and departed thence towardes Derbent, and arriued at anker against Derbent East and by South from the said castle in foure fathome and a halfe water, the 22 day of June at ten of the clocke in the morning: then they tooke vp their ordinance, which before they had stowed in holde for easing the shippe in her rowing. In the afternoone the Basha came downe to the water side against the shippe, and hauing the said ordinance placed, and charged, it was all shotte off to gratifie him: and presently after his departure backe, he permitted the factors to come aboord the shippe. The 29 day their goods were vnladen and carryed to the Bashaes garden, where he made choyce of such things as he liked, taking for euery stone of euery fiue and twentie karsies, or whatsoeuer, one, or after the rate of foure for the hundred. The factours after his choyce made, determined to send a part of the rest of the goods to Backow, for the speedier making sale thereof, for which cause they obteined the Bashaes letter to the captaine of Backow, written very fauourably in their behoofe: and thereupon was laden and sent in a small boat of that countrey in merchandize, to the value (very neere) of one thousand pound sterling: videlicet, one hundred pieces of karsies, seuen broad clothes, two barrels of cochenilio, two barrels of tinne, foure barrels of shalle. There went with the same of the companyes seruants William Winckle, Robert Golding, and Richard Relfe, with two Russies, whereof one was an interpretor, besides foure barkemen. They departed from Derbent with the said barke the 19 of July, and arriued at Bildih the 25 day: their passage and carriage of their goods to Backow was chargeable, although their sales when they came thither were small: they had great friendship shewed them of the captaine of Backow, as well for the Bashaes letter, as also for the factours sakes, who had dealt friendly with him, as before is declared. Robert Golding desirous to vnderstand what might be done at Shamakie, which is a daies iourney from Backow, went thither, from whence returning, he was set on by theeues, and was shot into the knee with an arrow, who had verie hardly escaped with his life and goodes, but that by good hap he killed one of the theeues horse with his caliuer, and shot a Turke thorow both cheeks with a dag. On the sixt day of August the factors being aduertised at Derbent that their ship was so rotten and weake, that it was doubtfull he would not carry them backe to Astracan, did therupon agree and bargen at that place with an Armenian, whose name was Iacob, for a barke called a Busse, being of burden about 35 tunnes, which came that yeere from Astracan, and was at that instant riding at an island called Zere about three or foure leagues beyond or to the Eastwardes of Bildih, which barke for their more safety, they ment to haue with them in their returne to Astracan, and therupon wrote vnto Wincell and the

the rest at Backow, that they should receiue the same Busse, and lade in her their goods at Bildigh to be returned to Derbent, and to discharge their first boate, which was obserued by them accordingly. When all their goods were laden aboorde the saide Busse at Bildigh, and being readie to haue departed thence for Derbent, there arose a great storme with the winde out of the sea, by force whereof the cables and hailsters were broken, and their vessell put a shoare, and broken to pieces against the rockes: euery of them that were in her saued their liues, and part of the goods. But there was a Carobia or cheste, wherein were dollers, and golde, which they had receiued for the commodities of the companie, which they solde at Backowe, which at the taking out of the Busse, fell by the barkes side into the water amongst the rockes, and so was lost. The packes of cloth which they could not well take out of the Busse were also lost, other thinges that were more portable they saued.

The 18. of August, the Factors receiued from the Basha 500. Batmans of rawe silke, parcell of the bargaine made with him, who bade them come the next day for the rest of the bargaine.

The 19. day the Factors went to the Basha according to his appointment, but that day they could not speake with him, but it was deliuered them as from him, that they should looke and consider whether any thing were due vnto him or not, which grieued the Factors, and thereupon M. Turnebul answered, that their heads and all that they had were at the Bashaes pleasure; But then it was answered there was no such matter in it: but that they should cast vp their reckonings, to see how it stood betweene them. The 20. day they cast vp their reckonings. The 21. they went to haue spoken with the Basha, but were denied audience.

The 22. day they heard newes by a Busse that came from Astracan, that Arthur Edwards (whome the Factors left at Astracan with the moitie of the goods) was dead, who departed this life the of Arthur Edwards dieth at Astracan.

The 23. day the Factors receiued more from the Basha 500. Batmans of silke. The 4. of September newes was brought to Derbent, that Golding comming from Shamakie, was set on by theeues (Turkes) and had hurt one of them.

The 5. Tobias Atkins the gunners boy died of the flure, who was buried the 6. day 2. miles to the Southward of the Castle of Derbent, where the Armenian Christians do vsually burie their dead. About the 20. of September newes came to Derbent, that the Busse which they had bought of Iacob the Armenian as before, was cast away at Bildih, but they receiued no certaine newes in writing from any of our people.

The 26. of September was laden aboord the shippe 40. bales of silke. From the 26. til the 2. of October, they tooke into the shippe, bread, water, and other necessary prouision for their sea store: the said 2. day of October, the Factors were commanded vpon the suddaine to auoyd their house, and get them with their prouision out of the towne: Whereupon they were constrained to remoue and carry their things to the sea side against the ship, and remained there all the night. The cause of this sudden auoyding them out of the towne (as afterwards they perceiued) was for that the Basha had receiued newes of a supplie with treasure that the Turke had sent, which was then neere at hand comming towards him.

The 3. day of October all things were brought from the shoare aboorde the ship: and that day the Factors went to the Basha to take their leaue of him, vnto whom they recommended those the Companies seruants, &c. which they had sent to Backow, making accompt to leaue them behinde in the Countrey: who caused their names to be written, and promised they should want nothing, nor be iniuried of any. After this leaue taken, the Factors went aboord purposing presently to haue set saile and departed towards Astracan, the winde seruing well for that purpose at South Southeast; And as they were readie to set saile, there came against the shippe a man who weued: whereupon the boate was sent a shoare to him, who was an Armenian sent from William Wincoll, with his writing tables, wherein the saide Wincoll had written briefly, the mishappe of the losse of the Busse, and that they were comming from Bildih towardes Derbent, they, and such things as they saued with a small boate, forced to put a shoare in a place by the sea side called the Armenian village: Whereupon the Factors caused the shippe to stay hoping that with the Southerly winde that then blew, they would come from the place they were at to the shippe, but if they could not come with that winde, they ment to saile with the shippe, with the next winde that would serue them, against the place where they were, & take them in if they could: which stay and losse of those Southerly windes, was a cause of great troubles, that they afterwards sustained through out, &c. entring the Volga as shalbe declared.

The 4. day the winde South Southeast, the shippe rode still: This day Christopher Burrow was sent to shore to Derbent to prouide some necessaries for the voyage, & with him a Tisike or two, which should goe in the shippe passengers to Astracan. And being on shoare he saw there the comming in of the Turkes treasure, being accompanied with 200. souldiers, and 100. pioners, besides Captaines and Gentlemen: the Basha with his Captaines and souldiers very gallantly apparelled and furnished, went out from Derbent about three or foure miles to meete the saide treasure, and receiued the same with great ioye and triumphe. Treasure was the chiefe thing they needed, for not long before, the souldiers were readie to breake into the Court against the Basha for their pay: there was a great mutenie amongst them, because hee had long differred and not payed them their due. The treasure came in 7. wagons, and with it were brought 12. pieces of brasse.

The Turke his treasure sent to Derbent.

In the parts of Media where they were, there was no commoditie to bee bought of any value, but raw silke, neither was that to bee had but at the Bashaes handes: who shortly after their comming thither taxed the Countrey for that commoditie. His dealing with our Marchants as it was not with equitie in all points according to his bargaine, so it was not extreeme ill. Of the commodities they carried hee tooke the chiefest part, for which hee gaue but a small price in respect of the value it was there worth, and because he had prouided such quantitie of commodities for them, which otherwise they coulde not haue had, the Countrey being so troublesome, and trauaile by land so dangerous, he vsed them at his pleasure.

The newes that was reported vnto them at Astracan touching the warres betweene the Turkes and Persians differed litle from the trueth: For the Turkes armie with ayde of the Crims, (being in nomber by the information of 2. Spaniards that serued in those warres, about 200000.) inuaded & conquered the Countrey of Media in Anno 1577. When the great Turke vnderstood of the conquest, he appointed Osman Basha (the said Basha, and now Captaine of Derbent) gouernour of the whole Countrey, who settled himselfe in Shamakie the chiefe Citie of Media, and principal place of trafique, vnto whome was sent from the great Turke, in signification of the gratefull acceptation of his seruice and the great conquest, a sword of great value.

Osman Bacha.

After the saide Basha had brought the Countrey in order to his liking, and placed garrisons where hee thought conuenient, the armie was dissolued and sent backe: When the Persians vnderstoode that the Turkes armie was dissolued and returned, they gathered a power together, and with the Queene of their Countrey as chiefe, they entred the Countrey of Media, and ouerranne the same with fire and sword, destroying whatsoeuer they founde, as well people, cattell, as whatsoeuer els, that might be commodious to the Turkes. And after they had so ouerrunne the Countrey, they came to Shamakie, where the saide Basha Lieutenant generall of the great Turke was settled, and besieged it: whereupon the Basha seeing hee coulde not long indure to withstande them, fledde thence to Derbent where he now remaineth.

Derbent is a strong Castle which was built by Alexander the great, the situation whereof is such, that the Persians being without Ordinance, are not able to winne it but by famine. When the Turkes were fled from Shamakie, the Persians entred the same and spoyled it, leauing therein neither liuing creature nor any commoditie, and so returned backe into Persia, and settled themselues about Teueris, where there grewe some question among them for the kingdome. Afterwards the Persians hauing intelligence of an armie from the Turke comming into Media, gathered themselues together in a great armie and encountring the saide Turkes, set vpon them on the sudden, and vanquished them, putting them all to the sworde. This ouerthowe of the Turkes grieued the Basha of Derbent, and made him to haue the more care for his owne safetie. Moreouer, newes was brought vnto him that the Kisel Bashaes, (that is to say the nobles & Gentlemen of Persia) were minded to set vpon him, and that neere vnto Backow there lay an armie readie to besiege it. Whereupon the Basha oftentimes would ride about the Castle of Derbent viewing the same, and the spyings that did come to it, and where he saw any cause of reformation it was amended.

Derbent built by Alexander the great.

The Latitude of Derbent (by diuers obseruations exactly there made) is 41. deg. 52. The variation of the Compasse at that place about 11. degrees from North to West. From Derbent to Bildih by land, 46. leagues. From Derbent to Shamakie by land 45. leagues. From Shamakie to Backow about 10. leagues, which may be 30. miles. From Backow to Bildih 5. or six leagues by land, but by water about 12. leagues. From the Castle Derbent Eastwards there reache 2. stone walles to the border of the Caspian sea, which is distant one English mile. Their walles are 9. foote thicke, and 28. or 30. foote high, and the space betweene them is 160. geometrical paces, that is 800. foote. There are yet to be perceiued of the ruine of those walles, which do now extend into the sea about halfe a mile: Also from the Castle Westward into the land, they did perceiue the ruines of a stone wall to extend, which wall as it is reported, did passe from thence to Pontus Euxinus, and was built by Alexander the great when the Caſtle Derbent was made.

The 5. of October about noone the winde North Northeaſt they waped ancre, and ſet ſaile from Derbent, being longeſt the coaſt to the Southwards to ſeeke their men, but as they had ſailed about foure leagues the winde ſcanted Eaſterly, ſo that they were forced to ancre in three fathome water.

The 6. day they waped ancre, and bare further off into the ſea, where they ancred in 7. fathome water, the ſhippe being very leke and ſo rotten abafte the maine maſte, that a man with his nailes might ſcrape through her ſide.

The 7. day about 7. of the clocke in the morning, they ſet ſaile, the winde Southweſt. They conſidered the time of the yeere was farre ſpent, the ſhip weake, leke and rotten, and therefore determining not to tary any longer for Wincoll and his fellowes but to leaue them behinde, bent themſelues directly towards Aſtracan: and ſayling North Northeaſt vntill midnight about 16. leagues, the winde then came to the North Northweſt, and blew much, a very ſtorme, which cauſed them to take in all their ſailes, ſauing the fore coyſe, with which they were forced to ſteere before the ſea, South by weſt, and South ſouthweſt. And on the 8. day about 2. of the clocke in the morning their great boate ſunke at the ſhips ſterne, which they were forced to cut from the ſhippe to their great griefe and diſcomfort: for in her they hoped to ſaue their liues if the ſhippe ſhoulde haue miſcaried. About 10. of the clocke before noone they had ſight of the lande about 5. leagues to the South of Derbent, and bare longſt the coaſt to the Southeaſtwards vnto Nezauoo, where they came at ancre in 3. fathoms and blacke oze, good ancre holde, whereof they were glad as alſo that the winde was ſhifted to the Northweſt, and but a meane gale. Wincoll and the reſt of his fellowes being in the Armenian village, which is about 18. verſts to the weſtwards of Nezauoo, the place where againſt they rode at ancre, ſaw the ſhip as ſhe paſſed by that place, and ſent a man in the night following alongſt the coaſt after her, who came againſt the ſhip where ſhe rode, and with a fireband in the top of a tree, made ſignes, which was perceiued by them in the ſhippe, whereupon they hoyſed out their ſkiffe, and ſent her a ſhoare to learne what was ment by the fire: which returned a letter from Wincoll, wherin he wrote that they were with ſuch goods as they had at the Armenian village, and prayed that there they might with the ſame goods be taken into the ſhippes. The 9. day it was litle winde, they waped and bare a litle further off into the ſea towards the ſaid village, and ancred. The 10. day they ſent their ſkiffe to the Armenian village to fetch thoſe men and the goods they had, with order that if the winde ſerued, that they could not returne to fetche the ſhippe, they of the ſhippe promiſed to come for them, againſt the ſaide village; this day it was calme.

The 11. day the winde Northweſt they rode ſtill. The 12. day the winde Southeaſt they waped ancre, and bare againſt and neere to the Armenian village where they ancred, and then the ſkiffe came aboord and tolde them that our people at ſhoare, were like to be ſpoyled of the Tartars, were it not that the gunners defended them: then was the ſkiffe ſent backe againe to charge them at any hand they ſhould haſten aboorde the ſhippe whatſoeuer it coſt them. Whereupon, all the companie came aboorde the ſame day ſauing Richard Relfe, and two Ruſſes, but as ſoone as the ſkiffe was returned aboorde the ſhippe, the winde blewe at Southeaſt, and the Sea was growen: ſo as they were forced to take in their ſkiffe into the ſhip and rode ſtill till the 13. day, and then being faire weather, early in the morning the ſkiffe was hoyſed out of the ſhippe, and ſent to ſhoare to fetch the ſaid Relfe and the two Ruſſes, which were readie at the ſhoare ſide, and with them two Spaniards that were taken captiues at the Goletta in Barbarie, which ſerued the Turke as ſouldiers. Thoſe Spaniards (of Chriſtian charitie) they brought alſo aboord the ſhippe to redeeme them from their captiuitie, which were brought ouer into England, and ſet free and at libertie here in London, in September 1581. The winde this day at North Northeaſt, faire weather. The 14. day they ſent the ſkiffe to ſhoare, and filled freſh water. The 15. day they rode ſtill being litle winde and fogge. The 16. day the winde Eaſt Southeaſt, they waped ancre and ſet ſaile bearing Northwards towardes Aſtracan, and the ſame night they ancred in 10. fadoms water, about 5. miles from the ſhoare of the Shalkaules countrey, which place is 8. leagues South Northweſt from Derbent. The 17. day the winde at North very ſtormie, they rode ſtil all that day & night. The 18. the winde all Southeaſt about one of the clocke afternoone, they waped ancre & ſailed thence til 4. of the clocke North Northeaſt 6. leagues, then might they ſee the land Northweſt about 10. leagues from the wind Southeaſt: frō thence they ſailed til midnight North Northeaſt 12. leagues. Frō thence til ꝑ 19. day 7. a clocke in ꝑ morning they ſailed Northnortheaſt 8. leagues: the wind then Eaſt ſoutheaſt, a faire gale, they ſounded and had 17. fathoms, and ſand, being (as the M. iudged) about the head of Shetly: from thence till 12. of the clocke at noone they sailed North 5. leagues, the winde then at East a faire gale, they sounded and had 5. fadoms. From thence till 8. of the clocke at night, they sailed North 7. leagues: the winde then at South east with small raine, they tooke in their sailes and ancred in 3. fadoms water and soft ooze, where they rode still all night, and the 20. day and night the winde Northeast, as before with small raine.

The 21. day the winde Northwest, they likewise rode still. The 22. day about 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, they waied ancre the winde West Northwest, and sailed from thence till sixe of the clocke at night North 4. leagues, then they ancred in 2. fathoms and a halfe soft ooze, the winde at West a small breath.

The 23. day about 7. of the clocke in the morning, they waied ancre and set saile being little winde Easterly, and sailed till 2. of the clocke after noone Northwest in with the shoare about sixe leagues, and then ancred in 6. foote water, hauing perfect sight of the lowe lande (lande hilles) being about three miles from the neerest land. This place of the land that they were against, they perceiued to be to the Westwards of the foure Islands (called in the Russe tongue Chetera Boogori) and they founde it afterwards by due proofe, to be about 50. verstes, or thirtie English miles to the Southwest, or Southwest by South, from the said Chetera Bogori.

The 24. day the winde at East, and by South, a sea winde called Gillauar, caused them to ride still. The 25. day they thought good to sende in their skiffe Robert Golding, and certaine Russes, to rowe him longest Northwards by the shoare, to seeke the foure Islands, and so to passe vnto the Vchooge, and there to land the saide Rob. Golding to proceede to Astracan, to deliuer Amos Riall a letter, wherein he was required to prouide Pauozes to meete the shippe at the saide Islands, and the skiffe with the Russes were appointed to returne from the Vchooge with victuals to the shippe, which skiffe departed from the shippe about nine of the clocke in the forenoone. The 26. 27. 28. and 29. dayes, the windes Easterly, and Northeast they roode still with their shippe. The 30. day the winde Southeast, they waied and set saile to the Northeast ward: but the shippe fell so on the side to the shorewards, that they were forced eftsoones to take in their sailes and ancre againe, from whence they neuer remooued her. That day they shared their breade but in their want God sent them two couies of partridges, that came from the shoare, and lighted in and about their shippes, whereby they were comforted, and one that lay sicke, of whose life was small hope, recouered his health.

November.

The 4. of November the skiffe returned to the shippe with some victuals and certified that the 4. Islands were about 60. verstes from them to the Northeastwards. When Robert Golding came to Astracan, and deliuered there the Factors letters to Amos Rial, the duke, Capteine of the place, was done to vnderstand of the ships arriual, and of the state they were in, and their request for Pauoses, who was very glad to heare of their safe returne, and appointed to be sent with all speede 2. Pauoses, and a Strooge, with gunners to garde and to defende them. With the which Strooge and Pauoses, Amos Riall went downe to the Chetera Bougori, or 4. Islands aforesaid, where he staied with those barks, according to the Factors appointment. The 5. day they purposed to send from the shippe their skiffe with the carpenter, and 4. Russes, to rowe him to the 4. Bougories, to request Amos Rial to come from thence with the Pauoses to the ship with al possible speed. The skiffe with those men departed from the ship in the morning, and within one houre they met with a small boat with Russes, rowing towards the ship which came from the Ouchooge with wilde swine and other victuals to sell: with the same boate the skiffe returned backe to the ship after the Russes had receiued and were satisfied for the victuals they brought: the same day they returned with their boate backe toward the Ouchooge, and with them in the same boate was sent the carpenter of the ship to the Chetera Bougori which were in their way, to declare vnto Amos Riall the message before appointed him. From the 5. vntill the 9. day the ship rode still with contrary winds Easterly. The same 9. day came to the ship certaine Russes in a small boate, which brought with them some victuals sent by Amos Riall, and declared, that hee with the Pauoses and Strooge, had remained at the Chetera Boogori 5. dayes expecting the comming thither of the ship. The 10. day being doubtfull of the Pauoses comming, they sent Thomas Hudson master of the ship in the skiffe (and with her went the aforesaid skiffe boate) towards the Chetera Boogori to the Pauoses, to bring word whether they would come to the ship or not, the winde then at North east with fogge. The 11. day the winde Northerly with fogge, the ship roode still. The 12. day Amos Rial, Christopher Fawcet, and a new gunner came to the ship, and with them the M. Thomas Hudson returned (but the Strooge with the gunners remained at the Chetera Boogori) and from thence (when it began to freese,) returned to Astracan. Amos Rial declared that he sent the carpenter backe from the Chetera Boogori in a small boate on the 10. day, and marueiled that he was was not come to the shippe (but in the fogge the day before as afterwards they learned) missed the shippe, and ouershot her, and afterwards returning backe, hee found the ship at ancre, and nothing in her but the Russes that were left to keepe her, and then hee departed thence, and went to the Vchooge, and there staied. Presently vpon the comming of the Pauoses to the shippe, they vsed as much speede as might be, to get the goods out of the shippe into them, and after the goods were laden in, they tooke in also of the shippes Ordinance, furniture and prouision, as much as they coulde.

The 13. day in the morning Amos Riall was sent away in a small boate towards Astracan, to prouide victuals and carriages to relieue and helpe them, who coulde passe no further then the fourr Ilands, but was there ouertaken with yce, and forced to leaue his boate, and from thence passed poste to Astracan, finding at the Vchooge the Carpenter returned from his ill iourney, very ill handled with the extremitie of the colde. The same day they departed also in those lighters with the goods towards the Chetera Bougori, leauing the shippe at ancre, and in her two Russes, which with three more that went in the Pauoses, to prouide victuals for themselues and the rest, and there with promised to returne backe to the shippe with all speede, had offered to vndertake for twentie rubbles in money to carry the shippe into some harborowe, where shee might safely winter, or els to keepe her where shee rode all winter, which was promised to be giuen them if they did it: and the same day when with those lighters they had gotten sight of the 4. Ilands being about eight versts Southwest from them, the winde then at Northeast, did freese the sea so, as they could not rowe, guide, stirre or remoue the saide lighters, but as the winde and yce did force them; And so they continued driuing with the yce, Southeast into the sea by the space of fourtie houres, and then being the sixteene day the yce stoode. Whiles they droue with the yce the dangers which they incurred were great: for oftentimes when the yce with the force of winde and sea did breake, pieces of it were tossed and driuen one vpon another with great force, terrible to beholde, and the same happened at sometimes so neere vnto the lighters, that they expected it would haue ouerwhelmed them to their vtter destruction: but God who hath preserued them from many perils before, did also saue and deliuer them then.

Ice the 13. of Nouember in the mouth of the riuer of Volga.

The 16 day.

Within three or foure dayes after the first standing of the yce when it was firme and strong, they tooke out all their goods, being fourtie and eight bales or packes of rawe silke, &c. layde it on the yce, and couered the same with such prouisions as they had. Then for want of victuals, &c. they agreed to leaue all the good there vpon the yce, and to goe to the shoare: and thereupon brake vp their chests and Corobias, wherewith, and with such other things as they coulde gette, they made sleds for euery of them to drawe vpon the yce, whereon they layde their clothes to keepe them warme, and such victuals as they had, and such other thinges as they might conuiencly carry, and so they departed from the saide goods and Pauoses very early about one of the clocke in the morning, and trauayling on the yce, directed their way North, as neere as they could iudge, and the same day about two of the clocke in the after noone, they had sight of the Chetera Babbas (foure hillockes of Ilands so called:) vnto the same they directed themselues, and there remained that night.

Chetera Babas.

The goods and Pauoses which they left on the yce, they iudged to be from those Chetera Babas about 20. versts.

And the next morning departed thence Eastwardes, and came to the Chetera Bougories (or foure Ilands before spoken of) before noone, (the distance betweene those places is about fifteene versts) where they remained all that night, departing thence towards Astracan: the next morning very earely they lost their way through the perswasion of the Russes which were with them, taking to much towardes the left hande, (contrary to the opinion of Master Hudson:) Whereby wandering vpon the yce foure or fiue dayes, not knowing whether they were entred into the Crimme Tartars lande or not, at length it fortuned they mette with a way that had bene trauailed, which crosse backewardes towardes the Sea, that way they tooke, and following the same, within two dayes trauaile it brought them to a place called the Crasnoyare, (that is to say in the English tongue) redde cliffe, which diuers of the companie knewe.

There they remayned that night hauing nothing to eate but one loafe of bread which they happened to finde with the two Russes that were left in the shippe to keepe her all the winter (as is aforesaide) whome they chanced to meete going towards Astracan, about fiue miles before they came to the saide Crasnoyare, who certified them that the shippe was cut in pieces with the yce, and that they had hard scaping with their liues.

In the morning they departed earely from Crasnoyare towardes the Ouchooge, and about 9. of the clocke before noone, being within 10. verſts of the Vchooge, they mette Amos Riall, with the Carpenter, which he founde at Ouchooge, and a gunner newly come out of England, and alſo ſixtie and fiue horſes with ſo many Caſſacks to guide them, and 50. gunners for garde, which brought prouiſion of victuals, &c. And were ſent by the Duke to fetche the goods to Aſtracan. The meeting of that company was much ioy vnto them.

The Factors ſent backe with Amos Riall and the ſaide companie to fetche the goods, Thomas Hudſon, the maſter, Tobias Paris his mate, and ſo they the ſaide Factors, and their company marched on to the Vchooge, where they refreſhed themſelues that day, and the night following. And from thence proceeded on towards Aſtracan, where they arriued the laſt day of November.

December. Theſe that went for the goods after their departure from the Factors trauailed the ſame day vntill they came within 10. verſts of the Chetera Babas, where they reſted that night. The next morning by the breake of the day they departed thence, and before noone were at the Chetera Babas, where they ſtayed all night; But preſently departed thence Thomas Hudſon, with the Carpenter and gunner to ſeeke where the goods lay: who founde the ſame, and the next day they returned backe to their company, at the Chetera Babas, and declared vnto them in what ſort they had found the ſaid goods.

The 3. day early in the morning they departed all from the 4. Babas towards the ſaide goods, and the ſame day did lade all the goods they could finde vpon the ſaid ſleds, and with al conuenient ſpeede returned backe towardes Aſtracan. And when they came to the Chetera Bougori, where they reſted the night, in the morning very early before the breake of day, they were aſſaulted by a great companie of the Nagays Tartars horſemen, which came ſhouting and hallowing with a great noyſe, but our people were ſo inuironed with the ſleds, that they durſt not enter vpon them, but ranne by, and ſhotte their arrowes amongſt them, and hurt but one man in the head, who was a Ruſſe, and ſo departed preſently. Yet when it was day, they ſhewed themſelues a good diſtance off from our men, being a very great troupe of them, but did not aſſault them any more. The ſame day our men with thoſe cariages, departed from thence towards Aſtracan, where they arriued in ſafetie the 4. of December, about 3. of the clocke in the after noone: where our people greatly reioyced of their great good happe to haue eſcaped ſo many hard euents, trouble and miſeries as they did in that voyage, and had great cauſe therefore to praiſe the Almightie, who had ſo mercifully preſerued and deliuered them. They remained the winter at Aſtracan, where they found great fauour and friendſhip of the Duke, Captaine and other chiefe officers of that place: But that winter there happened no great matter worth the nothing.

Their returne to Aſtracan.

In the ſpring of the yeere 1581. about the mids of March the yce was broken vp, and cleane gone before Aſtracan, and the ninth of Aprill hauing all the goods that were returned from the parts of Media laden into a Strooge, the Factors, William Turnebull, Matthewe Taileboyes, Giles Crowe, Chriſtopher Burrough, Michael Lane, Laurence Prouſe gunner, Randolfe Foxe, Th. Hudſon, Tobias Parris, Morgan Hubblethorne the vier, Ric. the ſurgean, Rob. Golding, Iohn Smith, Edward Reding carpenter, and William Perrin gunner, Hauing alſo 40. Ruſſes, whereof 36. were Caſſacks to rowe, the reſt Marchants paſſengers, departed from Aſtracan with the ſaid Strooge and goods vp the Volga towards Yeraſlaue. They left behinde them at Aſtracan, with the Engliſh goods & Marchandiſe there remayning, Amos Rial, W. Wincol, and Richard Reſe, and appointed them to ſell & barter the ſame, or ſo much thereof as they could to the Tiſiks, if there came any thither that ſpring, and to others as they might, & the reſt with ſuch as they ſhould take in exchange to returne vp to Yeraſlaue that ſummer, when the Emperours carriage ſhould paſſe vp to the Volga. The 21. day they came with their Strooge to the Perauoloke, but made no ſtay at that place: for they had bene much troubled with yce in their comming from Aſtracan. The 3. of May about noone they came to Oneke, and from thence proceeding vp the riuer, on the 17. day William Turnebul departed from the Strooge in a ſmal boate, and went before towards Tetuſha to prouide victuals, and ſende downe to the Strooge from which place they were then about 130. verſts. The 23. day they mette a boate with victuals, which William Turnebull ſent from Tetuſha, and the ſame day they arriued with their Strooge at Tetuſha, where they ſtayed all night, and the next morning betimes departed thence, but W. Turnebull was gone in the ſmall boat before to Cazan, to prouide neceſſaries from thence, and to make way for their diſpatch. The 26. day they arriued with their Strooge at Cazan, where they remayned till the fourth of June: the Factors ſent Giles Crowe from Cazan to the Moſco, with their letters the 30. of May. The fourth day of June they departed from Cazan with their Strooge, and arriued at Yeraſlaue the 22. day about 5. of the clocke in the morning.

The 23. day they prouided Telegos, to carry the goods to Vologda: The 24. day hauing the the goods laden vpon Telegos, they departed with the ſame towards Vologhda, and remained there fiue verſtes from Yeraſlaue.

The 29. day, they came to Vologhda, with all their goods in ſafetie, and good order. The ſame 29. William Turnebull, and Peter Garrard, departed from Vologhda, poſt by water towards Colmogro: the third of July, hauing their goods laden in a ſmall Doſhenike, they departed with the ſame from Vologhda, towards Roſſe Iſland, by S. Nicholas, where they arriued in ſafetie the 16. of July, and founde there the Agents of Ruſſia, and in the Rode the ſhips ſent out of England, almoſt laden ready to depart.

The 25. day departed for England (out of the rode of S. Nicholas) the ſhippe Elizabeth.

The 26. day departed thence the Thomas Allen, and Marie Suſan, and in the Thomas Allen went William Turnbull, Matthew Tailboys, Thomas Hudſon, and others. The goods returned of the Perſia voyage, were laden into the ſhippe, William, and Iohn, whereof was Maſter William Bigat, and in her with the ſame goods, came Peter Garrard, and Tobias Parris.

The 11. of Auguſt, the ſame ſhippe being laden, and diſpatched, departed from the rode of S. Nicholas, and with her in companie another of the companies fraighted ſhips, called the Tomaſin, whereof was Maſter Chriſtopher Hal. In their returne homewards, they had ſome foule weather, and were ſeparated at the ſea, the William, and Iohn, put into Newcaſtle, the 24. of September: from whence the ſaid Peter Garrard, and Tobias Parris, came to London by lande, and brought newes of the arriuall of the ſhippe.

The 25. of September, both the ſaid ſhippes arriued at the port of London in ſafetie, and anchored before Limehouſe, and Wapping, where they were diſcharged. 1581.

Certaine

1 FOr that England hath the best wooll, and cloth of the world, and for that the cloches of the Realme haue no good vent, if good dying be not added: therefore it is much to be wished, that the dying of forren Countreies were seene, to the ende that the arte of dying may be brought into the Realme in greatest excellencie: for therof will follow honour to the Realme, and great and ample vent of our clothes: and of the vent of clothes, will followe the setting of our poore on worke, in all degrees of labour in clothing and dying: for which cause most principally, you are sent ouer, at the charge of the Citie: and therefore for the satisfying of the Lordes, and of the expectation of the Merchants, and of your companie, it behooues you to haue care to returne home, with more knowledge, then you carried out.

2 The great dearth of clothes is a great let in the ample vent of clothes, and the price of a cloth, for a fifth, sixth, and seuenth part riseth by the colour and dying: and therefore to deuise to dye as good colours with the one halfe of the present price, were to the great commoditie of the Realme, by sauing of great treasure in time to come. And therefore you must haue great care to haue knowledge of the materials of all the Countreies, that you shall passe through, that may be vsed in dying, be they hearbes, weedes, barkes, gummes, earths, or what els soeuer.

3 In Persia you shall finde carpets of course thrommed wooll, the best of the worlde, and excellently coloured: those Cities and Townes, you must repaire to, and you must vse meanes to learne all the order of the dying of those thrommes, which are so died, as neither raine, wine, nor yet vineger, can staine: and if you may attaine to that cunning, you shall not neede to learne dying of cloth. For if the colour holde in yarne, and thromme, it will holde much better in cloth.

4 For that in Persia, they haue great colouring of silkes, it behooues you to learne that also, for that clothe dying, and silke dying, haue a certaine affinitie, and your Merchants minde to bring much rawe silke into the Realme, and therefore it is more requisite you learne the same.

5 In Persia, there are that steine linnen clothe: it is not amisse you learne it, if you can: it hath bene an olde trade in England, whereof some excellent clothes yet remaine: but the arte is now lost, and not to be found in the Realme.

6 They haue a cunning in Persia, to make in Buskins of Spanish leather, flowers of many kindes in most liuely colours, and these the Courtiers doe weare there, to learne which arte were no harme.

7 If any Dier of China, or of the East partes of the world, be to be found in Persia, acquaint your selfe with him, and learne what you may of him.

8 You shall finde Anyle there, if you can procure the herbe, that it is made of either by seede, or by plant, to carry into England, you may doe well to endeuour to enrich your Countrey with the same: but withall learne you the making of the Anyle, and if you can get the hearbe, you may sende the same dryed into England, for possibly it groweth here already.

9 Returne home with you all the materials and substances, that they dye with all in Russia, and also in Persia, that your companie may see all.

10 In some litle pot in your lodging, I wish you to make daily trials in your arte, as you shall from time to time learne ought among them.

11 Set downe in writing, whatsoeuer you shall learne from day to day, least you should forget, or least God should call you to his mercie, and by each returne, I wish you sende in writing whatsoeuer you haue learned, or at the least keepe the same safe in your coffer, that come death, or life, your Countrey may enioy the thing that you goe for, and not lose the charge, and trauell bestowed in this case.

12 Learne you there to fire, and make sure the colour to be giuen by logge wood: so shall we not neede to buy oade so deere, to the enriching of our enemies.

13 Enquire of the price of Leckar, and of all other things belonging to dying.

14 In any wise set downe in writing a true note, from whence euery of them doe come, and where, and in what Countrey each of them doth growe. I meane where the naturall place of each of them is, as how neere to such a Citie, or to such a Sea, or to such a portable Riuer, in Russia, Persia, or els where.

15 If before your returne you could procure a singular good workeman, in the arte of Turkish carpet making, you should bring the arte into this Realme, and also thereby increase worke to your company.

Commission giuen by Sir Rowland Hayward, Knight, and George Barne, Aldermen and Gouernours of the company of English Merchants, for discouerie of newe trades, vnto Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, for a voyage by them to be made, for discouerie of Cathay, 1580. in forme following.

IN the name of God Almightie, and euerlasting, Amen. This writing for commission Tripartite, made the twentieth day of May, Anno Domini, 1580. and in the two and twentieth yeere of the raigne of our Soueraigne Ladie Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. Betweene Sir Rowland Hayward, Knight, & George Barne, Aldermen of the Citie of London, and Gouernours of the companie of English merchants, for discouerie of newe trades, for the behoofe, and in the name of the said companie, on the first partie, and Arthur Pet of Ratcliffe, in the Countie of Middlesex, Captaine, Master, and chiefe ruler of the good barke, called the George of London, of the burthen of 40. tunnes, or thereabouts, on the second partie, and Charles Iackman of Popler, in the saide Countie of Middlesex, Captaine, Master, and Ruler of the good barke, called the William of London, of the burthen of 20. tunnes, or thereabouts, (which barkes are nowe riding at anker in the riuer of Thames against Limehouse) on the third partie: witnesseth, that the said Gouernours, and companie, haue hired the said Arthur Pet, to serue in the said barke, called the George, with nine men and a boye: And likewise the said Charles Iackman, to serue in the said barke, called the William, with fiue men and a boye, for a voyage by them to be made by Gods grace, for search and discoueries of a passage by sea from hence by Boroughs streights, and the Iland Vaigats, Eastwards, to the countries or dominion of the mightie Prince, the Emperour of Cathay, and in the same vnto the cities Cambalu, and Quinsay, or to either of them.

The which passage (vpon authoritie of writers, and great reason) is conceaued to be from the Vaigats Eastwards according to the description in plat of spirall lines, made by master William Borough, whereof either of the said Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, haue one deliuered vnto them and also one other sailing carde, and a blanke plat for either of them. But if it should not be in all points, according to that description, yet we hope, that the continent or firme land of Asia, doth not stretch it selfe so farre Northwards, but that there may be found a sea passeable by it, betweene the latitude of 70. and 80. degrees. And therefore we haue appointed you with these two barkes, to make triall of the same: wishing you both to ioyne in friendship together, as most deere friendes, and brothers, to all purposes and effects, to the furtherance and orderly performing of the same voyage. And likewise order your companies, that they of the one barke may haue such loue and care, to helpe and succour them of the other, as most deere friendes and brothers would doe: so as it may appeare, that though they be two barkes, and two companies, (which is so appointed for your greater comfort and assurance) yet that you are wholy of one minde, and bende your selues to the vttermost of your powers, to performe the thing that you are both employed for.

Doe you obserue good order in your daily seruice, and pray vnto God, so shall you prosper the better.

We would haue you to meete often together, to talke, conferre, consult, and agree howe, and by what meanes you may best performe this purposed voyage, according to our intents. And at such meeting, we thinke it requisite, that you call vnto you your mates, and also Nicholas Chanceler, (whome we doe appoint as merchant, to keepe accompt of the merchandize you shall buy, or sell, barter, or exchange) to the ende, that whatsoeuer God should dispose of either of you, yet they may haue some instructions and knowledge howe to deale in your place or places. And of all your assemblies and consultations together, and the substance of matter you shall at euery time agree vpon, we would haue you to note them in the paper bookes that we giue you for that purpose, vnto each barke one. We doe appoint Arthur Pet in the George, as Admirall, to weare the flagge in the maine top, and Charles Iackman in the William, as Vice admiral. For good orders to be taken for your good and orderly keeping of companie together, which we wish may be such, as you should neuer lose sight the one of the other, except by both your consents, to discouer about an Iland, or in some some riuer, when and where you may certainly appoint to meete together againe, we referre the same to your good discretions.

And nowe for your good direction in this voyage, we would haue you with the next good wind and weather, that God shall send thereunto meete and conuenient, after the 22. day of this present moneth of May, saile from this riuer of Thames, to the coast of Finmarke, to the North Cape there, or to the Wardhouse, and from thence direct your course to haue sight of Willoughbies land, and from it passe alongst to the Noua Zemla, keeping the same lands alwaies in your sight on your larboordsides (if conueniently you may) to the ende you may discouer, whether the same Willoughbies land be continent and firme land, with Noua Zemla, or not: notwithstanding wee would not haue you to entangle your selues in any Baye, or otherwise, so as it might hinder your speedie proceeding to the Island Vaigats.

And when you come to Vaigats, we would haue you to get sight of the maine land of Samoeda, which is ouer against the South part of the same Island, and from thence with Gods permission, to passe Eastwards alongst the same coast, keeping it alwaies in your sight (if conueniently you may) vntill you come to the mouth of the riuer Ob, and when you come vnto it, passe ouer the saide riuers mouth vnto the border of land, on the East side of the same (without any staye to be made for searching inwardly in the same riuer) and being in sight of the same Easterly land, doe you in Gods name proceede alongst by it, from thence Eastwards, keeping the same alwaies on your starboordside in sight, if you may, and followe the tracte of it, whether it incline Southerly or Northerly (as at times it may doe both) vntill you come to the Countrey of Cathay, or the dominion of that mightie Emperour.

And if God prosper your voyage, with such good successe, that you may attaine to the same, doe you seeke by all meanes you can, to arriue to the Cities Cambalu, and Quinsay, or to the one of them. But if it happen that you can not conueniently come to either of those places, or shall be driuen to remaine a winter in some other port or place of his dominion, do you seeke by al meanes possible to winne fauour and liking of the people, by gifts and friendly demeanes towards them, and not to offer violence, or doe wrong to any people or nation whatsoeuer, but therein to bee innocent as doues, yet wilie as serpents, to auoid mischiefe, and defend you from hurt. And when you shall haue gotten friendship through your discreete ordring of your selues, towards the people, doe you learne of them what you can of their Prince, and shewe them one of the Queenes Maiesties letters, which she sendeth with you (by either of you one, made of one substance and effect, for each of you particularly) written in Latine, whereunto her Maiestie hath subscribed, and caused her signet seale to be set, the effect of the same letters you haue also written in English, for your owne vnderstanding thereof.

The same her Maiesties letters, you shall procure to deliuer vnto the same mightie Prince, or Gouernour, with some present to be giuen such as you shall thinke meete, and conuenient, vsing your selues in all pointes according to the effect of the same letters, and procure againe from the same Prince, his letters accordingly.

And if God so prosper your voyage that you may this summer passe the Streights, and compasse about the Northermost land of Asia, vnto the Countrey of Cathay, or dominion of that mightie Prince, and wintering in it, may obtaine from him his letters of priuiledge against the next peeres spring, you may then after your first setting foorth, search and discouer some what further then you had discouered before your wintering, so farre as you shall thinke conuenient, with regard had, and alwaies prouided, that you may returne home hither, to giue vs aduice of your proceedings the same summer, or before the sharpenes or extremitie of winter ouertake you.

And if it happen you cannot this summer attaine to the border of Cathaye, and yet finde the land beyond the Ob, to stretch it selfe Easterly, with the sea adioyning vnto it nauigable, doe you then proceede on your discouerie (as before said) alongst the same continent, so farre as you can this summer, hauing care in the trauel to find out some conuenient harborow and place, where you may winter: and when you thinke it conuenient, put your selfe to wintering, where if you happen to finde people, you shall deale with them, as we haue before aduised you to doe with the people of Cathay, &c. And if you can learne that they haue a Prince or chiefe Gouernour, doe you procure to deliuer vnto the same Prince or gouernour, one of the Queenes Maiesties letters, as before said, and seeke to obtaine againe his letters accordingly, if you so happen to winter and obteine letters of priuiledge, finding the countrey and people, with the commodities to be such, that by vsing trade thither with the people, & for the cõmodities, it may be beneficiall vnto vs (as we hope you may) the same will be some good liking vnto vs: notwithstanding we would haue you the next summer (by the grace of God) at your first setting out of your wintering harborough, proceede alongst the that tracte of land to Cathay, if you ſee likelihoode to paſſe it (for that is the Countrey that wee chiefly deſire to diſcouer) and ſeeing you are fully victualed for two yeeres and vpwards, which you may very well make to ſerue you for two yeeres and a halfe, though you finde no other helpe, you may therefore be the bolder to aduenture in proceeding vpon your diſcouerie: which if you do, we doubt not, but you ſhall atchieue the Countrey of Cathay, and deliuer to the Prince there, one of her Maieſties letters, bringing from thence the ſame Princes letters anſwerable: & ſo in the yeere of our Lord, 1582. returne home with good newes, and glad tidings, not onely vnto vs the aduenturers in this voyage, but alſo to our whole Countrey, and nation, which God grant you may doe, Amen.

But if it happen that the land of Aſia from beyond the riuer Ob, extend it ſelfe Northwards to 80. degrees, or neerer the poole, whereby you finde it to leade you into that extremitie, that ſmall, or no hope may be looked for, to ſaile that waies to Cathay, doe you notwithſtanding followe the tracte of the ſame land, as farre as you can diſcouer this ſummer, hauing care to finde out by the way a conuenient place for you to winter in, the which (if you may diſcouer the ſame lande of Aſia this ſummer to extend it ſelfe to 80. degrees of latitude, and vpwards, or to 85. degrees) we wiſh then that the ſame your wintring place may be in the riuer of Ob, or as neere the ſame riuer as you can, and finding in ſuch wintering place people, be they Samoeds, Yowgorians, or Molgomzes, &c. do you gently entreat with them as aforeſaid, & if you can learne þ they haue a prince or chiefe Gouernour amongſt them, doe you deliuer him one of her Maieſties letters, and procure thereof anſwere accordingly: doe you procure to barter and exchange with the people, of the merchandiſe and commodities that you ſhall carie with you, for ſuch commodities as you ſhall finde them to haue, &c.

If you ſo happen to winter, we would haue you the next ſummer, to diſcouer into the riuer Ob, ſo farre as conueniently you may: And if you ſhall finde the ſame riuer (which is reported to be wide or broade) to be alſo nauigable and pleaſant for you, to trauell farre into, happely you may come to the Citie Siberia, or to ſome other towne or place, habited vpon or neere the border of it, and thereby haue liking to winter out the ſecond winter: vſe you therein your diſcretions.

But if you finde the ſaid riuer Ob, to be ſholde, or not ſuch as you may conueniently trauell in with your barkes, doe you then the next ſummer returne backe through Boroughs ſtreights: And from that part of Noua Zembla, adioyning to the ſame ſtreights, doe you come alongſt the tracke of that coaſt Weſtwards, keeping it on the ſtarboord ſide, and the ſame alwaies in ſight, if conueniently you may, vntill you come to Willoughbies land, if outwards bound, you ſhall not happen to diſcouer and trie whether the ſaid Willoughbies lande ioyne continent with the ſame Noua Zembla, or not. But if you ſhall then proue them to be one firme and continent, you may from Noua Zembla direct your courſe vnto the ſaid Willoughbies land, as you ſhall thinke good, and as you may moſt conuenently: and from Willoughbies land, you ſhall proceede Weſtwards alongſt the tract of it, (though it incline Northerly) euen ſo farre as you may or can trauell, hauing regard that in conuenient time you may returne home hither to London for wintering.

And for your orderly paſſing in this voyage, and making obſeruations in the ſame, we referre you to the inſtructions giuen by Maſter William Borough, whereof one copie is annexed vnto the firſt part of this indenture, vnder our ſeale, for you Arthur Pet, an other copie of it is annexed to the ſecond part of this indenture, vnder our ſeale alſo, for you Charles Iackman, and a third copie thereof is annexed vnto the third part of this indenture, remaining with vs the ſaid companie, ſealed and ſubſcribed by the ſaid Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman.

And to the obſeruing of all things contained in this commiſſion. (ſo neere as God will permit me grace thereunto) I the ſaid Arthur Pet, doe couenant by theſe preſents, to perfoorme them, and euery part and parcell thereof. And I the ſaid Charles Iackman, doe for my part likewiſe couenant by theſe preſents to perfoorme the ſame, and euery part thereof, ſo neere as God will giue me grace thereunto.

And in witnes therof, theſe indentures were ſealed and deliuered accordingly, the day and yeere firſt aboue written. Thus the Lord God Almightie ſend you a proſperous voyage, with happie ſucceſſe, and ſafe returne, Amen.

Inſtructions

Instructions and notes very necessarie and needefull to be ob. serued, in the purposed voyage for discouerie of Cathay Eastwards, by Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman.

WHen you come to Orfordnesse, (if the winde doe serue you to goe a seaboord the sands) doe you set off from thence, and note the time diligently of your being against the said Nesse, turning then your glasse, whereby you intend to keepe your continuall watch, and appoint such course as you shall thinke good, according as the wind serueth you: and from that time forwards continually (if your ship be lose, vnder saile, a hull or trie) do you at the ende of euery 4. glasses at the least (except calme) sound with your dipsin lead, and note diligently what depth you finde, and also the ground. But if it happen by swiftnes of the shippes way, or otherwise, that you can not get ground, yet note what depth you did proue, and could finde no ground (this note is to be obserued all your voyage, as well outwards as homewards.) But when you come vpon any coast, or doe finde any sholde banke in the sea, you are then to vse your leade oftener, as you shall thinke it requisite, noting diligently the order of your depth, and the deeping and sholding. And so likewise doe you note the depthes into harboroughs, riuers, &c.

How to note downe in his Iornall of the voyage, his dead reckoning, and other obseruations.

And in keeping your dead reckoning, it is very necessarie that you doe note at the ende of euery 4. glasses, what way the shippe hath made (by your best proofes to be vsed) and howe her way hath bene through the water, considering withall for the sagge of the sea, to leewards, accordingly as you shall finde it growen: and also to note the depth, and what thinges worth the noting, happened in that time, with also the winde vpon what point you finde it then, and of what force, or strength it is, and what sailes you beare.

But if you should omit to note those things at the ende of euery 4. glasses, I would not haue you to let it slippe any longer time, then to note it diligently at the ende of euery watch, or 8. glasses at the farthest.

Doe you diligently obserue the latitude as often, and in as many places as you may possible, and also the variation of the compasse (especially when you may be at shoare vpon any lande) noting the same obseruations truely, and the place and places where, and the time and times when you doe the same.

For noting the shape and view of the land at first discouerie, &c.

When you come to haue sight of any coast or land whatsoeuer, doe you presently set the same with your sailing compasse, how it beares off you, noting your iudgement howe farre you thinke it from you, drawing also the forme of it in your booke, howe it appeares vnto you, noting diligently howe the highest, or notablest part thereof beareth off you, and the extreames also in sight of the same land at both endes, distinguishing them by letters, A. B. C. &c. Afterwards when you haue sailed 1. 2. 3. or 4. glasses (at the most) noting diligently what way you barke hath made, and vpon what point of the compasse doe you againe set that first land seene, or the partes thereof, that you first obserued, if you can well perceaue or discerne them, and likewise such other notable pointes or signes, vpon the land that you may then see, and could not perceaue at the first time, distinguishing it also by letters from the other, and drawing in your booke the shape of the same land, as it appeareth vnto you, and so the third time, &c.

And also in passing alongst by any and euery coast, doe you drawe the manner of biting in of euery Baye, and entrance of euery harborough or riuers mouth, with the lying out of euery point, or headland, (vnto the which you may giue apt names at your pleasure) and make some marke in drawing the forme and border of the same, where the high cliffs are, and where lowe lande is, whether sande, hils, or woods, or whatsoeuer, not omitting to note any thing that may be sensible and apparant to you, which may serue to any good purpose. If you carefully with great heede and diligence, note the obseruations in your booke, as aforesaid, and afterwards make demonstration thereof in your plat, you shall thereby perceaue how farre the land you first sawe, or the partes thereof obserued, was then from you, and consequently of all the rest: and also how farre the one part was from the other, and vpon what course or point of the compasse the one lieth from the other.

For obseruing of tides and currants.

And when you come vpon any coast where you find floods and ebs, doe you diligently note the time of the highest and lowest water in euery place, and the slake or still water of full sea, & lowe water, and also which way the flood doth runne, howe the tides doe set, howe much water it high, and what force the tide hath to driue a shippe in one howre, or in the whole tide, as neere as you can iudge it, and what difference in time you finde betweene the running of the floode, and the ebbe. And if you finde vpon any coast the currant to runne alwaies one way, doe you also note the same duely, duly how it setteth in euery place, and obserue what force it hath to driue a shippe in one houre, &c.

Item, as often, and when as you may conueniently come vpon any land, to make obseruation for the latitude and variation, &c. do port also (if you may) with your instrument, for trying of distances, obserue the plat-forme of the place, and of as many things (worth the noting) as you may then conueniently see from time to time. These orders if you diligently obserue, you may thereby perfectly set downe in the plats, that I haue giuen you your whole trauell and description of your discouery, which is a thing that will be chiefly expected at your hands. But withall you may not forget to note as much as you can learne, vnderstande or perceiue, of the manner of the soile, or fruitfulnesse of euery place and country you shall come in, and of the maner, shape, attire and disposition of the people, and of the commodities they haue, and what they most couet and desire of the commodities you carrie with you. It behoueth you to giue trifling things vnto such people as you shall happen to see, and to offer them all curtesie and friendshippe you may or can, to winne their loue and fauour towards you, not doing or offering them any wrong or hurt. And though you should be offered wrong at their hands, yet not to reuenge the same lightly, but by all meanes possible seeke to winne them, yet alwayes dealing wisely and with such circumspection that you keepe your selues out of their dangers.

To take the plat-formes of places within compasse of view vpon land.

Thus I beseech God almighty to blesse you, and prosper your voyage with good and happie successe, and send you safely to returne home againe, to the great ioy and reioycing of the aduenturers with you, and of all your friends, and our whole countrie. Amen.

By M. W. Burrough.

Certaine briefe aduises, giuen by Master Dee, to Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman, to be obserued in their Northeasterne discouerie, Anno 1580.

IF we reckon from Wardhouse to Colgoieue Iland 400 miles for almost 20 degrees difference onely of longitude very neere East & West, and about the latitude of 70 degrees and two third parts: From Colgoieue to Vaigats 200 miles for 10 degrees difference, only in longitude, at 70 degrees of latitude also: Frō Vaigats to the Promontorie Tabin 60 degrees difference of longitude (the whole course, or shortest distance being East and West) in the latitude likewise of 70 degrees, maketh 1200 miles: then is summa totalis frō Wardhouse to Tabin 600 leagues, or 1800 English miles. Therefore allowing in a discouery voyage for one day with another but 50 English miles, it is euident that from Wardhouse to Tabin, the course may be sailed easily in five and thirty dayes: but by Gods helpe it may be finished in much shorter time, both by helpe of wind prosperous, and light continuall for the time requisit thereunto.

When you are past Tabin, or come to the longitude of 142 degrees, as your chart sheweth, or two, three, foure, or fiue degrees further Easterly, it is probable you shall finde the land on your right hand runne much Southerly and East ward, in which course you are like either to fall into the mouth of the famous riuer Oechardes, or some other, which yet I coniecture to passe by the renowned citie of Cambalu, and the mouth to be in latitude about 50 or 52 degrees, and within 300 or 400 miles of Cambalu it selfe, being in the latitude about 45 degrees Southerly of the said riuers mouth, or els that you shall trend about the very Northerne and most Easterly point of all Asia, passing by the prouince Ania, and then in the latitude of 46 degrees, keeping still the land in view on your right hand (as neere as you may with safety) you may enter into Quinsay hauen being the chiefe city in the Northeren China, as I terme it for distinction sake, from the other better knowen.

M. Dee gaue them a chart of his owne making, which heere he refers them vnto.

And in or about either or both of these two warme places, you may to great good purpose be occupied the whole winter, after your arriuall in those quarters, as sometime by sea, sometime in notable fresh riuers, sometime in discreet view and noting downe the situation of the cities within land, &c. and euer assaying to come by some charts or mappes of the country, made and printed in Cathay or China, and by some of their bookes likewise for language, &c. You may also haue opportunity to saile ouer to Iapan Iland, where you shall finde Christian men, Iesuits, of many countries of Christendome some, and perhaps some Englishmen, at whose hands you may haue great instruction and aduise for your affayres in hand.

Notes in writing, besides more priuie by mouth, that were giuen by M. Richard Hakluyt, of Eiton in the countie of Hereford, Esquire, Anno 1580: To M. Arthur Pet, and to M. Charles Iackman, sent by the merchants of the Moscouie companie for the discouerie of the North-east straight, not altogether vnfit for some other enterprises of discouerie, hereafter to be taken in hand.

What respect of Islands is to be had, and why.

WHeras the Portingalles haue in their course to their Indies in the Southrall, certaine ports and fortifications to thrust into by the way, to diuers great purposes: so you are to see what Islandes, and what portes you had need to haue by the way in your course to the Northeast. For which cause I wish you to enter into consideration of the matter, & to note all the Islands, and to set them downe in plat, to two ends: that is to say, That we may deuise to take the benefit by them, And also foresee how by them the Sauages or ciuill Princes may in any sort annoy vs in our purposed trade that way.

And for that the people to the which we purpose in this voyage to go, be no Christians, it were good that the masse of our commodities were alwayes in our owne disposition, and not at the will of others. Therefore it were good that we did seeke out some small Island in the Scithian sea, where we might plant, fortifie, and staple safely, from whence (as time should serue) we might feed those heathen nations with our commodities without cloying them, or without venturing our whole masse in the bowels of their countrey.

And to which Island (if ueed were, & if we should thinke so good) we might allure the Northeast nauie, the nauie of Cambalu to resort with their commodities to vs there planted, & stapling there.

And if such an Island might be found so standing as might shorten our course, and so standing, as that the nauie of Cambalu, or other those parties might conueniently saile vnto without their dislike in respect of distance, then would it fall out well. For so, besides lesse danger, and more safetie, our ships might there vnlade and lade againe, and returne the selfe same summer to the ports of England or of Norway.

And if such an Island may be for the stapling of our commodities, to the which they of Cambalu would not saile, yet we might, hauing shippes there, imploy them in passing betweene Cambalu and that stapling place.

Respect of hauens and harbarowes.

AND if no such Islands may be found in the Scithian sea toward the firme of Asia, then may you to search out the ports that be about Noua Zembla, all along the tract of that land, to the end you may winter there the first yeere, if you be let by contrarie windes, and to the end that we may in short time come into Cambalu, and vnlade and set saile againe for returne without venturing, there at Cambalu, that you may on your way come as farre in returne as a port about Noua Zembla: that the summer following, you may the sooner be in England for the more speedy vent of your East commodities, and for the speedyer discharge of your mariners: if you can not go forward and backe in one selfe same summer.

And touching the tract of the land of Noua Zembla, toward the East out of the circle Arctic in the more temperate zone, you are to haue regard: for if you finde the soile planted with people, it is like that in time an ample vent of our warme woollen clothes may be found. And if there be no people at all there to be found, then you shall speciallie note what plentie of whales, and of other fish is to be found there, to the end we may turne our new found land fishing or Island fishing or our whalefishing that way, for the ayd and comfort of our new trades to the Northeast to the coasts of Asia.

Respect of fish and certaine other things.

AND if the ayre may be found vpon that tract temperate, and the soile yeelding wood, warrland and grasse, and the seas fish, then we may plant on that maine the offals of our people, as the Portingalles do in Brasill, & so they may in our fishing in our passage, and diuers wayes yeeld commoditie to England by harbouring and victualling vs.

And

And it may be, that the inland there may yeeld masts, pitch, tarre, hempe, and all things for the nauie, as plentifully as Estland doth.

The Islands to be noted with their commodities and wants.

TO note the Islands, whether they be hie land or low land, mountaine, or flat, grauelly, clay, chalkie, or of what soile, woody or not woody, with springs and riuers or not, and what wilde beasts they haue in the same.

And whether there seeme to be in the same apt matter to build withall, as stone free or rough, and stone to make lime withall, and wood or coale to burne the same withall.

To note the goodnesse or the badnesse of the hauens and harborowes in the Islands.

If a straight be found what is to be done, and what great importance it may be of.

AND if there be a straight in the passage into the Scithian seas, the same is specially and with great regard to be noted, especially if the same straight be narrow and to be kept. I say it is to be noted as a thing that doth much import: for what prince soeuer shall be Lord of the same, & shall possesse the same, as the king of Denmarke doth possesse the straight of Denmarke, he onely shall haue the trade out of these regions into the Northeast parts of the world for himselfe, and for his priuate profit, or for his subiects only, or to enioy woonderfull benefit of the toll of the same, like as the king of Denmarke doth enioy of his straightes, by suffering the merchantes of other Princes to passe that way. If any such straight be found, the elcuation, the high or lowe land, the hauens neere, the length of the straightes, and all other such circumstances are to be set downe for many purposes: and all the mariners in the voyage are to be sworne to keepe close all such things, that other Princes preuent vs not of the same, after our returne vpon the disclosing of the mariners, if any such thing should hap.

Which way the Sauage may be made able to purchase our cloth and other their wants.

IF you finde any Island or maine land populous, and that the same people hath neede of cloth, then are you to deuise what commodities they haue to purchase the same withall.

If they be poore, then are you to consider of the soile, and how by any possibilitie the same may be made to inrich them, that hereafter they may haue something to purchase the cloth withall.

If you enter into any maine by portable riuer, and shall finde any great woods, you are to note what kinde of timber they be of: that we may know whether they are for pitch, tarre, masts, dealeboord, clapboord, or for building of ships or houses, for so if the people haue no vse of them they may be bought perhaps to vse.

Not to venture the losse of any one man.

YOu must haue great care to preserue your people, since your number is so small, and not to venture any one man in any wise.

To bring home besides merchandize certaine trifles.

BRing home with you (if you may) from Cambalu, or other ciuil place, one or other young man, although you leaue one for him.

Also the fruites of the countries, if they will not of themselues dure, vse them, and so preserue them.

And bring with you the cornels of peares and apples, and the stones of such stone fruits as you shall finde there.

Also the seeds of all strange herbs and flowres, for such seeds of fruits and herbs comming from another part of the world, and so farre off, will delight the fancie of many, for the strangenesse & for that the same may grow and continue the delight long time.

The discouerie made by M. Arthur Pet, and M. Charles Iackman, of the Northeast parts, beyond the Island of Vaigats, with two Barkes: the one called the George, the other the William, in the yeere 1580.

Written by Hugh Smith.

May. Vpon Munday the 30. of May, we departed from Harwich in the afternoone, the wind being at South, and to the Eastward. The ebbe being spent we could not double the poole, and therefore were constrained to put in againe vntill the next day in the morning, being the last of May: which day wee waied our ankers about 3. a clocke in the morning, the wind being West southwest. The same day we passed Orfordnesse at an East Sunne, and Stamford at a West Sunne, and Yarmouth at a West northwest sunne, and so to Winterton where we did anker all night: it was then calme, and the flood was come.

June. The next day being the first of June, we set saile at 3. a clock in the morning, and set our course North, the wind at the Southwest, and at Southsouthwest.

The 2. day of June by my dead reckoning, I was 40. leagues from Winterton due North.

The 3. day the wind was at the West southwest, and at 12. a clocke by my reckoning I was 70. leagues North from Winterton. The same day I did obserue the sunne, where I found the pole to be eleuated aboue the Horizon, 56. deg. 70. minutes. This day in the afternoone at 6. of the clocke the wind came to the South and by West with a very good gale.

The 4. day about 6. of the clocke in the morning, the winde came to the Southeast with raine and foule weather, and after to the East southeast, the same night it brake vp very faire weather.

The 5. day in the morning at 4. or 5. of the clocke, the wind came into the West northwest, and to the Northwest: the same day I did find the pole to bee eleuated 58. deg. 23. minutes. This day about 3. in the afternoone, the wind with a faire and gentle gale came to the South, and so did continue till the next day in the morning.

The 6. day about 5. in the morning, the wind came to the Southeast, and to the East southeast, with a very cruell storme all the same day. And about 3. in the afternoone we lost the company of the William, in the night the weather came very faire.

The 7. day was faire, the wind being at South by East. This day I did find the pole to be eleuated, 60. deg. 58. minutes: this day and all night it was very calme.

The 8. day at 10. of the clocke, the wind came to the Southwest for the space of 2. howers, & then grew calme for 3. howers. Then the winde came to the North, and to North northeast, and so did continue vntill the next day.

The 9. day the wind being at the North northeast, we did lie East and by North.

The 10. day about one of the clocke in the afternoone, we put into Norway to a place where one of the headlands of the sound is called Bottel: the other headland is called Boile. There is also an Island called Kene. Here I did find the pole to be eleuated 62. deg. it doeth flowe there South, and it hieth 7. or 8. foote not aboute.

Kene an Island of Norway.

The 11. day in the morning the wind came to the South & to the Southeast: the same day at 6. in the afternoone we set saile, & bare along the coast: it was very foule weather with raine & fog.

The

The 12. day about 8. in the morning, the wind came to the Southwest, and to the West southwest, and so did continue the same night.

The 13. day I did find the pole to be eleuated, 64. degrees, 3. minutes. The same day the winde was at West southwest.

The 14. day the wind came to the Southwest about 12. of the clocke with raine and fogge.

The 15. day the wind Southwest, and this day I found the pole eleuated, 66. deg. 50. minutes, in the after noone we had very much raine, and fowle weather.

The 16. day we did fall with Faire Nesse.

The 17. day the wind came to the South, and to the South Southeast with raine and fogge. We ranne along the coast North northeast, and by North.

This day in the afternoone the wind came North with very much wind, and we did lie a head for the space of 8. howers.

The 18. day about 5. in the morning, the wind came to the West and by North, and to the West and then we set saile, and set our course Northeast. This day we did find the pole eleuated, 69. deg. 36. minutes.

The 19. day the wind at West, and West and by North, faire weather with some showers, wee hald along the coast Northeast, and Northeast and by East, and East northeast.

The 20. day we had very faire weather, the wind at South, and South by East. so that we hald along the coast East & by North, the weather was very close, so that we could not obserue ỳ sunne.

The 21. day was very calme till about 11. of the clocke, at which time the wind came West and West southwest, with some raine, the same night was faire.

The 22. day the wind being at West, we did hall the coast East northeast, and East. The same day at 6. in the morning, we did double the north Cape. About 3. in the afternoone we past Skites beare nesse, and hald along the coast East, and East southeast, and all the same night wee halled Southeast, and Southeast by East. The north Cape doubled.

The 23. day about 3. in the morning we came to Wardhouse, the wind at the Northwest. The cause of our comming in, was to seeke the William, whose companie we lost the 6. day of this moneth, and to send letters into England. About one of the clocke in the afternoone the William also came into Wardhouse to vs in good safetie, and all her company in good health. Wardhouse.

The 24. the wind came to the East northeast. This day the William was hald a ground, because she was some what leake, and to mend her steerage. This night about 12. of the clocke, shee did hale a flote againe.

The 25. day the wind was at East northeast.

The 26. day the Tobie of Harwich departed from Wardhouse for London, Thomas Greene being master, to whom we deliuered our letters.

The 27. day the wind was at South southeast, and the 28. also.

The 29. day about 6. in the afternoone, the wind came to the West northwest for the space of one hower, and presently to the East againe, and so was variable all the same night,

The 30. about sixe in the morning, the wind came to East southeast, and continued so all the same day.

The first of July about 5. in the afternoone, the wind was at North northwest: and about 7. of the clocke we set saile from Wardhouse East and by South. July.

The second day about 5. in the morning, the wind was East, and East southeast, and we did lie to the shoreward. And about 10. in the morning, the wind came to South southeast, and we laid it to the Eastward: sometime we lay East by South, sometime East southeast, and sometimes East by North. About 5. in the afternoone we bare with the William, who was willing to goe with Kegor, because we thought her to bee out of trim, and sailed very ill, where we might mend her steerage: whereupon master Pet not willing to goe into harborough, said to master Iackman, that if he thought himselfe not able to keepe the sea, he should doe as he thought best, and that he in the meane time would beare with Willoughbies land, for that it was a parcell of our direction, and would meet him at Veroue Ostroue, or Vaigats, and so we set our course East northeast, the wind being at Southeast. Willoughbies land.

The 3. day the wind at Southeast we found the pole to be eleuated 70. degrees, 46. minutes. The same night at 12. of the clocke we sounded, but had no ground, in 120. fadomes, being fiftie leagues from the one side by our reckoning East northeast from Kegor. 50. leagues from Kegor.

The 4. day all the morning was calme. This day we found the pole to be eleuated, 71. degrees 38. minutes. This day at 9. in the afternoone the wind at Northeast with a gentle gale, wee hald along Southeast by East.

The

The 5. day the wind at Northwest, we hald East and East by South: this day we saw land, but we could not make it, the wind being Northerly, so that we could not come neere to it.

The 6. day about 2. in the afternoone, the wind at North northwest, we hald East southeast with a faire and gentle gale: this day we met with ice. About 6. in the afternoone it became calme: we with saile and oares laid it to the Northeast part, hoping that way to cleare vs of it: for that way we did see the head part of it, as we thought. Which done, about 12. of the clocke at night wee do thinke it to be ice of the baie of S. Nicholas, but it was not as we found afterwards.

A sight of perfect land.

The 7. day we met with more ice, at the East part of the other ice: we hald a long a weather the ice to finde some ende thereof by East northeast. This day there appeared more land North from vs being perfect land: the ice was betweene vs and it, so that wee could not come neere to it.

The same morning at sixe of the clocke, we put into the ice to find some way through it, we continued in it all the same day and all the night, following the winde by the North Northwest. Wee were constrained to goe many pointes of our compasse, but wee went most an Eastlie course.

The eight day the wind at North northwest, wee continued our course, and at fiue in the morning we sounded, and had 90. fadoms red oase. This day at 4. in the afternoone wee sounded againe, & had 84. fadomes ose, as before. At sixe in the afternoone wee cleared our selues of the ice, and hald along Southeast by South: we sounded againe at 10. a clocke at night, and had 43. fadoms sandie oase.

The 9. day at two in the morning, we sounded agayne, and had 45. fadomes, then there appeared a shadow of land to vs East Northeast, and so we tanne with it the space of two howers, and then perceiuing that it was but fogge, we hald along Southeast.

This day at 2. in the afternoone we sounded and had 50. fadomes blacke oase. Our latitude was 70. degrees 3. minutes. At ten a clocke at night we sounded againe, and had fiftie fadoms blacke oase.

The tenth day the wind being at North northwest, we hailed East and by North, which course we set, because at ten of the clocke afore noone we did see land, and then wee sounded hauing 35. fadomes blacke oase. All this day there was a great fogge, so that wee durst not beare with the land to make it, and so we kept an outwardly course. This day at 6. in the afternoone wee espied land, wherewith we hailed, and then it grew calme: we sounded and had 120. fadoms blacke oase: and then we sent our boat a land to sound and prooue the land. The same night we came with our ship within an Island, where we rode all the same night. The same night wee went into a bait to ride neere the land for wood and water.

An Island.

The 11. day the wind came to the East southeast: this day about a league from vs to the Eastwards, we saw a very faire sound or riuer that past very farre into the countrey with 2. or 3. branches with an Island in the midst.

The maine land.

The 12. of July the wind was East Southeast. This day about 11. a clocke in the morning, there came a great white beare downe to the water side, and tooke the water of his owne armes, we chased him with our boate, but for all that we could doe, he got to land and escaped from vs, where we named the baie Bearebaie. This day at 7. in the afternoone we set saile, for wee had good hope that the wind would come Westerly, and with saile and oares we gate the sea. All the night it was calme with fogge.

Beare baie.

The 13. day in the morning the wind was very variable with fogge, and as it cleared vp we met with great store of ice, which at the first shewed like land. This ice did vs much trouble, and the more because of the fogge which continued in this ice vntill the 14. day, 12. of the clocke.

The 14. day in the morning we were imbaied with ice, that we were constrained to come out as we went in, which was by great good fortune, or rather by the goodnesse of God, otherwise it had bene impossible, and at 12. of the clocke we were cleare of it, the wind being at South and South by West. The same day we found the pole to be eleuated, 70. degrees, 26. minutes: we lay aboard the coast Northwest, thinking it to be an Island, but finding no end in rowing so long, wee supposed it to be the maine of Noua Zembla. About 2. in the afternoone wee laid it to the Southward to double the ice, which we could not doe vpon that boord, so that wee cast about againe and lay West along vnder the ice. About 7. in the afternoone we got about the greatest part thereof. About 11. a clocke at night we brought the ice Southeast of vs, and thus we were rid of this trouble at this time.

The 15. day about 3. in the morning, the wind was at South southwest: we cast about and lay to the Eastwards, the wind did Wester, so that we lay South southwest with a flawne sheet, and so we ran all the same day. About 8. in the after noone we sounded, and had 23. fadoms small grey sand. This night at twelue of the clocke we sounded againe, and had 29. fadomes sand, as afore.

an

The 16. day vnto 3. in the morning we held along East Southeast, where we found 18. fadoms red sand, then we held along Northeast. In these soundings wee had many ouerfals. This day at 10. of the clocke wee met with more ice, which was very great, so that wee could not tell which way to get cleare of it. Then the wind came to the South Southeast, so that we lay to the Northwards. We thought that way to cleare our selues of it, but that way we had more ice. About 6. in the afternoone, the wind came to the East. Then wee lay to the Southwards that wee had 30. fadoms blacke oase. This day we found the pole to be eleuated, 69. deg. 40. minutes, and this night at 12. of the clocke, we had 41. fadoms red sand. Many ouerfals.

The 17. day at 3. in the morning, we had 12. fadoms. At 9. we had 8. and 7. all this day we ran South and South by West, at the depth aforesaid, red sand, being but shallow water. At eight in the afternoone, the wind with a shower and thunder came to the Southwest, and then wee ranne East northeast. At 12. at night it came to the South and by East, and all this was in the baie of Pechora. The baie of Pechora.

The 18. day at 7. in the morning we bare with the head land of the baie, where we found two Ilands. There are also ouerfals of water or tides. We went betweene the maine and the Iland, next to the head, where we had about 2. fadoms and a halfe. We found the pole eleuated, 69. deg. 13 minutes. This day we had sight of Vaigats: the land of the maine of Pechora did trend Southeast, we held East southeast, and had 10. fadoms oase all the same day vntill 4. in the afternoone, then being calme, we ankered in 10. fadoms all the same night.

The 19. day at two in the morning, we set saile, and ranne South and South southwest all the same day, at 8. 7. and 6. fadoms, this was off the South part of Vaigats: this part of the land lieth North and South. This day at 4. in the afternoone we found shallow water, sometime foure fadoms, sometime 3. and 2. and a halfe, and one fadome and a halfe, there wee ankered and sent our boat away to sound, and all to lee ward we had 4. foote and 3. foote, and 2. foote, there was not water for the boate betweene Vaigats and the other side: finding no more water, there was no other way but to goe backe as we came in, hauing the winde Northwest, so at twelue at night we set saile.

The 20. day we plied to the Northwards, and got deepe water againe 6. and 7. fadoms.

The 21. day the wind by the Northwest, we held along the coast North and North northwest, we had 8. and 9. and 10. fadoms.

The 22. day the winde came to the Southwest, wee bare along the coast of Vaigats, as wee found it to lie North and by West, and North northwest, and North. The wind blew very much with great fogge, we lacking water and wood bare within an Iland where we found great store of wood and water, there were 3. or 4. goodly sounds. Vnder two points there was a crosse set vp, and a man buried at the foote of it. Vpon the said crosse master Pet did graue his name with the date of our Lorde, and likewise vpon a stone at the foote of the crosse, and so did I also, to the end that if the William did chaunce to come thither, they might haue knowledge that wee had bene there. At eight in the afternoone the winde came to the North northwest, wee set saile and turned out of the baie. The same night the winde came to the West, so that we lay North along the land. An Iland hauing store of wood & water

The 23. day at fiue in the morning, the wind came to the Southwest, a sea boord wee sawe a great number of faire Ilands, to the number of sixe: a sea boord of these Ilands, there are many great ouerfals, as great streames or tides: wee held Northeast and East northeast as the lande did trend. At eight afternoone the winde came to the Southeast with very much wind, raine and fogge, and very great store of ice a sea boord: so we lay to the Southwest to attaine to one of the Ilands to harbour vs if the weather did so extremely continue, and to take in our boate, thinking it meete so to doe, and not to tow her in such weather. About twelue of the clocke it became very calme vpon the sudden, and came vp to the West Northwest, and Northwest by West, and then we tooke in our boate, and this done, there came downe so much wind, as we were not able to steere afore it, with coyle and bonets of each, we held South with the land, for so the land did trend. This day all the afternoone we sailed vnder a great land of ice, we sailed betweene the land and it, being not able to crosse it. About twelue at night wee found the ice to stretch into the land, that we could not get cleare to the Eastward, so wee laid it to the shore, and there we found it cleere hard aboord the shore, and we found also a very faire Iland which makes a very good harbour, and within are 12. fadoms. 6. faire Ilands

This

An Iland to the East of Vaigats, 4. or 5. leagues.

This Iland is to the Eastward of Vaigats, 4. or 5. leagues. This land of the maine doth trend Southeast, and Southeast by East. It is a very faire coast, and euen and plaine, and not full of mountains nor rockes: you haue but shallow water of 6. or 7. fadomes, about a league from the shore, all this morning we hailed East southeast. This day we found the pole to be eleuated 69 degrees, 14. minutes. About 12. a clocke wee were constrained to put into the ice to seeke some way to get to the Northwards of it, hoping to haue some cleare passage that way, but there was nothing but whole ice. About nine in the afternoone we had sight of the William, and when we sawe her, there was a great land of ice betweene her and vs, so that we could not come one to the other, but as we came neere to her, we founded our trumpet and shot off two muskets, and she put out her flag vpon her foretopmaste in token that she did see vs: all this time wee did shorten our sailes, and went with our foresaile and maine etopsaile, seeking the best way through the broken ice, she making away the best that she could to follow vs, we put out our flagge to answer her againe with the like: thus wee continued all the afternoone till about 12. a clocke at night, and then we moued our ship to a piece of ice to tary for the William.

The 25. day about fiue in the morning, the William came to vs, being both glad of our meeting. The William had her sterne post broken, that the rudder did hang cleane besides the sterne, so that she could in no wise poize her helme, with all hands she did lighten her sterne, and trimme her head, and whē we had brought her forward all that we could, we brought a cable vnder her sterne, and with our capstaine did winde vp her sterne, and so we made it as well as the place would giue vs leaue, and in the ende we brought her to steere againe. We acknowledge this our meeting to be a great benefite of God for our mutuall comfort, and so gaue his maiestie thanks for it. All the night after we tooke our rest being made fast vpon a piece of ice: the wind was at West North west, but wee were so inclosed with ice that wee could not tell which way to passe. Windes we haue had at will, but ice and fogge too much against our wils, if it had pleased the Lorde Otherwise.

The 26. day the wind was at West Northwest: we set saile to the Northwardes, to seeke if we could finde any way cleare to passe to the Eastward, but the further wee went that way, the more and thicker was the ice, so that wee could goe no further. So about foure in the afternoone we were constrained to moze vpon another piece of ice. I thinke we sailed in all a league this day, here we had 15. fadomes oase, and this oase is all the chanell ouer. All the same day after foure of the clocke, and all the night we taried there, being without all good hope, but rather in despaire. This day master Jugman did see land East Northeast from vs, as hee did thinke, whether it were land or no, I cannot tell well, but it was very like land, but the fogges hath many times deceiued vs.

The 27. day the winde was at Northwest. This day at nine in the morning wee set sayle to seeke the shore. Further into the ice we could not goe, and at seuen in the afternoone wee moored to a piece of ice, and the William with vs, here we had 14. fadomes oase. At 3. in the afternoone we warpt from one ice to another. At 9. in the afternoone we moued againe to a piece of ice vntill the next day. All this night it did snow with much wind, being at West Northwest, and at North west, and by West.

The 28. day the winde came to the Southwest, and South southwest: this day was a very faire day. At one in the afternoone master Pet, and master Jackman did conferre together what was best to be done considering that the windes were good for vs, and we not able to passe by it, they did agree to seeke to the land againe, and so to Vaigats, and there to conferre further. At 2. in the afternoone we did warpe from one piece of ice to another, to get from them if it were possible: here were pieces of ice so great, that we could not see beyond them out of the toppe. Thus we warped vntill 9. in the afternoone, and then wee moued both our ships to a great and high piece of ice, vntill the next morning.

The nine and twentie day the winde came to the Southwest, wee set saile at fiue in the morning to plie into the shore if it were possible, wee made many turnes among the ice to small purpose, for with the wind doeth the currant runne. This day by misfortune a piece of ice stroke of our greepe afore at two afore noone, yet for all this wee turned to doe our best. The William being incombred with ice, and perceiuing that she did little good, tooke in all her sailes, and made her selfe fast to a piece of ice, and about foure in the afternoone she set saile to follow vs. Wee were afraid that she had taken some hurt, but she was well. At seuen afore noone we tooke in all our sailes to tarie for the William, and made our ship fast to a piece of ice: the William before she came to vs tooke in all her sailes, and moored to another piece of ice, and thus we continued vntill the next morning.

The currant runneth with the wind.

The

The 30. day the winde at Southeast, and by South, and at 9. in the morning we set saile, and sooner would haue done if ꝑ William had bene by vs, but we did tarrie for her to know whether all was well with her: But as soone as we made saile, she did the like. All this day wee did our best to seeke our way as the yce would giue vs leaue, sometime we lay South, sometime West, and sometime East, and thus we continued vntill eight at night, and then being calme, wee made our shippe fast to a piece of yce, and went to supper. In the meane time the winde with a faire gentle gale, came vp to the East, and East and by South, but there came downe a showre of raine with it, which continued the space of one houre: Which being done, it became calme againe, so that we could doe no good all that night, but tooke our rest vntill the next day.

The 31. the winde being at Southwest, wee set saile to turne to windeward at three a clocke in the morning. In this turning wee did litle good, for the currant would not giue vs leaue. For as the winde is, so is the currant. Wee did our best vntill tenne of the clocke, and then perceiuing that wee did no good, and being inclosed with yce, wee made our shippes fast to a piece of yce; All this day the William lay still, and did as much good as we, that did labour all the forenoone. Thus wee tooke our rest all the same day.

In the afternoone wee set saile the winde being at South and by East, wee lay to the Westwards, as Southwest, and Southwest, and by South, and sometime to the Westward as wee might. Thus we continued vntill nine at night, and then we could goe no further for yce; so wee with the William were constrained to make our shippe fast to a piece of yce all the same night. This day wee founde the pole eleuated 69. degrees 20. minutes, and here wee had 17. fathoms oze.

The first day of August was very calme in the morning, the winde being at West Northwest. About twelue the winde came to the West, and continued so all the same night with great fogge. August.

The 2. day the winde was at Southwest all day, with raine and fogge. All this day we were inclosed with yce, so that wee were forced to lie still. Here wee had 21. fathoms oze. At fiue in the afternoone the winde was at West with very much foule weather, and so continued all the same night.

The three day the winde was at West, and West by North, and West Northwest, this day we lay still inclosed with yce, the weather being darke with fogge: thus abiding the Lords leasure, we continued with patience, And sounding we found 21. fathoms.

The 4. day wee laye still inclosed with yce, the winde being at West Northwest: this yce did euery day increase vpon vs, yet putting our trust in God, wee hoped to be deliuered out of it in good time.

The fift day all the morning, it rained with very much winde, being at South Southeast: about 3. in the afternoone wee set saile, and presently it became calme for the space of one houre, then the winde came to the North Northeast, and here we had 33. fathoms: thus we made way among the yce Southwest, and Southsouthwest, & West, as we might finde our way for the space of 3. houres: then we met with a whole land of yce, so that we could goe no further: here we moored our ship to tarrie for a further opening. Here wee found 45. fathoms oze, and all the night was very darke with fogge.

The 6. day hauing no opening of the yce, wee lay still the winde being at West and West by South: here we had 63. fathoms oze: all the same night the winde was at the West Northwest.

The 7. day the winde was at West, and West and by North all day. And all this day we lay still being inclosed with yce, that we could not stirre, labouring onely to defend the yce as it came vpon vs. Here we had 68. fathoms oze.

The 8. day was very faire & calme but foggie. This day towards night there was litle winde by the South Southwest: then the yce began a litle to open, and here we had 70. fathoms oze, all the night was foggie.

The 9. day the winde was at Northwest, and by West, all the afternoone we lay still because of the yce, which did still inclose vs. This day wee founde the pole eleuated 70. degrees 4. minutes, we had 63. fathoms oze: this night was a very faire night, but it freesed: in the morning we had much a doe to goe through the same: and wee were in doubt that if it should haue freesed so much the night following, we should hardly haue passed out of it. This night there was one starre that appeared to vs. 70. degr. 4. min. The appearing of the starres, signe of winter.

The 10. day the winde was at East Northeast with a very small gale. Wee with saile and oares made way through the yce: about fiue in the morning wee set saile: sometime wee laye Southwest, and sometime South, and sometime West, as wee might best finde the way.

About 7. in the afternoone the gale began to fresh: about 6. in the afternoone the winde was at Northeast with fogge. Here we had 88. fathoms: we bare saile all the same night, and it snowed very much.

The 11. day we were much troubled with yce, and by great force wee made our way through it, which wee thought a thing impossible, but extremitie doeth cause men to doe much, and in the weakenesse of man Gods strength most appeareth. This day wee had 95. fathoms. At three in the afternoone the winde came to the Southwest, wee were forced to make our shippe fast to a piece of yce, for wee were inclosed with it, and tarried the Lordes leasure. This night wee had 97. fathoms.

The 12. day the winde was at the Southeast not very much but in a maner calme: at eleuen of the clocke the winde came to the West Southwest: all the day was very darke with snowe and fogge. At 6. in the afternoone we set saile the winde being at the North northeast: all this night we bare away Southwest, and Southsouthwest, as well and as neere as the yce would giue vs leaue: all this night we found the yce somewhat fauourable to vs, more then it was before, whereupon we stood in good hope to get out of it.

The 13. day at 7. in the morning, the winde was at the Northeast, and Northeast and by East: all this day we were much troubled with the yce, for with a blowe against a piece of yce, we brake the stocke of our ancre, and many other great blowes we had against the yce, that it was marueilous that the shippe was able to abide them: the side of our boate was broken with our shippe which did recule backe, the boate being betwixt a great piece of yce, and the shippe, and it perished the head of our rudder. This day was a very harde day with vs: at night wee founde much broken yce, and all this night it blewe very much winde, so that wee laye in drift with the yce, and our drift was South, for the winde was at North al this night, and we had great store of snowe.

The 14. day in the morning wee made our shippe fast to a piece of yce, and let her drine with it. In the meane time wee mended our boate and our steerage: all this day the winde continued Northerly, and here wee had three score and two fathoms. Thus we lay a drift all the same night.

The 15. day wee set saile at 6. in the morning, the winde being at Northeast. At 9. afore noone wee entred into a cleare sea without yce, whereof wee were most glad, and not without great cause, and gaue God the praise. Wee had 19. fathoms water, and ranne in Southwest all the morning vntill we came to 14. fathoms, and thence we hailed West, till we came to 10. fathoms, and then we went Northwest, for so the lande doeth trende; At 12. of the clocke wee had sight of the lande, which wee might haue had sooner, but it was darke and foggie all the same day: for when wee had sight of the lande, wee were not passing three leagues from it. This day wee had the pole eleuated 69. degrees 49. minutes. All day wee ranne along the coast in 10. and 9. fathoms, pepered sande. It is a very goodly coast and a bolde, and faire soundings off it, without sands or rocks.

They are thwart against Waigats.

The 16. day the winde was at East: this day wee were troubled againe with yce, but wee made great shift with it: for we gotte betweene the shoare and it. This day at twelue of the clocke wee were thwart of the Southeast part of Vaigats, all along which part there was great store of yce, so that wee stoode in doubt of passage, yet by much adoe wee got betwixt the shoare and it: about 6. in the afternoone was founde a great white beare vpon a piece of yce: all this day in the afternoone it was darke with fogge. And all night wee hailed North and North by West, and sometime North and by East, for so doeth the land trend.

Hands.

The 17. day in the morning wee hailed West, for so doeth the lande lye. The winde was at Southeast, and it was very darke with fogge, and in running along the shoare wee felt a ground, but God bee praised without hurt, for wee came presently off againe: The William came to an ancre to stay for vs, and sent some of their men to helpe vs, but before they came wee were vnder saile, and as wee came to the William wee did stowe our boates, and made saile, wee were within some of the Islands, and hailed West Southwest.

About two of the clocke in the afternoone, wee set our course Southwest and by South: so we ranne Southwest vntill twelue at night, that the winde came to the North Northeast, and then we hailed West.

The 18. day at 6. in the morning wee had 16. fathoms redde sand: at 9. in the morning 15. fathoms. At 10. 14. fathoms, and we hailed West Northwest. At 12. a clocke the winde came to the East, and East by South, we hailed West and by North all the same day, and night. At 6. in the afternoone we had 17. fathoms red sand.

The

The 19. day the winde was at East Northeast: at 6. in the morning wee had 19. fathoms red sand: at 12. of the clocke the winde blew North and North by East, we had 17. fathoms water, at 3. in the afternoone 15.

The 20. day the winde was at Northeast, and North Northeast: at 7. in the morning wee had 30. fathoms blacke oze: at twelue of the clocke wee were vpon the suddaine in shoale water, among great sands, and could finde no way out. By sounding and seeking about, wee came a ground, and so did the William, but we had no hurt, for the winde was off the shoare, and the same night it was calme: all night we did our best, but we could not haue her a flote. These shoales do lye off Colgoyeue: it is very flat a great way off, and it doeth not high aboue 2. or 3. foote water, it floweth Northeast, and Southwest. Shoales off Colgoyeue.

The 21. day the winde was at Southwest, and being very faire weather wee did lighten our shippes as much as was possible for vs to doe, by reason of the place. The same high water by the helpe of God we got both a flote, and the winde being at the Southwest did helpe vs, for it caused it to flowe the more water.

This day wee found the pole to be elcuated 68. degrees 40. min. In the afternoone wee both set saile to seeke way to get out of these sands, our boate a head sounding, hauing 6. 7. and 8. fathoms all within the sand which was without vs. We bare to the Southwarde, and the William bare more to the Eastwards, and night being at hande the winde came to the Southeast, whereupon we layde it to the Southwards, lying Southwest, and South & by West, and ranne to 19. and 12. and 14. fathoms, & presently we had but 6. fathoms, which was off the sands head, which wee were a ground vpon the day before. Then we cast about to the Eastwards for deepe water, which we presently had, as 10. 15. and 20. and so to 23. fathoms.

The 22. day at 8. in the morning, wee cast about to the Southward, and this day in the morning we saw the William vnder our lee as farre as wee could see her, and with a great fogge we lost the sight of her, and since wee haue not seene her. Thus we ranne till we came to thirtie fathoms blacke oze, which wee had at twelue of the clocke, and at three in the afternoone wee had twentie and three fathoms, and then wee ranne West Northwest, and West by North all the same night following. They lost the William here, where she perished.

The 23. day we had at 6. in the morning 27. fathoms, at 8. a clocke 28. fathoms: at 9. the winde being at East Southeast, wee hailed West Northwest: this day wee had sight of the lande of Hugri side. At twelue of the clocke we had 32. fathoms sande. This day wee ranne West and by North, and came to fiue fathoms off the bay of Morzouets. Then wee layde it to the Northwards, so that wee lay North Northeast off. The winde after came to the North, and North by East, and we lay East, and East by North, then we layd it to the Westward againe: and thus we lay till we came to 40. fathoms, and then we went Northwest till we came to 14. fathoms, and so to 10. fathoms. Then wee cast about to the Eastwards and lay East, and East by North all the same night. The land of Yugri. The bay of Morzouets.

The 24. day at 8. in the morning we had 32. fathoms. We ranne Northwest til we came to 11. fathoms, then we lay to the Northwards til 12. at night, and then wee came to 40. fathoms, then the winde at Northeast we lay to the Westwards, and hailed Northwest along.

The 25. at 4. in the morning wee had 37. fathoms, wee ranne Northwest, the winde at Northeast very much.

The 26. day we ran with the same winde, and found the pole to be elcuated 70. deg. 40. min.

The 27. at 7. in the morning we saw land, which we made to be Kegor, then we hailed Northwest, and North by West to double the North Cape.

The 28. day at 3. in the morning we ran Northwest, and so all day. At night the winde came to the Southwest, and we ran Northwest all that night.

The 29. day we put into a sound called Tane, and the towne is called Hungon: wee came to an anker at 5. in the afternoone, at 25. fathoms very faire sand. This sound is very large and good, and the same night we got water aboord. The towne of Hungon.

The 30. day in the morning the winde at Northeast, and but little, wee set saile, and with our boate a head we got the sea about 12. of the clocke: the winde with a faire gale came to the East Southeast, and all this day and night we ran West Northwest.

The 31. day at 12. of the clocke we doubled the North Cape, the winde being at East Southeast, we hailed West all the same day, and at night we ran West Southwest. They double the North Cape in their returne.

The 1. day of September the winde was at Northeast with very much fogge: all this day wee ranne West Southwest: at 2. in the afternoone the winde came North.

The second day at 3. in the morning we doubled Fowlnesse, & the winde was this day variable at all parts of the Compasse. In the afternoone we made but litle way: at 6. a clocke the winde came to the Southwest, and wee went Northwest. At 9. in the night there came downe so much winde by the West Southwest, that we were faine to lay it a hull, we hald it to Northwardes in the space of 2. houres, and then we layd her head to the Southwards, and at the breake of day wee saw land, which is very high, and is called by the men of the Countrey Fowlnesse. It is within ful of small Ilands, and without full of rocks very farre out, and within the rockes you haue faire sand at 20. fathoms.

Fowlnesse.

The 3. day in the morning we bare with the sounde aforesaid: Within it is but shoale water, 4. 5. and 3. fathoms, sandie ground, the land is very high, and the Church that is seene is called Helike Kirke. It doeth high here not aboue 8. or 9. foote.

The 4. day was reasonable weather, the winde at South southwest.

The 5. 6. and 7. dayes very foule weather, with great and vehement blasts of raine, and happy was the shippe that was then in harbour.

The 8. day the winde was at West by North, and reasonable weather.

The 9. day at 12. of the clocke we set saile, and at 3. in the afternoone we cleared our selues of the land, and then we hald West Southwest, with a good stiffe gale all day and night. We found the pole eleuated 69. degrees 20. minutes.

The 11. day the winde was at Northeast all the forenoone, the afternoone was calme, and all the night, and we found the pole eleuated 68. deg. 16. min.

Lowfoote.

The 12. day at 3. in the afternoone, wee put into a sounde by Lowfoote, where it doeth flowe Southwest, and by South, and doeth high 7. or 8. foote water.

The 13. day much winde at West: wee had a ledge of rockes in the winde of vs, but the roade was reasonable good for all Southerly and Westerly windes. Wee had the maine land in the winde of vs: this day was stormie with raine.

The 14. day the winde was South, and Southwest reasonable weather.

The 15. day was windie and raynie at West Southwest.

The 16. day very foule weather, with raine and fogge.

The 17. day at 3. of the clocke we were cleare of the lande, and wee hailed Southwest all the same night.

The 18. day we kept the same course. And found the pole eleuated, 66. degr. 30. min.

The 19. day the pole was eleuated to vs 64. degr. 50. min. We haild this day South by East, and so likewise all night.

The 20. day at 4. in the morning the winde was at East, at 6. after we had light of lande: this day the pole was eleuated to vs 63. degr. 30. min. the night was calme, and the winde variable vpon all points of the Compasse.

The 21. day the winde was at the Southeast all the forenoone: all the afternoone at the south southwest, and all the same night variable with raine.

The 22. day the winde was at the South, all the after noone was calme, and so was all the night.

The sounde of Romesall.

The 23. day at 4. of the clocke in ꝑ afternoone we put into Norway, into a sound called Romesall, where it floweth South Southeast, and doeth high 8. foote water: this place is full of lowe Ilands, and many good sounds without the high mountaine land. Here is great store of wood growing, as firre, birche, oke, and hasell: all this night the winde was at the South, very much winde, with raine and fogge.

The 24. day was like vnto it.

The 25. 26. and 27. we had very much winde with great and stormie blasts.

The 28. day in the morning the winde being at East Northeast we set saile at 8. of the clocke, and hailed out of the bay West Southwest, and South west, hauing a goodly gale vntill one of the clocke, and then the winde came to the Southeast, and to the South with raine, and fogge, and very much winde: at 6. of the clocke wee came into a very good rode, where wee did ride all the same night in good safetie.

The 29. day wee put into a good sounde, the winde by the Southwest: at three in the afternoone there came downe very much winde by the South, and all night, with vehement blasts and raine.

The 30. day all day the winde was at West Southwest. And in this sound the pole is elevated 63. degr. 10. min.

October.

The first day of October the winde was at South with very much winde, & vehement blasts.

The 7. day wee set saile: for from the first of this moneth vntill this 7. day, wee had very foule weather, but specially the fourth day when the winde was so great, that our cables brake with the very stoyme, and I do not thinke that it is possible that any more winde then that was should blow: for after the breaking of our cable, we did driue a league before our ancres would take any holde: but God be thanked the stoyme began to slacke, otherwise we had bene in ill case.

The 7. day at night we came to an ancre vntil the next day, which was the 8. day of the moneth, when as the winde grew great againe, with raine, whereupon wee set saile and returned into the sound againe: and at our first comming to an ancre, presently there blew so much winde, that although our best ancre was out, yet the extremitie of the stoyme droue vs vpon a ledge of rocks, and did hurte our ship in such sort, that we were cõstrained to lighten her to saue her, & by this meanes (by the helpe of God) we got off our ship and stopped our leakes, and moared her in good safetie abiding for a winde. We rid from this day by reason of contrary winds, with fogge and raine vntil the 14. day, which day in the morning the winde came to the Northeast, and at 8. of the clocke wee set saile. This sound is called Moore sound, where it higheth about 7. foote water, and floweth South southeast. The next day being the 15. day wee put into a sounde which is called Vtar sound, where was a shippe of the king of Denmarke put into another sound there by, being two leagues to the southwards of vs, that came out of Island: the winde was contrary for vs at south-South west. Moze sound.

The 12. day of November we set saile the winde being at the East Southeast, and past through the sound where the kings ship did lie: which sound is called Sloure sound. But as wee did open the sound, we found the winde at the Southwest, so that we could doe no good, so that we moared our ship betweene 2. Islands vntil the 18. day, and then the weather being faire and calme, wee set saile, & went to sea hoping to finde a faire wind, but in the sea we found the wind at the southwest, and south southwest, so that we were constrained to returne into the same sound.

The nert day being the 19. the kings ship came out also, because she saw vs put to sea, and came as farre out as we, and moared where we did moare afore: And at our returne backe againe, wee moared our ship in an vtter sound called Scorpe sound, because the kings ship was without victuals, and we did not greatly desire her companie, although they desired ours. In this sound the pole is elevated 62. degr. 47. min.

Thus we lay still for a winde vntill the 1. of December, which day we set saile at 6. a clocke in the morning, and at 4. in the afternoone we layde it to the inwards.

The 3. day at three in the morning, there arose so much winde, that we could beare but our foresaile. The 4. day was calme weather, so was the 5. but wee were leake, and it was as much as we were able to doe, to free our ship, the leake was so great, and yet we pumped euery halfe glasse.

The 5. day we brought a Bonnet vnder her forefoote basted with Occam, which did stop much of our leake.

The 6. day the winde was at Southeast, the 7. day at Southsoutheast.

The 8. day was calme with litle winde Northerly.

The 9. day we had sight of the coast of Scotland which was Bowsamnesse.

The 10. day we were open off the Frith.

The 11. day at 4. in the morning we were thwart of Barwike: at 6. wee were thwart of Bamburghe: the same day at 10. at night we were shot as farre as Hollyfoote. Then the winde came to the South and Southeast. so that we laye still vntill the nert day in the morning, and then we were constrained to put with Tinmouth. The same day at night we halled a ground to stoppe a leake, which we found to be in the skarfe afore. The winde continued by the Southeast & southsoutheast vntill the 20. day, and then we set saile about 12. at night, bearing along the coast.

The 22. day by reason of a Southeast winde, we thought we should haue bene put into Humber, but the wind came to the West, so that we haled Southeast: and at 3. in the afternoone we halled a sea boord the sands, and had shoale water off Lymery and Owry, and were in 4. fathoms off them. The nert day we hald as we might to sease Orfordnesse.

The 24. day we came thwart of the Nase, about 8. in the morning.

The 25. day being the Natiuitie of Christ, we came to an ancre betweene Old hauen, and Tilbery hope. The same day we turned as high as Horsbet.

The 26. day wee turned as high as Ratcliffe, and praised God for our safe returne. And thus I ende, 1580.

The 2. iournal of M. Arthur Pet and M. Charles Iackman in their discouerie Northeastward in the yeere 1580. VVrit- ten by Nicholas Chanceller, which was in the aforesaid discouerie: with two barkes, the one called the William, the other the George.

The iournal beginneth from Wardhouse.

FRiday the 1. of July about 5. in the afternoone, the winde came to the North Northwest. About 7. a clocke in the afternoone we set saile from Wardhouse: our course was East and by South, And as we were waying our ancres preparing to depart, I Nicholas Chanceller was sent by M. Pet aboord the William to M. Charles Iackman, to deliuer him a note in writing as followeth.

Vorousko Ostroue an high Iland.

M. Iackman, M. Pet determineth to direct his course East and by South, if the winde will serue thereto: and if wee should chaunce to loose companie, you shall heare of vs at Vorousko Ostroue not farre off Vaygats: it is an high piked Iland. If there be any Russes there you shall receiue a letter of them: if there bee none, then you shall finde a letter vpon the highest part of the Southeast side thereof vnder a warle or heape of stones. The Lorde blesse vs in these our affaires. At the roade of Wardhouse the last of June 1580. The Iland of Vorousko standeth North Northeast of the Southwest part of Vaigats, and is foure or fiue leagues distant from Vaigats.

The 2. day about 5. in the morning the winde came to the East, and East southeast, & we bare in the shorewards, and about ten a clocke the winde came to Southsoutheast, & wee bare to the Eastwards, sometime we lay East and by south, sometime East and East & by North. About 5. in the afternoone we bare with the William, she was willing to go with Kegor. The cause was (as we did thinke) that she was out of her trimme, and sailed very ill, & therefore would mend her stirrage. Whereupon M. Pet, not willing himselfe to go into Kegor, said to M. Iackman that he would goe East & by north to discouer Willoughbies land, for that it was a parcel of our direction, & so would meete with him at Vorousko or Vaigats. And so we departed & set our course East Northeast, the winde being at southeast. The 3. day we had the wind at Southeast. This day we found the pole elevated 70. degrees, 46. min. The winde changed to south & by East. At 12. a clocke at night we sounded and had no ground at 120. fathoms, we being 50. leagues frō Kekor by our reckoning.

He called because in his iournal which was found in his ship after his death was found mention that he had seene such a coast.

The 4. day all the morning was very calme. This day we found the pole to be elevated 71. degrees, 31. min. At nine in the euening the winde came to the Northeast with a gentle gale: we haled along Southeast and by East.

The North land discouered.

The 5. day the wind Northnortheast, we haled East, and East and by south. This day we did see land, but we could not make it perfit, the winde being so Northerly that we could not come neere to it. The 6. day about 2. in the afternoone the winde North Northwest, we haled East southeast with a faire gentle gale. This day we met with yce. About 6. in the afternoone it became calme, and we with saile and oares layed it to the Northeast, hoping that way to cleare our selues of the yce, and about 12. at night we gate cleare of it. We supposed it had bene yce of S. Nicholas bay, but it was not as we afterward found it.

Part of the North land againe discouered.

The 7. day we met with more yce being the Easter part of the other yce: wee haled along the weather part thereof to finde ende of it East northeast. This day we saw land North from vs, being very desirous to haue had more knowledge thereof: but extreemitie of yce kept vs backe there frō contrary to our desire. We were inforced by the said yce, which we found to lye a long the said land to go through it with much trauaile, wherein we continued all the day and night following.

The 8. day the wind being at Northwest, we were troubled all the day with the aforesaid yce. At 5. in the morning we sounded, & had 90. fathoms red oze: at 4. in ꝑ afternoone we soūded againe and had as before. At 6. in the afternoone we gate cleare off the yce, with going South southeast, and Southeast, whereof we were very glad. Wee had sailed in the said yce 40. or 50. leagues as we esteeme it: for we had a fine winde, and bare all our sailes. Wee haled along Southeast and sounded at 10. at night, and had 45. fathoms sandie oze.

The 9. at 2. in the morning we sounded and had 45. fathoms. There appeared to vs a shadow of land East Northeast, and so we ranne with it for the space of 2. houres, and then perceiuing that it was but a fogge we haled along Southeast. At 2. in the afternoone we sounded and had 50. fathoms blacke oze. The same day our latitude was 70. degrees 3. min. At nine a clocke at night we sounded againe, and had 50. fathoms blacke oze.

The 10. the wind at North northwest, we haled East & by North. We did set this course for the ten of the clocke at afternoone, we had sight of land, which we thought to haue bene Morzouets: but afterward we found it to be Colgoycue by the soundings: and then we sounded, and had 53. fathoms blacke oaze. Presently there fell a great fogge, wherefore we durst not beare with the land, to make it: and so we kept an outwardly course, which drawe vs to Noua Zembla. At sixe in the afternoone, we had sight of the land againe, and bare with it: afterward the wind dulled, and was very calme: we sounded and had 120. fathoms blacke oaze: we sent also our boate on land, to sound and proue the land, and we came with our shippe within an Island, where wee roade all the same night.

Colgoyeue Island.

Noua Zembla.

Our men arriue at Noua Zembla.

The 11. day in the morning, we went into a Baye to ride, to prouide vs wood and water.

The 12. day, the wind at Southeast, about 11. of the clocke, there came downe a great white Beare, to the water side, and tooke the water of his owne accord. We chased him with our boate, but for all that we could doe, he gate to land, and scaped from vs. At 7. in the afternoone, we being furnished with wood and water, did set saile, for that we hoped the wind would come Westerly, and with sailes and oares we gate to the sea: al the night it was calme with fogge. This lande aforesaid is Noua Zembla.

A great white Beare.

Wood and water taken vpon Noua Zembla.

The 13. in the morning, the wind was very variable with fogge, and as it cleered vp, we met with great store of yce, which shewed to vs at the first like land. It did put vs to great trouble, and much the more for the fogge: we continued in it all the day, and all the night following.

Yce.

The 14. day in the morning, we were inclosed with the aforesaid yce, so that wee were constrained to goe out the same way that we came in: which fortuned to vs by the prouidence of God, otherwise it had bene vnpossible. For when we were almost inclosed with mightie great landes of yce, and could not perceaue any way out, being partly in despaire of getting out, but there to perish: it pleased God to turne the wind, which made way through the yce, and caried vs cleere of it: by 12. of the clocke at noone, the wind came to the South, and South and by West. This day we founde the pole eleuated 70. degrees, 26. minutes. We laide it along the coaste Northwest. By the lying of it wee found it to be Noua Zembla. About 2. of the clocke in the afternoone, wee laid it to the Southward, to double the yce, but we could not vpon that boyd: so we cast about againe, and laye West along vnder the yce. About seuen in the afternoone, wee gate about the greatest part of the said yce, and at 11. at night, we brought the yce Southeast of vs, and so were we cleere of the trouble of it.

The 15. day, about three in the morning, the wind South Southwest, we cast about, and lay to the Eastwards: as we lay to Southeast, the wind did wester, so that we lay South Southeast, with a slawnd sheate, and so we ranne all the day. About eight in the euening, we sounded, and had 23. fathoms small sand. At one at night we sounded againe, and had 29. fathoms sande, as before.

Saturday the 16. at three in the morning, we haled along East Southeast, where we founde 18. fathoms red sand: then we haled along Northeast. In these soundings wee had many ouerfals, at 10. of the clocke before noone, yce which was very great, so that we could not tel which way to cleere our selues thereof. The wind came to the South Southeast, so that we laye to the Northwards: we thought that way to cleere our selues of it, but we met with more yce. About 6. in the afternoone, the wind came East, then we lay to the Southwards: we sounded and had 30. fathoms blacke oaze. This day we found the pole eleuated 69. degrees, 40. minuts. At 12. at night, we sounded, and had 42. fathoms red sand.

Sunday the 17. at three in the morning, we had 12. fathoms, and at 9. in the morning, we had 8. and 7. fathoms. All this day we ranne South and South, and by West. At this depth aforesaid, we had red sand. All this way we had but sholled water. At 8. in the afternoone, the winde with a shower and thunder, came to the South west, and then we ranne East Southeast. All this was in the Baye of Pechora.

The Bay of Pechora.

Sunday the 18. at 7. in the morning, we had sight of the head land of the Northest side of Pechora, where we found 2. Islands, the Wester side of them lieth North Northwest, and South Southeast. There is a long point or lande on the Easter side, whereupon standeth an heape of crosses: it lieth off the West side Southwest, and Northeast, and of the Easter side it falleth south Southeast, and is a great Baye, wherein we sawe no land, sauing Vaigats, which lay Northeast from vs. The Nother point of the said headland, and the Souther point of the Island, lie due East and West, and is not past a mile distant from the other. And there are two fathoms and an halfe water betweene them. And when we had gotten past the said Islands, within Vaigats it was calme: whereupon we ankered in 8. or 9. fathoms water. The Masters mind was much to goe with Vaigats, for that we sawe no land to the Southwards, and had bene much troubled with yce,

They arriue at Vaigats.

The 19. day, at two in the morning, we set saile, and ranne South, and South southwest all the same day, in 8. 7. 6. fathoms. This was the South part of Vaigats. This part of the land lyeth South and North. At 4. in the afternoone, we found sholde water, sometime 4. fathoms, sometime 3. and 2. and one and a halfe, and then ankered, and sent our boate away to sound, and all to leewards, we had but 4. and 3. foote: there was not water ynough for our boate, betweene Vaigats, and the other side; and finding no more water, there was no other way for vs, but to get backe againe as we came in. And hauing the wind at northwest, at 12. of the clocke at night, we set saile, and turned out. The Southside of Vaigats hath two Islands, which are very sholde. The Southside of Vaigats is a very faire and a greene land.

The Southside of Vaigats a faire land.

The 20. day, we plied to the Northwards, and got deeper water, at 6. and 7. fathoms.

The 21. day, the wind northwest, we turned about the coast north, and north northwest, and had 8. 9. and 10. fathoms.

Friday the 22. at a South sunne, we ankered in a Baye of the West side of Vaigats, betweene two Islands, and there furnished our selues with wood and water, supposing it had bene Vorousko Ostroue, and here sent for our consorte, according to appointment, where wee found a goodly harbour, with Russes crosses at eche side, and many Islands scant to be numbred, with faire baies,

* Note.

"to the northwards: and at a northwest sunne we waied, and turned out, and by a north northeast sunne we doubled the Westermost land, and found the land to trend much to the Eastward, where we found many faire Islands, and many ouer falls in the offing (or putting off.) Note, that wee went within none of the Islands.

Saturday the 23. we had the wind at southwest, with thicke weather, which afterward cleered vp to the southeast very much winde and thicke: wherupon we cast about to the Westwards, meaning to lease the land, but we could not, for that it was much wind, and a growen Sea. So we were put off againe, till we were among the yce, which forced vs to cast about againe, and afterward we had the wind larged to the West southwest, and we had faire weather, and small water: then we scoured our boate, which we towed 5. daies before. Then it increased presently a great and extreame gale of wind to the northwest: so we tooke in our maine saile, and went with our foresaile, and about a north northwest sunne, I suppose we were thwart the southeast ende of Vaigats, hauing a great land of yce to the sea boord of vs, which also afterward did growe on head of vs, and so troubled vs, that it caused vs to pipe to the shoare, where we thought we saw an Iland, which chanced to be a faire Island, lying halfe a mile from the shoare, and a mile in length, and halfe a mile ouer. To the northwest of it lieth a point a mile off, and betweene them a Baye, and to the southeast three leagues of riseth as it were a faire Cape like to beach: the maine, is ouen and trendeth Southeast and Northwest. There goeth a good tide betweene the Island and the maine.

A faire Cape.

A good tide.

Sunday the 24. we had the elevation of the pole at 69. degrees, 4. minuts. At a West and by South sunne, we passed by a great arme, or a baye, which had two head lands: and being ouer against it, foure leagues from the shoare, wee sounded, and had 10. fathoms, and oazie sande: at a northwest and by north sunne, we had sight of the William. All this day we bare along the shoare, being continually among the yce: and at a north and by West sunne, we bare north and by East, to the seaboord, seeking to be cleere of the yce. After that, we had sight of the William, we bare off to the sea wards, meaning to cleere our selues of the yce: and for that the yce grew thicker, we tooke in our sailes, at a northeast sunne.

A great Baye with two head lands.

Munday the 25. we ankered with our grapnell vpon a peece of yce, to tary for the William, to speake with her, fearing that we should be incloled, and not able to come together, to speake one with another. We are as we esteeme, from the southeast part of the aforesaide Cape, which we esteeme like beach, to the southeast part of the riuer or Baye, which wee passed the 24. daye, 25. leagues, and from the maine 6. or 7. leagues, where we continued all the day and night, to mend the Williams falle sterne poste, which was broken with the yce, the foure and twentieth day.

Tuesday the 26. we continued at the aforesaid yce, till a Southwest and by South sunne, and went north and by East, to seeke to cleere vs of the yce, being enuironed therewith, the wind being West northwest, and sailed 4. miles, and then had no way: so we came to anker at a peece of yce, at a West and by south sunne.

Wensday the 27. we put off from the yce, where wee roade at a Southeast and by East sound, and sayled three or foure howres to the Southwards towards the lande, and then roade at an Iland againe, till we had dined, and after we haled along the yce, to the landward, till a Northwest same, and then the fogge came vpon vs, whereby we could goe no further that night: so we anchored there all that night. It did snowe all that night, and blewe much wind at West Northwest. Fogge. Snowe.

This euening, Master Iackman, and George Sparrowe, came aboord the George, to conferre together with vs, where they determined concerning our matters in hande, for the proceeding or returne of this our voyage: where Master Pet, and Master Iackman both, were very willing in this their determination, to doe for the best aduantage, and profite of the company. This to conclude was the generall voice of Master Pet, Master Iackman, Hugh Smith, George Sparrowe, and me Nicholas Chanceler. First we laid before our eies, the cause of our let present, which was the innumerable quantitie of yce, with the hugenes thereof: and not onely that, but also the vnlike diminishing of the said yce, the summer being so farre spent, & further the snowe falling with the frost gathered vpon the same, is an augmenter vnto the yce, and no diminisher vnto the same. And further we finde that no currant runneth here, to be a disperser of the said yce, and no sea goeth here to dissolue it to water. We haue had in the meane time very faire windes, sufficient to haue passed the furthermost land, extending North, according to the estimate of those that gaue vs instructions of this said voyage. This also we finde by proofe of trauell, that the farther we runne of to the sea, to get the maine Ocean, the thicker we finde the yce, and small hope of a cleere sea. All these things duely considered, our determination is, to seeke by all meanes to get to the shoare, hoping there to get some cleere, to get to Vaigats, and there to conferre further, as time and place shall giue occasion. The George the chiefe ship. They resolue to returne.

Thursday the 28. at noone, all we aforesaid, meeting together aboord the George, agreed and made full determination of the premisses aforesaid: and at 3. in the afternoone, we warped from one peece of yce to another, to get from them, if it were possible: wee continued in warping from yce to yce, till nine at night, then we moored both our barkes to a great peece of yce, all that night.

Friday the 29. the winde at Southwest, at fiue in the morning, wee set saile to plye into the shoare, if we might possible attaine thereto: we made many a turne, but to small purpose. At two in the afternoone, by misfortune, hitting a great peece of yce, we brake off our grepe before: yet nevertheless we did our endeuour in turning. The William encombred with yce, and pestered, doing little good, tooke in al her sailes, and made fast to a peece of yce: howbeit the perceauing that we continued still turning vp and downe, about 4. in the afternoone did set saile to followe vs. At 7. in the afternoone, we tooke in our sailes, and made fast to a peece of yce, to carry for the William: the perceauing that we stroke saile, did the like, and made fast to a peece of yce, a league and better from vs.

Saturday the 30. the wind being at Southeast, and by South, at a Southeast sunne, we set saile, and would sooner haue done, but that we taried for the William, to haue knowen in what state they were, because they came not to vs ouer night: but they moued not, till they saw we vs begin: thus we continued all the day, seeking our best way, as the yce would permit vs: sometime we went South, sometime East, sometime West, continuing thus till eight at night, the winde waxing calme, we moored to a peece of yce, and there staied till the next day.

The 31. at three in the morning, we set saile, the winde being Southwest, to turne to windewards, wherein we did little good: for the current was against vs: for as the winde is, so setteth the current: neuertheless we did our best, vntill 10. of the clocke, and then perceauing that wee got nothing, and also being inclosed with yce, we made fast to a peece of yce. All this day the William stoode still, and did as much good as we that laboured all the forenoone. The wind comming to the South and by East, in the afternoone we set saile, and lay Southwest, and Southwest and by South, and sometime to the Westwards, as we might, till nine at night, and then could passe no farther for the yce: so we and the William made fast to a peece of yce. This day the eleuation of the pole was 69. degrees, 20. minuts. We had 87. fathoms water, and oaze. a Current.

August.

The first day, the winde being calme, about 12. the winde came to the West, with a great fogge.

The 2. the wind at Southwest, with raine and fogge all day, wee were inclosed so with yce, that we could not stirre. In the afternoone the wind came to the West, with much foule weather, and continued all night.

The third day, the wind at West, and West and by North, and West Northwest, all the day darke with fogge: we continued all day and all night inclosed in the yce, thus abiding the Lords leisure, beseeching him to strengthen vs with patience and faith in him. Here we had 21. fathoms.

The

The 4. day, we continued inclosed with yce, which increased more and more vpon vs.

The 5. day, all the morning faire, with much wind, at South and South southeast, and South east. The said wind a little separating the yce, made vs some way: at a South west sunne we set saile, and suddenly it became calme for the space of an howre: then the winde came to the North north east: we made way through the yce, as we could finde passage betweene them for the space of three howres: then we met with an whole land of yce, that wee could passe no further for it: so we made our ships fast to it, and roade by it all the night, which was very darke with fogge.

The 6. we lay still all the day and night, inclosed with yce.

The 7. we continued still so inclosed with yce, that we could not stirre, but defend the yce from the ships side, as it came grating vpon vs.

The 8. day, very faire and calme, but a fogge towards night: the winde came to the South southeast a prctie gale, which did a little cause the yce to open: all the night was fogge. Here we had 70. fathoms water.

The 9. the wind North west and by West, and all the afternoone West south west: we lay still, for that we were still inclosed with yce: the eleuation of the pole was 70. degrees.

Frost. we sounded and had 68. fathoms oaze. It did freese so hard in the night, that in the morning we had much adoe to passe through it. If we had continued there, and it had frosen the next night, we should hardly haue gotten out of it.

The 10. day, about 5. in the morning, wee set saile, the winde at East northeast, a very small gale, with our boate a head to wing vs, and breaking the yce with their oares, which had frosen the night before. Sometime we lay South west, sometime West, as we might best finde way. About 6. in the afternoone, the wind came to Northeast with fogge, yet we bare saile all the night. Here

Snowe. we sounded, and had 88. fathoms. There fell much snowe in the night.

The 11. day, we were much troubled with yce, so that wee were constrained to beare forcibly through it, in such sort, that it may be thought impossible for such small barkes to passe it, but extremitie causeth men to doe much. About noone we sounded, and had 95. fathoms. At three in the afternoone, the wind came to the South west, and we being inclosed with much yce, were constrained to take in all our sailes, and to ride by a peece of yce. The 12. in the morning, the wind South east, in manner calme. At 2. in the afternoone, the wind at South south west: all the day darke

Snowe. with fogge and snowe. At 6. in the afternoone, the winde being north northeast, we set saile, and went all night South west, and South south west, as neere as the yce would giue vs leaue: we found the yce more fauourable to vs then we did before, hoping to get cleere of it.

The 13. the wind at northeast, & northeast and by east. At 7. in the morning we brake an anker stocke, being vpon the boowe of our ship, with a blow which we had against a peece of yce. All this day we were very much troubled with yce, & had so many great blowes against them, that it was maruell that the ship was able to abide them: also the ship giuing backe, bare the boate to a perr of yce, & brake her side, the boate being thwart her sterne, & with the same blow perished the head of our rudder. This was a very hard day with vs. At night we came among much broken yce, and the wind did blowe very much at north, which caused the yce to driue: wee draue with it, for our

Much snowe. drift was South. All the night it did snowe very much. The 14. day, in the morning, we moored our ship fast to a peece of yce, & did driue with it, the wind being northerly. In the meane time we mended our boate, and the head of our rudder: so we continued all the day and night in drift.

The 15. day, the wind at northeast, we set saile at 6. in the morning, bearing through the yce, & at 9. at night, we entred into a cleere sea, at which sight our hearts did greatly reioyce, as the bird

A cleere sea. which was escaped out of ỳ cage, wherein she was kept long as prisoner. At this time we sounded, & had 19. fathoms. We ran in south west al ỳ morning, til we came to 14. fathoms: then we haled West, til we came to 10. fathoms: then we went north west, for so the land trendeth. At noone we had sight of the land, being within three leagues of it: we might haue seene it sooner, if the fogge had not bene. This day we had ỳ pole eleuated 69. degrees, 49. minuts: we kept along the coast in 10. & 9. fathoms. The shore along is euen & faire sounding of it without sholds of sands or rocks.

The 16. day, the wind East, we were troubled againe with yce, but we made great shift with it: for we gate betweene the shoare and it. At noone we were thwart the south part of Vaigats, where we found great store of yce all alongst it, which made vs doubt of passage through it: yet with much trouble we gate betweene the shoare and it. All the afternoone was a fogge. At 6. of

A white beare. the clocke, we found a great white Beare vpon a peece of yce. All the night we haled North, and north and by East, and sometimes East, for so doeth the land trende. The 17. day the wind Southeast in the morning, wee haled along West, for so the lande doeth runne, it being darke with fogge, and we running too neere the shoare, our shippe was on ground: but, God be praised, we we gate no hurt: for it being flood, we came off againe presently. The William being on head of vs, and seeing vs strike our sailes, did anker by Vorousko Ostroue to stay for vs, and sent some of her men to helpe vs, but we were vnder saile before they came neere vs: and when we came to the William, we tooke in our boate, and so did the William: then we made saile, and went betweene some of the Ilands: we haled West southwest, so we passed Vaigats, and the Masters came not together to conferre, as they had appointed the 28. day of July. About two in the afternoone, we set our course southwest and by south, and southwest, and ran so, till 12. at night, then the wind came to north northeast, and we haled West. "This was Arthur Pets fault.

The 18. day, at five in the morning, we sounded, and had 16. fathoms red sande. At nine wee sounded, and had 14. and 10. fathoms: we haled West northwest. At 12. the winde came to the East, and East and by south: we haled West and by North all the day and night following. At five in the euening, we sounded, and had 17. fathoms sand.

The 19. day, the wind at East northeast, at five in the morning, wee sounded, and had 19. fathoms red sand, the wind north and by East. At three in the afternoone we sounded, and had 15. fathoms.

The 20. day, at 7. in the morning, we sounded, and had three fathoms blacke oaze. About noone we were vpon the sudden in sholde water among sandes, which lye thwart of Colgoyeue: and turning vp & downe, seeking to get cleere of them, continually sounding, we came on ground, and the William also which was a league from vs. In the night, it being calme, we laid all our cables, ankers, ropes, and such like, vpon the sand in the water, and made a rafte, with such prouision as we had, and laid thereon such things as lay vppermost in our shippe that it would beare, but coulde not get her on flote that night.

The 21. day, at an high water, we gate off, and the William also, the wind being at southwest, caused the water to be the higher, which was a great helpe to vs. This day we found the pole to be eleuated 68. degrees 40. minuts. In the afternoone the William and we did set saile, seeking to cleere our selues of the said sholdes, both our boates being on head of vs, sounding to seeke for the deepest water: we gat into 6. 7. and 8. fathams, the sands being without vs: we bare to the southwards, and the William bare more to the Eastwards. The night being at hand, and the wind south east, we lay southwest, and south and by West, and came to 10. and 12. fathoms, and suddenly we came to five fathoms, which was the head of the land, whereupon we were before on ground: then we did cast about to the eastward, for deeper water, and gate in short time 16. and 20. and 23. fathoms. 68. deg. 40. mi.

The 22. in the morning, we cast about, and went southwest and by south. This morning wee lost sight of the William, vnder our lee, as farre as we could see her, and in a great fogge wee lost sight of her, and since we haue not seene her. Thus we continued till three in the afternoone, then we bare West northwest, and West and by north, all the night following. Here they lost sight of the William, where she was cast away.

The 23. day, at five in the morning, we had 27. fathoms: afterwards we had sight of the coast of Vgori, and at 7. in the afternoone, the wind came to the East, and we laye West and by north: running this course, we came to fiue fathoms, thwart the Baye of Morzouetz, then we lay north northeast off: then the wind came north, and we lay East, and East and by north, and sometimes to the Westwards againe, vntill we came to 40. fathoms. Afterwards we lay East and East and by north, all the same night. Vigori. The bay of Morzouetz.

The 24. day, we continued our course northwest, till we came to 11. fathoms, then wee laye to the northwards, vntill midnight, and then we came to 40. fathoms, then the wind came to the north east, and we lay northwest along.

The 25. day, the wind being north northeast a very stiffe gale, we continued our course northwest. At 4. in the morning we sounded, and had 36. fathoms.

The 26. day, the wind at northeast, we continued our course northwest. This day we found the pole eleuated 70. degrees, 40. minuts. 70. deg. 40. mi.

The 27. day, at 7. in the morning, we had sight of land, which we made to be Kegor, the winde being East, we haled north and by West, and North northwest, and North, to double the North Cape.

The 28. at three in the morning, we set our course northwest, and ranne so all the day, and all the night following. The same night the wind came to the Southwest.

The 29. at 5. in the afternoone, the wind being at West, we did put into a certaine sound. The towne by it is called Vngon, and ankered in 25. fathoms faire sand. The same night we gate in fresh water, which we had neede of. A towne called Vngon.

The 30. day in the morning, the wind came to the Northeast little wind: we set saile, and with our our boate on head, we gate to the sea. In the afternoone the wind came to the East, and we came West northwest.

The North Cape doubled. The 31. day, the wind at East southeast, at noone, wee doubled the North Cape, and haled along West all the day following, and at night we went West southwest.

September.

The first day, the wind at Northeast, with thicke fogge, we continued our course West southwest.

The second day, at three in the morning, we doubled Fowlnes. All this day the wind being variable, we did little good. In the euening the wind came to Southwest, and we bare West northwest, and northwest. And betweene nine and ten of the clocke in the night, the winde came to the West, a very stiffe gale, that we were faine to lay it on hull to the northwards, for the space of two howres. After we laid her head to the southwards, and at breake of day, wee had sight of South Fowlnes.

The third day, in the morning, we bare with the foresaid land, and harbored our selues among the lowe Islands in 4. or 5. fathoms water.

The fourth day, the wind at South southwest, reasonable weather.

The 5. 6. and 7. daies very foule weather, with vehement blastes, and such raine, that we thought our selues blest to be in harbour.

The eight day reasonable weather, the wind being West and by North.

The ninth day, the wind at East, at twelue of the clocke, we set saile, and by three in the afternoone wee cleered our selues of the lande, and went West Southwest, and so continued all the night.

The tenth day, the wind at East northeast, a faire gale, we continued our course aforesaid. This day we found the pole elcuated 69. degrees, 20. minuts.

The 11. day, the wind northeast in the afternoone, and all the night calme. This day we found the pole elcuated 68. degrees, 16. minuts.

The 12. day, the winde South southwest, and in the afternoone south, and to the Eastwards. At three in the afternoone, we did put into an harbour to the southwards of Lawestafte, where we roade, hauing a ledge of rockes to windward of vs, and continued there till the 17. day, hauing the weather for the most part very tempestuous, with great showers, the winde continuing all the time betweene the South and the West.

The 17. day at noone, the wind came to the Northeast, and at two in the afternoone, wee set saile, and bare along southwest, all the same night.

The 18. day, we went south southwest, the wind being north northeast. This day the pole was elcuated 66. degrees, 30. minuts.

The 19. day, the wind at East northeast. This day the pole was elcuated 64. degrees, 50. minuts. At 6. in the afternoone the wind came to the East southeast, we went South and by East, all the same night.

The 20. day, in the morning, the wind came to the East. We founde the pole elcuated 63. degrees, 30. minuts, all the night was calme.

The 21. day, all the forenoone, the wind at southeast, and in the afternoone it came to the south southwest, and all the night variable with wind.

The 22. in the morning, the wind at South, all the afternoone and night following, calme.

Ramsdall. The 23. day, the wind south, at foure in the afternoone, wee put into a sound called Ramsdall, where we found many lowe Islands, and good sounds, without the high land. That was the first place that we sawe any wood growe on vpon this coast. We continued in the said harbour, vntill the 28. day, the weather being very stormie and rainie.

Where wood was first on the coast.

The 28. in the morning, we set saile, the wind being East northeast, and haled along southwest. In the afternoone the wind came to the South, then we cast about, and by five of the clocke gate harbour, and roade vnder an Island all night.

The 29. day, we shifted from the aforesaid Island, into a better place, betweene two Islands, where we roade more quietly.

Thus by reason of contrary windes, we were forced to stay longer vpon the coast of Norway, then we wished: so that it was the 25. day of December, before we could get home into the mouth of the Thames.

A letter of Gerardus Mercator, written to M. Richard Hakluyt of Oxford, touching the intended discouerie of the Northeast passage. Anno 1580.

LIteræ tuæ (vir humanissime) 19. Iunij demum mihi redditæ fuerunt: vehemẽter dolui visis illis tantam, non modo temporis, sed multò magis tempestiuæ instructionis iacturam factam esse. Optassem, Arthurum Pet de quibusdam non leuibus ante suum discessum prænonitum fuisse. Expeditissima sane per Orientem in Cathaium est nauigatio: & sæpe miratus sum, eam fœliciter inchoatam, desertam fuisse, velis in Occidentẽ translatis, postquam plus quàm dimidium itineris vestri iam notum haberent. Nam post Insulam Vaigats, & Noua Zembla continuò ingens sequitur sinus, quem ab ortu Tabin immane promontorium complectitur. In hunc medium maxima illabuntur flumina, quæ vniuersam Regionẽ Sericam perluentia, vtque existimo, in intima continentis vsq; magnis nauigijs peruia, facillimam rationẽ exhibent quaslibet merces ex Cataio, Mangi, Mien, cæterisq; circumfusis regnis contrahendi, atque in Angliam deportandi. Cæterùm cùm non temere eam nauigationem intermissam crederem, opinabar ab Imperatore Russorum & Moscouiæ obstaculum aliquod interiectum fuisse: quod si verò cum illius gratia vlterior illac nauigatio detur, suaderẽ profectò non primùm Tabin promontorium quærere, atque explorare, sed sinum hunc atque flumina, in ijsq; portum aliquem commodissimum, stationémq; Anglicis Mercatoribus deligere, ex quo deinceps maiore opportunitate, minoribúsq; periculis Tabin promontorium, & totius Cathai circumnauigatio indagari posset. Esse autem ingens in Septentrionem excurrens promontorium Tabin, non ex Plinio tantùm, verùm & alijs scriptoribus, & tabulis aliquot (licèt rudius depictis) certum habeo. Polum etiam Magnetis haud longè vltra Tabin situm esse, certis Magnetis obseruationibus didici: circa quem & Tabin plurimos esse scopulos, difficilémq; & periculosam nauigationem existimo: difficiliorem tamen ad Cathaium accessum fore opinor, ea qua nũc via in Occidentem tentatur. Propinquior enim fiet hæc nauigatio polo Magnetis, quàm altera, ad quem propiùs accedere non puto tutum esse. Quia verò Magnes alium quàm Mundi polum habet, quo ex omni parte respicit: quò propiùs ad eum acceditur, eò directorium illud Nauticũ magnetis virtute imbutum, magis à Septentrione deuiat, nunc in Occidentem, nunc in Orientem, prout quis vel orientalior, vel occidentalior est illo Meridiano, qui per vtrumq; polum Magnetis, & Mundi ducitur. Mirabilis est hæc varietas, & quæ nauigantẽ plurimùm fallere potest, nisi hanc Magnetis inconstantiam nôrit, & ad poli eleuationem per instrumenta subinde respiciat. In hac re si non sit instructus D. Arthurus, aut ea sit dexteritate, vt deprehenso errore eum inuenire & castigare possit, timeo ne deuias faciat ambages, tempus illum fallat, & semiperacto negotio, à gelu præoccupetur: Aiunt enim sinum illum fortiùs quotannis congelari. Quod si contingat, hoc quod consultius mihi visum fuit, proximum illi erit refugium, vt in eo sinu, ijsq; fluminibus quæ dixi, portum quærat, & per Legatum aliquem, cum magno Cham, nomine sereniſsimæ Reginæ notitiam, amicitiámque contrahat, quam opinor Maximo orbis Imperatori gratam, imo gratissimam fore propter remotissima cõmercia. Opinor ab ostijs Bautisi & Oechardi fluminum maximorum, vsq; ad Cambalu Regiam summã Chami, non vltra 300. miliaria Germanica esse, & iter sumendum per Ezinam vrbem regni Tangut, quæ 100. tantùm miliarijs Germanicis ab ostijs distare videtur, & paret Magno Cham.

Postulata Mercatoris, de quibus certior fieri cupit.

Valde optarem cognoscere, quàm altè communiter exurgat æstus maris in eo Moscouiæ portu, quem vestri pro statione habent, & in alijs versùs orientem locis vsq; ad Tabin. Item, an mare in hoc districtu semper in vnam partem, videlicet Orientem, aut Occidentẽ fluat, an verò pro ratione æstuũ fluat, & refluat, in medio inquam canali, hoc est, an ibi sex horis in occasum, & iterum sex in ortum fluat, an verò semper in eandem partem: aliæ enim speculationes non parum vtiles hinc dependent. Idem optarem à D. Frobiscero in occidentem obseruari. Quod ad sinum Merosro, & Canadam, ac Nouam Franciam attinet, ea in meis tabulis desumpta sunt ex quadam Tabula marina, quæ à quodam sacerdote ex earum ditionum Naucleri peritissimi Galli descriptione excerpta fuit, & illustrissimo Principi Georgio ab Austria episcopo Leodiẽsi oblata: Non dubito, quin quantùm ad littorum situm attinet & poli eleuationem, ad veritatem ea quàm proximè accedant. Habebat enim ea tabula præter scalam graduum latitudinis per medium sui extensam, aliam præterea particularem Nouæ Franciæ littoribus adiunctam, qua deprauatæ latitudines, occasione erroris Magnetis ibi commissæ, castigarẽtur. Iacobi Cnoyen, Buscoducensis itinerariũ per omnem Asiam, Affricã, & Septentrionẽ, olim mihi Amicus Antuerpiæ ab alio mutuò acceptum cõmunicauit, eo vsus sum, & reddidi: post multos annos eũdem ab amico repetij, & reminisci ille non potuit à quo accepisset. Guilielmi Tripolitani & Ioãnis de plano Carpini scripta non vidi, tantùm excerpta ex illis quędã in alijs scriptis libris inueni.

Abelfedæ Epitome gaudeo verti, vtinam cito habeamus.

Hæc (mi Domine) tuis respondenda putaui: si quid est aliud quod à me desideres, libentissimè tibi communicabo: hoc vicissim amanter à tua humanitate petens, vt quæ ex vtriusque nauigationis cursu obseruata nanciscì poteris, mihi communices, penes me pro tuo arbitrio manebunt omnia, & quæcunq; inde collegero, fideliter ad te perscribam, si forte ad pulcherrimum, vtilissimúmq; orbi Christiano hoc nauigationis institutum aliquid opis & consilij adferre possint. Bene vale, vir doctissime. Duisburgi in Cliuia, 28. Iulij, 1580.

Redeunte Arthuro, quæso discas ab illo quæ optaui, & num alicubi in suo itinere, dulce mare, aut parum salsum inuenerit: suspicor enim mare inter Noua Zembla, & Tabin dulce esse.

T. H. paratissimus quantus quantus sum, Gerardus Mercator.

¶ The same in English.

SIr, I receiued your letters the 19. of June: it grieued me much that vpon the sight of them the time being spent, I could not giue any conuenient instructions: I wish Arthur Pet had bene informed before his departure of some speciall pointes. The voyage to Cathaio by the East, is doubtlesse very easie and short, and I haue oftentimes marueiled, that being so happily begun, it hath bene left of, and the course changed into the West, after that more then halfe of your voyage was discouered. For beyond the Iland of Vaigats, and Noua Zembla, there followeth presently a great baie, which on the left side is inclosed with the mightie promontorie Tabin. Into the middes hereof there fall great riuers, which passing through the whole countrey of Serica, and being as I thinke nauigable with great vessels into the heart of the continent, may bee an easie meanes whereby to traffique for all maner of merchandize, and transport them out of Cathaio Mangi, Mien, and other kingdoms thereabouts into England: But considering with my selfe that that nauigation was not intermitted, but vpon great occasion, I thought that the Emperour of Russia and Moscouie had hindered the proceeding thereof. If so bee that with his grace and fauour a further nauigation may be made, I would counsell them certainely not first to seeke out the promontorie Tabin, but to search this baie and riuers aforesayd, and in them to picke and chuse out some conuenient porte and harborough for the English merchaunts, from whence afterward with more opportunitie and lesse perill the promontorie Tabin, and all the coast of Cathaio may be discouered. And that there is such a huge promontorie called Tabin, I am certainly perswaded not onely out of Plinie, but also other writers, and some Maps (though somewhat rudely drawen): and that the pole of the Loadstone is not farre beyond Tabin, I haue learned by the certayne obseruations of the Loadstone: about which pole and Tabin, I thinke there are very many rockes, and very hard and dangerous sailing: and yet a more hard and difficile passage I thinke it to bee this way which is now attempted by the West, for it is neerer to the pole of the Loadstone, to the which I thinke it not safe to approch. And because the Loadstone hath another pole then that of the worlde, to the which from all partes it hath a respect, the neerer you come vnto it, the more the needle of the compasse doth varie from the North, sometimes to the West, and sometimes to the East, according as a man is to the Eastward or to the Westward of that Meridian, that passeth by both the poles of the Magnes and the World.

The best course to be taken in discoueries.

This is a strange alteration and very apt to deceiue the Sailer, vnlesse hee know the vncertaincie and variation of the compasse, and take the eleuation of the pole sometimes with his instruments. If master Arthur bee not well prouided in this behalfe, or of such dexteritie, that perceiuing the errour he be not able to correct the same, I feare least in wandering vp and downe he lose his time, and be ouertaken with the ice in the midst of the enterprise. For that gulfe, as they say, is frosen euery yeere very hard, which if it be so, the best counsell I could giue for their best safetie, were to seeke some harborough in that baie, and those riuers whereof I haue spoken, and by some Ambassador to make friendship and acquaintance with the great Cham, in name of the Queenes maiestie, which I beleeue will be grateful to the mightiest Emperour in the world, yea most excellent for the length of the traffique, and great distance of the places. I thinke from the mouths of the mightie riuers Bautisus & Oechardus to Cambalu the chiefest seat of the prince, the Cham, there are not past 300. Germane miles, and to passe by Ezina a citie of the kingdom of Tangut, which seemeth to be but 100. German miles frō the mouthes of ỳ said riuers, & is subiect to great Cham.

I would gladly know how high the sea doth flowe commonly in the porte of Moscouia where your men do harborough, and in other Easterly places vnto Tabin. And also whether the sea in this streight do flow alwaies one way to the East or to the West, or whether it doe ebbe and flowe according to the maner of the tides in the middle of the chanell, that is to ſay, whether it flow there ſtre bowers into the Weſt, and as may backe againe to the Eaſt, for hereupon depend other ſpeculations of importance: I would wiſh M. Frobiſher to obſerue the ſame Weſtwards. Concerning the gulfe of Meroſro and Canada, and new France which are in my mappes, they were taken out of a certaine ſea card drawen by a certaine prieſt out of the deſcription of a Frenchman, a Pilot very ſkilfull in thoſe partes, and preſented to the worthie prince George of Auſtria, biſhop of Liege: for the trending of the coaſt, and the eleuation of the pole, I doubt not but they are very neere the truth: for the Charte had, beſide a ſcale of degrees of latitude paſſing through the middeſt of it, another particularly annexed to the coaſt of New France, wherewith the errour of the latitudes committed by reaſon of the variation of the compaſſe might be corrected. The hiſtorie of the voyage of Iacobus Cnoyen Buſcoducenſis throughout all Aſia, Affrica, and the North, was lent me in time paſt by a friend of mine at Antwerpe. After I had vſed it, I reſtored it againe: after many yeeres I required it againe of my friend, but hee had forgotten of whom hee had borrowed it. The writings of Guiliemus Tripolitanus, and Ioannes de Plano Carpini, I neuer ſaw: onely I found certaine pieces of them in other written hand bookes. I am glad the Epitomie of Abelfada is tranſlated, I would we might haue it ſhortly.

Upon the obſeruations of the tides depend great ſpeculations.

Thus much Sir I thought good to anſwere your letters: if there bee any thing els that you would require of me, I will moſt willingly communicate it with you, crauing this likewiſe of your curteſie, that whatſoeuer obſeruations of both theſe voiages ſhall come to your hands, you would impart them to me, they ſhall all remaine with mee according to your diſcretion and pleaſure, and whatſoeuer I gather of them, I will faithfully ſignifie vnto you by letters, if happily they may yeeld any helpe or light vnto this moſt excellent enterpriſe of nauigation, and moſt profitable to our chriſtian common wealth. Fare you well moſt learned friend. At Duisburge in Cluia, 28. of Julie, the yeere, 1580.

At Arthur his returne I pray you learne of him the things I haue requeſted, and whether any where in his voiage, he found the ſea freſh, or not very ſalt: for I ſuppoſe the Sea betweene Noua Zembla and Tabin to be freſh.

Yours to my power to be commanded, Gerardus Mercator.

The firſt of Iune, 1582. London.

Inſtructions made by the companie of Engliſh merchants for diſcouerie of new trades, vnto Richard Gibs, William Biggat, Iohn Backhouſe, William Freeman, Iohn Hall, and Iames Woodcocke, &c. maſters of the 9. ſhips, and one barke that wee haue freighted for a voiage with them to be made (by the grace of God) from hence to S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, and backe againe: which ſhips being now in the riuer of Thames, are preſently readie to depart vpon the ſayd voyage, with the next apt windes that may ſerue thereunto, and with this Fleete afterwards was ioyned M. Chriſtopher Carlile with the Tyger.

FOraſmuch as the number of ſhips which we purpoſe to ſend in this Fleete together for S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, is greater then at any time heretofore wee haue ſent thither, as alſo for that ſome ſpeaches are giuen out that you ſhall bee met withall by ſuch as with force and violence will aſſault you as enemies, to the ende that good order may be eſtabliſhed among you for keeping together in companie, and vniting your forces, as well for the better direction to be had in your nauigation, as alſo for your more ſafetie and ſtrength againſt the enemie, we haue thought good to appoint among you an Admirall and viceadmirall, and that all of you and euery one particularly ſhall bee bound in the ſumme of one hundred pounds to keepe company together.

2 Becauſe the Salomon is the biggeſt ſhip, beſt appointed, and of greateſt force to defend or offend the enemie, we doe therefore appoint that ſhip Admirall, which ſhall weare the flag in the maine top.

3 The Thomas Allen being a good ſhip and well appointed, and for that the maſter of her is the ancienteſt maſter of the Fleete that hath taken charge that way, we doe appoint the ſame ſhip to be Viceadmirall, and to weare the flag in the fore top.

4 And for that the maſter of the Prudence is of great experience, and knowledge in that voyage, we doe appoint that he with the maſter of the Admirall and Viceadmirall ſhall conferre, conſult and agree vpon the courſes and directions that ſhall be vſed in this voiage, and it ſhall be lawfull full vnto the maſter of the Admirall, with the conſent of M. Gibs, and M. Biggat, or one of them to make his courſes and directions from time to time during the whole voyage, and all the fleete are to follow and obſerue the ſame without ſtraying or breaking of company at any time vpon the penaltie before ſpecified.

5 The appointing of the ſhips for Admirall and Vice admirall, and thoſe men to conſult and agree vpon the courſes and directions of the voyage, as aforeſaid, hath bene done by the conſents and with the liking of you all, and therefore we doubt not but that you will all carefully and willingly obſerue the premiſſes.

6 Item, we haue thought good to put you in mind, that at ſuch times as you may conueniently from time to time, you doe aſſemble and meete together, to conſider, conſult, and determine vpon ſuch articles as you ſhall thinke neceſſarie to be propounded touching your beſt ſafetie and defence againſt all forces that may bee offered you in this voiage, as well outwardes bound, and while you ſhall remaine in the roade and baie of S. Nicholas, as alſo homewardes bound, and that which you ſhal agree vpon, or that which moſt of you ſhall conſent vnto, cauſe it to be ſet downe in writing for record, which may ſerue for an acte amongſt your ſelues to binde you all to obſerue the ſame.

7 We haue appointed Iames Woodcocke in the ſmal barke to attend vpon you, and to receiue his directions from you. You are therefore to remember well what conference and talke hath bene had with you here before your going touching the ſayd barke, to what purpoſes ſhe may beſt ſerue, and the maner how to imploy her, and thereupon to giue your order and direction vnto him, as the time and place ſhall require.

8 Item, if you ſhal vnderſtand as you are outwards bound, that the enemie is gone before you to S. Nicholas, remember what aduiſe hath bene giuen you for your ſtay at Berozoua Vſtia, till you haue by eſpials viewed and vnderſtood the forces, and the maner of their abode at that place.

9 And if in the Sea either outwardes or homewardes, or in the time of your abode at anker at Saint Nicholas, you ſhall bee aſſaulted by force of any, as enemie whatſoeuer, you are to defend you ſelues with ſuch forces as you may or can: truſt not too farre, neither giue place to inconuenience.

10 You will not forget what conference wee had touching your paſſing outwards bound by Wardhouſe, to view & vnderſtand what you can at that place, & to ſhew your ſelues, to ſee if there be any there that haue a mind to ſpeake with you, for that we thinke it better then and thereabout, then afterwards or els where.

11 While you ſhall remaine in the road at S. Nicholas, bee circumſpect and carefull to haue your ſhips in readineſſe, and in good order alwayes, and vpon all ſuddens. The greateſt danger vnto you in that place, will be while you ſhall ſhift your ſhips: therefore you are to conſider of it, but the fitteſt time for you to doe the ſame, will bee when the winde is Southerlie off the ſhore, or calme, and at ſuch time you may the better doe it without daunger. You muſt take ſuch order among you, that your companies may bee alwayes willing and readie to helpe one the other, and appoint among your ſelues ſuch ſhips to ſhift firſt, and ſuch after, in ſuch ſort and fourme as you ſhall thinke beſt and moſt conuenient. And while they ſhall bee in diſcharging, ſhifting, and lading, let the reſt of your companies which haue not then to doe in lading or diſcharging, helpe thoſe ſhippes that ſhall haue labour to doe, as well for carying the Barkes from ſhips to the ſhore, or from ſhore to the ſhippe with your boates, as alſo for any other helpe that they ſhall haue neede of.

12 Remember what hath bene ſaid vnto you touching the moring of your ſhips, &c. for hauing aduantage againſt the enemie, if you ſhall be aſſaulted in that place.

13 See that you ſerue God, aboliſh ſwearing and gaming, bee carefull of fire and candles, &c.

14 You are to conſult and agree among your ſelues vpon ſignes, tokens, and good orders for the better keeping of companie together, and alſo the maner how and by what meanes, reſcue, aide, or helpe may be giuen by one to the other in fight, if you happen to come to it.

Thus we pray God to ſend you a proſperous voiage and ſafe returne.

The opinion of master William Burrough sent to a friend, requiring his iudgement for the fittest time of the departure of our ships towards S. Nicholas in Russia.

WHereas you request mee to perswade the companie not to send their shippes from hence before the fine of May, I doe not thinke the same so good a course for them to obserue: for you know that the sooner wee send them hence, the sooner we may looke for their returne. If we send them in the beginning of May, then may they be at S. Nicholas by the fine of the same moneth: and by that time the greatest part of your lading of necessitie must be come down, especially the flaxe: but if it should fall out so lateward a breaking vp of the riuer of Dwina, that by the end of May the goods cannot bee brought to S. Nicholas, yet this is alwayes to be accounted for certaine, that before our shippes can come thither, the goods may bee brought downe to that place: and if through ice the shippes bee kept backe any time, the losse and charge of that time toucheth not the companie at all, but the owners of the ships, and yet will the Owners put that in aduentuoe, rather than tarie longer time before their going hence.

Now seeing by sending our ships hence in the beginning of May, their arriuall at S. Nicholas may be at the ende of the same moneth, and remaining thirtie dayes there, they may bee laden and come thence by the last of June, and returne home hither by the 10. of August with commodities to serue the market then, it connot be denied but we should reape thereby great commoditie.

But it may be obiected, that if all our ships bee sent then to returne as aforesaid, you shall not bee able to send vs in so much coydage, Ware and Oyles, as otherwise you should doe if they remained a moneth longer, neither could you by that time perfect your accounts to bee sent in them as you would doe.

For answere thereunto this is my meaning, though I wish the greatest part of our shipping to goe as aforesayd, yet would I haue one good ship or two at the most well furnished in all points that should depart alwayes from hence, betweene the beginning and the 10. day of June: and the same to be condicioned withall to remaine at S. Nicholas from the first arriuall there vntill the middest of August, or to bee dispatched thence sooner, at the will and liking of our factors for the same: by this order these commodities following may ensue.

1 You may haue our commodities there timely to send vp the riuer before it waxe shallow, to be dispersed in the countrey at your pleasure.

2 The greatest part of our goods may be returned hither timely to serue the first markets.

3 Our late ships remaining so long here, may serue to good purpose, for returning answere of such letters as may be sent ouer land, and receiued here before their departure.

4 Their remayning so late with you shall satisfie your desire for perfecting your accounts, and may bring such coydage, Ware, Oile, and other commodities, as you can prouide before that time: and chiefly may serue vs in stead to bring home our goods that may be sent vs from Persia.

Now seeing it may be so many wayes commodious to the company to obserue this order, without any charge vnto them, I wish that you put to your helping hand to further the same.

ELizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. to the moſt excellent Prince and Lord, Iohn Baſiliwich, by the ſame grace of God, King and great Duke of all Ruſſia, Volodomere, Moſcouie, and Nouogrod, King of Caſſan and Aſtracan, Lord of Pleſcoe, and great Duke of Smolenſcoe, of Tuer, Vgor, and Permie, Valea, Bolhar, and others, Lord and great Duke of Nouogrod in the lowe countrey of Cherniga, Razan, Poloſo, Rotſtaue, Iroſlaue, Belozer, Lifland, Oudor, Ohdor, and Condene, and Gouernour of all the lande of Seberia, and of the North partes and others, her deereſt brother and friend, Salutations.

Moſt

Most excellent Prince, most deare brother and friend, by those things which the worthy ambassador of your excellencie declared vnto vs, we haue vnderstood how kindely it would be taken, if we should send to your excellency an ambassador from vs, with commandement and instructions. In which matter your honourable request hath so much pleased vs, that we could not any manner of way satisfie our selues, except we performed the same. And hauing purposed with our selfe so to doe, we thought of, and remembred Ierome Bowes knight, a gentleman of qualitie of our houshold, a man very much beloued of vs, whome at this present we send vnto your Maiestie, and to whose wisedome and faithfulnesse we haue committed all, whatsoeuer we take to appertaine to the aduancement of both our honours indifferently. In the discharge of which seruice, we doubt not but that all care and diligence shall be vsed on his part, so that we intreat your Maiestie to giue him credence in the prosecuting of those thinges which he hath from vs in commandement, no lesse then to our selfe if we were present. And whereas Robert Jacob, doctor of phisicke, is a man very deare vnto vs, whome the last yeere we sent vnto your excellency, we desire that he may haue that fauor and estimation with you, which good princes thinke a most honest and vertuous man worthie of: for had we not carryed great respect to our mutuall friendshippe, and indeuor to gratifie your Maiestie, we should in no case haue parted with him. And seeing we continue still the same good will towards your excellency, we do euen promise to our selfe your honorable kindnesses towards him: and we pray the almighty God to preserue your Maiesty in good safetie and health. Giuen at our pallace of Greenewich, the 19 day of June, in the yeere of our Lord 1583, and of our reigne, the fiue and twentith.

Doctor Jacob

Your Maiesties good sister.

The maner of the preferring of sutes in Russia, by the example of our English merchants bill, exhibited to the Emperour.

IOhn Basiliwich, Lord, King, and great Duke of all Russia, the English merchants, William, sonne of Thomas, with his company sue vnto, Lord, in the 7082 yeere of the worlds creation, thy Maiesties treasurer, named Gregorie Meekeetich Borozden, tooke of vs for thy vse 12 poods of loafe sugar, prised at 8 robles the pood, which sugar was sent to the ‖ Sloboda. Item, the said Gregorie treasurer, tooke of vs for thy Maiestie 200 reames of paper, prised at 20 altines the reame, for all which the money hath not beene payd which amounteth to 216 robles.

‖ The Emperours house of recreation.

And in the 84 yeere thy diake Stephan Lighachdo, tooke of vs for thy Maiestie copper plates, for the summe of 1032 robles and one fourth part vnpayd for.

Also in the said 84 yeere thy Maiesties diakes called Iuan Blasghoy, and Iuan Sobakin, tooke of vs for thy vse, sundry commodities, and haue not payd 630 robles, the rest of the money due for the sayd goods.

In the 85 yeere thy Maiesties treasurer Peter Gholouen tooke of vs for thy Maiestie, cloth of sundry sorts, and hath not payd of the money due therefore 538 robles.

In the 88 yeere, thy diakes Andrea Shalkan, and Istomay Yeuskoy, tooke of vs lead for thy Maiesty, to the value of 267 robles and a halfe not payd.

And in the same yere thy Maiesties diake Borees Gregoriwich, had for thy vse 15 broad clothes of diuers sorts, prised at 210 robles, wherof 90 robles are vnpayd.

Also in the said 88 yere thy diake Andrea Shalkan, tooke from vs 1000 robles for ther (Lord) in ready money, yet we know not whether by thy Maiesties appointment.

And also in the 89 yeere (Lord) thy diake Andrea Shalkan, tooke from vs for thy Maiestie 500 robles, we know not whether by thy Maiesties order or no, because that thy authorized people doe peerely take away from vs, neither do they giue vs right in any cause.

All the money (Lord) which is not payd vs out of thy Maiesties treasury for our commodities or wares, with the money taken from vs by Andrea Shalkan, is 4273 robles 25 altines.

Right noble king and Lord, shew thy mercy, and cause the money to be payd vs which is owing for our goods, as also that which hath beene taken from vs: extend thy fauor, King and Lord.

The

The Ambassage of Sir Hierome Bowes to the Emperour of Moscouie 1583.

BEfore I enter into the declaration of mine ambassage into Moscouie, it shall not be amisse briefely to declare the occasion therof. Therefore it is to be vnderstood that Iohn Basiliwich the Emperour of Russia, in the yeere 1582, sent ouer into England, as his ambassadour, one Pheodor Andrewich Spisemskie, a verie discreet and aged councellor of his, accompanyed with a secretarie named Neodatza Gawralo, who were wafted hether with a warlike shippe called the Tyger, wherof one M. Christopher Carlile, a gentlman indued with many good partes, was partly for that, and partly for the safe walting of the rest of the fleete against the Dane appointed captaine.

The aforesaid ambassadour, with all his traine, to the number of aboue twentie persons, hauing beene entertained and vsed heere very honourablie both by her Maiestie and her subiects, besought her Highnesse to send an ambassadour home with him vnto his Maister, with commission to conclude such matters of importance as he was sent about into these parts. Whereupon I was chosen for that seruice: and after I had receiued order for my preparation, and had my commission deliuered vnto me, with two letters from her Maiestie to the Emperour, & the articles here agreed vpon with his ambassadour, as also mine instructions, with the doleances and petitions of our English merchants, I tooke my leaue in Court to proceed in my voyage. And hauing assembled my company together, which were in number, foxtie persons, whereof about ten were gentlemen, besides one M. Cole a learned man of Oxford which was my preacher, I embarked my selfe the 22 of June 1583 at Harewich in a tall shippe of 200 tunnes, called the Centurion, and the Moscouit ambassadour and the secretarie were placed in another shippe by themselues, and some of the chiefe of their company: the rest were bestowed in other roomes conuenient. Thus our fleet being ten sailes in the whole number, we committed our selues to God and the seas, and arriued in safety at S. Nicholas bay in the space of a iust moneth, to witte the 23 of Julie next insuing. June 22. June 23.

Vpon our arriuall the Moscouit ambassadour was ioyfully receiued and lodged at the monasterie of S. Nicholas. And I was very well entertayned at our English house in Rose island, where I remayned fiue or six dayes to repose my selfe and my weary company. From thence I passed vp the riuer of Dwina to Colmogro, drawne with men against the streame in large boats of that countrey. At Colmogro I stayed the space of fiue weeks, to witte all August, and part of September, in a certaine small Island, which vpon mine aboad so long in it, is still called Bowes island by our nation. From Colmogro I passed vp against the streame very slowly towards Vologda, and arriued not there vntill the 22 of September. At this towne a gentleman sent from the Emperour, receiued me, whose name was Protou Popou: he presented me with two geldings, with saddle and furniture after their countrey fashion. I was tolde that the horses were of those that were for the Emperours owne saddle. August. Septemb. 22.

I stayed at Vologda foure dayes, and then tooke iourney toward Yeraslaue, where mette me from the Emperour, a Duke well accompanyed, which presented me a coch and tenne geldings for change. I rested at Yeraslaue sixe dayes, and then set forward towards Moscua, where I arriued the first of October. There met me before I came at the towne by two miles, foure gentlemen of the Emperours, accompanyed, I geese, with about two hundred horses. After diuers salutations, they tolde me they had to say to me from the Emperour: I answered that it was welcome, and requested them to deliuer what they had in charge. Thus after the rehearsing of a long stile, both they and my selfe being lighted from our horses, they deliuered what they had to say, which were nothing but welcomes and messages of fauour: so we went agayne to horsbacke, and they brought me to my lodging in Mosco. I was not in my lodging one quarter of an houre, but there came a gentleman from the Emperour, and brought me a supper readie dyest of the Emperours meat. And after rehearsing of the Emperours stile, and deliuerie of his message, he sate downe to supper, where he would haue driuen me to haue tasted of euery sundrie meats and drinks of the Emperours goodnesse (as hee termed it) or els he would say, that I did not accept it as I should. A Duke sent to meet him to Peraslaue. October 1. A supper sent from the Emperour.

The Friday next after, being the fourth of October, there came to me from the Emperour a principall secretarie, who brought me a dinner from the Emperour, meaning himselfe to dine with me. He came, giuing me a very short warning, and so founde me sicke in my bedde: howbeit there was no remedie, but the dinner must be set vpon a table at my beddes side, and so it was.

And

And yet were they not so satisfied therewith, but I must either take and cast my gowne about my shoulders, and sit vp, and taste of somewhat, or els the Emperour would imagine that I loued him not, and that I scorned his sending to me. Thus I was faine to satisfie in part these vnreasonable requests: and so we two departed in kindnesse.

The 14 of October there came to visite me another secretarie, whose name was Sauio Frolle, and to aske me if I had any secret matter to send to the Emperour, to whome I answered that I had none, and so after a little space he left me.

He was sent for to Court.

The next day the Emperour sent a gentleman to me, and would haue had me to haue come to Court the Sunday next following, but I was sicke and could not: but the Tuesday then next following, being the 16. of October, I sent to intreat that I might see his Maiestie on the Thursday next insuing: which was granted me: yet the very next day I had a countermand, and that the Thursday seuenight I should come to Court.

Thursday being come, which was the 24 of October, there came gentlemen to my lodging to accompany me to Court, where I dined in the presence of the Emperour, and all my men at another boord, in the presence of the Emperor also.

When I was set at the table, the Emperor commanded a company of gentlemen to sit downe by me, to accompany me as he sayd, and I had vpon the sudden no comely meanes to shunne it.

I was no sooner returned to my lodging, after my going from Court, but the Emperor sent after me a gentleman of his, and good store of drinke, to pottuat (as they terme it) me and my people: so was I forced to sit drinking with them, till some of vs had too much.

The next Tuesday following, being the 29 of the moneth, there came to me the wonted company that inuited me before, to summon me to Court.

Wednesday being the 33 day of October, the gentlemen came for me, and so I went againe to Court, and was mette (as the day before) with two sundrie companyes of gentlemen, the one of better degree then the other: and so was conueyed to the Emperors presence, who straightway after I had done my duety to him, bad me sit downe, without vsing any other speeches or entertainment vnto me: neither had I sitten two minuts of an houre, but the Emperor sent his chancellor to me, to will me to retyre my selfe to another chamber, whether I was guided by my woonted companions.

I had not beene long in that other chamber, but there came to me Mekita Romanowich, Bodan Belskoy, Andrew Shalcan the chancellor, all three chiefe councellors, and Sauio Frolle principall secretarie.

They demanded of me what it was that I had to say to the Emperour from the Queene my mistresse. I answered that I was rather sent to hearke then to speake: for it is not vnknowen to all your honours (quoth I) that the Emperour hath sent to the Queene my mistresse, intreating her to send a gentleman of hers vnto him, naming what kinde of person he desired to be sent towards him: and for such an one as he desired to be sent, her Maiestie hath allowed me, commanding me hither to knowe his Maiesties pleasure: as then I was ready to doe his Maiestie what seruice I might.

They tolde mee that the Queene had written to the Emperour, that shee had deliuered her minde in all pointes, that had beene spoken of, and that I shoulde resolue his Maiestie in euery thing.

I tolde them that I was made priuie to thus much, that the Emperour had sent to the Queene to haue a perpetuall league with her Maiestie, and that his ambassadour had deliuered the articles of his Maiesties desire to the Queene, and the Queene had caused her answere to euery article to be deliuered to the Emperours ambassadour, to be presented to his Maiestie, as I well knewe they were: I therefore looked that rather there should be somewhat sayd to me, touching the liking or misliking of those articles, then any thing (till then) to be looked for from me.

They yet replyed, that it was the course in all partes, that the ambassadours should deliuer the cause of their comming: I answered that I knew it well, but that case was altered in my comming, in as much as I was sent for, and (in all likelihood) to haue somewhat to be sayd to me: by this time they seemed to finde the argument reasonable, saying they would goe tell the Emperour what I had sayd.

Ere long they returned with this answere from the Emperour, that now the morning was well spent, so as I could not conueniently speake with the Emperour any more that day, but the next time that I came to Court, I shoulde, and that against then they would haue their answere ready to the articles, and so left me: and I returned to my lodging with such like farewell as I had welcome, sauing that I saw the Emperour no more that day.

The

The Tuesday next following, being the 21st of November, I was summoned by my wonted company, to be at the Court the next day: and the next day the gentlemen, according to their former woont, came for me to my lodging.

When I came to Court, and into the Emperours presence, I had no sooner saluted him, and that he saw me draw neere vnto him, as I did, misliking my former intertainement, he sent his chancellor (besides that he bad me himselfe in his language) to bidde me sit downe, which to do I must go backe againe, and further from him: which misliking much, as I did the day before, when I was at Court, I caused the interpretour to tell the Emperour that I had rather stand where I stood, then sit where he willed me to sit: but notwithstanding my speeches, he would needs haue me to sit downe, and so I did.

I was almost no sooner set, but the Emperour sent his chancellor, as he did the other time before, to will me to retyre to another place, which place was the same chamber where I had beene the other time before, and was the councell chamber: where the same onely councellor came againe to me, and our questions tended all to the articles of the league, which they amongst them did read ouer, without challenging of any, sauing that which touched the sending to that prince that should become the Emperours enemie, to desist from his wrong doing: which they alleaged would aske so long space, as in the meane time the Emperour might sustaine irrecouerable hinderance.

I told them that in that poynt the Queenes Maiesty had drawen her selfe as neere to satisfie the Emperours desire as she might in reason, honor and conscience: and did make her reckoning that the Emperour would take it in great good part, that shee had drawne her consent so neere vnto all his requests. Whereunto they answered nothing: but fell off, and entred into the article of Englishe merchauntes sole trade to the North partes of Russia, and to the riuer of Dwina.

The article concerning the English sole trade to Dwina & the bay of S. Nichol.

They seemed to thinke it a very hard request to haue this countrey shut vp from the haunt of all strangers, and not to consent to, that this one Dutch merchant, Iohn de Wale, might traffike as now he did.

Iohn de Wale a Dutchman had great traffike to S. Nicholas.

Amongst other replies, I did answere them, that the Queenes Maiesty did aske nothing of the Emperour, but did onely put him in remembrance to maintaine his promise, and that sith neither her Maiesty nor her subiects, had deserued otherwise then well, at the Emperors hands, he would ratifie and strengthen the olde and first priuilege, which vpon they well deseruing it at his hands, he thought them woorthie of: and did graunt vnto them franck and freely long since.

Hereupon we had many speeches, for in this, and the other I thinke we spent nigh three howres, and so left off without any conclusion vntill another day.

Vpon the fifteenth of November my wonted inuiters came to summon me to Court: I answered that I was very ready to obay the Emperour, but the next morrow was the day when the Queene my mistresse came to the crowne, and we (as we had great cause) did thinke it a happy day, and kept it festiuall (as it were) and I had already inuited my countrey folks to come to make merry with me, and therefore would be glad that his Maiesty would spare me, and so he did, and reckoned it very reasonable.

Thursday the eight and twentieth day of November, I went to Court, and saw the Emperours eyes, and went to Councell as I was woont, but grewe no neerer any resolution then before.

The next Sunday after, I went to Court agayne, vpon summons, and went to the Councell chamber, as of custome, where I was neere an houre before any Councellor came to me, & when they came, hauing beene in councell halfe of that houre, betwixt their parting from the Emperour, and comming to me: they tolde me that the Emperour, thinking it not reasonable that all strangers should in all kindes of soртes be kept from, and forbidden his Northeren Seas and Hauens of that countrey, or that Iohn de Wale shoulde be driuen thence, had resolued that the English merchantes should haue their letter ratified for halfe custome with all fauors that might be done vnto them, to holde their Hauen at S. Nicholas, and their houses there, and els where, and that Iohn de Wale should enioy his Hauen or roadthereby, and to trade vp the riuer of Dwina to Mosco, and the townes towardes Mosco, but not any further, nor to any other of his countreys, as the English merchantes might freely doe to all partes: and sayd further that hee would that his other Hauens, as Cola and others shoulde bee free for the French, and all other comers to touche, barter, buye, and sell, but yet not at all to trade further into his countreyes.

The French permitted to come to Cola.

I did tell them, that if the Emperours resolution were such as they sayd, that I doubted he would would loose the English merchants, and tolde some reasons why the English merchants could not then trade thither to theyr profit, and that they were not so bound to the nation, that they would come to them to theyr hinderance, and that if the English merchants did leaue them, I was of opinion that neither Dutch nor French would come to them. I tolde them that Iohn de Wale had not mispent his time in Russia, for I found he had gotten good friends among them: and then more, touching the Dutchmens disorder vpon Dwina.

December. The Sunday following, being the eight of December, vpon summons the day before I went to Court, and so to councell, after hauing seene the Emperours eyes, as of custome, where we talked but of such matters as before, sauing that they vged me to haue named what princes the Queene did reckon to be her enemyes: I answered that I had no commission to make discourse therof, nor the Queene had as yet any occasion to proclame to whom she was enemie.

This question grewe vppon the article, that the Emperours Ambassadour or messenger might passe thorowe Englande, whereunto the Queenes answere is, so as they goe towardes suche Princes, with whome her Maiestie is in league, and that holde the same religion that she doth.

The Friday then next following, being the thirteenth day of December, I was called againe to Court, and the Emperour spake with mee, but yet with sixe or seuen of his councell about him: and I was willed before my then going to Court (by a councellour that was sent expressly to that end) that I should leaue off my sword, which I had alwayes worne till then. And further the morning when I went, those gentlemen that came for me did will me from the Emperour, that I should not haue about me neither dagger nor knife.

The Emperor findeth faults with our merchants wares. The Emperour did make cauill, that the English merchantes did bring him nothing that was good, and compared olde gaberdines of his owne of skarlet with such skarlets as the merchants had then brought him, which skarlets were in the merchants opinions, the best piece of cloth that euer came in Russia: and in truth it was the better cloth.

He found fault also with parsement laces that the merchants had also then brought him, comparing them with laces vpon his olde cloakes, such as the fashion was worne out in England twenie yeeres since. Nothing pleased that day.

The Wednesday then next following, being the eighteenth day of December, I went againe to Court after such summons as of custome, when the Emperour talked with me, and his councell about him, but not so many as before, but vsed the like cauelling as the other time he did: seeming as though he would make no more reckoning to haue any amitie with the Queenes Maiestie, vanting himselfe quite beyond his compasse, challenging me, as he had done ere then, for my too much stoutnesse, reckoning vp great numbers of ambassadours that had come to him from many great princes, but that not any that bare himselfe so stout as I did, or would challenge his place to be so great.

I desired his Maiestie to haue patience (for he had then none within my seeing) and not to iudge of me in his choller, and then he would finde that I had not at any time done ought that became me not: saying further that I had bestowed my time very ill, hauing all my life time beene brought vp in Court and forren nations, if I had not learned with what duety to vse a prince, were he euer so great.

After these extreme iarres (wherin I vsed more patience then I had) we grew calmer, and parted such friends (reconciled as it were) as presently vpon my arriuall in my lodging, he sent of his gentlemen to pacifie me, which was the greatest token of his fauour that might be, and therwithall did threaten to send me of his owne meat as soone as his Lent was ended, which should be at Christmas.

January. Vpon New yeeres day I went agayne to Court vpon summons, as of custome, hauing onely the bare intertainement that I had beene wonted to, which was onely to see the Emperours eyes, and was willed to goe to the Councell chamber, whither the councell came vnto me, and readde vnto mee the articles which had beene in Englande deliuered to the ambassadour: and when they had readde them, they asked me if I had commission to confirme them. I answered that I durst assure them, that the Queenes Maiestie woulde not goe from them, if her requestes tooke place.

They then asked mee (as they had done before then) if I had no power by commission to alter them? I answered that I had not: and tolde that the Queene my Mistresse, had therein yeelded so farre to satisfie the Emperours desire, as with honour shee might, and so farre as shee did imagine, the Emperour woulde rather haue taken extreame kindelye, then once seemed to haue misliked or disallowed anie parte thereof. And I sayde further that when when the Queenes Maiestie shoulde knowe that hee made such cauilling, and tooke her kindenesse in no better part, I would not be bounde, that shee woulde performe all that shee had saide: for that since the time that shee made these kinde offers to the Emperour, the case was much altered.

They vrged mee much to haue tolde them wherein, (on my opinion) the case was so altered: whereunto I answered, that I purposed to doe so, but not till I founde mine owne time.

All the rest of our time was wasted in those two points of Iohn de Wale, and the article of willing the enemies of the Emperour to desist from offering of wrong: vpon which both points they stacke still.

But I assured them, that the reasonable requests of her Maiestie must be answered in the one, or els the amitie would goe but slowly forward, and as for the other, I assured them that her Maiestie would be drawen no further.

The 5. of Ianuarie being wednesday, in the afternoone, he sent my wonted visitors to me, who tolde me, that the Emperour, because hee loued (quoth they) the Queene of England his sister, would send the next day a very great noble personage to speake with mee, and intreated mee that therefore I would eate betimes.

I answered, that who so came from the Emperour, shoulde bee welcome to mee: but as for my eating, I had so bad a disgestion with long keeping my chamber, as I might ill breake my ordinary times of eating.

This great man came to me the next day, but it was three of the clocke ere hee came; his name is Bodan Belscoy the Emperours chiefest fauourite, and Domine fac totum. His comming was to examine two matters: The one, touching Sacayr, who conducted mee from Colmogro to Vologda: The other, was against the Emperours officers, who were to deliuer mee my diet, and had vsed me extreeme naughtily. Bodan Belscoy a great duke.

Hee first beganne with the matter of my diet, wherein my Steward was to playe a part, whom Bodan (hauing as it seemed before hande purposed to doe so) did vse naughtily, and with naughtie termes, to bolster out the Emperours officers, burthening him with the selling of such victuals, as the Emperour had allowed me.

After that hee had called Sakayr before him, and that I had named my witnesses against him of his owne companie, touching his villanous behauiour towardes mee, hee was dismissed vntill an other time, that the witnesses might bee recouered, which were at that time somewhat farre off: hee caused the Secretarie Sauio Frolle who came with him, to reade a scroule, which the Emperour had commaunded them to reade vnto mee: In which scroule were set downe to bee repeated, those Articles touching the sending to the Prince that shoulde bee enemie to the Emperour, to desist from his doing of iniurie (which point hee still misliked) and that Article of the sole trade of the English Marchants to the hauens, and riuer of Dwina, which neither hee brooked.

I answered, that what I had to say, I had alreadie saide, and had no more to say concerning those pointes.

They prested me much that I would be content to receiue againe such victuals for my diet, as the Emperour would sende and allowe me, promising that all the wants should be amended, and the faulters punished.

To satisfie them for that they were in my lodging, and for that the one of them was in chiefe fauour with the Emperour, and sent of purpose to please mee (although his pride caused him to slippe besides his Commission:) And againe, for that I had desire that hee shoulde returne to the Emperour, and report that I had vsed him honourablie (as I did) I denied not, but that I woulde receiue victualls againe the next morning, although I was resolued otherwise.

This being tolde the Emperour, hee in great haste sent for his Chancellor, and rated him, and threatned him not to leaue one of his race aliue: And then hee sent his chiefest Secretarie vnto mee to pacifie mee, and to intreate mee to take my Come (as they doe vse to terme it,) with offers that I should haue what I would: but I alleaged howe hardly I had bene vsed at those Counsellers handes, and therefore that the Emperour should pardon mee. I hoped that hee would leaue the Market open for mee (which in deede was stopped) seeing that I came from his good friende and Sister, and so hee shoulde finde that I had a Mistresse that was well able to serue me. Andrew Shalcan.

The Secretarie finding mee so vnreadie to satisfie the Emperour, arose in great haste and fume, and would needes haue bene gone, thinking hee should haue scarred mee therewith, saying, that sith he found me so vntractable, hee would be gone. I answered, that if hee had nothing els to say vnto mee hee might goe when pleased him: And so for good maners sake I followed him to guide him towards his sledde. But his haste was but seeming: for although I made very slowe speede after him, hee gaue me leaue to ouertake him, and stayed without intreating, first once and then againe, and would very gladly haue had a better message to haue carried to the Emperour: for well he knew that he should be ill welcome home.

At his departing I willed him to intreate the Emperour that the Market might be set open by me, and that I might not be starued: for that it was not impossible, but that I might yet doe his Maiestie some seruice if I shall liue. You goe not about (quoth hee) to doe him any seruice: Ha (quoth I) I haue no seruice yet readie for him, for I haue had no cause yet to doe him any, But I will not forsweare to doe him seruice. And thus he went his way in other sort then he looked for, and sorrowfull.

The next morning hee came againe, being sent from the Emperour, and brought with him a scroll of a newe allowance of victuals, more then I had before, by much, which I still in the respect before spoken of, refused to receiue. But yet for that I knewe it reasonable, and well becomming me to yeelde, (in as much as I might) to satisfie the Emperours request at a seconde sending, especially for that other men had done mee the wrong and not the Emperour, I was content to yeelde thus farre vnto his Maiestie, to agree (if needes he would feede mee) to take a reasonable allowance in money for my diet, but so much he pressed mee to satisfie the Emperours kinde sending to me, that I agreed to receiue the scroule of diet, that the Emperour had sent me: And so went the Secretarie a merrie man away.

The scroule of the new diet, was this,
Ianuarie 13.

The

The Secretarie I thinke had no ſooner ended to tell the Emperour howe hee had ſpedde, but by and by the Gentlemen, which were wonted, came to ſummon mee to Court againſt the nexte day. Whither I went, and founde the Emperour in his Maieſtie as of cuſtome, and after hauing ſitten in his preſence, (after the common maner) I was willed (as of wont) to goe to the Councell chamber, whither came to mee three of my olde companions, and not the Chanceller, and with them fiue others of the Counſell, with whome I had no acquaintance till then. And amongſt thoſe one duke, who tooke the formoſt place of them all, both of my olde companions, and of the newe ſupplie.

This great duke (as they termed him) began to rehearſe ſome former matters touching the vnkindeneſſe twixt mee and the Chanceller, and tolde mee, that for that the ſaide Chanceller had not vſed himſelfe well towards me, the Emperours diſpleaſure was vpon him, and for his fault was put out of his place, and that the Emperours meaning was to doe me right, vpon euery man that had wronged mee: and then they called into preſence Sakair, to ſhewe him vnto me as a man condemned to priſon, and further to receiue ſuch puniſhment, as vpon examination of his faults, hee ſhould be found to haue deſerued. The Chanceller diſplaced for abuſing ſir Ierom Bowes.

Touching the Chanceller, I anſwered no more but that I founde that the Emperours purpoſe was to doe the Queene my Miſtreſſe right: for the others, Sakayr and one other Gentleman, who had alſo behaued himſelfe ill towards me, I intreated the great duke, and the reſt, that they would in my name be ſuters to his Maieſtie to pardon them at my humble ſuite, and ſaide, that if they had not had better backes then their owne, that were their ſetters on, they durſt neuer haue offered me a wrong.

This ſuite was much liked, and they all promiſed to ſay to the Emperour all that they had heard of me, and ſo they tooke their leaue of me, willing me to retire to my lodging.

The Tueſday next after, I was ſummoned againe to Court, againſt the next day, which was no ſooner done, but the chiefe Secretarie came to mee ſent from the Emperour onely to knowe of mee, whether my coyne (as they terme it) were, and had bene deliuered mee according to the ſcroule, which the Emperour had ſent mee before then, and to knowe if I had any other grieues.

Vpon this ſuddaine arriuall, my Priſtaues, Maſters of houſholde, after our reckoning, for that in all this time they had not yet deliuered my coyne, as they ſhould haue done, but had ſo much bungled with me, ſent to mee in great haſte, that I would be ſo good vnto them, as to ſay, that I had had euery thing according to the Emperours appointment: for if I ſhoulde haue tolde the trueth, they woulde all haue bene whipped. And therefore to ſaue that ſore, I made a cleanely anſwere, without telling any lie that ſatiſfied the Secretarie, whereof they were more then glad.

The next day being the 19. of Januarie, I went againe to Court, and the Emperour ſpake with mee with 3. of his Counſell by him, and two Interpretours, to whome after I had giuen thankes for the right hee had done me againſt thoſe who had ill vſed mee: He aſked me if I had any other grieues, ſaying, that if I had and would tell them, I ſhould haue remedie of them. I gaue his Maieſtie moſt humble thankes, and told him, that if I had any other grieues, I would tel them to his Maieſtie at ſome other time.

He then tolde mee, that hee had often by himſelfe, and more often by his Counſell, talked with mee touching the Articles of amitie, twixt the Queene my Miſtreſſe and him, and yet they were brought to no good ende, Aſking me if I had no other, nor further Commiſſion then I had alreadie tolde of: whereunto I anſwered, that I had not. And then he tolde mee (as hee had often done ere then) in what ſort he would haue the Quenes Maieſtie ioyne in friendſhip with him, that was, to take his part againſt all his enemies. I anſwered, that in that matter I coulde ſay to his Maieſtie but as I had done.

He then aſked my opinion, whether the Queenes Maieſtie did make better reckoning of the king of Pole, or of him. I anſwered, that I was ſorie to heare him make that a queſtion; for as betwixt the Queenes Maieſtie and the king of Pole, there was no cumitie, ſo for ought I knewe there was no great friendſhip. But I was well aſſured, that when I came from her Maieſtie, ſhe helde his highneſſe very deere vnto her. If ſhe holde mee deare (quoth he) then ſhee will take my part againſt my enemies. So ſhe will (quoth I) as farre as ſhe hath promiſed in the Articles, which in my opinion will ſerue your turne, although it bee not ſet downe in ſuch wordes as you would haue it.

Well (quoth hee) I will ſende my Ambaſſadour againe to the Queene my ſiſter, about theſe matters, and others.

Sir (quoth I) her Maiestie intreateth you but in small matters, if it shal please your Maiestie to satisfie her in those her small requests, which shal cost you nothing, and you may performe them at home in your owne Countrey at your ease, her Maiestie (I beleeue) will be loath to denie you any reasonable request.

He answered that touching those matters of the Marchants, hee would talke once againe with his Counsell, and that at my next comming to Court, I shoulde haue answere in that matter, and so willed mee to depart, being glad as my selfe was, that wee parted so good friends.

My backe was no sooner turned, but hee rated his Counsellers, and tolde them that I was courteous ynough if I were well vsed.

The 26. of Januarie the Emperours chiefe Secretarie came to me two sundrie times about M. Roper.

Friday the 7. of Febuarie I was at Court, and sawe the Emperour as of wont: and I talked with the Counsell two sundrie times, but to litle purpose.

The next tuesday I was summoned to Court to bee there the next day, but the same day, I had a countermaunde to stay till Saturday: Then I went to Court and the Emperour talked with mee, and rehearsed the effect of his Ambassage, and saide that to the chiefe parts of his Articles, and requests, hee was not answered any whitte to his liking: but that it seemed by the Queenes answeres, that shee woulde haue no friendshippe with him, rather then otherwise. Whereunto I answered, that if hee woulde consider well, howe farre her Maiestie had drawen her selfe to friend him, hee should finde great cause rather to accept her friendly offers kindely, then to construe them after his owne fashion. But he ranne still to his olde point, that her would haue her Maiestie take his part directly against all his enemies.

I desired his Maiestie to haue a little patience (a hard request) and that hee would giue mee leaue to speake, (a hard thing also to come by:) for hee must say all himselfe without to bee answered.

Sir (quoth I) then thus I pray the case, that vpon condition that the Queene will make warres vpon all your enemies, who all are yet her friendes, you will then bee content that the English Marchants shall enioy a priuiledge, that they haue alreadie more then deserued at your handes. And besides you will that the Queenes Maiestie first graunt your great requests, and then you will graunt her little ones. But I doubt her Maiestie will take it very vnkindely, that you take in no better part her kinde and friendly offers: for I answere, her meaning neuer was to make warre vpon these Princes, except vpon greater cause then shee yet knoweth.

Well, (quoth he) I will sende my Ambassadour with you to the Queene my sister, and will let downe my meaning more plainely then before, and hee shall doe there touching the Marchants matters as he shall finde cause.

Sir, (quoth I) I thinke your Ambassadour wil not goe with me, for the Queene my Mistresse hath giuen mee leaue to goe ouer lande, and to that ende I am to craue your Maiesties fauour and furtherance.

This liked his Maiestie as little, as the deniall of it pleased mee: For hee might not suffer, (nor would) that I should goe ouer lande, and therefore concluded that I should goe home the same way that I came. And so after some other speaches, hee bade mee goe home, and tolde me that vpon the Munday next following hee woulde appoint his chiefe Councellers to declare vnto mee the rest of his minde, and then I shoulde haue my dispatche homewards.

Febuarie. Munday, the sixt of Febuarie, I went againe to Court, and sawe the Emperour as of wont, but talked no whit with him: I was willed to retire my selfe to the Councell chamber, whither came his Counsell, and (by his commaundement) read vnto mee a scroule of Articles, such as he would haue to passe in the league of amitie. I tolde them in part my opinion of those Articles, as I had done often before when I tolde them, as then also, that if the Emperour did not answere the Queenes final demaunds and reasonable requests, it was not like that she would yeeld to those of his, which no man would reckon reasonable.

I had tolde them before, that the Emperour might saue labour in keeping his Ambassadour at home, if he left the Queenes Maiestie vnsatisfied.

I was answered, that he would proone once againe what the Queene would doe for him: But still I felt both the Emperour and his Counsell to nibble at the baite, and found that they would bite at length.

They tolde mee that vpon Thursday then next, I should be called to Court againe to see the Emperour, and so to take my leaue, and thus we parted.

In the meane season the Emperour and his Counsell, hauing well considered my constancie inuyting the reasonable requests of our Marchants, as also bethinking themselues of the great benefite they might reape by the continuance of their trafique, grewe to such issue as I looked for, and the Marchants desired. So that after certaine dayes, I was againe called to Court into the Emperours presence, where after apparant shewe of his gratious countenance and fauour, I was requested to repaire againe to the Counsel chamber, where his greatest Counsailers signified vnto me, that the Emperour had at last yeelded to these articles following, viz.

1 First, that the goods which were taken from our Marchants by robberie vpon the Volga, should be recompensed.

2 Then that the summe of 500. markes, which was paid for 10. yeeres together into the Emperours receit, for the rent of a house that they had in Vologda, should be repayed.

3 Thirdly, that 1500. markes, which had bene exacted from them the two last yeeres before my comming into Russia, should also be repayed.

4 Next that an olde desperate debt of 1000. markes or there abouts, shoulde nowe bee satisfied.

5 Lastly, that their custome which before that time they had payde, amounting to 2000. pounds by the yeere, should now be abated, and no more required.

There remayned nothing in the foresaide Articles, but the confirmation of them by seale, and the deliuerie of them to mee, which was determined to bee done at my next repaire to the Court.

But in the meane time it fell out so vnfortunately that the Emperour fell sicke, and within a fewe dayes died: After whose death, the foresaide Counsellers, who not long before were as glad of my friendship, as I was also of theirs, grewe againe to be of their former authoritie, and then beganne to reuenge themselues vpon mee, at their pleasure. For Mekita and Shalkan, shut mee by immediatly in mine owne house, (as it were a close prisoner,) so that for the space of eight or nine weekes, I was forced with all my companie to keepe within doores, not so much as to looke out at the windowes, that were vpon the streetes side, with continuall watche, and gard set to obserue all our doings. The death of the olde Emperour.

Besides this, they tooke from me the liberall allowance of diet, which the late Emperour had graunted me, yeelding such slender and ill fare, as enuious stomackes coulde afoorde, with many other indignities, which for modesties sake I here suppresse.

All this while I sued for my dispatche, which I should haue had before the Emperour died, but coulde by no meanes obtaine it, such was the pleasure of Mekita and Shalkan. But after long and tedious delaye, they sent mee worde at last ouernight, to come to Court the next day to haue my dispatch. Whicher being come, whereas euer before I had bene mette within Counsell, with many of the greatest and graueſt Counsailers, I was nowe onely intertained by this Shalcan, and a brother of his, and one other meane Gentleman, whome I had neuer seene till then. Who deliuered to mee for resolution from the newe Emperour, that hee had no meaning to proceede further in those treaties, that his late father nowe deceased, had to fore dealt in. Theodore the newe Emperour.

Shortly after I was willed to come againe to Court to take my leaue of the Emperour, and so I did, and being come into his presence, he told me briefly, that he desired such league and friendshippe with the Queene my Mistresse, as his father heretofore had had, and for the summe of my dispatche, deliuered vnto mee a letter, which hee had written to her Maiestie, which I receiued.

Thus within a fortnight after this, I had post horses prouided mee, and hauing furnished them for the vse of my companie, I tooke horse, and departed from Mosco, on the 29. of May being then Saturday, about two of the clocke in the afternoone: I was accompanied out of the Citie of Mosco, with Mekita, and the foure Prestaues, and other Gentlemen and seruants, who hauing brought me some part of my way, about two verstes from the Citie, there tooke their leaue, and departed backe againe: Onely Mekita accompanied mee still, and went with mee to S. Nicholas. His departing from Mosco the 29. of May

This Saturday at night I lodged at a place about 4. verstes from Bratezeue, which Bratezeue is from Mosco 30. verstes. Bratzeue.

On Sunday I ridde forewardes towardes Troits, which is also 30. verstes from Bratezeue: there I dined that day, and lodged that night at Doobna 300. verstes from Troits. Doobna.

On Munday I ridde to Peraslaue 20. verstes from Doobna, and there dined, and lodged that night at Rogozeue, 12. verstes from Peraslaue. Peraslaue Deobola. On tuesday I ridde to Deobala, and from thence to Rostoue, where I lodged, which is 48. verst̃s from Deobola.

Sheupza. Jeraslaue. On wednesday I ridde to Sheupza, where I dined and lodged that night at Ieraslaue in my olde lodging, which Ieraslaue is 25. verst̃s from Sheupza.

On thursday in the afternoone, I went to the Volga, to haue passed it ouer by ferrie, but the winde was high, and all things not readie, and I returned againe to Ieraslaue for that night.

Danileske. On friday I past the riuer, and lodged that night at Daunleske, being 43. verst̃s from Vochsur, where I dined that day.

Teletske. On saturday I ridde from Daunleske to Teletske, where I rested that night.

Camelskie. Vologda. On Sunday I ridde from Teletske to Obnorske, which was 20. verst̃s. Therehence the next day to Camelski, which was 20. verst̃s more, and so vpon tuesday I came to Vologda 30. verst̃s from Camelski. At Vologda I rested till Sunday morning, and then went downe the Riuer.

S. Nicholas. The thursday seuenth night after at night, I came to S. Nicholas, and there remayned till our English shipping were readie to way for our voyage homewards, which was the tenth day of August following, at which time Mekyta, which accompanied mee hither from Mosco tooke his leaue of me, and I imbarked my selfe, and my whole companie in the bay or roade, and arriued in safetie at Graues end, the 12. day of September next ensuing.

A letter of M. Henrie Lane to the worshipfull M. William Sanderson, contayning a briefe discourse of that which passed in the Northeast discouerie for the space of 33. yeeres.

MAster Sanderson, as you lately requested mee, so haue I sought, and though I cannot finde things that heretofore I kept in writing and lent out to others, yet perusing at London copies of mine olde letters to content one that meaneth to pleasure many, I haue briefly and as truely as I may, drawen out as followeth: The rough hewing may be planed at your leasure, or as pleaseth him that shall take the paines.

First the honourable attempt to discouer by sea Northeast and Northwest named for Cathay, being chiefly procured by priuiledge from King Edwarde the first, and other his Nobilitie by and at the coste and suite of M. Sebastian Cabota, then gouernour for discoueries with sir Andrewe Iudde, sir George Barnes, sir William Garret, M. Anthonie Hussie, and a companie of Marchants, was in the last yeere of his Maiesties raigne 1553. The generall charge whereof was committed to one sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, a goodly Gentleman accompanied with sufficient nomber of Pilots, Masters, Marchants and Mariners, hauing three shippes well furnished to wit, The Bona Speranza, the Edward Bonaduenture, and the Confidentia. The Edward Bonaduenture, Richard Chanceller being Pilote, and Steuen Burrough Master, hauing discouered Wardhouse vpon the coast of Finmarke, by storme or fogge departed from the rest, found the bay of S. Nicholas nowe the chiefe port for Russia, there wintred in safetie, and had ayde of people at a village called Newnox.

Anno 1553. M. William Burrough was then yong and with his brother in this first voyage.

The other two shippes attempting further Northwards (as appeared by pamphlets founde after written by sir Hugh Willoughbie) was in September encountred with such extreme colde, that they put backe to seeke a wintring place: and missing the saide bay fell vpon a desert cost in Lappia, entring into a Riuer immediatly frosen vp, since discouered, named Arzina, Reca, distant East from a Russian Monasterie of Monkes called Pechingham, from whence they neuer returned, but all to the nomber of 70. persons perished, which was for want of experience to haue made canes or stoues. These were founde with the shippes the next Sommer Anno 1554. by Russe fishermen: and in Anno 1555. the place sent vnto by English Marchants as hereafter appeareth.

Note.

Anno 1554. Anno 1554. the saide shippe Edward Bonaduenture (although robbed homewards by Flemings) returned with her companie to London, shewing and setting forth their entertainments and discouerie of the Countreis euen to the Citie of Mosco, from whence they brought a priuiledge written in Russe with the kings or great dukes seale, the other two ships looked for and vnknowen to them where they were.

Anno 1555. An. 1555. the said Companie of Marchants for discouerie vpõ a new supply, sent thither againe with with two ships, to wit, the Edwarde Bonaduenture, and another bearing the name of the King and Queene, Phillip, and Marie, whose Maiesties by their letters to the said Moscouite, recommended sundry their subiects then passing, whereof certaine, to wit, Richard Chanceller, George Killingworth, Henry Lane, and Arthur Edwards, after their arriuall at the Baye, and passing vp Dwina to Vologhda, went first vp to Mosco, where vpon knowledge of the said letters, they with their traine, had speciall entertainment, with houses and diet appointed, and shortly permitted to the Princes presence, they were with Gentlemen brought through the Citie of Mosko, to the castle and pallace, replenished with numbers of people, and some gunners. They entred sundry roomes, furnished in shew with ancient graue personages, all in long garments of sundry colours, gold, syllue, baldekin, and violet, as our vestments and copes haue bene in England, suitable with caps, iewels, and chaines. These were found to be no Courtiers, but ancient Moscouits, inhabitants, and other their merchants of credite, as the manner is, furnished thus from the Wardrobe and Treasurie, waiting and wearing this apparell for the time, and so to restore it. The King and Queenes letters.

Then entring into the Presence, being a large roome strowed, with carpets, were men of more estate, and richer shew, in number aboue an hundred set square: who after the saide Englishmen came in, doing reuerence, they all stood vp, the Prince onely sitting, and yet rising at any occasion, when our King and Queenes names were read or spoken. Then after speeches by interpretation, our men killing his hande, and bidden to dinner, were staied in another roome, and at dinner brought through, where might be seene mallie siluer and gilt plate, some like to as big as kilderkins, and washbowles, and entring the dining place, being the greater roome, the Prince was set bare headed, his crowne and rich cappe standing vpon a pinnacle by. Not farre distant, sate his Metropolitane, with diuers other of his kindred, and chiefe Tartarian Captaines: none sate oueragainſt him, or any, at other tables, their backes towards him: which tables all furnished with ghests set, there was for the Englishmen, named by the Russes, Ghosti Carabelski, to wit, strangers or merchants by ship, a table in the middest of the roome, where they were set direct against the Prince: and then began the seruice, brought in by a number of his yong Lordes and Gentlemen, in such rich attire, as is aboue specified: and still from the Princes table (notwithstanding their owne furniture) they had his whole messes set ouer all in mallie fine golde, deliuered euery time from him by name to them, by their seuerall Christian names, as they sate, viz. Richarde, George, Henry, Arthur. Likewise bread and sundry drinkes of purified meade, made of fine white and clarified honie. At their rising, the Prince called them to his table, to receaue each one a cuppe from his hand to drinke, and tooke into his hand Master George Killingworths beard, which reached ouer the table, and pleasantly deliuered it the Metropolitane, who seeming to bleſſe it, said in Russe, this is Gods gift. As in deede at that time it was not onely thicke, broad, and yellowe coloured, but in length fiue foote, and two inches of a size. Then taking leaue, being night, they were accompanied and followed with a number, carrying pots of drinke, and dishes of meate dressed, to our lodging. M. Killingworths beard of a meruailous length.

This yeere the two shippes, with the deade bodies of Sir Hugh Willoughby, and his people, were sent into by Master Killingworth, (which remained there in Mosko, Agent almost two yeres) and much of the goods and victuals were recouered and saued.

Anno 1556. The companie sent two ships for Russia, with extraordinarie Masters and sailers, to bring home the two ships, which were frosen in Lappia, in the riuer of Arzina aforesaid. The two ships sent this yeere from England sailing from Lapland to the Baye of S. Nicholas, tooke in lading with passengers, to wit, a Russe Ambassador, named Ioseph Nepey, and some of his men shipped with Richard Chanceler, in the Edward. But so it fell out that the two which came from Lappia, with all their newe Masters and marriners, neuer were heard of, but in foule weather, and nought seas, after their two yeeres wintring in Lapland, became, as is supposed, vnstanch, and sunke, wherein were drowned also diuers Russes merchants, and seruants of the Ambassador. A third ship the Edward aforesaid, falling on the North part of Scotland, vpon a rocke was also lost, and Master Chanceler, with diuers other, drowned. The said Russe Ambassador hardly escaping, with other his men, marriners, and some goods saued, were sent for into Scotland, from the King, Queene, and Merchants (the Messenger being Master Doctor Lawrence Hussie, and others:) And then, as in the Chronicles appeareth, honourably entertained and receaued at London. Anno 1556.

This yeere also the companie furnished and sent out a pinnesse, named the Serchthrifte, to discouer the harborowes in the North coast from Norway to Wardhouse, and so to the Baye of S. Nicholas. There was in her Master and Pilot, Stephen Burrough, with his brother William, and eight other. Their discouerie was beyond the Baye, toward the Samoeds, people dwelling

neere the riuer of Ob, and found a sound or sea with an Iland called Vaigats, first by them put into the Carde or Mappe. In that place they threwe sno we out of their said pinnesse, with shouels in August, by which extremitie, and lacke of time, they came backe to Russia, and wintred at Colmogro.

Anno 1557. The companie with foure good ships, sent backe the said Russe Ambassador, and in companie with him, sent as an Agent, for further discouerie, Master Anthony Ienkinson, who afterward anno 1558. with great fauour of the Prince of Moscouia, and his letters passed the riuer Volga, to Cazan, and meaning to seeke Cathay by land, was by many troupes and companies of vnciuil Tartarians, encountred, and in danger: but keeping companie with merchants of Bactria, or Boghar, and Vrgeme, trauailing with camels, he with his companie, went to Boghar, and no further, whose entertainment of the king is to be had of Master Ienkinson, which returned anno 1559. to Moscouie. And in anno 1560. he, with Henry Lane, came home into England, which yeere was the first safe returne, without losse of shipwracke, or dead fraight, and burnings. And at this time was the first traffike to the Narue in Liuonia, which confines with Lituania and all the dominions of Russia, with the markets, faires, commodities, great townes, and riuers, here sent vnto by diuers seruants: the reportes were taken by Henry Lane, Agent, and deliuered to the companie, 1561. The trade to Rie, and Reuel, of olde time hath bene long since frequented by our English nation, but this trade to the Narue was hitherto concealed from vs by the Danskers and Lubeckers.

Anno 1561. the said Master Anthony Ienkinson, went Agent into Russia, who the next yeere after, passing all the riuer of Volga, to Astracan, and ouer the Caspian sea, arriued in Persia, and opened the trade thither.

Also betweene the yeeres of 1568. and 1572. sundry voyages after Master Ienkinsons, were made by Thomas Alcocke, Arthur Edwards, Master Thomas Bannister, and Master Geffrey Ducket, whose returne, if spoile neere Volga had not preuented by rouing theeues, had altogether saued and recouered the companies (called the olde companies) great losse, charges, and damages: but the saying is true, by vnitie small things growe great, and by contention great things become small. This may be vnderstoode best by the companie. The frowardnes of some fewe, and euill doing of some vniust factors, was cause of much of the euill successe.

Arthur Edwards was sent againe 1579. and died in the voyage at Astracan. About which matters, are to be remembred the voyages of Master Thomas Randolph Esquire, Ambassador, anno 1567. And late of Sir Hierom Bowes, anno 1583. both tending and treating for further discoueries, freedomes, & priuiledges, where with I medle not. But in conclusion, for their paines and aduentures this way (as diuers doe nowe adaies other waies) as worthie Gentlemen sent from Princes, to doe their Countrey good, I put them in your memorie, with my hartie farewel. From S. Margarets neere Dartforth in Kent.

Yours Henrie Lane.

The late ambassage of Master Giles Fletcher, Doctor of the Ciuill Lawe, sent from her Maiestie to the Emperour of Russia, Anno 1588.

IN the yeere 1588, was sent Ambassador from her Highnes, into the Country of Russia, Giles Fletcher, Doctor of the Ciuill Law, aswel to treat with the new Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich, about league and amitie, in like manner as was before with his father Iuan Vasilowich, as also for the reestablishing and reducing into order the decaied trade of our English men there. Who notwithstanding at his first arriuall at the Mosko, founde some partes of harde intertainment, by meanes of certaine rumors, concerning the late nauall victorie, which was there reported to haue fallen on the Spanish side, as also for some dislike conceaued against the priuiledged trade of our English merchants. Yet in the ende obtained of the Emperour many good and equall conditions, and was courteously and honorably dismissed by him. The principall pointes which he intreated of, and were granted vnto him by the said Emperour, were these:

1 A continuation of league and amitie, betweene hir Highnes, and the saide Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich, in like manner as was before with his father Iuan Vasilowich.

2 A confirmation and reestablishment of the former priuiledges of the companie of our English Merchants, which were infringed and annulled in the principall pointes, with diuers necessarie additions to the same, for the better ordering of their trade in those Countries hereafter, hereafter, viz. That the state of the priuiledge granted before in the names of some priuate and particular men, be altered in that point, and the same granted by the name and stile of their incorporation, viz. To the fellowship of Englisth Merchants, for the discouerie of newe trades.

3 That vpon euery surmise and light quarrell, the said priuiledge be not reuoked, and annulled, as before time it hath bene.

4 That iustice shall be administred to the said companie, and their Agent without delay, vpon such as shall offer them any dispite or iniurie, or shall exact or impose vppon them any paiment, taxation, or imposition whatsoeuer, contrarie to the freedome of the said grant.

5 That the goods and commodities of the said companie, be not forcibly taken, as before time they haue bene, by the Emperours officers, or people of authoritie, either for the vse of the said Emperour, or of his officers. But in case they haue neede of the said commodities, the same to be taken at reasonable prices, and for ready money.

6 That the said companie be not charged hereafter with the answering of such debts as are made by any Englisth man, not being of the societie.

7 That the Emperours authorized people, shall not hereafter repute any Englisth man resiant in that Countrey, to be any factor, seruant, or dealer in the said companies affaires, but such as the Agent shall enregister by name, within the offices where custome is entred in all such places of the land, where the said companie haue residencies to traffike.

8 That the names of such as shall so be enregistred, be no longer continued in recorde, nor themselues reputed as factors or dealers, for the said companie, then the Agent shal thinke good. But in case the said Agent in his discretion shall thinke meete to strike out of the register any name of such as haue bene emploied in the companies seruice, the saide person to be held as priuate, and whose acte in bargaining or otherwise, shall not charge the saide Companie.

9 That if any Englisth man within the Countrey of Russia, be suspected for any notorious crime, as fellonie, treason, the same be not straite waies set vppon the Pudkey, nor otherwise tormented, till such time as he shall be conuicted by plaine and euident proofes: which being done, the whole proceeding to be sent ouer to the Queene of England.

10 That the said priuiledge, with the additions, shall be publisthed in all Townes and partes of the Emperours dominions, where the said companie haue traffique.

11 That the said companie shall be permitted to vse a sole trade through the Emperours Countries, by the riuer Volga, into Media, Persia, Bogharia, and the other the East Countries.

12 Whereas there was claimed of the saide companie, the summe of 23553. Markes of debt, made by certaine of their factors for the said companie, for paiment wherof, their whole stocke was in danger of arrest, by publike authoritie: Further also 2140. Rubbles for custome and housrent, he obtained a rebatement of seuenteene thousand, eleuen hundred, fifty & three Markes of the said debt.

The said Ambassador Master Giles Fletcher, as I vnderstand, hath drawen a booke, intituled, Of the Russe Common wealth, containing:

First, a Cosmographicall description of the Countrey, which hath these Chapters.

1 Of the length and breadth of the Countrey of Russia, with the names of the shires.
2 Of the soile and climat.
3 Of the natiue commodities of the Countrey.

Secondly a description of their policie, contained in these Chapters, viz.

1 Of the constitution or state of the Russe Common wealth.
2 Of their Parliaments, and manner of holding them.
3 Of the Russe Nobilitie, and meanes, whereby it is kept in an vnder proportion, agreeable to that state.
4 Of the manner of gouerning their Prouinces or Shires.
5 Of the Emperours priuie Counsell.
6 Of the Emperours custo nes, and their reuenues, with the practises for the increase of them.
7 Of the Russe Communaltie, and their condition.
8 Of their publike iustice, and manner of proceeding therein.
9 Of the Emperours forces for his warres, with the chiefe officers, and their salarie or pay.
10 Of their manner of mustering, armour, and prouision for victuall.

11 Of their ordering, marching, charging, and their martiall discipline.
12 Of their Colonies, and pollicie in maintaining their purchases by conquest.
13 Of their Borderers, with whome they haue most to doe in warre and peace.
14 Of their Church offices and degrees.
15 Of their Liturgie, or forme of Church seruice.
16 Of their manner of administring the Sacraments.
17 Of the doctrine of the Russe Church.
18 Of the manner of solemnizing their marriages.
19 Of the other ceremonies of the Russe Church.

Thirdly, the Oeconomie or priuate behauiour of the Russe, containing these Chapters.

1 Of the Emperours houshold Officers, and order of his house.
2 Of the priuate behauiour and manner of the Russe people.

The booke it selfe he thought not good, for diuers considerations, to make publike at this time.

A testimonie of the Northeasterne discouerie, made by the English, and of the profite that may arise by pursuing the same: taken out of the second volume of nauigations, and voyages, fol. 17. of the notable Cosmographer, Master Iohn Baptista Ramusius, Secretarie to the state of Venice. Written in Italian, in the yeere, 1557.

Alla parte poi di sotto la nostra Tramontana, che chiascuno scrittore & Cosmographo di questi & de passati tempi fin'hora vi ha messo & mette mare congelato, & che la terra corra continuamente fino a 90. gradi verso il Polo: sopra questo mappa-mondo all' incontro si vede che la terra và solamente un poco sopra la Noruega & Suetia, & voltando corre poi Greco & Leuante nel paese della Moscouia & Rossia, & và dritto al Cataio. Et che cio sia la verità, le nauigationi che hanno fatte gl' Inglesi con le loro naui, volendo andare à scoprire il Cataio al tempo del Re Odoardo Sesto d'Inghilterra, questi anni passati, ne possono far vera testimonianza: perche nel mezzo del loro viaggio, capitate per fortuna ai liti di Moscouia, done trouarono all'hora regnare Giouanni Vassiliuich Imperatore della Rossia & gran Duca di Moscouia, il quale con molto piacere & marauiglia veduti gli fece grandissime carezze, hanno trouato quel mare essere nauigabile, & non agghiacciato. La qual nauigatione (ancor che con l'esito fin hora non sia stata bene intesa) seguendo stesso frequentarla & col lungo vso & cognitione d'que' mari si continuerà, è per fare grandissima mutatione & riuolgimento nelle cose di questa nostra parte del mondo.

MOreouer (hauing before spoken of diuers particularities, in an excellent Mappe of Paulus Venetus) on that part subiect to our North pole, where euery writer and Cosmographer of these, and of former times hitherto, haue, and doe place the frozen sea, and that the lande stretcheth continually to 90. degrees, towards the pole: contrariwise, in this Mappe is to be seene, that the land extendeth onely a little aboue Norway, and Suethland, and then turning it selfe, trendeth afterwards towards the Southeast, and by East, vnto the Countrey of Moscouie, and Russia, & stretcheth directly vnto Cathay. And that this is true, the nauigations which the Englishmen haue of late made intending to discouer Cathay, in the time of Edward the first, King of England, are very sufficient witnesses. For in the middes of their voyage, lighting by chance vpon the coast of Moscouie (where they found then raigning Iohn Vasiliwich, Emperour of Russia, and great Duke of Moscouia, who after he had to his great delight, and admiration, seene the Englishmen, entertained them with exceeding great curtesies) founde this Sea to be nauigable, and not frozen.

Which nauigation to Cathay, although it be not as yet throughly knowen, yet if with often frequenting the same, and by long vse and knowledge of those seas, it be continued, it is like to make a wonderfull change, and reuolution, in the state of this our part of the world.

The teſtimonie of Gerardus Mercator, in his laſt large Mappe of Europe, touching the notable diſcoueries of the Engliſh, made of Moſcouie by the Northeaſt.

MAgnam occaſionem certámque rationem emendandæ Europæ nobis attulit celeberrima Anglorum per Cronium mare nauigatio: quæ littora Septentrionalia Finlappię, Moſcouiæque iuxta cœli ſitum, mundique plagas digeſta habet. Exacta etiam vrbis Moſcuæ latitudo ab Anglis obſeruata, interiorum Regionum emendatiùs deſcribendarum infallibilem legem præſcripſit. Quibus oblatis adminiculis pulcherrimis, iniquum putaui tabulam hanc caſtigatiorem non reddere.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

THe moſt famous nauigation of the Engliſhmen by the northeaſt ſea, hath offred vnto me a great occaſion, and certaine direction, for the reformation of the Mappe of Europe: which diſcouerie hath the northerne parts of Finmarke, Lapland, and Moſcouie, laide out according to the iuſt elcuation, and the quarters of the world. And further, the true obſeruation of the latitude of the citie of Moſco, made by the foreſaid Engliſhmen, hath geeuen me an infallible rule, for the correcting of the ſituation of the inland Countries: which notable helpes being miniſtred vnto me, I thought it my dutie to exhibite to the world this Mappe, more exact and perfect, then hitherto it hath bene publiſhed.

Another teſtimonie of Ioannes Metellus Sequanus, concerning the ſame nauigation, and diſcouerie, in his preface prefixed before Oſorius de rebus geſtis Emanuelis Regis Portugalliæ, written about the yeere, 1574.

AT ne omnis, vnis Hiſpanis, Oceani maris gloria totáque concederetur, Britanni Septentriones noua in Moſcouiam nauigatione, ab hinc annis viginti plus minùs illuſtrarunt. Nam bellis Sueticis à Moſcouitarum, Naruæque Liuoniæ excluſi commercio, iter ad illos Oceano, hinc Noruegiæ, Finmarchię, Lappiæ, Scricfinniæ, Biarmiæque: illinc Groenlandiæ littora præteruecti, vltrà Septuageſſimum latitudinis Aquilonaris gradum ſibi patefaciunt. Quam nauigationem Belgæ poſteà non ſine tamen cum ijſdem Britannis velitatione ſunt ſecuti. Eo vehunt argenti veteris fragmenta, lineáſque veſtes propè detritas, omníſque generis minutiores merces, ad vſum, cultúmque corporis hominum vtriuſque ſexus, veluti lintea & byſſea cingula, periſcelides, crumenas, cultros, & id genus ſexcenta. A Moſchis autem pelles omnis generis pretioſas adferunt, & Salmones ſalitos, fumóque duratos.

BVt leaſt all, and the whole glorie of diſcouering the Ocean ſea, ſhould be aſcribed to the Spaniards, the Engliſh men about 20. yeeres paſt, by a newe nauigation into Moſcouie, diſcouered the northeaſt parts. For they by reaſon of the warres of Swethland, being hindred from the traffike of the Moſcouites, and of the Narue in Lyffland, opened a paſſage for themſelues by the Ocean ſea, beyond the northerne latitude of 70. degrees: hauing in their courſe on the one ſide the coaſts of Norway, Finmarke, Lapland, Scrikfine, and Biarmia. On the other ſide the coaſt of Groneland. Which voyage the Hollanders afterward entred into, but not without ſome conflict with the Engliſh. They carry thither olde plate, and courſe linnen cloth, and all kind of ſmall mercerie wares, ſeruing for the apparelling of men, and women, as linnen, and ſilke girdles, garters, purſes, knifes, and many ſuch like things. And they bring away from the Moſcouites, all kind of pretious furres, and Salmons ſalted, and dried in the ſmoke.

The ende of the ſecond part.

A briefe diſcourſe of the voyage of Sir Ierome Bowes knight, her Maieſties ambaſſador to the Emperour of Muſcouia, in the yeere 1582:

and printed this ſecond time, according to the true copie I receiued of a gentleman that went in the ſame voyage, for the correction of the errours in the former impreſſion.

THe Emperour of Ruſſia that then liued, by name Euan Vaſſilliwich, hauing deliberately conſidered how neceſſary it were for the ſtrengthening of his eſtate, that a ſure commerce and entercourſe of merchants ſhould be againe renued betweene him and her ſacred Maieſtie of England, with ſuch further immunities and priuileges for the honor and vtility of both their dominions, and ſubiects of the ſame, as vpon mutuall treatie of perſons interpoſed on both ſides, might be aſſented vnto: ſent ouer into this realme, in the yeere of our Lord 1581, as his ambaſſadour for that purpoſe, an ancient and diſcreet gentleman of his houſholde called Pheodor Andreuich Phiſemskie, accompanied with one of his ſecretaries, for his better aſſiſtance in that expedition: and beſides his many other directions, wherof part were to be deliuered by word of mouth, and the reſt ſet downe in a letter vnder the Emperors ſignature, addreſſed to her Maieſtie: he had in ſpeciall charge to ſollicit her Maieſtie to ſend ouer with him to his maiſter an ambaſſador from her, to treat and contract of ſuch affaires of importance as concerned both the realmes, which was the principall end of his imploiments hither. Whereupon her Maieſtie very graciouſly inclining to the Emperours motion, and at the humble ſute of the Engliſh merchants trading thoſe countries, being caried with the ſame princely reſpects, to ſatiſfie his demands in that behalfe, made choice of Sir Ierome Bowes, a gentleman of her court, ordinarily attending vpon her Maieſties perſon, towards whom was apparantly expreſſed her princely opinion and fauor by the credit of this negociation.

After he had receiued his commiſſion, with other ſpeciall letters to the Emperor, with all other inſtructions appertaining to his charge, and that the ſaid Ruſſe ambaſſadour was licenced to returne home to his maiſter, being honorably entertained and rewarded, the Engliſh ambaſſador being attended vpon with forty perſons at the leaſt, very honourably furniſhed, whereof many were gentlemen, and one M. Humfrey Cole a learned preacher, tooke his leaue of her Maieſty at the court at Greenewich, the xxiii. of June, and he with the other ambaſſador, with their ſeuerall companies, embarked themſelues at Harwich the xxii. of the ſame, and after a ſtormy voyage at the ſea, they arriued both in ſafetie, in the road at S. Nicholas the xviii. of July next following.

The Ruſſe ambaſſador lodged himſelfe at the abbey of S. Nicholas: and the Engliſh ambaſſador was lodged and well intertained by the Engliſh merchants, at their houſe at S. Nicholas, ſtanding in an Iſland called Roaſe Iſland.

The Ruſſe ambaſſador hauing repoſed himſelfe one whole day, tooke his leaue of the Engliſh ambaſſador, and departed towards Muſco.

The Engliſh ambaſſador abode yet at S. Nicholas foure or fiue dayes, when hauing made prouiſion of boats, & meanes to that purpoſe, he went forward vpon his iourney towards Muſco, to a towne called Colmagro, about foure ſcore miles diſtant from S. Nicholas.

You muſt heere vnderſtand that before the Engliſh ambaſſadors going into Ruſſia, there were diuers ſtrangers, but eſpecially certaine Dutch merchãts, who had intruded themſelues to trade into thoſe countries. Notwithſtanding a priuilege of the ſole trade thither, was long before granted to the Engliſh merchants, theſe Dutchmen had already ſo handled the matter, as they had by chargeable meanes wooned three of the chiefeſt councellers to the Emperour to be their aſſured friends, namely, Mikita Romanauich, Bodan Belskoy, and Andrew Shalkan the chancellor: for beſides daily gifts that they beſtowed vpon them all, they tooke ſo much money of their's at intereſt at xxv. vpon the hundred, as they payed to ſome one of them fiue thouſand marks yerely for the vſe of his money, and the Engliſh merchants at that time had not one friend in court.

The ambaſſadour hauing now ſpent fiue weeks at S. Nicholas & at Colmagro, there came to him then a gentleman ſent from the Emperor to intertaine him, and had in charge to conduct him vp the riuers towards Muſco, and to deliuer him prouiſion of all kinde of victuals neceſſary.

This gentleman being a follower of Shalkan the chancellor, was by him (as it ſeemed) foiſted into that ſeruice of purpoſe, as afterward appeared by the courſe he tooke, to offer diſcourteſies, and occaſions of miſlike to the ambaſſador: for you muſt vnderſtand, that the chancellor and the other two great councellers (ſpoken of as friends to the Dutchmen) had a purpoſe to oppoſe themſelues directly againſt her Maieſties ambaſſage, eſpecially in that point, for the barring of all ſtrangers from trading into the Emperors countrey.

This gentleman conducted the English ambassador a thousand miles vp the riuers of Dwyna and Soughana, to a citie called Vologda, where receiued him another gentleman sent from the Emperor, a man of better countenance then the other, who presented the ambassador from the Emperor with two faire geldings well furnished after their maner.

At a citie called Yeraslaue vpon the riuer Volga there met the ambassador a duke well accompanied, sent from the Emperor, who presented him from the Emperor a coach and ten geldings for the more easie conueying of him to Musco, from whence this city was distant fiue hundred miles.

Two miles on this side Musco there met the ambassadour foure gentlemen of good account, accompanied with two hundred horse: who after a little salutation, not familiar, without imbracing, tolde him that they had to say to him from the Emperour, and would haue had him light on foot to haue heard it, notwithstanding themselues would still haue sit on horsebacke: which the ambassadour soone refused to doe, and so they stood long vpon termes, whether both parties should light or not: which afterwards agreed vpon, there was yet great niceneſſe whose foot should vse be first on ground.

Their message being deliuered, and after hauing embraced eche other, they conducted the said ambassador to his lodging at Musco, a house builded of purpose for him, themselues being placed in the next house to it, as appointed to furnish him of all prouisions, and to be vsed by him vpon all other occasions.

The ambassadour hauing beene some dayes in Musco, and hauing in all that time beene very honorably vsed from the Emperor (for such was his will) though some of his chiefest councellors (as is said) had another purpose, and did often times cunningly put it in vse: He was sent for to Court, and was accompanied thither with about fortie gentlemen, honorably mounted, & sumptuously arrayed, & in his passage from his lodging to the court, were set in a ward fiue or sixe thousand shot, that were of the Emperors guard. At the entry into court, there met him foure noble men apparelled in cloth of golde, and rich furres, their caps embrothered with pearle and stone, who conducted him towards the Emperour, till he was met with foure others of greater degree then they, who guided him yet further towards the Emperor, in which passage there stood along the walles, and sate vpon benches and formes in row, seuen or eight hundred persons, said to be noblemen and gentlemen, all apparelled in garments of coloured satins and cloth of golde.

These foure noblemen accompanied him to the Emperours chamber dore, where met him the Emperors herald, whose office is there held great: and with him all the great officers of the Emperors chamber, who all conducted him to the place where the Emperor sate in his state, having three crownes standing by him, viz. of Muscouia, Cazan, & Astrakan, & also by him foure young noblemen of about twenty yeeres of age, of eche side twaine, costly apparelled in white, holding vpon their shoulders eche of them a broade axe, much like to a Galloglas axe of Ireland, thin and very sharpe, the steale or handle not past halfe a yard long, and there sate about the chamber vpon benches and other low seats, about a hundred noblemen richly apparelled in cloth of golde.

The ambassador being thus brought to the Emperor to kisse his hand, after some complements and inquirie of her Maiesties health, he willed him to goe sit downe in a place prouided for that purpose, nigh ten pases distant from him, from whence he would haue had him to haue sent him her Maiesties letters and present, which the ambassador thinking not reasonable, crept forward towards the Emperour: in which passage the chancellor came to meet him, and would haue taken his letters, to whom the ambassador said, that her Maiestie had directed no letters to him, and so went on, and deliuered them himselfe to the Emperors owne hands.

And after hauing thus deliuered her Maiesties letters, and what he had elſe to say at that time, he was conducted to the Councell chamber, where hauing had conference with the councell of matters of his ambassage, he was soone after sent for againe to the Emperor, where he dined in his presence at a side table, neere vnto him, and all his company at another boord by, where also dined at other tables in the same place all the chiefe noble men that were about the court, to the number of an hundred. And in the time of this dinner, the Emperor vsed many fauors to the ambassadour, and about the midſt of dinner (standing vp) dranke a great carouse to the health of the Queene his good sister, and sent him a great bowle full of Rhenish wine and sugar to pledge him.

The ambassadour after this, was often called to court, where he had conference both with the Emperor and his councell, of the matters in question, touching both ambassages, which diuers times raised many iarres: and in the end after sundry meetings, the Emperour finding himselfe not satisfied to his liking, for that the ambassadour had not power by his commission to yeeld to euery thing that he thought fit, as a man whose will was seldome wonted to be gainesaid, let loose his his paſſion, and with a ſterne and angry countenance tolde him, that he did not reckon the Queene of England to be his fellow: for there are (quoth he) that are her betters.

The ambaſſador greatly miſliking theſe ſpeeches, & being very vnwilling (how dangerous ſoeuer it might prooue to his owne perſon) to giue way to the Emperor, to derogate ought from the honour and greatneſſe of her Maieſtie: and finding alſo that to ſubiect himſelfe to the angrie humor and diſpoſition of the Emperour, was not the meanes to winne ought at his hands, with like courage and countenance to anſwere his, tolde him that the Queene his miſtreſſe, was as great a prince as any was in Chriſtendome, equall to him that thought himſelfe the greateſt, well able to defend her ſelfe againſt his malice whoſoeuer, and wanted not meanes to offend any that either ſhe had, or ſhould haue cauſe to be enemy vnto. Yea (quoth he) How ſayeſt thou to the French king, and the king of Spaine? Marry (quoth the ambaſſador) I holde the Queene my miſtreſſe as great as any of them both. Then what ſayeſt thou (quoth he) to the Emperour of Germany? Such is the greatneſſe of the Queene my miſtreſſe (quoth the ambaſſadour) as the king her father had (not long ſince) the Emperor in his pay, in his warres againſt France.

This anſwere miſliked the Emperor yet ſo much more, as that he tolde the ambaſſadour, that were he not an ambaſſadour, he would throw him out of the doores. Whereunto he anſwered that he might doe his will, for he was now fait within his countrey: but he had a miſtreſſe who (he doubted not) would be reuenged of any iniury that ſhould be done vnto him. Whereupon the Emperour in great ſudden bad him get him home. And he with no more reuerence then ſuch vſage required, ſaluted the Emperor, and went his way.

All this notwithſtanding, the ambaſſadour was not much ſooner out of the chamber, and the Emperors choller ſome what ſetled, but he deliuered to his counſell that ſtood about him many commendations in the fauor of the ambaſſador, for that he would not indure one ill word to be ſpoken againſt his miſtreſſe, and therewithall wiſhed himſelfe to haue ſuch a ſeruant.

The ambaſſador had not beene much more then one houre in his lodging, but the Emperour imagining (as it ſeemed) by the extraordinary behauior of the ambaſſador (for he wanted not wit to iudge) that he had found what was the Emperors caſe, ſent his principall Secretary vnto him, to tell him, that notwithſtanding what had paſt, yet for the great loue that he bare to the Queene his ſiſter, he ſhould very ſhortly be called againe to Court, and haue a reſolution of all the matters in queſtion: and this Secretary was now further content to impart, and ſaid to the ambaſſador that the Emperour was fully reſolued to ſend a greater noble man home with him, in ambaſſage to the Queene his ſiſter, then euer he yet at any time ſent out of his countrey: and that he determined alſo, to ſend to the Queene a preſent worth three thouſand pounds, and to gratifie himſelfe at his departure, with a gift that ſhould be worth a thouſand pounds: and tolde him alſo that the next day the Emperor would ſend a great noble man vnto him, to conferre with him of certaine abuſes done him by Shalkan the chancellor, and his miniſters.

And ſo the day following he ſent Bodan Belskoy the chiefeſt counceller he had, and a man moſt in credit with him; this man examined all matters wherewith the ambaſſador had found himſelfe grieued, and ſupplied him with what he wanted, and righted him in all things wherein he had beene wronged.

Not long after the returne of this noble man, the Emperor cauſed to be ſet downe in his owne preſence, a new and much larger allowance of diet for the ambaſſador then he had had before, and ſhortly after ſent the ſame to the ambaſſadour by his principall Secretarie Sauio Frollo. This diet was ſo great, as the ambaſſadour often times ſought to haue it leſſened, but the Emperour would it not by any meanes.

The ſcroule of the new diet was this:

One buſhell of fine meale for three dayes.	Twelue peny loaues of bread.
One buſhell of wheat meale for a day and a halfe.	One veather or gallon of vinegar.
Two liue geeſe for one day.	Two veathers of ſalt cabiges.
Twenty hennes for the day.	One pecke of onions.
Seuen ſheepe for a day.	Ten pound of ſalt.
One oxe for three dayes.	One altine, or fiue peny worth of ware candles.
One ſide of porke for a day.	Two altines of tallow candles.
Seuentie egges for a day.	One fourth part of a veather of cherie mead.
Ten pound of butter.	As much of Mallynouomead.
Seuenty peny white loaues of bread	Halfe a veather of burnt wine.

One veather of sodden mead called Obarni.	Halfe a pound of pepper.
Three veathers of sweet mead.	Three sollitincks or ounces of saffron.
Ten veathers of white mead.	One sollitincke of mase.
Fiftene veathers of ordinary mead.	One sollitincke of nutmegs.
Foure veathers of sweet beere.	Two sollitincks of cloues.
Fifteene veathers of beere.	Three sollitincks of sinamon.

Prouender, { One bushell of oats. / One load of hay. / One load of straw. }

Now he began so much to discouer his purpose and affection towards her Maiestie & her countrey, as he sent to the ambassador, intreating him that his preacher, and doctor Iacob his English phisicion, might set downe the points of the religion in vse in England, which the ambassadour caused to be done accordingly, and sent them vnto him, who seemed so well to like them, as he caused them (with much good allowance) to be publikely read before diuers of his councell, and many others of his nobility.

Now he drew hotly againe in question, to marry some kinswoman of her Maiesties, & that he would send againe into England, to haue some one of them to wife, and if her Maiestie would not vpon his next ambassage send him such a one as he required, himselfe would then goe into England, and carry his treasure with him, and marry one of them there.

Heere you must vnderstand that the yeere before this ambassage, he had sent to her Maiestie by his ambassador to haue had the lady Mary Hastings in marriage, which intreaty by meanes of her inhabillity of body, by occasion of much sicknesse, or perhaps, of no great liking either of her selfe or friends, or both, tooke no place.

The ambassador was now so farre growen into the Emperors fauor, and his affection so great to England, as those great councellors that were the ambassadors great enemies before, were now desirous of some publike courtesies at his hands for their aduantage to the Emperour: neither durst they now any more interpose themselues twixt the Emperor & him: for not long before this, the Emperor for abusing the ambassador had (to shew his fauor towards him) beaten Shalkan the chanceller very grieuously, and had sent him word, that he would not leaue one of his race aliue.

Now whilest the ambassador was thus strongly possest of the Emperours fauor, he imployed himselfe in all he might, not only for the speedy dispatch of the negociation he had in hand, but laboured also by all the good meanes he might, further to benefit his country and countrymen: and so not long after, wanne at the Emperors hands, not onely all those things he had in commission to treat for by his instructions, but also some other of good and great importance, for the benefit of the merchants.

Priuate sutes obteined of the Emperor by the ambassador.

LEaue for Richard Fransham an Englishman and apothicary to the Emperor, his wife and children, to come home into England, and to bring with him all such goods as he had gotten there.

He obteined like leaue for Richard Elmes an Englishman one of the Emperors surgions.

He also got leaue for Iane Ricards the widow of Doctor Bomelius a Dutch man, and physicion to the Emperor, who for treason practised with the king of Pole against the said Emperour, was rosted to death at the city of Musco, in the yeere 1579.

These following he obteined for the behoofe of the merchants.

HE procured for the merchants, promise of recompence for certaine goods taken from their factors by robberie vpon the Volga.

He obtained likewise, the repayment of fiue hundred marks, which was payd for ten yeeres before his going into Russia (into the Emperours receipt) for a rent of a house that they had at Vologda.

He also got granted for them, the repayment of fifteene hundred marks, which had beene exacted of them the two last yeeres before his comming thither.

He

He got also for them, order for the repayment of an olde and desperate debt of three thousand marks, a debt so desperate, as foure peeres left out of their accounts, and by the opinion of them all, not thought fit to be dealt with, for too much offending the Emperour, or impeaching his other businesse, which was thought at least otherwise sufficient, and was therefore left out of his instructions from her Maiestie.

He obteined that all strangers were forbidden to trade any more into Russia, and that the passage and trade to all the Emperors Northren coasts and countries, from the Ward house to the river of Ob should be onely free to the English nation.

Lastly of a great debte he had to do the merchants good, without motion either of themselues here, or theyr agents there, or any other for them, he obteined of the Emperour, the abatement of all theyr custome which they had long before paid, and agreed still to continue, which custome, the Dutch men and strangers being removed, as now it was agreed, amounted to two thousand pounds yeerely.

All these were granted, some already paid before his comming from Musco, the olde priuiledge ratified, newly written, signed and sealed, and was to be deliuered to the ambassadour at his next comming to court, before when, the Emperor fell sicke of a surfet, and so died.

After whose death, the case was woonderously altered with the ambassador: for whereas both in his owne conceit, and in all mens opinion els, he was in great forwardnes to haue growen a great man with the Emperor, what for the loue he bare to her Maiesty, and the particular liking he had of himselfe, he now fell into the hands of his great enemies, Mikita Romanauich and Andre Shalkan the chancellor, who after the death of the Emperour, tooke the speciall gouernement vpon themselues, and so presently caused the ambassadour to be shut vp a close prisoner in his owne house, for the space of nine weeks, and was so straightly guarded, and badly vsed by those that attended him, as he dayly suspected some further mischiefe to haue followed: for in this time there grew a great vproze in Mosco of nigh twenty thousand persons, which, remembring that his enemies reigned, some what amazed the ambassador, but yet afterwards the matter fell out against that great councellor Bodan Belskoy, whom I noted before to be a speciall man in the olde Emperors fauor: who was now notwithstanding so outragiously assaulted, as that he was forced to seeke the Emperors chamber for his safetie, and was afterwards sent away to Cazan, a place he had in gouernment, fiue hundred miles from Musco, where he hath remained euer since, and neuer as yet called againe to court, at which time the ambassador expected some such like measure, and prepared himselfe as well as he could, for his defence: yet happily after this, was sent for to court, to haue his dispatch, and to take his leaue of the Emperor. Whither being conducted (not after the wonted maner) and brought to the councell chamber, came to him onely Shalkan the chancellor and a brother of his, who without more adoo, tolde him for the summe of his dispatch, that this Emperour would not treat of further amitie with the Queene his mistresse, then such as was betweene his late father and her, before his comming thither: and would not heare any reply to be made by the ambassador, but presently caused both himselfe and all his company to be disarmed of theyr weapons, and go towards the Emperor. In which passage there were such outrages offered him, as had he not vsed more patience, then his disposition afforded him, or the occasion required, he had not in likelihood escaped with life, but yet at length was brought [redacted] presence of the Emperor, who said nothing to him, but what the chancellor had already [redacted] offered him a letter to carry to her Maiestie, which the ambassador (for that he knew it concerned nothing that did concerne his ambassage) refused till he saw his danger grow too great: neither would the Emperour suffer the ambassadour to reply ought, nor well he could, for they had now of purpose taken away his interpretor, being yet vnwilling (as it seemed, and suspecting the ambassadours purpose) that the Emperor and others should know how dishonorably he had beene handled: for there was at that time, in that presence a noble braue gentleman, one Borris Phedaruich Gordino, brother to the Emperour that now is, who yet after the death of the Emperour did alwayes vse the ambassador most honorably, and would very willingly haue done him much more kindenesse, but his authority was not yet, till the coronation of the Emperour: but notwithstanding sent often vnto him, not long before his departure, and accompanied his many honorable fauours with a present of two faire pieces of cloth of golde, and a tymber of very good sables: and desired that as there was kindnesse and brotherhood twixt the Emperor and her Maiesty, so there might be loue and brotherhood twixt him and the ambassador. Hauing from this man, there was now no more fauor nor friendship left for the ambassador in Muscouia: for the chancellor Shalkan had now sent him word that the English Emperor was dead: he had now nothing offered him but dangers and disgraces too many, and a hasty dispatch from the Musco, that he might not tary the coronation of the new Emperour: offences many in his preparation for his long iourney, onely one meane gentleman appointed to accompany him to the sea side, expecting daily in his passage some sudden reuenge to be done vpon him, for so he vnderstood it was threatned before his comming from the Mosco, and therfore with resolution prouided by all the meanes he might, by himselfe and seruants for his defence (for now was his danger knowen such, as the English merchants did altogether leaue him, although he commanded them in her Maiesties name to accompany him) that if any such thing should happen to be offered him, as many of them as he could that should offer to execute it, should die with him for company: which being perceiued (was thought) did make his passage the safer. So afterward being driuen to digest many iniuries by the way, at length he recouered S. Nicholas, where remembring his vnfortunate losse of the olde Emperour: and his ill vsage since then at the Mosco, his being forced to take a bare letter for the summe of his dispatch, conteining nothing of that he came for, and the poore and disgracefull present sent him (in the name of the Emperour) in respect of that that was meant him by the olde Emperour, knowing all these to be done in disgrace of her Maiestie and himselfe, determined now to be discharged of some part of them in such sort as he could, and so prouiding as he might to preuent his danger, in getting to his shippe, furnishing and placing his men to answere any assault that should be offered him, after he had bidden farewell to the vncourteous gentleman that brought him thither, by three or foure of the valiantest and discreetest men he had, he sent to be deliuered him or left at his lodging, his maisters weake letter, and woorse present, and so afterwards happily (though hardly) recouered his shippe in safetie, although presently afterwards, there was great hurlie burlie after him, to force him to receiue the same againe, but failed of their purpose. So came the ambassadour from S. Nicholas the twelft day of August, and arriued at Grauesend the twelft of September following, and attended her Maiestie at the court at Otelands, where, after hauing kist her Maiesties hands, and deliuered some part of the successe of his ambassage, he presented her an Elke or Losse, the Red deere of the country, and also a brace of Raine deare, Bucke & Doe, both bearing very huge hornes: they in her Maiesties presence drew a sled & a man vpon it, after the maner of the Sammites, a people that inhabit in the Northeast from Russia, and were that peere come ouer the sea in the winter season vpon the ice, in their sleds, drawen with these deere into Russia, where the ambassadour brought of them seuentene, whereof he brought nine aliue into Kent.

A letter of M. Henrie Lane to the worshipfull M. William Sanderson, conteining a briefe discourse of that which passed in the Northeast discouerie for the space of three and thirtie yeeres.

MAster Sanderson, as you lately requested mee, so haue I sought, and though I cannot finde things that heeretofore I kept in writing, and lent out to others, yet perusing at London copies of mine olde letters to content one that meaneth to pleasure many, I haue briefly and as truly as I may, drawen out as follow[illegible] The rough hewing may be planed at your leasure, or as pleaseth him that [illegible] take the paines.

First the honourable attempt to discouer by sea Northeast and Northwest named for Cathay, being chiefly procured by priuiledge from king Edward the first, and other his nobilitie, by and at the cost and sute of M. Sebastian Cabota, then gouernor for discoueries with sir Andrew Iudde, sir George Barnes, sir William Garret, M. Anthonie Hussie, and a companie of merchants, was in the last peere of his Maiesties reigne 1553. The generall charge whereof was committed to one sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, a goodly Gentleman accompanied with sufficient number of Pilots, Maisters, Merchants and Mariners, hauing three shippes well furnished, to wit, The Bona Speranza, the Edward Bonaduenture, and the Confidentia. The Edward Bonaduenture, Richard Chanceller being Pilot, and Steuen Burrough Maister, hauing discouered Ward house vpon the coast of Finmarke, by stoyme or fogge departed from the rest, found the bay of S. Nicholas now the chiefe port for Russia, there wintred in safetie, and had ayd of people at a village called Newnox.

Anno 1553. M. William Burrough was then yong and with his brother in this first voyage.

The other two shippes attempting further Northwards (as appeared by pamphlets founde after written by sir Hugh Willoughbie) was in September encountred with such extreame colde, that they put backe to seeke a wintring place: and missing the saide baye fell vpon a desert coast in Lappia, entring into a Riuer immediatelie frozen vp, since discouered, named Arzina,

Reca,

Reca, distant East from a Russian Monastery of Monkes called Pechingham, from whence they neuer returned, but all to the number of 70. persons perished, which was for want of experience to haue made caues or stoues. These were found with the shippes the next Summer Anno 1554. by Russe fishermen: and in Anno 1555. the place sent vnto by English Merchants as hereafter appeareth. Note.

Anno 1554. the saide shippe Edward Bonaduenture (although robbed homewards by Flemings) returned with her companie to London, shewing and setting foorth their entertainments and discouerie of the countryes euen to the citie of Mosco, from whence they brought a priuilege written in Russe with the kings or great dukes seale, the other two ships looked for & vnknowen to them where they were. Anno 1554.

An. 1555. the said companie of Merchants for discouerie vpon a new supply, sent thither againe with two ships, to wit, the Edward Bonaduenture, & another bearing the name of the King and Queene, Phillip and Marie, whose Maiesties by their letters to the said Moscouite, recommended sundry their subiects then passing, whereof certaine, to wit, Richard Chanceller, George Killingworth, Henry Lane, and Arthur Edwards, after their arriuall at the Bay, and passing vp Dwina to Vologda, went first vp to Mosco, where vpon knowledge of the said letters, they with their traine had speciall entertainment, with houses and diet appointed, and shortly permitted to the princes presence, they were with gentlemen brought through the citie of Mosco, to the castle and palace, replenished with numbers of people, and some gunners. They entred sundrie roomes, furnished in shew with ancient graue personages, all in long garments of sundry colours, gold, tissue, baldekin, and violet, as our vestments and copes haue bene in England, sutable with caps, iewels, and chaines. These were found to be no courtiers, but ancient Moscouits, inhabitants, and other their merchants of credite, as the maner is, furnished thus from the Wardrobe and Treasurie, waiting and wearing this apparell for the time, and so to restore it. Anno 1555. The King and Queenes letters.

Then entring into the presence, being a large roome floored with carpets, were men of more estate, and richer shew, in number aboue an hundred set square: who after the said English men came in, doing reuerence, they all stood vp, the prince onely sitting, and yet rising at any occasion, when our King and Queenes names were read or spoken. Then after speeches by interpretation, our men killing his hand, and bidden to dinner, were stayed in another roome, and at dinner brought through, where might be seene massie siluer and gilt plate, some like & as big as kilderkins, and washbowles, and entring the dining place, being the greater roome, the prince was set bare headed, his crowne and rich cappe standing vpon a pinnacle by. Not farre distant, sate his Metropolitane, with diuers other of his kindred, and chiefe Tartarian Captaines: none sate ouragainst him, or any, at other tables, their backs towards him: which tables all furnished with ghests set, there was for the Englishmen, named by the Russes, Ghosti Carabelski, to wit, strangers or merchants by ship, a table in the middest of the roome, where they were set direct against the prince: and then began the seruice, brought in by a number of his yoong Lords and Gentlemen, in such rich attire, as is aboue specified: and still from the Princes table (notwithstanding they owne furniture) they had his whole messes set ouer all in massie fine golde, deliuered euery time from him by name to them, by their seuerall Christian names, as they sate, viz. Richard, George, Henry, Arthur. Likewise bread and sundry drinks of purified mead, made of fine white and clarified honie. At their rising, the prince called them to his table, to receiue each one a cuppe from his hand to drinke, and tooke into his hand Master George Killingworths beard, which reached ouer the table, and pleasantly deliuered it the Metropolitane, who seeming to blesse it, said in Russe, this is Gods gift. As in deed at that time it was not only thicke, broad, & yellow coloured, but in length fiue foot & two inches of assize. Then taking leaue, being night, they were accompanied & followed with a number, carying pots of drinke, and dishes of meat dressed, to our lodging. M. Killingworths beard of a maruelous length.

This yeere the two shippes, with the dead bodies of Sir Hugh Willoughbie, and his people, were sent vnto by Master Killingworth, (which remained there in Mosco, Agent almost two yeeres) and much of the goods and victuals were recouered and saued.

Anno 1556. The companie sent two ships for Russia, with extraordinary maisters and sailers to bring home the two ships, which were frozen in Lappia, in the riuer of Arzina aforesaid. The two ships sent this yeere from England sailing from Lapland to the Bay of S. Nicholas, tooke in lading with passengers, to wit, a Russe ambassador, named Ioseph Nepey, and some of his men shipped with Richard Chanceler, in the Edward. But so it fell out that the two which came from Lappia, with all their new Masters and Mariners, neuer were heard of, but in foule weather, and wrought seas, after their two yeeres wintring in Lapland, became, as is supposed, vnstanch, and sunke, wherein were drowned also diuers Russes merchants, and seruants of the ambassador. Anno 1556.

A third ship the Edward aforesaid, falling on the North part of Scotland, vpon a rocke was also lost, and Maister Chanceler, with diuers other, drowned. The said Russe ambassador hardly escaping, with other his men, mariners, and some goods saued, were sent for into Scotland, from the King, Queene, and Merchants (the messenger being M. Doctor Laurence Hussie, and others:) And then, as in the chronicles appeareth, honorably entertained and receiued at London.

This yeere also the companie furnished and sent out a pinnesse, named the Serchthrift, to discouer the harborowes in the North coast from Norway to Wardhouse, and so to the Bay of S. Nicholas. There was in her Master and Pilot, Stephen Burrough, with his brother William, and eight other. Their discouerie was beyond the Bay, toward the Samoeds, people dwelling neere the riuer of Ob, and found a sound or sea with an Iland called Vaigars, first by them put into the Carde or Mappe. In that place they threwe ouerboord out of their said pinnesse, with shouels in August, by which extremitie, and lacke of time, they came backe to Russia, and wintred at Colmogro.

Anno 1557. Anno 1557. The companie with foure good ships, sent backe the said Russe Ambassador, and in companie with him, sent as an Agent, for further discouerie, Master Anthony Ienkinson, who

Boghar voyage. afterward anno 1558, with great fauour of the prince of Moscouia, and his letters passed the riuer Volga to Cazan, and meaning to seeke Cathay by land, was by manie troupes and companies of vnciuil Tartarians, encountred, and in danger: but keeping companie with merchants of Bactria, or Boghar, & Vrgeme, trauelling with camels, he with his company, went to Boghar, and no further, whose entertainment of the king is to be had of master Ienkinson, which returned 1560. anno 1559. to Moscouie. And in anno 1560. he, with Henry Lane, came home into England, which yeere was the first safe returne, without losse of shipwracke, or dead fraight, and burnings.

The first trade to the Narue. 1560. And at this time was the first traffike to the Narue in Liuonia, which confines with Lituania, & all the dominions of Russia, with the markets, faires, commodities, great townes & riuers, were sent vnto by diuers seruants: the reports were taken by Henry Lane, Agent, and deliuered to the companie, 1561. The trade to Rie, and Reuel, of olde time hath beene long since frequented by our English nation, but this trade to the Narue was hitherto concealed from vs by the Danskers and Lubeckers.

Anno 1561. the said Master Anthony Ienkinson went Agent into Russia, who the next yeere after, passing all the riuer of Volga to Astracan, and ouer the Caspian sea, arriued in Persia, and opened the trade thither.

Also betweene the yeeres of 1568. and 1573. sundry voyages after Master Ienkinsons, were

Alcocke slaine in Persia. made by Thomas Alcocke, Arthur Edwards, Master Thomas Bannister, and Master Geffrey

Bannister died in Media. Ducket, whose returne (if spoile neere Volga had not preuented by rouing theeues) had altogether saued and recouered the companies (called the olde companies) great losse, charges, and da-

Edwards died at Astracan mages: but the saying is true, By vnitie small things grow great, and by contention great things become small. This may be vnderstood best by the companie. The frowardnes of some few, and euill doing of some vniust factors, was cause of much of the euill successe.

Arthur Edwards was sent againe 1579. and died in the voyage at Astracan. About which matters, are to be remembred the voyages of Master Thomas Randolph Esquire, Ambassador, anno 1567. And late of Sir Ierome Bowes, anno 1583. both tending and treating for further discoueries, freedomes, & priuileges, wherewith I medle not. But in conclusion, for their paines and aduentures this way (as diuers doe now adayes other wayes) as woorthie Gentlemen sue from princes, to doe their Countrey good, I put them in your memorie, with my hearty farewell. From S. Magarets neere Dartforth in Kent.

Yours Henrie Lane.

The late ambassage of Master Giles Fletcher, Doctor of the Ciuill Law, sent from her Maiestie to the Emperour of Russia, Anno 1588.

IN the yeere 1588, was sent Ambassador from her Highnesse, into the Country of Russia, Giles Fletcher Doctor of the Ciuill Law, aswell to treat with the new Emperour Phedor Iuanowich, about league and amitie, in like manner as was before with his father Iuan Vasilowich, as also for the reestablishing and reducing into order the decayed trade of our English men there. Who notwithstanding at his first arriuall at the Mosco, founde some partes of hard intertainment, by meanes of certaine rumors, concerning the late nauall victorie, which was there repoſed to haue fallen on the Spaniſh ſide, as alſo for ſome diſlike conceiued againſt the priuileged trade of our Engliſh merchants. Yet in the end obteined of the Emperour many good & equall conditions, and was courteouſly and honorably diſmiſſed by him. The principall points which he intreated of, and were granted vnto him by the ſaid Emperour, were theſe:

1 A continuation of league and amitie betweene her Highneſſe, and the ſaid Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich, in like maner as was before with his father Iuan Vaſilowich.

2 A confirmation and reeſtabliſhment of the former priuileges of the company of our Engliſh merchants, which were infringed and annulled in the principall points, with diuers neceſſary additions to the ſame, for the better ordering of their trade in thoſe countries hereafter, viz. That the ſtate of the priuilege granted before in the names of ſome priuate and particular men, be altered in that point, and the ſame granted by the name and ſtile of their incorporation, viz. To the fellowſhip of Engliſh merchants, for the diſcouerie of new trades.

3 That vpon euery ſurmiſe and light quarrell, the ſaid priuilege be not reuoked, and annulled, as before time it hath beene.

4 That iuſtice ſhall be adminiſtred to the ſaid companie and their agent, without delay, vpon ſuch as ſhall offer them any deſpite or iniurie, or ſhall exact or impoſe vpon them anie paiment, taxation, or impoſition whatſoeuer, contrary to the freedome of the ſaid grant.

5 That the goods and commodities of the ſaid companie, be not forcibly taken, as before time they haue beene by the Emperors officers, or people of authoritie, either for the vſe of the ſaid Emperour or of his officers. But in caſe they haue need of the ſaid commodities, the ſame to be taken at reaſonable prices, and for ready money.

6 That the ſaid companie be not charged heereafter with the anſwering of ſuch debts as are made by any Engliſh man, not being of the ſocietie.

7 That the Emperours authorized people, ſhall not heereafter repute any Engliſh man reſiant in that country, to be any factor, ſeruant, or dealer in the ſaid companies affaires, but ſuch as the agent ſhall inregiſter by name, within the offices where cuſtome is entred in all ſuch places of the land, where the ſaid companie haue reſidencies to traffike.

8 That the names of ſuch as ſhall ſo be inregiſtred, be no longer continued in record, nor themſelues reputed as factors or dealers, for the ſaid company, then the agent ſhal thinke good. But in caſe the ſaid agent in his diſcretion ſhall thinke meet to ſtrike out of the regiſter any name of ſuch as haue beene imployed in the companies ſeruice, the ſaid perſon to be held as priuate, and whoſe act in bargaining or otherwiſe, ſhall not charge the ſaid company.

9 That if any Engliſh man within the countrey of Ruſſia, be ſuſpected for any notorious crime, as fellony, treaſon, &c. the ſame be not ſtraightwaies ſet vpō the Pudkey, nor otherwiſe tormented, till ſuch time as he ſhalbe conuicted by plaine and euident proofes: which being done, the whole proceeding to be ſent ouer to the Queene of England.

10 That the ſaid priuilege, with the additions, ſhall be publiſhed in all townes and parts of the Emperors dominions, where the ſaid company haue traffike.

11 That the ſaid companie ſhall be permitted to vſe a ſole trade through the Emperours countries, by the riuer Volga, into Media, Perſia, Bogharia, and the other the Eaſt countries.

12 Whereas there was claimed of the ſaid companie, the ſumme of 2[illegible]53. markes of debt, made by certaine of their factors for the ſaid company, for paiment wherof, their whole ſtocke was in danger of arreſt, by publike anthoritie: Further alſo 2140. rubbles for cuſtome and houſerent, he obtained a rebatement of ſeuenteene thouſand, eleuen hundred, fiftie and three marks of the ſaid debt.

The ſaid Ambaſſador Maſter Giles Fletcher, as I vnderſtand, hath drawen a booke, intituled, Of the Ruſſe Common wealth, containing:

Firſt, a Coſmographicall deſcription of the countrey, which hath theſe chapters.

1 Of the length and bredth of the countrey of Ruſſia, with the names of the ſhires.
2 Of the ſoile and climat.
3 Of the natiue commodities of the countrey.

Secondly a deſcription of their pollicie, conteined in theſe Chapters, viz.

1 Of the conſtitution or ſtate of the Ruſſe Common wealth.
2 Of their Parliaments, and maner of holding them.
3 Of the Ruſſe Nobilitie, and meanes, whereby it is kept in an vnder proportion, agreeable to that ſtate.
4 Of the maner of gouerning their prouinces or ſhires.

5 Of the Emperours priuie councell.
6 Of the Emperours customes, and their reuenues, with the practises for the increase of them.
7 Of the Russe comminaltie, and their condition.
8 Of their publike iustice, and maner of proceeding therein.
9 Of the Emperours forces for his warres, with the chiefe officers, & their salarie or pay.
10 Of their maner of mustering, armor, and prouision for victuall.
11 Of their ordering, marching, charging, and their martiall discipline.
12 Of their colonies, and pollicie in mainteining their purchases by conquest.
13 Of their borderers, with whom they haue most to do in warre and peace.
14 Of their church offices, and degrees.
15 Of their liturgie, or forme of church seruice.
16 Of their maner of administring the Sacraments.
17 Of the doctrine of the Russe church.
18 Of the maner of solemnizing their marriages.
19 Of the other ceremonies of the Russe church.

Thirdly, the Oeconomie or priuate behauior of the Russe, conteining these chapters.

1 Of the Emperours housholde officers, and order of his house.
2 Of the priuate behauior and maner of the Russe people.

The booke it selfe he thought not good, for diuers considerations, to make publike at this time.

A testimony of the Northeastern discouerie, made by the English, and of the profit that may arise by pursuing the same: taken out of the se- cond volume of nauigations, and voyages, fol. 17. of the notable Cosmographer M. Iohn Baptista Ramusius, Secretarie to the state of Venice: Written in Italian, in the yeere, 1557.

Dalla parte poi di sotto la nostra Tramontana, che chiascuno scrittore & Cosmographo di questi & de passati tempi fin'hora vi ha messo & mette mare congelato, & che la terra corra continuamente fino a 90. gradi verso il Polo: sopra questo mappa-mondo all' incontro si vede che la terra và solamente vn poco sopra la Norwega & Suetia, & voltando corre poi Greco & Leuante nel paese della Moscouia & Rossia, & và diritto al Cataio. Et che cio sia la verità, le nauigationi che hanno fatte gl' Inglesi con le loro naui, volendo andare à scoprire il Cataio al tempo del Re Odoardo Sesto d' Inghilterra, questi anni passati, ne possono far vera testimonianza: perche nel mezzo del loro viaggio, capitate per fortuna ai liti di Moscouia, doue trouarono allhora regnare Giouanni Vassiliwich Imperatore della Rossia & gran Duca di Moscouia, il quale con molto piacere & marauigha vedutogli, fece grandissime carezze, hanno trouato quel mare essere nauigabile, & non agghiacciato. La qual nauigatione (ancor che con l'esito fin hora non sia stata bene intesa) se col stesso frequentarla & col lungo vso & cognitione di que' mari si continuerà, è per fare grandissima mutatione & rimolgimento nelle cose di questa nostra parte del mondo.

MOreouer (hauing before spoken of diuers particularities, in an excellent mappe of Paulus Venetus) on that part subiect to our North pole, where euery writer & Cosmographer of these, and of former times hitherto, haue, and doe place the frozen sea, and that the land stretcheth continually to 90. degrees, towards the pole: contrariwise, in this mappe is to be seene, that the land extendeth only a little aboue Norway, and Suethland, and then turning it selfe, trendeth afterwards towards the Southeast, and by East, vnto the country of Moscouie and Russia, and stretcheth directly vnto Cathay. And that this is true, the nauigations which the English men haue of late made, intending to discouer Cathay, in the time of Edward the first, king of England, are very sufficient witnesses. For in the mids of their voyage, lighting by chance vpon the coast of Moscouie (where they found then reigning Iohn Vassilliuich Emperor of Russia, and great duke of Moscouia, who after he had to his great delight, and admiration, seene the English men, entertained them with exceeding great courtesies) found this sea to be nauigable, and not frozen.

Which nauigation to Cathay, although it be not as yet throughly knowen, yet if with often frequenting the same, and by long vse and knowledge of those seas, it be continued, it is likely make a wonderfull change and reuolution in the state of this our part of the world.

The

The teſtimonie of Gerardus Mercator, in his laſt large mappe of Europe, touching the notable diſcoueries of the Engliſh, made of Moſcouie by the Northeaſt.

MAgnam occaſionem certámque rationem emendandæ Europæ nobis attulit celeberrima Anglorum per Cronium mare nauigatio: quæ littora Septentrionalia Finlappiæ Moſcouiæque iuxta cœli ſitum, mundique plagas digeſta habet. Exacta etiam vrbis Moſcuæ latitudo ab Anglis obſeruata, interiorum Regionum emendatiùs deſcribendarum infallibilem legem præſcripſit: Quibus oblatis adminiculis pulcherrimis, iniquum putaui tabulam hanc caſtigatiorem non reddere.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

The moſt famous nauigation of the Engliſh men by the Northeaſt ſea, hath offered vnto me a great occaſion, and certeine direction for the reformation of the mappe of Europe: which diſcouery hath the Northerne parts of Finmarke, Lapland, and Moſcouie, laid out according to the iuſt eleuation, and the quarters of the world. And further, the true obſeruation of the latitude of the citty of Moſco, made by the foreſaid Engliſhmen, hath yeelded me an infallible rule, for the correcting of the ſituation of the inland countries: which notable helps being miniſtred vnto me, I thought it my duety to exhibite to the world this mappe, more exact and perfect, then hitherto it hath beene publiſhed.

Another teſtimonie of Ioannes Metellus Sequanus, concerning the ſame nauigation, and diſcouerie, in his preface prefixed before Oſorius de rebus geſtis Emanuelis Regis Portugalliæ, written about the yeere, 1574.

AT ne omnis, vnis Hiſpanis, Oceani maris gloria totáque concederetur, Britanni Septentriones noua in Moſcouiam nauigatione, ab hinc annis viginti plus minùs illuſtrarunt. Nam bellis Sueticis à Moſcouitarum, Naruæque Liuoniæ excluſi commercio, iter ad illos Oceano, hinc Noruegiæ, Finmarchiæ, Lappiæ, Scricfinniæ, Biarmiæque: illinc Groenlandiæ littora præterſuecti, vltra Septuageſſimum latitudinis Aquilonaris gradum ſibi patefaciunt. Quam nauigationem Belgæ poſtea, non ſine tamen cum iiſdem Britannis velitatione, ſunt ſecuti. Eò vehunt argenti veteris fragmenta, lineáſque veſtes propè detritas, omníſque generis minutiores merces, ad vſum, cultúmque corporis hominum vtriúſque ſexus, veluti lintea & byſſea cingula, periſcelides, crumenas, cultros, & id genus ſexcenta. A Moſchis autem pelles omnis generis pretioſas adferunt, & Salmones ſalitos, fumóque duratos.

BVt leaſt all, and the whole glorie of diſcouering the Ocean ſea, ſhould be aſcribed to the Spaniards, the Engliſh men about twenty yeeres paſt, by a new nauigation into Moſcouie, diſcouered the Northeaſt parts. For they by reaſon of the warres of Swethland, being hindred from the traffike of the Moſcouites, and of the Narue in Liſland, opened a paſſage for themſelues by the Ocean ſea, beyond the Northerne latitude of 70. degrees: hauing in their courſe on the one ſide the coaſts of Norway, Finmarke, Lapland, Scrikfine, and Biarmia: On the other ſide the coaſt of Groneland. Which voyage the Hollanders afterward entred into, but not without ſome conflict with the Engliſh. They carry thither olde plate, and courſe linnen cloth, and all kinde of ſmall mercerie wares, ſeruing for the apparelling of men and women, as linnen, and ſilke girdles, garters, purſes, kniues, and many ſuch like things. And they bring away from the Moſcouites, all kinde of pretious furres, and Salmons ſalted, and dried in the ſmoke.

The end of the ſecond part.

THE THIRD AND LAST PART OF THE principall Nauigations and Diſcoueries of the Engliſh nation made to the Weſt, Northweſt, and Southweſt parts of the world, with the Letters, Priuileges, Diſcourſes, Obſeruations, and other neceſſarie thinges concerning the ſame.

The voyage of Madoc the ſonne of Owen Guyneth Prince of Northwales, to the Weſt Indies, in the yeere 1170: taken out of the hiſtorie of Wales, lately publiſhed by M. Dauid Powel Doctor of Diuinitie.

After the death of Owen Gwyneth, his ſonnes fell at debate who ſhould inherit after him: for the eldeſt ſonne borne in matrimony, Edward or Iorwerth Drwydion, was counted vnmeet to gouerne, becauſe of the maime vpon his face: and Howell that tooke vpon him all the rule was a baſe ſonne, begotten vpon an Iriſh woman. Therefore Dauid gathered all the power he could, and came againſt Howell, and fighting with him ſlew him, & afterwards inioyed quietly the whole land of Northwales, vntill his brother Iorwerths ſonne came to age. Madoc another of Owen Gwyneth his ſonnes left the land in contention betwixt his brethren, & prepared certaine ſhips, with men and munition, and ſought aduentures by ſeas, ſailing Weſt, and leauing the coaſt of Ireland ſo farre North, that he came to a land vnknowen, where he ſaw many ſtrange things. ¶Madoc the ſonne of Owen Gwineth.

This land muſt needs be ſome part of that countrey of which the Spanyards affirme themſelues to be the firſt finders ſince Hannoes time. For by reaſon, and order of Coſmographie, this land to the which Madoc came, muſt needs be ſome part of Noua Hiſpania, or Florida. Whereupon it is manifeſt that that country was long before by Britaines diſcouered, afore either Columbus or Americus Veſputius led any Spanyards thither. Of the voyage and returne of this Madoc there be many fables fained, as the common people do vſe in diſtance of place & length of time rather to augment then to diminiſh, but ſure it is that there he was. And after he had returned home, and declared the pleaſant and fruitfull countryes that he had ſeene without inhabitants, and vpon the contrary part, for what barrenes wilde ground his brethren and nephues did murther one another, he prepared a number of ſhippes, & got with him ſuch men and women as were deſirous to liue in quietneſſe, and taking leaue of his friends, tooke his iourney thitherward againe. Therfore it is to be preſuppoſed, that he & his people inhabited part of thoſe countryes: for it appeareth by Francis Lopez de Gomara, that in Acuzamil and other places the people honored the croſſe. Whereby it may be gathered that Chriſtians had beene there before the comming of the Spanyards. But becauſe this people were not many, they followed the maners of the land they came vnto, and vſed the language they found there. ¶M. Lloyd. ¶Gomara lib. 2. cap. 16.

This Madoc arriuing in that Weſterne countrey, vnto the which he came in the yeere 1170, left moſt of his people there, and returning backe for more of his owne nation, acquaintance and friends, to inhabit that fayre and large countrey, went thither againe with ten ſailes, as I finde noted by Gutyn Owen. I am of opinion that the land whereunto he came, was ſome part of Mexico. The cauſes which make me to thinke ſo be theſe. ¶M. Powels addition.

1 The common report of the inhabitants of that country, which affirme that their rulers deſcended from a ſtrange nation that came thither from a farre countrey. Which thing is confeſſed by Mutezuma king of that country, in an oration made for quitting of his people, at his submission to the king of Castile, Hernando Cortes being then present, which is laid downe in the Spanish chronicles of the conquest of the West Indies.

Dan. Ingram, Sir Humfrey Gilberts discoueris.

2 The British wordes, and names of places vsed in that countrey, euen to this day, doe argue the same, as when they talke together, they vse this word Gwrando, which is, Hearken or Listen. Also they haue a certaine bird with a white head, which they call Penguyn, that is, White head, but the Island of Corroeso, the riuer of Guyndor, and the white rocke of Penguyn, which be all British or Welsh words, do manifestly shew that it was that countrey which Madoc and his people inhabited.

The offer of the discouerie of the West Indies by Christopher Columbus to King Henrie the seuenth in the yeere 1488 the 13 of Februarie: with the Kings acceptation of the offer, and the cause whereupon he was depriued of the same, recorded in the thirteenth chapter of the historie of Don Fernand Columbus of the life and deeds of his Father Christopher Columbus.

CHristophoro Colon temendo, se parimente i Re di Castiglia non assentissero alla sua impresa, non gli bisognasse proporla di nuouo à qualche altro principe, & cosi in cio passasse lungo tempo: mando in Inghilterra vn suo fratello, che haueua appresso di se, chiamato Bartolomeo Colon: il qual quantunque non hauesse lettere Latine, era però huomo prattico, & giudicioso nelle cose del mare, & sapea molto bene far carte da nauigare, & sphere, & altri instrumenti di quella professione, come dal suo fratello era instruito. Partito adunque Bartholomeo Colon per Inghilterra, volle la sua sorte, che desse in man di corsali, i quali lo spogliarono insieme con gli altri della sua naue. Per la qual cosa, & per la sua pouertà & infirmità, che in cosi diuerse terre lo assalirono crudelmente, prolungo per gran tempo la sua ambasciata, fin che, aquistata vn poco di facultà con le carte, ch'ei fabricaua, cominciò a far pratiche co'l Re Enrico settimo, padre di Enrico ottauo, che al presente regna: a cui appresentò un mappamondo, nel quale erano scritti questi versi, che fra le sue scriture lo trouai, & da me saranno qui posti piu tosto per l'antichità, che per la loro eleganza.

CHriſtopher Columbus fearing leaſt if the king of Caſtile in like maner (as the king of Portingall had done) ſhould not condeſcend vnto his enterpriſe, he ſhould be inforced to offer the ſame againe to ſome other prince, and ſo much time ſhould be ſpent therin, ſent into England a certaine brother of his which he had with him, whoſe name was Bartholomew Columbus, who, albeit he had not the Latine tongue, yet neuertheleſſe was a man of experience and ſkilfull in ſea cauſes, and could very well make ſea cards & globes, and other inſtruments belonging to that profeſſion, as he was inſtructed by his brother. Wherefore after that Bartholomew Columbus was departed for England, his lucke was to fall into the hands of pirats, which ſpoiled him with the reſt of them which were in the ſhip which he went in. Vpon which occaſion, and by reaſon of his pouerty and ſickneſſe which cruelly aſſaulted him in a country ſo far diſtant from his friends, he deferred his amballage for a long while, vntill ſuch time as he had gotten ſomewhat handſome about him with making of ſea cards. At length he began to deale with king Henry the ſeuenth the father of Henry the eight, which reigneth at this preſent: vnto whom he preſented a mappe of the world, wherein theſe verſes were written, which I found among his papers: and I will heere ſet them downe, rather for their antiquity then for their goodneſſe.

Thou which deſireſt eaſily the coſts of lands to know,
This comely mappe right learnedly the ſame to thee will ſhow:
Which Strabo, Plinie, Ptolomew and Iſodore maintaine:
Yet for all that they do not all in one accord remaine.
Heere alſo is ſet downe the late diſcouered burning Zone
By Portingalles, vnto the world which whilom was vnknowne, Wherof the knowledge now at length through all the world is blowne.

In London publiſhed this worke. To Chriſt all laud therefore.

And beauſe ſome peraduenture may obſerue, that he calleth himſelfe Columbus de Terra rubra, I ſay, that in like maner I haue ſeene ſome ſubſcriptions of my father Chriſtopher Columbus, before he had the degree of Admirall, wherin he ſigned his name thus, Columbus de Terra rubra. But to returne to the king of England, I ſay, that after he had ſeene the map, & that which my father Chriſtopher Columbus offered vnto him, he accepted the offer with ioyfull countenance, and ſent to call him into England. But becauſe God had reſerued the ſaid offer for Caſtile, Columbus was gone in the meane ſpace, and alſo returned with the performance of his enterpriſe, as hereafter in order ſhalbe rehearſed. Now will I leaue off from making any farther mention of that which Bartholomew Colon had negotiated in England, and I will returne vnto the Admirall. &c.

King Henrie the ſeuenth his acceptation of Columbus offer.

Another testimony taken out of the 60 chapter of the foresayd historie of Ferdinando Columbus, concerning the offer that Bartholomew Columbus made to king Henrie the seuenth on the behalfe of his brother Christopher.

Ornato adunque l' Ammiraglio dallo scoprimento di Cuba & di Giamaica, trouo nella Spagnuola Bartolomeo Colon suo fratello, quello, che era già andato a trattare accordo col Re d' Inghilterra sopra lo scoprimento delle Indie, come di sopra habiam detto. Questo poi, ritornandosene verso Castiglia con capitoli concedutí, hauena inteso a Parigi dal re Carlo di Francia, l' Ammiraglio suo fratello hauer già scoperte l' Indie: perche gli souenne per poter far il Viaggio di cento scudi. Et, Auenga che per cotal nuona egli si fosse molto affrettato, per arriuar l' Ammiraglio in Spagna, quando non dieno giunse a Siuiglia, egli era già tornato alle Indie co' 17 nauigli. Perche, per esseguir quanto egli hauea lasciato, di subito al principio dell' anno del 1494 sen' andò a' Re Catholici, menando seco Don diego Colon, mio fratello, & me ancora, acciochè seruissimo di paggi al serenissimo prencipe Don Giouanni, il qual viua in gloria, si come hauea commandato la Catholica Reina donna Isabella, che alhora era in Vagliadolid. Tosto adunque che noi giungemmo, i Re chiamarono don Bartholomeo & Mandaronlo alla Spagnuola con tre naui, &c.

¶ The same in English.

Christopher Columbus the Admirall being returned from the discouery of Cuba and Iamayca, found in Hispaniola his brother Bartholomew Columbus, who before had bene sent to intreat of an agreement with the king of England for the discouerie of the Indies, as we haue said before. This Bartholomew therefore returning vnto Castile, with the capitulations granted by the king of England to his brother, vnderstoode at Paris by Charles the king of France, that the Admirall his brother, had already performed that discouery: and gaue him 100 crownes towards his voyage. And albeit he made great haste vpon this good newes to meet with the Admirall in Spaine, yet at his comming to Siuil his brother was already returned to the Indies, with 17 saile of shippes. Wherefore to fulfill that which he had left him in charge, in the beginning of the yeere 1494 he repayred to the Catholike prince, taking with him Diego Colon my brother and me also, which were to be preferred as pages to the most excellent prince Don Iohn, who now is with God, according to the commandement of the Catholike Queene lady Isabell, which was then in Validolid. As soone therefore as we came to the Court, the prince called for Don Bartholomew, and sent him to Hispaniola with three shippes, &c.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

HEnry by the grace of God, King of England & France, and lord of Ireland, to all to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, Greeting.

Be it knowne that we haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents doe giue and grant for vs and our heyres, to our welbeloued Iohn Cabot citizen of Uenice, to Lewis, Sebaſtian & Santius ſonnes of the ſaid Iohn, and to the heyres of them, and euery of them, and their deputies, full & free authority, leaue, and power to ſaile to all parts, countries, and ſeas of the Eaſt, of the Weſt, and of the North, vnder our banners and enſignes, with fiue ſhips of what burthen or quantity ſoeuer they be, and as many mariners or men as they will haue with them in the ſayd ſhips, vpon their owne proper coſts and charges, to ſeeke out, diſcouer, and finde whatſoeuer iſles, countries, regions or prouinces of the heathen and infidels whatſoeuer they be, and in what part of the world ſoeuer they be, which before this time haue beene vnknowen to all Chriſtians: we haue granted to them, and alſo to euery of them, the heyres of them, and euery of them, and their deputies, and haue giuen them licence to ſet vp our banners and enſignes in euery village, towne, caſtle, iſle, or maine land of them newly found. And that the aforeſaid Iohn and his ſonnes or their heyres and aſſignes may ſubdue, occupy and poſſeſſe all ſuch townes, cities, caſtles and iſles of them found, which they can ſubdue, occupy and poſſeſſe, as our vaſſals, and lieutenants, getting vnto vs the rule, title, and iuriſdiction of the ſame villages, townes, caſtles, and firme land ſo found.

Yet ſo that the aforeſaid Iohn, and his ſonnes and heyres, and their deputies, be holden & bounden of all the fruits, profits, gaines, and commodities growing of ſuch nauigation, for euery their voyage, as often as they ſhall arriue at our port of Briſtoll (at the which port they ſhall be bound and holden only to arriue) all maner of neceſſary coſts and charges by them made, being deducted, to pay vnto vs in wares or money the fift part of the capitall gaine ſo gotten. We giuing & granting vnto them and to their heyres and deputies, that they ſhall be free from all paying of cuſtomes of all and ſingular ſuch vnerchandize as they ſhall bring with them from thoſe places ſo newlie found.

And moreouer, wee haue giuen and graunted to them, their heyres and deputies, that all the firme landes, iſles, villages, townes, caſtles and places whatſoeuer they be that they ſhall chance to finde, may not of any other of our ſubiectes bee frequented or viſited without the licence of the foreſayd Iohn and his ſonnes, and their deputies, vnder payne of forfeiture as well of their ſhips, as of all and ſingular goods of all them that ſhall preſume to ſayle to thoſe places ſo found. Willing, and moſt ſtraightly commanding all and ſingular our ſubiects as well on land as on ſea, appointed officers, to giue good aſſiſtance to the aforeſaid Iohn, and his ſonnes and deputies, and that as well in arming and furnishing their shippes or vessels, as in prouision of quietnesse, and in buying of victualles for their money, and all other things by them to be prouided necessarie for the said nauigation, they do giue them all their helpe and fauour. In witnesse whereof we haue caused to be made these our letters patents. Witnesse our selfe at Westminster, the fift day of March, in the eleuenth yeere of our reigne.

Billa signata Anno 13 Henrici 7.

A record of the rolls touching the voyage of John Cabot & Sebastian his sonne.

REx tertio die Februarij, anno 13, licentiam dedit Ioani Caboto, quod ipse capere possit sex naues Anglicanas, in aliquo portu, siue portibus regni Angliæ, ita quod sint de portagio 200 doliorum, vel subtus, cum apparatu requisito, & quod recipere possit in dictas naues omnes tales magistros, marinarios, & subditos regis, qui cum eo exire voluerint, &c.

THe king vpon the third day of February, in the 13 yeere of his reigne, gaue licence to John Cabot to take fiue English shippes in any hauen or hauens of the realme of England, being of the burden of 200 tunnes, or vnder, with all necessary furniture, and to take also into the sayde shippes, all such maisters, mariners, and subiects of the king as willingly will go with him, &c.

An extract taken out of the mappe of Sebastian Cabot, cut by Clement Adams, concerning his discouerie of the VVest Indias, which is to be seene in her Maiesties priuie gallerie at Westminster, and in many other ancient merchants houses.

ANno Domini 1494, Ioannes Cabotus venetus, & Sebastianus illius filius eam terram fecerunt peruiam, quam nullus priùs adire ausus fuisset, die 24 Iunij, circiter horam quintam bene manè. Hanc autem appellauit Terram Primùm visam, credo quod ex mari in eam partem primùm oculos iniecerat. Nam quæ ex aduerso sita est insula, eam appellauit insulam D. Ioannis, hac opinor ratione, quòd aperta fuit eo die qui est sacer D. Ioanni Baptistæ: Huius incolæ pelles animalium, exuuiasq; feratum pro indumentis habent, easq; tanti faciunt, quanti nos vestes pretiosissimas. Cùm bellum gerunt, vtuntur arcu sagittis, hastis, spiculis, clauis ligneis & fundis. Tellus sterilis est, neq; vllos fructus affert, ex quo fit, vt leonibus albo colore, & ceruis inusitatæ apud nos magnitudinis referta sit: piscibus abundat, ijsq; sanè magnis, quales sunt lupi, & quos salmones vulgus appellat, soleæ autem reperiuntur tam longæ, vt vlnæ mensuram excedant. Imprimis autem magna est copia eorum piscium, quos vulgari sermone vocant Bacallaos. Gignuntur in ea insula accipitres ita nigri, vt coruorum similitudinem mirum in modum exprimant, perdices autem & aquilæ sunt nigri coloris.

¶ The same in English.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1494, John Cabot a Uenetian, & his sonne Sebastian (with an English fleet set out frõ Bristoll) discouered that land which no man before that time had attempted, on the 24 of June, about fiue of the clocke early in the morning. This land he called Prima vista, that is to say, First seene, because as I suppose it was that part whereof they had the first sight from sea. That Island which lyeth out before the land, he called the Island of S. John, vpon this occasion, as I thinke, because it was discouered vpon the day of John the Baptist. The inhabitants of this Island vse to weare beasts skinnes, and haue them in as great estimation, as we haue our finest garments. In their wars they vse bowes, arrowes, pikes, darts, woodden clubs, & slings. The soile is barren in some places, & yeeldeth little fruit, but it is full of white lions, & stags farre greater then ours. It yeeldeth plentie of fish, and those very great, as seales, and those which commonly we call salmons: there are soles also aboue a yard in length: but especially there is great abundance of that kinde of fish which the Saluages call Baccalaos. In the same Island also there breed hawkes, but they are so blacke, that they are very like to rauens, as also their partridges, & eagles, which are in like sort blacke.

A discourse of Sebastian Cabot touching his discouerie of part of the VVest India out of England in the time of king Henry the seuenth, vsed to Galeacius Butrigarius the Popes Legate in Spaine, and reported by the sayd Legate in this sort.

This discourse is taken out of the second volume of voiages of Baptista Ramusius.

DOe you not vnderstand said hee (speaking to certaine Gentlemen of Venice) how to passe to India toward the Northwest winde, as did of late a citizen of Venice, so valiant a man, and so well practised in all things pertaining to Nauigations, and the science of Cosmographie, that at this present hee hath not his like in Spaine, insomuch that for his vertues he is preferred about all other Pilots that saile to the West Indies, who may not passe thither without his licence, and is therefore called Piloto Maggiore (that is) the grand Pilot. And when we said that wee knew him not, he proceeded, saying, that being certaine peeres in the citie of Siuil, and desirous to haue some knowledge of the Nauigations of the Spaniards, it was told him that there was in the citie a valiant man, a Venetian borne, named Sebastian Cabot, who had the charge of those things, being an expert man in that science, and one that could make Cardes for the Sea with his owne hand, and that by this report, seeking his acquaintance, he found him a very gentle person, who intertained him friendly, and shewed him many things, and among other a large mappe of the world, with certaine particuler nauigations, as well of the Portingals, as of the Spaniards, and that he spake further vnto him in this effect.

When my father departed from Venice many yeeres since to dwell in England, to follow the trade of merchandises, he tooke me with him to the citie of London, while I was very yong, yet hauing neuertheless some knowledge of letters of humanitie, and of the Sphere. And when my father died in that time when newes were brought that Don Christofer Colonus Genuese, had discouered the coasts of India, whereof was great talke in all the court of king Henry the 7. who then raigned, insomuch that all men with great admiration affirmed it to bee a thing more diuine then humane, to saile by the West into the East where spices growe, by a way that was neuer knowen before, by this fame and report there increased in my heart a great flame of desire to attempt some notable thing. And vnderstanding by reason of the Sphere, that if I should saile by way of the Northwest winde, I should by a shorter tract come into India, I thereupon caused the king to be aduertised of my deuise, who immediatly commaunded two Caruels to bee furnished with all things appertaining to the voiage, which was, as farre as I remember, in the yeere 1496 in the beginning of Sommer. I began therefore to saile toward the Northwest, not thinking to find any other land then that of Cathay, and from thence to turne toward India, but after certaine dayes I found that the land ranne towards the North, which was to me a great displeasure. Neuertheless, sailing along by the coast to see if I could find any gulfe that turned, I found the land still continent to the 56. deg. vnder our pole. And seeing that there the coast turned toward the East, despairing to find the passage, I turned backe againe, and sailed downe by the coast of that land toward the Equinoctiall (euer with intent to find the said passage to India) and came to that part of this firme land which is now called Florida, where my victuals failing, I departed from thence and returned into England, where I found great tumults among the people, and preparation for warres in Scotland: by reason whereof there was no more consideration had to this voyage. Whereupon, I went into Spaine to the catholike king, and Queene Elizabeth, which being aduertised what I had done, intertained me, and at their charges furnished certaine ships, wherewith they caused me to saile to discouer the coasts of Brasile, where I found an exceeding great and large riuer named at this present, Rio de la plata, that is, the riuer of siluer, into the which I sailed and followed it into the firme land, more then sixe score leagues, finding it euery where very faire, and inhabited with infinite people, which with admiration came running daily to our ships. Into this riuer run so many other riuers, that it is in maner incredible. After this I made many other voiages, which I now pretermit, and waxing old, I giue my selfe to rest from such trauels, because there are now many yong and lustie Pilots and mariners of good experience, by whose forwardnesse I do reioyce in the fruit of my labours, and rest with the charge of this office, as you see.

The second voiage of Cabot to the land of Brasil, and Rio de plata.

The

The foresayd Baptista Ramusius in his Preface to the third volume of the Nauigations, writeth thus of Sebastian Cabot.

IN the latter part of this volume are put certaine relations of Iohn de Verarzana, a Florentine, and of a great captaine a Frenchman, and the two voyages of Iacques Cartier a Briton, who sailed vnto the land set in 50. degrees of latitude to the North, which is called New France, which lands hitherto are not throughly knowen, whither they doe ioyne with the firme land of Florida and Noua Hispania, or whether they be separated and deuided all by the Sea as Ilands: and whether that by that way one may goe by sea vnto the countrey of Cathaia. As many yeeres past it was written vnto me by Sebastian Caboto our countrey man a Venetian, a man of great experience, and very rare in the arte of Nauigation, and the knowledge of Cosmographie, who sailed along and beyond this land of New France, at the charges of king Henry the 7. king of England: and he aduertised me, that hauing sailed a long time West and by North, beyond those Ilands vnto the latitude of 67. degrees and an halfe, vnder the North pole, and at the 11. day of June finding still the open sea without any maner of impediment, he thought verily by that way to haue passed on still the way to Cathaia, which is in the East, and would haue done it, if the mutinie of the shipmaster and mariners had not hindered him and made him to returne homewards from that place. But it seemeth that God doeth yet still reserue this great enterprise for some great prince to discouer this voiage of Cathaia by this way, which for the bringing of the Spiceries from India into Europe, were the most easie and shortest of all other wayes hitherto found out. And surely this enterprise would be the most glorious, and of most importance of all other that can be imagined, to make his name great, and fame immortall, to all ages to come, farre more then can be done by any of all these great troubles and warres which daily are vsed in Europe among the miserable christian people.

Another testimonie of the voiage of Sebastian Cabot to the West and Northwest, taken out of the 6. chapter of the third Decade of Peter Martyr of Angleria.

SCrutatus est oras glaciales, Sebastianus quidam Cabotus genere Venetus, sed à parentibus in Britanniam insulam tendentibus (vti moris est Venetorum, qui commercij causa terrarum omnium sunt hospites) transportatus penè infans. Duo is sibi nauigia, propria pecunia in Britannia ipsa instruxit, & primò tendens cum hominibus tercentum ad Septentrionem donec etiam Iulio mense vastas repererit glaciales moles pelago natantes, & lucem ferè perpetuam, tellure tamen libera gelu liquefacto: quare coactus fuit, vti ait, vela vertere & occidentem sequi: tetendítq; tantum ad meridiem littore sese incuruante, vt Herculei freti latitudinis fere gradus æquarit: ad occidentémq; profectus tantum est vt Cubam Insulam, à læua, longitudine graduum penè parem, habuérit. Is ea littora percurrés, quæ Baccalaos appellauit, eosdem se reperisse aquarũ, sed lenes delapsus ad Occidentem ait, quos Castellani, meridionales suas regiones adnauigantes, inueniunt. Ergò non modò verisimilius, sed necessario concludendum est, vastos inter vtrámq; ignotam hactenus tellurem iacere hiatus, qui viam præbeant aquis ab oriente cadentibus in Occidentem. Quas arbitror impulsu cælorum circulariter agi in gyrum circa terræ globum, non autem Demogorgone anhelante vomi, absorberíq; vt nonnulli senserunt, quod influxu, & refluxu forsan assentire daretur. Baccalaos, Cabotus ipse terras illas appellauit, eò quod in earũ pelago tantam reperierit magnorum quorundam piscium, tynnos æmulantium, sic vocatorum ab indigenis, multitudinem, vt etiam illi interdum nauigia detardarent. Earum Regionum homines pellibus tantum coopertos reperiebat rationis haudquaquam expertes. Vrsorum inesse regionibus copiam ingentem refert, qui & ipsi piscibus vescantur. Inter densa namq; piscium illorum agmina sese immergunt vrsi, & singulos singuli complexos, vnguibúsque inter squammas immissis in terram raptant, & comedunt. Propterea minimè noxios hominibus visos esse ait. Orichalcũ in plerisque locis se vidisse apud incolas prædicat. Familiarem habeo domi Cabotum ipsum, & contubernalem interdum. Vocatus namque ex Britannia à Rege nostro Catholico, post Henrici Maioris Britanniæ Regis mortem, concurialis noster est, expectátq; indies, vt nauigia sibi parentur, quibus arcanum hoc naturæ latens, iam tandem detegatur.

THeſe North ſeas haue bene ſearched by one Sebaſtian Cabot, a Venetian borne, whom being yet but in maner an infant, his parents caried with them into England, hauing occaſion to reſort thither for trade of merchandiſe, as is the maner of the Venetians to leaue no part of the world vnſearched to obtaine riches. He therefore furniſhed two ſhips in England at his owne charges, and firſt with 300. men, directed his courſe ſo farre towards the North pole, that euen in the moneth of Julie he found monſtrous heapes of ice ſwimming on the ſea, and in maner continuall day light, yet ſaw he the land in that tract free from ice, which had bene molten by the heat of the Sunne. Thus ſeeing ſuch heapes of ice before him, he was enforced to turne his ſailes and follow the Weſt, ſo coaſting ſtill by the ſhore, that hee was thereby brought ſo farre into the South, by reaſon of the land bending ſo much Southwards, that it was there almoſt equall in Latitude, with the ſea Fretum Herculeum, hauing the North pole elcuate in maner in the ſame degree. He ſailed likewiſe in this tract ſo farre towards the Weſt, ỹ he had the Iſland of Cuba on his left hand, in maner in the ſame degree of longitude. As he trauelled by the coaſts of this great land, (which he named Baccalaos) he ſaith that hee found the like courſe of the waters toward the Weſt, but the ſame to runne more ſoftly and gently then the ſwift waters which the Spaniards found in their Nauigations Southward. Wherefore it is not onely more like to be true, but ought alſo of neceſſitie to be concluded that betweene both the lands hitherto vnknowen, there ſhould be certaine great open places whereby the waters ſhould thus continually paſſe from the Eaſt vnto the Weſt: which waters I ſuppoſe to be driuen about the globe of the earth by the inceſſant mouing and impulſion of the heauens, and not to bee ſwallowed vp and caſt vp againe by the breathing of Demogorgon, as ſome haue imagined, becauſe they ſee the ſeas by increaſe and decreaſe to ebbe and flowe. Sebaſtian Cabot himſelfe named thoſe lands Baccalaos, becauſe that in the Seas thereabout hee found ſo great multitudes of certaine bigge fiſhes much like vnto Tunies, (which the inhabitaunts call Baccalaos) that they ſometime ſtaied his ſhips. He found alſo the people of thoſe regions couered with beaſtes ſkinnes, yet not without the vſe of reaſon. Hee alſo ſaith there is great plentie of Beares in thoſe regions which vſe to eate fiſhe: for plunging themſelues into the water, where they perceiue a multitude of theſe fiſhes to lie, they faſten their clawes in their ſcales, and ſo draw them to land and eate them, ſo (as he ſaith) the Beares being thus ſatisfied with fiſh, are not noiſome to men. Hee declareth further, that in many places of theſe regions, he ſawe great plentie of Laton among the inhabitants. Cabot is my very friend, whom I vſe familiarlie, and delight to haue him ſometimes keepe me companie in mine owne houſe. For being called out of England by the commaundement of the Catholike king of Caſtile, after the death of king Henry the ſeuenth of that name, king of England, he was made one of our counſell and Aſſiſtants, as touching the affaires of the new Indies, looking for ſhips daily to bee furniſhed by him to diſcouer this hid ſecret of Nature.

The teſtimonie of Frauncis Lopez de Gomara a Spaniard, in the fourth chapter of the ſecond booke of his generall hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies concerning the firſt diſcouerie of a great part of the Weſt Indies, to wit, from 58. to 38. degrees of latitude, by Sebaſtian Cabota out of England.

HE which brought moſt certaine newes of the countrey and people of Baccalaos, ſaith Gomara, was Sebaſtian Cabote a Venetian, which rigged vp two ſhips at the coſt of king Henry the 7. of England, hauing great deſire to traffique for the ſpices as the Portingals did. Hee caried with him 300. men, and tooke the way towards Iſland from beyond the Cape of Labrador, vntill hee found himſelfe in 58. degrees and better. Hee made relation that in the moneth of July it was ſo cold, and the ice ſo great, that he durſt not paſſe any further: that the dayes were very long, in a maner without any night, and for that ſhort night that they had, it was very cleare. Cabot feeling the cold, turned towards the Weſt, refreſhing himſelfe at Baccalaos: and afterwards hee ſailed along the coaſt vnto 38. degrees, and from thence hee ſhaped his courſe to returne into England.

A note

A note of Sebastian Cabots first discouerie of part of the Indies taken out of the latter part of Robert Fabians Chronicle not hitherto printed, which is in the custodie of M. Iohn Stowe a diligent preseruer of Antiquities.

IN the 13. yeere of king Henry the 7. (by meanes of one Iohn Cabot a Venetian which made himselfe very expert and cunning in knowledge of the circuit of the world and Ilands of the same, as by a Sea carde and other demonstrations reasonable he shewed) the king caused to man and victuall a ship at Bristow, to search for an Iland, which he said he knew well was rich, and replenished with great commodities: Which ship thus manned and victualled at the kings cost, diuers merchants of London ventured in her small stocks, being in her as chiefe patron the sayd Venetian. And in the companie of the said ship, sailed also out of Bristow three or foure smal ships fraught with sleight and grosse merchandizes, as course cloth, caps, laces, points, and other trifles. And so departed from Bristow in the beginning of May, of whom in this Maiors time returned no tidings.

Of three sauages which Cabot brought home and presented vnto the king in the fourteenth yeere of his raigne, mentioned by the foresayd Robert Fabian.

THis yeere also were brought vnto the king three men taken in the Newfound Iland that before I spake of, in William Purchas time being Maior: These were clothed in beasts skins, and did eate rawe flesh, and spake such speach, that no man could vnderstand them, and in their demeanor like to brute beasts, whom the king kept a time after. Of the which vpon two yeeres after, I sawe two apparelled after the maner of Englishmen in Westminster pallace, which that time I could not discerne from Englishmen, till I was learned what they were, but as for speach, I heard none of them vtter one word.

The voiage of Sir Thomas Pert and Sebastian Cabot, about the eight yeere of king Henry the eight, which was the yeere, 1516. to Brasil, S. Domingo, and S. Iohn de porto ricco.

THat learned and painefull writer Richard Eden in a certaine epistle of his to the late duke of Northumberland, before a worke which hee translated out of Munster in the yeere 1553. called A treatise of the new India, maketh mention of a voyage of discouerie vndertaken out of England by Sir Thomas Pert and Sebastian Cabota, about the eight yeere of king Henry the 8. of famous memorie, imputing the ouerthrow thereof vnto the cowardise and want of stomacke of the sayd Sir Thomas Pert, in maner following. If manly courage, saieth he, (like vnto that which hath bene seene and prooued in your grace as well in forraine realmes, as also in this our country) had not bene wanting in other in these our dayes, at such time as our soueraigne lord of noble memorie king Henry the 8. about the same yeere of his raigne, furnished and sent out certaine ships vnder the gouernance of Sebastian Cabot yet liuing, and one Sir Thomas Pert, whose faint heart was the cause that the voiage tooke none effect, if, I say such manly courage, whereof we haue spoken, had not at that time bene wanting, it might happily haue come to passe, that that rich treasurie called Perularia, (which is now in Spaine in the citie of Siuil, and so named, for that in it is kept the infinite riches brought thither from the Newfound land of Peru) might long since haue bene in the Tower of London, to the kings great honour and wealth of this realme. Hereunto that also is to be referred which the worshipfull M. Robert Thorne wrote to the sayd king Henry the 8. in the yeere 1527. by doctor Leigh his ambassador sent into Spaine to the Emperour Charles the fift, whose wordes be these. Now rest to bee discouered the North partes, the which it seemeth vnto me, is onely your highnes charge and dutie, because the situation of this your realme is thereunto neerest and aptest of all other: and also, for that alreadie you haue taken it in hand. And in mine opinion it will not seeme well to leaue so great and profitable an enterprise, seeing it may so easilie and with so litle cost, labour & danger, be folowed and obtained. Though hitherto your grace haue made thereof a proofe, & found not the commoditie thereby as you trusted, at this time it shall be none impediment: for there may be now prouided remedies for things

This sir Thomas Pert was Viceadmiral of England & dwelt in an house called Poplar at Blackwall.

Note.

things then lacked, and the inconueniences and lets remooued, that thē were cauſe your graces deſire tooke no full effect: which is, the courſes to be chaunged, and to follow the aforeſaid new courſes. And concerning the mariners, ſhips, and prouiſion, an order may be deuiſed and taken meete and conuenient, much better then hitherto: by reaſon whereof, and by Gods grace no doubt your purpoſe ſhall take effect. And whereas in the aforeſaid wordes M. Robert Thorne ſaith, that he would haue the old courſes to be chaunged, and the new courſes (to the North) to be followed: It may plainly bee gathered that the former voyage whereof twiſe or thriſe he maketh mention, wherein it is like that ſir Thomas Pert and Sebaſtian Cabot were ſet forth by the king, was made toward Braſil and the South parts. Moreouer it ſeemeth that Gonſaluo de Ouiedo, a Spaniſh famous writer, alludeth vnto the ſaid voyage in the beginning of the 13. chapter of the 19. booke of his generall and naturall hiſtorie of the Weſt Indies, agreeing very well with the time about which Richard Eden writeth that the foreſaid voyage was begun. The authors wordes are theſe as I find them tranſlated into Italian by that excellent and famous man Baptiſta Ramuſius. Nel 1517. Vn Corſaro Ingleſe, ſotto colore di venire à diſcoprire ſe ne venne con vna gran naue alla volta del Braſil nella coſtiera di terra ferma, & indi attraverſo à queſta iſola Spagnuola, & giunſe preſſo la bocca del porto di queſta città di S. Domenico, & mando in terra il ſuo battello pieno di gente, & chieſe licentia di potere qui entrare, dicendo che venia con mercantie a negotiare. Ma in quello inſtante il caſtellano Franceſco di Tapia fece tirare alla naue vn tiro d'arteglieria da queſto caſtello: perche ella ſe veniua diritta al porto. Quando gli Ingleſi viddero queſto, ſi ritirarono fuori, & quelli del battello toſto ſi raccolſero in naue. Et nel vero il Caſtellan fece errore: perche ſe ben foſſe naue entrata nel porto, non ſarebbono le genti potuto ſmontare à terra ſenza volontà & della città & del caſtello. La naue adunque veggendo come vi era ricenuta, tirò la volta dell' iſola di San Gionanni, & entrata nel porto di San Germano parlarono gli Ingleſi con quelli della terra, & dmandarono vettouaglie & fornimenti per la naue, & ſi lamentarono di quelli di queſta città, dicendo che eſſi non veniuano per fare diſpiacere, ma per contrattare, & negotiare con ſuoi danari & mercantie. Hora quiui hebbero alcune vettouaglie, & in compenſa eſſi diedero & pagarono in certi ſtagni lauorati & altre coſe. Et poi ſi partirono alla volta d'Europa, doue ſi crede, che non giunge ſſero, perche non ſe ne ſeppe piu nuona mai. This extract importeth thus much in Engliſh, to wit: That in the yeere 1517. an Engliſh Rouer vnder the colour of trauelling to diſcouer, came with a great ſhip vnto the partes of Braſill on the coaſt of the Firme land, and from thence he croſſed ouer vnto this Iſland of Hiſpaniola, and arriued neere vnto the mouth of the hauen of this citie of S. Domingo, and ſent his ſhipboate full of men on ſhore, and demaunded leaue to enter into this hauen, ſaying, that he came with merchaundiſe to traffique. But at that very inſtant the gouernour of the caſtle Francis de Tapia cauſed a tire of ordinance to be ſhot from the caſtle at the ſhip, for ſhee bare in directly with the hauen. When the Engliſhmen ſawe this, they withdrew themſelues out, and thoſe that were in the ſhipboate, got themſelues with ſpeede on ſhipboord. And in truth the Warden of the caſtle committed an ouerſight: for if the ſhip had entred into the hauen, the men thereof could not haue come on land without leaue both of the citie and of the caſtle. Therefore the people of the ſhip ſeeing how they were there receiued, ſayled toward the Iſland of S. John, and entring into the port of S. Germaine, the Engliſhmen parled with thoſe of the towne, requiring victuals and things needfull to furniſh their ſhip, and complained of the inhabitaunts of the citie of Saint Domingo, ſaying that they came not to doe any harme, but to trade and traffique for their money and merchandiſe. In this place they had certaine victuals, and for recompenſe they gaue and paid them with certain veſſell of wrought tinne and other things. And afterward they departed toward Europe, where it is thought they arriued not: for we neuer heard any more newes of them. Thus farre proceedeth Gonſaluo de Ouiedo, who though it pleaſe him to call the captaine of this great Engliſh ſhip a Rouer, yet it appeareth by the Engliſhmens owne words, that they came to diſcouer, and by their traffique for pewter veſſell and other wares at the towne of S. Germains in the Iſland of S. Iohn de porto ricco, it cannot bee denied but that they were furniſhed with wares for honeſt traffique and exchange. But whoſoeuer is conuerſant in reading the Portingal and Spaniſh writers of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, ſhall commonly finde that they account all other nations for pirats, rouers and theeues, which viſite any heathen coaſt that they haue ones ſailed by or looked on. Howbeit their paſſionate and ambitious reckoning ought not to be preiudiciall to other mens chargeable and painfull enterpriſes and honourable traueils in diſcouerie.

The

The voiage of the two ships, whereof the one was called the Dominus vobiscum, set out the 20. day of May, in the 29. yeere of king Henry the eight, and in the yeere of our Lord God, 1527. for the discouerie of the North partes.

Rich. Yakluit.

MAster Robert Thorne of Bristoll, a notable member and ornament of his country, as well for his learning, as great charitie to the poore in a letter of his to king Henry the 8. and in a large discourse to doctor Leigh, his Ambassador to Charles the emperor, (which both are to be seene almost in the beginning of the second part of this my worke) exhorted the foresaid king with very waighty and substantiall reasons, to set forth a discouerie euen to the North pole. And that it may bee knowen that this his motion tooke present effect, I thought it good herewithall to put downe the testimonies of two of our Chronicles, M. Hall, and M. Grafton, who both write in this sort. This same moneth (say they) king Henry the 8. sent two faire ships well manned and victualled, hauing in them diuers cunning men to seeke strange regions, and so they set forth out of the Thames, the 20. day of May in the 19. yeere of his raigne, which was the yeere of our Lord, 1527.

And whereas master Hall, and master Grafton say, that in those ships there were diuers cunning men, I haue made great inquirie of such as by their yeeres and delight in nauigation, might giue me any light to know who those cunning men should be which were the directers in the aforesaid voyage. And it hath bene told mee by Sir Martin Frobisher, and master Richard Allen, a knight of the Sepulchre, that a Canon of S. Paul in London, which was a great Mathematician, and a man indued with wealth, did much aduaunce the action, and went therein himselfe in person, but what his name was, I can not learne of any. And further they told mee that one of the ships was called the Dominus vobiscum, which is a name likely to bee giuen by a religious man of those daies: and that sailing very farre Northwestward, one of the ships was cast away as it entred into a dangerous gulphe, about the great opening, betweene the North partes of new found land, and the countrey lately called by her maiestie Meta Incognita. Whereupon the other ship shaping her course towards Cape Britton, and the coast of Norumbega, and oftentimes putting their men on land to search the state of those vnknowen regions, returned home about the beginning of October, of the yeere aforesaid. And thus much (by reason of the great negligence of the writers of those times, who should haue vsed more care in preserving the memories of the worthie acts of our nation,) is all that hitherto I can learne, or find out of this voiage.

The voyage of master Hore and diuers other Gentlemen, to Newfound land, and Cape Breton, in the yeere 1536. and in the 28. yeere of king Henry the eight.

ONe master Hore of London, a man of goodly stature and of great courage, and giuen to the studie of Cosmographie, in the 28. yeere of king Henry the 8. and in the yeere of our Lord 1536. encouraged diuers gentlemen and others, being assisted by the kings fauour and good countenance, to accompany him in a voyage of discouerie vpon the Northwest partes of America: wherein his perswasions tooke such effect, that within short space many gentlemen of the innes of court, and of Chauncerie, and diuers other of good worship desirous to see the strange things of the world, very willingly entered into the action with him, some of whose names were as followeth: M. Wickes a gentleman of the West countrey of fiue hundred markes by the yeere liuing. Master Tucke a gentleman of Kent. M. Tuckfield. M. Thomas Buts the sonne of sir William Buts knight of Norfolke, which is yet aliue, and from whose mouth I wrote most of this relation. Master Hardie, master Biron, master Carter, master Wright, master Rastall Serieant Rastals brother, master Ridley, and diuers other, which all were in the admirall called the Trinitie, a ship of seuen score tunnes, wherein M. Hore himselfe was imbarked. In the other shippe whose name was the Minion, went a very learned and vertuous gentleman, one master Armigil Wade, father to the worshipfull master William Wade now clerke of the priuie counsell. Master Oliuer Dawbeney merchant of London, M. Joy afterward gentleman of the kings chappell, with diuers other of good account. The whole number that went in the two tall shippes aforesayd, to wit, the Trinitie and the Minion, were about six score persons, whereof 30. were gentlemen, which all were mustered in warlike maner at Grauesend, and after the receiuing of the sacrament, they embarked themselues in the end of Aprill, 1536.

From

from the time of their setting out from Graueſende, they were very long at ſea, to witte, aboue two moneths, and neuer touched any lande vntill they came to part of the Weſt Indies about Cape Breton, shaping their course thence Northeastwards, vntill they came to the Iſland of Penguin, which is very full of rockes and stones, whereon they went and founde it full of great foules white and gray, as bigge as geese, and they sawe infinite nombers of their egges. They spent a great nomber of the foules into their boates vpon their sailes, and tooke vp many of their egges, the foule they flead and their skinnes were like hony combes full of holes being flead off: they dressed and eate them, and found them to be very good and nourishing meate. They saw also store of beares both blacke and white, of whome they killed some, and tooke them for no badde foode.

Cape Breton.

The Iſland of Penguin, standeth about the latitude of 50. degrees.

M. Oliuer Dawbeny, which (as it is before mentioned) was in this voyage, and in the Minion, told M. Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple these things following: to wit, That after their arriuall in Newfound land, and hauing bene there certaine dayes at ancre, and not hauing yet seene any of the naturall people of the Countrey, the same Dawbeny walking one day on the hatches, spied a boate with Sauages of those partes, rowing downe the bay towarde them, to gaze vpon the shippe and our people, and taking view of their comming aloofe, hee called to such as were vnder hatches, and willed them to come vp if they would see the naturall people of the Countrey, that they had so long and so much desired to see: Whereupon they came vp and tooke view of the Sauages rowing toward them and their shippe, and vpon the view they manned out a shipboote to meete them and to take them. But they spying our shipboate making towards them, returned with maine force & fled into an Iſland that laye vp in the bay or riuer there, and our men pursued them into the Iſland, and the Sauages fledde and escaped: but our men founde a fire, and the side of a beare on a wodden spit left at the same by the Sauages that were fledde.

M. Dawbenis report to M. Richard Hakluyt of the Temple.

They beheld the Sauages of Newfound land.

There in the same place they founde a boote of leather garnished on the vtter side of the calfe with certaine braue trailes, as it were of rawe silke, and also founde a certaine great warme mitten: And these carried with them, they returned to their shippe, not finding the Sauages, nor seeing any thing elſe besides the soyle, and the things growing in the same, which chiefly were store of firre and pine trees.

And further, the said M. Dawbeny told him, that lying there they grewe into great want of victuals, and that there they found small releife, more then that they had from the nest of an Oſprey, that brought hourely to her yong great plentie of diuers sorts of fishes. But such was the famine that increased amongſt them from day to day, that they were forced to seeke to relieue themselues of rawe herbes and rootes that they sought on the maine: but the famine increasing, and the releife of herbes being to little purpose to satisfie their insatiable hunger, in the fieldes and deserts here and there, the fellowe killed his mate while hee stouped to take vp a roote for his releife, and cutting out pieces of his body whome hee had murthered, broyled the same on the coles and greedily deuoured them.

Extreame famine.

By this meane the company decreased, and the officers knewe not what was become of them; And it fortuned that one of the company driuen with hunger to seeke abroade for releife, found out in the fields the sauour of broyled flesh, and fell out with one for that hee would suffer him and his fellowes to serue, enioying plentie as he thought: And this matter growing to cruel speaches, he that had the broyled meate, burst out into these wordes, If thou wouldest needes knowe, the broyled meate that I had, was a piece of such a mans buttocke. The report of this brought to the ship, the Captaine found what became of those that were missing, & was perswaded that some of them were neither deuoured with wilde beastes, nor yet destroyed with the Sauages: And hereupon he stood vp and made a notable Oration, containing, How much these dealings offended the Almighty, and touched the Scriptures from first to last, what God had in cases of distresse done for them that called vpon him, & told them that the power of the Almighty was then no lesse, then in al former time it had bene. And added, that if it had not pleased God to haue holpen them in that distresse, that yet it had bene better to haue perished in body, and to haue liued euerlastingly, then to haue relieued for a poore time their mortal bodies, and to bee condemned euerlastingly both body and soule to the vnquenchable fire of hel. And thus hauing ended to that effect, he began to exhort to repentance, and besought all the company to pray, that it might please God to looke vpon their miserable present state, and for his owne mercie to relieue the same. And such was the mercie of God, that the same night there arriued a French shippe in that port, well furnished with victaile, and such was the policie of the English, that they became masters of the same, and changing ships and victayling them, they set saile to come into England.

Our men eate one another for famine.

The Captaines Oration.

The English surprise a French ship, wherein they returned home.

In their iourney they were so farre Northwards, that they sawe mightie Iſlands of yce in Hankes and other foules.

the sommer season, on which were haukes and other foules to rest themselues being wearie of flying ouer farre from the maine. They sawe also certaine great white foules with redde billes and redde legs, somewhat bigger then Herons, which they supposed to be stokes. They arriued at S. Iues in Cornewall about the ende of October. From thence they departed vnto a certaine Castle belonging to sir Iohn Luttrel, where M. Thomas Buts, and M. Rastall, and other Gentlemen of the voyage were very friendly intertained: after that they came to the Earle of Bathe at Bathe, and thence to Bristoll, and so to London. M. Buts was so changed in the voyage with hunger and miserie, that sir William his father and my Lady his mother, knewe him not to be their sonne, vntill they found a certaine secret marke which was a wart vpon one of his knees, as he tolde me Richard Hakluyt of Oxforde himselfe, to whome I rode 200. miles onely to learne the whole trueth of this voyage from his owne mouth, as being the onely man nowe aliue, that was in this discouerie.

Foules supposed to be stokes.

Certaine moneths after, those Frenchmen came into England, and made complaint to king Henry the 8: the king causing the matter to be examined, and finding the great distresse of his subiects, and the causes of the dealing so with the French, was so mooued with pitie, that hee punished not his subiects, but of his owne purse made full and royall recompense vnto the French.

The French royally recompenced by king Henry the 8.

In this distresse of famine, the English did somewhat relieue their vitall spirits, by drinking at the springs the fresh water out of certaine wooden cups, out of which they had drunke their Aqua composita before.

EDward the first by the grace of God, king of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defender of the faith, to all Christian people to whome these presents shall come, sendeth greeting. Knowe ye that wee, in consideration of the good and acceptable seruice done, and to bee done, vnto vs by our beloued seruant Sebastian Cabote, of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge, meere motion, and by the aduiſe and counſell of our moſt honourable vncle Edward duke of Somerſet gouernour of our perſon, and Protector of our kingdomes, dominions, and ſubiects, and of the reſt of our Counſaile, haue giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents doe giue and graunt to the ſaide Sebaſtian Cabota, a certaine annuitie, or yeerely reuenue of one hundreth, threeſcore and ſixe pounds, thirteene ſhillings foure pence ſterling, to haue, enioye, and yeerely receiue the foreſaide annuitie, or yeerely reuenue, to the foreſaide Sebaſtian Cabota during his naturall life, out of our Treaſurie at the receite of our Exchequer at Weſtminſter, at the handes of our Treaſurers and paymaſters, there remayning for the time being, at the feaſtes of the Annunciation of the bleſſed Virgine Mary, the Natiuitie of S. Iohn Baptiſt, S. Michael the Archangel, and the Natiuitie of our Lord, to be paide by equall portions.

And further, of our more ſpeciall grace, and by the aduiſe and conſent aforeſaide we doe giue, and by theſe preſents doe graunt vnto the aforeſaide Sebaſtian Cabota, ſo many, and ſo great ſummes of money as the ſaide annuitie or yeerely reuenue of an hundreth, threeſcore and ſixe pounds, thirteene ſhillings 4. pence, doeth amount and riſe vnto from the feaſt of S. Michael the Archangel laſt paſt vnto this preſent time, to be had and receiued by the aforeſaide Sebaſtian Cabota, and his aſſignes out of our aforeſaid Treaſurie, at the handes of our aforeſaide Treaſurers, and officers of our Exchequer of our free gift without accompt, or any thing elſe therefore to bee yelded, payed, or made, to vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, foraſmuch as herein expreſſe mention is made to the contrary.

In witneſſe whereof we haue cauſed theſe our Letters to be made patents: Witneſſe the king at Weſtminſter the firſt day of Ianuarie, in the ſecond yeere of his raigne. The yeere of our Lorde 1548.

A voyage to Braſill, made by the worſhipfull M. William Haukins of Plimmouth, father to ſir Iohn Haukins knight now liuing, in the yeere 1530.

OLde M. William Haukins of Plimmouth, a man for his wiſdome, valure, experience, and ſkill in ſea cauſes much eſteemed, and beloued of king Henry the eight, and being one of the principall Sea Captaines in the Weſt partes of England in his time, not contented with the ſhort voyages commonly then made onely to the known coaſtes of Europe, armed out a tall and goodly ſhip of his owne of the burthen of 250. tunnes, called the Pole of Plimmouth, wherewith hee made three long and famous voyages vnto the coaſt of Braſill, a thing in thoſe dayes very rare, eſpecially to our Nation. In the courſe of which voyages he touched at the Riuer of Seſtos vpon the coaſt of Guinea, where hee traffiqued with the Negroes, and tooke of them Oliphants teeth, and other commodities which that place yeeldeth: and ſo arriuing on the coaſt of Braſil, vſed there ſuch diſcretion, and behaued himſelfe ſo wiſely with thoſe ſauage people, that he grew into great familiaritie and friendſhip with them. Inſomuch that in his 2. voyage, one of the ſauage kings of the Countrey of Braſill, was contented to take ſhippe with him, and to bee tranſported hither into England: whereunto M. Haukins agreed, leauing behinde in the Countrey as a pledge for his ſafetie and returne againe, one Martin Cockeram of Plimmouth. This Braſilian king being arriued, was brought vp to London, and preſented to king Henry the 8. lying as then at Whitehall: at the ſight of whome, the king and all the Nobilitie did not a little marueile, and not without cauſe: for in his cheekes were holes made according to their ſauage maner, and therein ſmall bones were planted, ſtanding an inche out from the ſaid holes, which in his owne Countrey was reputed for a great brauerie. He had alſo another hole in his nether lippe, wherein was ſet a precious ſtone about the bignelle of a peaſe: All his apparell, behauiour and geſture, were very ſtrange to the beholders.

Hauing remained here the ſpace almoſt of a whole yere, and the king with his ſight fully ſatiſfied, M. Haukins according to his promiſe and appointment, purpoſed to conuey him againe into his Countrey: but it fell out in the way that by change of ayre, and alteration of diet, the ſaide ſauage king died at Sea, which was feared would turne to the loſſe of the life of Martin Cockeram his pledge. Neuertheleſſe, the Sauages being fully perſwaded of the honeſt dealing of our men with their Prince, reſtored againe the ſaide pledge, without any harme to him, or any man of the companie: which pledge of theirs they brought home againe into England, with their shippe fraighted, and furnished with the commodities of the Countrey. Which Martine Cockeram, by the witnesse of sir Iohn Haukins, being an officer in the towne of Plimmouth, was liuing within these fewe yeeres.

I haue bene informed by M. Anthony Garrard an ancient & worshipful marchant of London, that this voyage to Brasil was frequented by Robert Reniger, Thomas Borey, and diuers other wealthie Marchants of Southhampton, about 50. yeeres past, to wit, in the yeere 1540.

An acte against the exaction of money or any other thing by any officer for licence to trafique into Iseland, and New found land, made in An. 2. Edwardi sexti.

FOrasmuch as within these fewe yeeres now last past, there hath bene leuied, perceiued & taken by certaine of the officers of the Admiraltie, of such Marchants, and fishermen as haue vsed and practised the aduentures and iourneis into Iseland, New found land, Ireland, and other places commodious for fishing, and the getting of fish, in and vpon the seas or otherwise, by way of Marchants in those parties diuers great exactions, as summes of money, doles or shares of fish, & such other like things, to the great discouragement & hinderance of the same marchants and fishermen, and to no little damage of the whole common wealth, and thereof also great complaines haue bene made, & informations also openly to the kings Maiesties most honourable counsell: for reformation whereof, & to the intent also that the said marchants and fishermen may haue occasion the rather to practise and vse the same trade of marchandizing, and fishing freely without any such charges or exactions, as is before limitted, whereby it is to be thought that more plenty of fish shal come into this realme, & thereby to haue the same at more reasonable prices: Be it therfore enacted by the king our soueraigne Lord, and the lords & commons in this present parliament assembled, and by authoritie of the same, that neither the Admiral, nor any officer, or minister, officers or ministers of the Admiraltie for the time being, shall in any wise hereafter exact, receiue, or take by himselfe his seruant, deputie, seruants, or deputies of any such marchant or fisherman, any summe or summes of money, doles or shares of fish, or any other reward, benefite or aduantage whatsoeuer it be for any licence to passe this Realme to the saide voyages or any of them, nor vpon any respect concerning the saide voyages, nor any of them, vpon paine to forfeite for the first offence treble the summe, or treble the value of the rewarde, benefite or aduantage, that any such officer or minister shall hereafter haue or take of any such marchant or fishermen. For the which forfeiture the parte grieued, and euery other person or persons whatsoeuer he or they be, shal and may sue for the same by information, bill, plaint, or action of debt in any of the kings courts of recorde: The king to haue the one moitie, and the partie complayning the other moitie: in which suite no essoigne, protection, or wager of lawe shalbe allowed. And for the second offence the partie so offending, not only to loose and forfeite his or their office or offices in the Admiraltie, but also to make fine and ransome at the kings will, and pleasure.

By this act it appeareth, that the trade out of England to New found land was common and frequented about the beginning of the raigne of Edward the 6. namely in the yere 1548. and it is much to be maruelled, that by the negligence of our men, the countrey in all this time hath bene no better searched.

The first voyage of the right worshipfull and valiant knight, sir Iohn Haukins, now treasurer of her Maiesties nauie Royall, made to the West Indies 1562.

MAster Iohn Haukins hauing made diuers voyages to the yles of the Canaries, and there by his good and vpright dealing being growne in loue and fauour with the people, informed himselfe amongst them by diligent inquisition of the state of the West India, whereof he had receiued some knowledge by the instructions of his father, but increased the same by the aduertisements and reports of that people. And being amongst other particulers assured, that Negroes were very good marchandise in Hispaniola, and that store of Negroes might easily be had vpon the coast of Guinea, resolued with himselfe to make trial thereof, and and communicated that deuise with his worshipfull friends of London: namely with sir Lionell Ducket, sir Thomas Lodge, M. Gunston his father in lawe, sir William Winter, M. Bromfield, and others. All which persons liked so well of his intention, that they became liberall contributers and aduenturers in the action. For which purpose there were 3. good shippes immediatly prouided: The one called the Salomon of the burthen of 120. tunne, wherein M. Haukins himselfe went as Generall: The 2. the Swallow of 100. tunnes, wherein went for Captaine M. Thomas Hampton: And the 3. the Ionas a barke of 40. tunnes, wherein the Master supplied the Captaines roome: in which small fleete, M. Haukins tooke with him not aboue 100. men, for feare of sickenesse, and other inconueniences, whereunto men in long voyages are commonly subiect.

With this company hee put off and departed from the coast of England in the moneth of October 1562. and in his course touched first at Teneriffe, where he receiued friendly intertainement. From thence hee passed to Sierra Leona, vpon the coast of Guinea, which place by the people of the Countrey is called Tagarin, where he staied some good time, and got into his possessiõ partly by the sword, and partly by other meanes, to the nomber of 300. Negroes at the least, besides other marchandises, which that Countrey yeeldeth. With this praye he sailed ouer the Ocean sea vnto the Iland of Hispaniola, and arriued first at the port of Isabella: and there hee had reasonable vtterance of his English commodities, as also of some part of his Negroes, trusting the Spaniards no further, then that by his owne strength he was able still to master them. From the port of Isabella he went to Porte de Plata, where he made like sales, standing alwayes vpõ his gard: from thence also hee sailed to Monte Christi another port on the North side of Hispaniola, and the last place of his touching, where he had peaceable traffique, & made vent of the whole nomber of his Negroes: for which he receiued in those 3. places by way of exchange, such quantitie of marchandise, that he did not onely lade his owne 3. shippes, with hides, ginger, sugers, and some quantitie of pearles, but he fraighted also two other hulkes with hides, and other like commodities, which he sent into Spaine. And thus leauing the Iland, hee returned and discimboked, passing out by the Ilands of the Caycos, without further entring into the bay of Mexico, in this his first voyage to the West India. And so with prosperous successe and much gaine to himselfe, and the aforesaide aduenturers he came home, and arriued in the moneth of September 1563.

A voyage made by M. Roger Bodenham, to S. Iohn de Vllua in the bay of Mexico, in the yeere 1564.

Roger Bodenham, hauing a long time liued in the Citie of Siuill in Spaine, being there married, and by occasion thereof vsing trade and traffique to the parts of Barbarie, grew at length to great losse and hinderance by that new trade begunne by mee in the Citie of Fez: Whereupon being returned into Spaine I began to call my wits about me, and to consider with my selfe by what meanes I might recouer & renue my state: and in conclusion by the ayde of my friends, I procured a shippe called the Barke Foxe, pertaining to London, of the burden of 8. or 9. score tunnes, and with the same I made a voyage to the West India, hauing obtained good fauour with the Spanish marchants, by reason of my long abode, and marriage in the Countrey. My voyage was in the companie of the Generall Don Pedro Melendes, for Noua Hispania. Who being himselfe appointed Generall for Terra firma and Peru, made his sonne our Generall for Newe Spaine, although Pedro Melendes himselfe was the principall man and directer in both fleetes. We all departed from Cales together the last day of May in the yere 1564. And I with my ship being vnder the conduct of the sonne of Don Pedro aforesaide, arriued with him in Noua Hispania, where immediatly I tooke order for ỹ discharge of my marchandise at the port of Vera Cruz, otherwise called Villa ricca, to be transported thence to the Citie of Mexico, which is 70. and odde leagues distant from the said port of Villa Ricca. In the way are many good townes, as namely, Pueblo de los Angelos, & another called Tlaxcalan. The citie of Mexico hath 3. great causeis to bring men to it, compassed with a lake, so that it needeth no walles, being so defended by the water. It is a Citie plentiful of al necessary things, hauing many faire houses, Churches & monasteries. I hauing continued in the Countrey the space of 9. moneths, returned againe for Spaine with the Spanish fleet, & deliuered the marchandise & siluer which I had in ỹ ship, into the Cõtraction house, and there receiued my fraight, which amounted outwards and homewards to the value of 13000. ducats, & more. I obserued many things in ỹ time of my abode in Noua Hispania as wel touching the cõmodities of the countrey, as the maners of the people both Spaniards & Indians, but because the Spaniſh hiſtories are full of thoſe obſeruations, I omit them, and refer the readers to the ſame: onely this I ſay, that the commoditie of Couchenelio, groweth in greateſt aboundance about the towne of Pueblo de los Angelos, and is not there worth aboue 40. pence the pound.

The voyage made by the worſhipful M. Iohn Haukins Eſquire, now knight, Captaine of the Ieſus of Lubek, one of her Maieſties ſhippes, and Generall of the Salomon, and other two barkes going in his companie to the coaſt of Guinea, and the Indies of Noua Spania, being in Affrica, and America: begunne in An. Dom. 1564.

MAſter Iohn Haukins with the Ieſus of Lubek, a ſhippe of 700. and the Salomon a ſhip of 7. ſcore, the Tiger a barke of 50. and the Swallowe of 30. tunnes, being all well furniſhed with men to the nomber of one hundreth, threeſcore and tenne, as alſo with ordinance, and victuall requiſite for ſuch a voyage, departed out of Plimmouth the 18. day of October, in the yere of our Lord 1564. with a proſperous winde: at which departing, in cutting the foreſaile, a marueilous miſfortune happened to one of the officers in the ſhippe, who by the pullie of the ſheat was ſlaine out of hande, being a ſorrowfull beginning to them all. And after their ſetting out tenne leagues to the ſea, he met the ſame day with the Minion a ſhip of the Queenes Maieſties, wherein was Captaine Dauid Carlet, and alſo her conſort, the Iohn Baptiſt of London, being bounde to Guinea alſo, who hailed one the other after the cuſtome of the Sea, with certaine peeces of ordinance for ioy of their meeting: which done, the Minion departed from him to ſeeke her other conſort, the Merline of London, which was a ſtarne out of ſight, leauing in M. Haukins companie the Iohn Baptiſt her other conſort.

The Minion, the Iohn Baptiſt, and the Merline bound for Guinea.

Thus ſayling forwards on their way with a proſperous winde vntill the 21. of the ſame moneth, at that time a great ſtorme aroſe, the winde being at Northeaſt about 9. a clocke in the night, and continued ſo 23. houres together, in which ſtorme M. Haukins loſt the companie of the Iohn Baptiſt aforeſaid, and of his pinneſſe called the Swallow, his other 3. ſhippes being ſore beten with the ſtorme. The 23. day the Swallow to his no ſmall reioycing, came to him againe in the night, 10. leagues to the Northward of Cape Finiſter, he hauing put roomer not being able to double the Cape, in that there roſe a contrary winde at Southweſt. The 25. the wind continuing contrary, he put into a place in Gallicia, called Ferroll, where hee remained fiue dayes, and appointed all the Maſters of his ſhippes an order for the keeping of good companie in this manner: The ſmall ſhippes to be alwayes a head and a weather of the Ieſus, and to ſpeake twiſe a day with the Ieſus at leaſt: if in the day the Enſigne bee ouer the poope of the Ieſus, or in the night two lights, then ſhall all the ſhippes ſpeake with her: If there be three lights aboord the Ieſus, then doeth ſhe caſt about: If the weather be extreeme, that the ſmall ſhippes cannot keepe companie with the Ieſus, then all to keepe companie with the Salomon, and forthwith to repaire to the Iſland of Teneriffe, to the Northward of the roade of Sirroes; If any happen to any miſfortune, then to ſhewe two lights, and to ſhoote off a piece of Ordinance. If any looſe companie, and come in ſight againe, to make three yawes, and ſtrike the Pylon three times: Serue God daply, loue one another, preſerue your victuals, beware of fire, and keepe good companie.

The 26. day the Minion came in alſo where he was, for the reioycing whereof hee gaue them certaine peeces of Ordinance, after the courteſie of the Sea for their welcome, but the Minions men had no mirthe, becauſe of their conſort the Merline, whome at their departure from M. Haukins vpon the coaſt of England they went to ſeeke: and hauing mette with her, kept companie two dayes together, and at laſt by miſfortune of fire (though the negligence of one of their gunners) the powder in the gunners roome was ſet on fire, which with the firſt blaſt ſtrooke out her poope, and therewithall loſt three men, beſides many ſore burned (which eſcaped by the Brigandine being at her ſterne) and immediatly, to the great loſſe of the owners, and moſt horrible ſight to the beholders, ſhe ſonke before their eyes.

The 30. day of the moneth M. Haukins with his conſorts and companie of the Minion, hauing nowe both the Brigandines at her ſterne, wayed ancre, and ſet ſaile on their voyage, hauing a proſperous winde thereunto.

The fourth of November they had ſight of the Iſlande of Madera, and the firſt day of Teneriffe, Teneriffe, which they thought to haue bene the Canaries, in that they ſuppoſed themſelues to haue bene to the Eaſtward of Teneriffe, and were not: but the Pynion being a three or foure leagues a head of vs, kept on her courſe to Teneriffe, hauing better ſight thereof, then the other had, and by that meanes they parted companie. For Maſter Hawkins and his companie, went more to the Weſt, vpon which courſe hauing ſailed a while, he eſpied another Iſland, which he thought to be Teneriffe, and being not able, by the meanes of the fogge vpon the hils, to diſcerne the ſame, nor yet to fetch it by night, went roomer, vntill the morning, being the 7. of November, which as yet he could not diſcerne, but ſailed along the coaſt, the ſpace of two howres, to perceaue ſome certaine marke of Teneriffe, and found no likelihoode thereof at all, accompting that to be, as it was in deede, the Iſle of Palmes: and ſo ſailing forwards, eſpied another Iſland, called Gomera, and alſo Teneriffe, with the which he made, and ſailing all night, came in the morning the next day to the port of Adecia, where he found his pinneſſe which had departed from him the 1. of the moneth, being in the weather of him, and eſpying the pike of Teneriffe all a high, bare thither. At his arriuall, ſomewhat before he came to anker, he hoyſed out his ſhips pinneſſe rowing a ſhoare, intending to haue ſent one with a letter to Peter de ponte, one of the Gouernours of the Iſland, who dwelled a league from the ſhoare: but as he pretended to haue landed, ſuddenly there appeared vpon the two points of the roade, men leuelling of baſſes and harquebuſſes to them, with diuers others, to the number of 80. with halberts, pykes, ſwordes, and targets, which happened ſo contrarie to his expectation, that it did greatly amaſe him, and the more, becauſe he was nowe in their danger, not knowing well how to auoide it, without ſome miſchiefe. Wherefore he determined to call to them, for the better appeaſing of the matter, declaring his name, and profeſſing himſelfe to be an eſpeciall friend to Peter de ponte, and that he had ſundry things for him, which he greatly deſired. And in the meane time, while he was thus talking with them, whereby he made them to hold their hands, he willed the marriners to rowe away, ſo that at laſt he gat out of their danger: and then aſking for Peter De Ponte, one of his ſonnes being Signior Nicholas Ponte, came forth, whome he perceauing, deſired to put his men aſide, and he himſelf would leape a ſhoare, and common with him, which they did: ſo that after communication had betweene them of ſundry things, and of the feare they both had, Maſter Hawkins deſired to haue certaine neceſſaries prouided for him. In the meane ſpace, while theſe things were prouiding, he trimmed the maine maſt of the Ieſus, which in the ſtorme aforeſaid was ſprong: here he ſoiourned 7. daies, refreſhing himſelfe and his men. In the which time Peter de ponte dwelling at S. Cruz, a Citie 20. leagues off, came to him, & gaue him as gentle entertainment, as if he had bene his owne brother. To ſpeak ſomewhat of theſe Iſlands, being called in olde time Inſulæ fortunatæ, by the meanes of the flouriſhing therof, the fruitfulnes of them doeth ſurely exceede farre all other that I haue heard of: for they make wine better then any in Spaine, they haue grapes of ſuch bignes, that they may be compared to damſons, and in taſte inferiour to none: for ſugar, ſuckers, raiſons of the Sunne, and many other fruits, abundance: for roſine & rawe ſilke, there is great ſtore, they want neither corne, pulſes, cattell, nor yet wilde fowle: they haue many Camels alſo, which being yong, are eaten of the people for victuals, and being olde, they are vſed for carriage of neceſſaries: whoſe propertie is as he is taught to kneele at the taking of his loade, and vnlading againe: his nature is to ingender backward, contrarie to other beaſtes: of vnderſtanding very good, but of ſhape very deformed, with a little bellie, long miſhapen legges, and feete very broade of fleſh, without a hooke, all whole, ſauing the great toe, a backe bearing vp like a molehill, a large and thinne necke, with a little head, with a bunch of hard fleſh, which nature hath giuen him in his breaſt, to leane vpō. This beaſt liueth hardly, and is contented with ſtrawe, and ſtubble, but of force ſtrong, being well able to carry 500. weight. In one of theſe Iſlands, called" de Fierro, "De Fierra. there is by the reporte of the inhabitants, a certaine tree that raineth continually, by the dropping whereof, the inhabitants and cattell are ſatisfied with water, for other water haue they none in all the Iſland. And it raineth in ſuch abundance, that it were incredible vnto man to beleeue ſuch a vertue to be in a tree, but it is knowen to be a diuine matter, and a thing ordained by God, at whoſe power therein, we ought not to marueil, ſeeing he did by his prouidence, as we read in the Scriptures, when the children of Iſrael were going into the land of promiſe, feede them with Manna from heauen, for the ſpace of 40. yeeres. Of the trees aforeſaid, we ſawe in Guinie many, being of great height, dropping continually, but not ſo abundantly as the other, becauſe the leaues are narrower, and are like the leaues of a peare tree. About theſe Iſlands, are certaine flitting Iſlands, which haue bene oftentimes ſeene, and when men approched neere them, they vaniſhed: as the like hath bene of theſe Iſlands now knowen, by the reporte of the Inhabitants, which were not founde of long time one after the other: and therefore it ſhoulde ſeeme he is not yet borne, to whome God hath appointed the finding ding of them. In this Iland of the Teneritte, there is a hill called the Pike, because it is picked, which is in heigth by their reports, 20. leagues, hauing both winter and summer, abundance of snowe in the toppe of it: this pike may be seene in a cleere day 50. leagues off, but it sheweth as though it were a blacke clowde a great heigth in the element. I haue heard of none to be compared with this in heigth, but in the Indias I haue seene many, and in my iudgement not inferiour to the pike, and so the Spaniards write.

The 15. of November at night, we departed from Teneriffe, and the 20. of the same, wee had sight of 10. Caruels, that were fishing at sea, with whome we would haue spoken, but they fearing vs, fled into a place of Barbarie, called Cape de las Barbas.

Cape de Barbas.

The 20. the shippes pinnesse, with two men in her, sailing by the shippe, was ouerthrowen by the ouersight of them that were in her, the wind being so great, that before they were espied, and the ship had cast about for them, she was driuen halfe a league to leeward of the pinnesse, and had lost sight of her, so that there was small hope of recouerie, had not Gods helpe, and the Captaines diligence bene, who hauing well marked, which way the pinnesse was by the Sunne, appointed 24. of the lustiest rowers in the great boate, to rowe to windwards, and so recouered, contrary to all mens expectations, both the pinnesse and the men sitting vpon the keele of her.

Cape Blanco.

The 25. he came to Cape Blanco, which is vpon the coast of Affrica, and a place where the Portingals doe ride that fishe there, in the moneth of November especially, and is a very good place of fishing, for Pargoes. Mullet, and Dogge fishe. In this place the Portingals haue no holde for their defense, but haue refuge of the Barbarians, whome they entertaine as their souldiers, for the time of their being there, and for their fishing vpon that coast of Affrica, doe pay a certaine tribute to the King of the Moores. The people of that part of Affrica, are tawnie, hauing long haire, without any apparell, sauing before their priuie members. Their weapons in warres, are bowes, and arrowes.

Cape Verde in 14. degrees.

The 26. we departed from S. Auis Baye, within Cape Blanco, where we refreshed our selues with fishe, and other necessaries: and the 29. we came to Cape Verde, which lieth in 14. degrees, and a halfe. These people are all blacke, and are called Negroes, without any apparell, sauing before their priuities: of stature goodly men, and well liking, by reason of their foode, which passeth all other Guyneans for kine, goates, pullin, rise, fruits, and fishe. Here we tooke fishes with heades like Conies, and teeth nothing varying, of a iollie thickness, but not past a foote long, and is not to be eaten without flaying or cutting of his head. To speake somewhat of the sundry sortes of these Guyneans. The people of Cape Verde, are called Leophares, and counted the goodliest men of al other, sauing ꝑ Manicongoes, which do inhabite on this side ꝑ cape de Buena Speranza. These Leophares haue warres against the Ieloffes, which are borderers by them: their weapons are bowes, and arrowes, targets, and short daggers, darts also, but varying from other Negroes: for whereas the other vse a long dart, to fight with in their hands, they carry fiue or sixe small ones a peece, which they cast with. These men also are more ciuill then any other, because of their dailie traffike with the Frenchmen, and are of nature very gentle, and louing: for while we were there, we tooke in a Frenchman, who was one of the 19. that going to Brasile, in a Barke of Diepe, of 60. tunnes, and being a sea boord of Cape De Verde, 200. leagues, the plankes of their barke with a sea brake out vpon them so suddenly, that much a doe they had to saue themselues in their boates: but by Gods prouidence, the wind being westerly, which is rarely seene there, they got to the shoare, to the Iles Braues, and in great penurie got to Cape Verde, where they remained sixe weekes, and had meate and drinke of the same people. The said Frenchman hauing forsaken his fellowes, which were three leagues off from the shoare, and wandring with the Negroes too and fro, fortuned to come to the water side, and communing with certaine of his countreymen, which were in our ship, by their perswasions came away with vs: but his entertainment amongst them was such, that he desired it not: but through the importunate request of his Countreymen, consented at the last. Here we staied but one night, and part of the day: for the 7. of December, wee came away, in that pretending to haue taken Negroes there perforce, the Mynions men gaue them there to vnderstand of our comming, and our pretence, wherefore they did auoide the snares we had laid for them.

The 8. of December, we ankered by a small Iland, called Alcatrarsa, wherein at our going a shoare, we found nothing but sea birds, as we call them Ganets, but by the Portingals called Alcatrarses, who for that cause gaue the said Iland the same name. Herein halfe of our boates were laden with yong and olde fowle, who not being vsed to the sight of men, flew so about vs, that wee stroke them downe with poles. In this place, the two ships riding, the two barkes, with their boates, went into an Iland of the Sapies, called La Formio, to see if they could take any of them, and there landed to the number of 80. in armour, and eſpying certaine, made to them, but they fled in ſuch order into the woods, that it booted them not to followe: ſo going on their way forward til they came to a riuer which they could not paſſe ouer, they eſpied on the other ſide two men, who with their bowes and arrowes ſhot terribly at them. Whereupon we diſcharged certaine harquebuſſes to them againe, but the ignorant people waied it not, becauſe they knewe not the danger thereof: but vſing a marueilous crying in their fight, with leaping, and turning their tailes, that it was moſt ſtrange to ſee, and gaue vs great pleaſure to behold them. At the laſt, one being hurt with a harquebuſſe vpon the thigh, looked vpon his wound, and wiſt not howe it came, becauſe he could not ſee the pellet. Here Maſter Hawkins perceauing no good to be done amongſt them, becauſe we could not finde their townes, and alſo not knowing how to goe into Rio grande, for want of a Pilot, which was the very occaſion of our comming thither: and finding ſo many ſholes, feared with our great ſhips to goe in, and therefore departed on our pretended way to the Idols.

The 10. of December, hauing a northeaſt wind, with raine, and ſtorme, which weather continued two daies together, was the occaſion, that the Salomon, and Tyger loſte our companie: for whereas the Ieſus, and pinneſſe ankered at one of the Iſlands, called Sambula, the 12. day, the Salomon and Tyger came not thither, till the 14. In this Iſland, we ſtaied certaine daies, going euery day a ſhoare, to take the Inhabitants, with burning, and ſpoiling their townes, who before were Sapies, and were conquered by the Samboſes, Inhabitants beyond Sierra Leona. The Iſland called Hambula.

Theſe Samboſes had inhabited there 3. yeeres before our comming thither, and in ſo ſhort ſpace haue ſo planted the ground, that they had great plentie of mill, riſe, rootes, pompions, pullin, goares, of ſmall frye vſed, euery houſe full of the Countrey fruite planted by Gods prouidence, as Palmito trees, fruites like dates, and ſundry other in no place in all that Countrey ſo aboundantly, whereby they liued more deliciouſly then other. Theſe inhabitants haue diuerſe of the Sapies, which they tooke in the warres, as their ſlaues, whome onely they keepe to till the ground, in that they neither haue the knowledge thereof, nor yet will worke themſelues, of whome wee tooke many in that place, but of the Samboſes none at all, for they fled into the maine. The Samboſes. Sapies.

All the Samboſes haue white teeth as wee haue, far vnlike to the Sapies, which doe inhabite about Rio grande, for their teeth are all filed, which they doe for a brauerie, to ſet out themſelues, and doe iagge their fleſh, both legges, armes, and bodies, as workemanlike, as a Jerkinmaker with vs pinketh a jerkin. Theſe Sapies be more ciuill then the Samboſes: for whereas the Samboſes liue moſt by the ſpoile of their enemies, both in taking their victuals, and eating them alſo, The Sapies doe not eate mans fleſh, vnleſſe in the warres they be driuen by neceſſitie thereunto, which they haue not vſed, but by the example of the Samboſes, but liue onely with fruits, and cattell, whereof they haue great ſtore. This plentie is the occaſion that the Sapies deſire not warre, except they be thereunto prouoked by the inuaſions of the Samboſes, whereas the Samboſes for want of foode, are inforced thereunto, and therefore are not woont onely to take them that they kill, but alſo keepe thoſe that they take, vntill ſuch time as they want meate, and then they kill them. There is alſo another occaſion, that prouoketh the Samboſes to warre againſt the Sapies, which is for couetouſnes of their riches. For whereas the Sapies haue an order to burie their dead in certaine places appointed for that purpoſe, with their golde about them, the Samboſes diggeth vp the ground, to haue the ſame treaſure: for the Samboſes haue not the like ſtore of golde, that the Sapies haue. In this Iſland of Sambula, we found about 50. boates, called Almadyes, or Canoas, which are made of one peece of wood, digged out like a trough, but yet of a good proportion, being about 8. yardes long, and one in breadth, hauing a beake head, and a ſterne very proportionably made, and on the out ſide artificially carued, and painted red, and blewe: they are able to carry 20. or 30. men, but they are about the coaſt able to carry three ſcore, and vpward. In theſe Canoas they rowe ſtanding vpright, with an ower ſomewhat longer then a man, the ende whereof is made about the breadth and length of a mans hand, of the largeſt ſort. They rowe very ſwift, and in ſome of them foure rowers, and one to ſteere make as much way, as a paire of oares in the Thames of London. The Canoas of Affrica.

Their townes are prettily diuided with a maine ſtreete at the entring in, that goeth thorough their Towne, and another ouerthwart ſtreete, which maketh their townes croſſe waies: their houſes are built in a ranke very orderly in the face of the ſtreete, and they are made round, like a doue cote, with ſtakes ſet full of Palmito leaues, in ſteede of a wall: they are not much more then a fathome large, & two of heigth, and thatched with Palmito leaues very cloſe, other ſome with reede, and ouer the roofe there of, for the better garniſhing of the ſame, there is a round bundle of reede prettily contriued like a louer: in the inner part, they make a loft of ſtickes, whereupon they lay all their prouiſion of victuals: a place they reſerue at their entrance for the kitchin, and the place they lie in is deuided with certaine mats artificially made with the rine of Palmito trees: their The forme of their townes.

bedsteedes are of small staues, laide along, and raised a foote from the ground, vpon which is laide a matte, and another vpon them when they list: for other couering they haue none. In the middle of the Towne, there is a house larger and higher then the other, but in forme alike, adioyning vnto the which, there is a place made of foure good stancions of woode, and a round roofe ouer it, the grounde also raised round with claye, a foote high, vpon the which flooze were strawed many fine mats: this is the consultation house, the like whereof is in all Townes, as the Portingals affirme: in which place, when they sitte in Counsell, the King or Captaine sitteth in the middes, and the Elders vpon the flooze by him: (for they giue reuerence to their Elders,) and the common sorte sitte round about them. There they sitte to examine matters of theft, which if a man be taken with, to steale but a Portingall clothe from another, he is solde to the Portingals for a slaue. They consult also, and take order what tyme they shall goe to warres: and as it is certainly reported by the Portingals, they take order in gathering of fruites in the season of the yeere, and also for receauing of Palmito wine, which is gathered by a hole cutte in the toppe of a tree, and a gourde set for the receauing thereof, which falleth in by droppes, and yeelded fresh wine againe within a moneth, and this diuided, part and portion like to euery man, by the iudgement of the Captaine and Elders, euery man holdeth himselfe contented: and this surely I iudge to be a very good order: for otherwise, whereas scarsitie of Palmito is, euery man would haue the same, which might breede great strife: but for such things, as euery man doth plant for himselfe, the sower thereof reapeth it to his owne vse, so that nothing is common, but that which is vnset by mans handes. In their houses there is more common passage of Lizardes, like Guats, and other greater, of blacke and blewe colour, of neere a foote long, besides their tailes, then there is with vs of Mise in great houses. The Sapies and Samboses also, vse in their warres bowes and arrowes, made of reedes, with heads of yron poysoned with the iuice of a Cucumber, whereof I haue had many in my handes. In their battels they haue target men, with broade wicker targets, and darts with heades at both endes, of yron, the one in forme of a two edged sworde, a foote and a halfe long, and at the other ende, the yron long of the same length, made to counterpease it, that in casting, it might flee leuell, rather then for any other purpose, as I can iudge. And when they espie the enemie, the Captaine to cheere his men, crieth, Hungry, and they answere Heygre, and with that euery man placeth himselfe in order, for about euery target man three bowemen will couer themselues, and shoote as they see aduantage: and when they giue the onset, they make such terrible cryes, that they may be hearde two miles off. For their beleefe, I can heare of none that they haue, but in such as they themselues imagine to see in their dreames, and so worshippe the pictures, whereof we sawe some like vnto Diuels. In this Iland afore laide, wee soiourned vnto the one and twentieth of December, where hauing taken certaine Negroes, and of their fruites, rise, and myll, as we could well carry away, (whereof there was such store, that we might haue laden one of our Barkes therewith,) we departed, and at our departure, diuers of our men being desirous to goe a shoare, to fetch Pompions, which hauing prooued, they found to be very good, certaine of the Tygers men went also, amongst the which there was a Carpenter, a young man, who with his fellowes hauing set many, and carried them downe to their boates, as they were ready to depart, desired his fellowes to tarry, while he might goe vp to fetch a few which he had layed by for himselfe, who being more licorous then circumspect, went vp without weapon, and as hee went vp alone, possibly beeing marked of the Negroes that were vpon the trees, espying him what he did, perceauing him to be alone, and without weapon, dogged him, and finding him occupied in binding his Pompions together, came behind him, ouerthrowing him, and straight cutte his throate, as he afterwards was founde by his fellowes, who came to the place for him, and there founde him naked.

The extreme negligence of one of the companie.

The two and twentieth the Captaine went into the Riuer, called Callowsa, with the two Barkes, and the Iohns pinnesse, and Salomons boate, leauing at anker in the Riuers mouth the two shippes, the Riuer being twentie leagues in, where the Portingals roade: he came the fiue and twentieth, and dispatched his business, and so returned with two Carauels, loaden with Negroes.

The riuer Callowsa.

The 27. the Captaine being aduertised by the Portingals, of a Towne of the Negroes, called Bymba, being in the way as they returned, where was not onely great quantitie of golde, but also that there were not aboue fortie men, and a hundred women, and children in the Towne, so that if hee would giue the aduenture vppon the same, hee might gette a hundreth slaues: with the which tydings hee beeing gladde, because the Portingals should not thinke him to bee of so base a courage, but that hee durst to giue them that, and greater attempts: and being being thereunto also the more prouoked with the prosperous successe he had in other Islands adiacent, where he had put them all to flight, and taken in one boate 20. together, determined to stay before the Towne three or foure howres, to see what he could doe: and therefore prepared his men in armour, and weapon together, to the number of fortie men well appointed, hauing to their guides certaine Portingals, in a boate, who brought some of them to their death: we landing boate after boate, and diuers of our men scattering themselues, contrarie to the Captaines will, by one or two in a companie, for the hope they had to finde golde in their houses, ransaking the same, in the meane time the Negroes came vppon them, and hurte many, being thus scattered, whereas if fiue or sixe had bene together, they had bene able, as their companies did, to giue the ouerthowe to 40. of them, and being driuen downe to take their boates, were followed so hardly by a route of Negroes, who by that tooke courage to pursue them to their boates, that not onely some of them, but others standing a shoare, not looking for any such matter, by meanes that the Negroes did flie at the first, and our companie remained in the towne, were suddenly so set vpon, that some with great hurt recouered their boates: other some not able to recouer the same, tooke the water, and perished by meanes of the oaze. While this was a doing, the Captaine, who with a dosen men went thorough the Towne, returned, finding 200. Negroes at the waters side, shooting at them in the boates, and cutting them in peeces, which were drowned in the water, at whose comming, they ranne all away: so he entred his boates, and before he could put off from the shore, they returned againe, and shot very fiercely, and hurt diuers of them. Thus wee returned backe, somewhat discomforted, although the Captaine in a singular wise manner, with countenance very cheerefull outwardly, as though he did little weigh the death of his men, nor yet the great hurt of the rest, although his heart inwardly was broken in peeces for it, done to this ende, that the Portingals being with him, should not presume to resist against him, nor take occasion to put him to further displeasure or hinderance, for the death of our men: hauing gotten by our going ten Negroes, and lost seuen of our best men, whereof Walter Field, Captaine of the Salomon, was one, and we had 27. of our men hurt. In the same howre, while this was a doing, there happened at the same instant, a meruelous miracle to them in the shippes, who roade ten leagues to seaward, by many sharks or Tuberons, who came about the ships, among which one was taken by the Iesus, and foure by the Salomon, and one very sore hurt, escaped: and so it fell out of our men, whereof one of the Iesus men, and foure of the Salomons were killed, and the 5. hauing 20. wounds, was rescued, and scaped with much adoe.

Portingals not to be trusted.

Want of circumspection in our men.

The 28. they came to their ships, the Iesus, and the Salomon, and the 30. departed from thence to Taggarin.

Taggarin.

The first of Januarie, the two barkes, and both the boates forsooke the ships, and went into a riuer, called the Casserroes, and the 6. hauing dispatched their busines, the two barkes returned, and came to Tagarrin, where the two ships were at anker. Not two daies after the comming of the two shippes thither, they put their water caske a shoare, and filled it with water, to season the same, thinking to haue filled it with fresh water afterward: and while their men were some a shoare, and some at their boates, the Negroes set vpon them in the boates, and hurt diuers of them, and came to the caskes, and cut off the hoopes of twelue buts, which lost vs 4. or 5. dayes time, besides great want we had of the same: soiourning at Taggarin, the Swallowe went vp the riuer about her traffike, where they saw great townes of the Negroes, and Canoas, that had three score men in a peece: there they vnderstoode of the Portingals, of a great battell, betweene them of the Sierra Leona side, and them of Taggarin: they of Sierra Leona, had prepared 300. Canoas to inuade the other. The time was appointed not past 6. daies after our departure from thence, which we would haue seene, to the intent we might haue taken some of them, had it not bene for the death, and sickenes of our men, which came by the contagiousnes of the place, which made vs to make haste away.

The contagion of the Countrey of Sierra Leona.

The 18. of Januarie at night, we departed from Taggarin, being bound to the West Indies, before which departure, certaine of the Salomons men went a shoare, to fil water in the night, and as they came a shoare with their boate, being ready to leape a land, one of them espied a Negroe in a white coate, standing vpon a rocke, being ready to haue receaued them, when they came a shoare, hauing in sight of his fellowes also eight or nine, some in one place leaping out, & some in another, but they hid themselues straight againe: whereupon our men doubting they had bene a great companie, and sought to haue taken them at more aduantage, as God would, departed to their shippes, not thinking there had bene such a mischiefe pretended toward them, as then was in deede. Which the next day we vnderstoode of a Portingall, that came downe to vs, who had traffiked with the Negroes, by whome he vnderstoode, that the King of Sierra Leona had made all the power he could, to take some of vs, partly for the desire he had to see what kind of people we were, that had spoiled his people at the Idols, wherof he had newes before our comming, and as I iudge also, vpon other occasions prouoked by the Tangomangoes, but sure we were that the armie was come downe, by meanes that in the euening we sawe such a monstrous fire, made by the watring place, that before was not seene, which fire is the onely marke for the Tangomangoes, to knowe where their armie is alwaies. If these men had come downe in the euening, they had done vs great displeasure, for that we were a shoare, filling water: but God, who worketh all thinges in the best, would not haue it so, and by him wee escaped without danger, his name be prayed for it.

Tangomangoes.

The 29. of the same moneth, we departed with all our ships from the Sierra Leona, towards the West Indias, where for the space of 28. daies, wee were becalmed, hauing nowe and then contrarie windes, and some Ternados amongest the same calme, which happened to vs very ill, being but reasonably watered, for so great a companie of Negroes, and our selues, which pinched vs all, and that which was worst, put vs in such feare, that many neuer thought to haue reached to the Indias, without great death of Negroes, and of themselues: but Almightie God, who neuer suffereth his elect to perish, sent vs the sixteene of Februarie, the ordinarie Byrie, which is the North west winde, which neuer left vs, till we came to an Iland of the Cannybals, called Sancta Dominica, where we arriued the ninth of March, vpon a Saturday: and because it was the most desolate place in all the Iland, we could see no Cannybals, but some of their houses, where they dwelled, and as it should seeme, forsooke the place, for want of fresh water, for wee coulde finde none there but raine water, and such as fell from the hils, and remayned as a puddle in the dale, whereof we filled for our Negroes. The Cannybals of that Iland, and also others adiacent, are the moste desperate warriers that are in the Indias, by the Spaniards report, who are neuer able to conquer them, and they are molested by them not a little, when they are driuen to water there in any of those Ilands: of very late, not two moneths past, in the same Iland, a Caruell being driuen to water, was in the night sette vpon by the Inhabitants, who cutte their cable in the halser, whereby they were driuen a shoare, and so taken by them, and eaten. The greene Dragon of Newhauen, whereof was Captaine, one Bontemps, in March also, came to one of those Ilands, called Granado, and being driuen to water, could not doe the same, for the Cannybals, who fought with him very desperately two daies. For our part also, if we had not lighted vpon the desertest place in all the Iland, we could not haue missed, but should haue bene greatly troubled by them, by all the Spaniards reportes, who make them Deuils in respect of men.

Februarie.

Dominica Iland. March.

Cannybals exceeding cruell, and to be auoided.

The tenth day, at night, we departed from thence, and the fifteenth had sight of nine Ilands, called the Testigos: and the sixteenth, of an Iland, called Margarita, where we were entertayned by the Alcalde, and had both beeues and sheepe giuen vs, for the refreshing of our men: but the Gouernour of the Iland, would neither come to speake with our Captaine, neither yet giue him any licence to traffike: and to displease vs the more, whereas wee had hired a Pilot, to haue gone with vs, they would neither suffer him to goe with vs, but also sent worde by a Caruell out of hand, to Santo Domingo, to the Uiceroy, who doth represent the Kings person, of our arriuall in those parts, which had like to haue turned vs to great displeasure, by the meanes that the same Uiceroy did send word to Capo de la Vela, and to other places along the coast, commanding them by the vertue of his authoritie, and the obedience that they owe to their Prince, no man should traffike with vs, but shoulde resiste vs with all the force they could. In this Iland, notwithstanding that we were not within foure leagues of the Towne, yet were they so afraid, that not onely the Gouernour himselfe, but also all the Inhabitants forsooke their Towne, assembling all the Indians to them, and fled into the mountaines, as we were partly certified, and also sawe the experience our selues, by some of the Indians comming to see vs, who by three Spaniards a horseback passing hard by vs, went vnto the Indians, hauing euery one of them their bowes, and arrowes, procuring them away, who before were conuersant with vs. Here perceauing no traffike to be had with them, nor yet water for the refreshing of our men, wee were driuen to depart the twentieth day, and the two and twentieth, we came to a place in the mayne, called Kenimnawo, whither the Captaine going in his pinnesse, spake with certaine Spaniards, of whome he demanded traffike, but they made him answere, they were but souldiers newly come thither, and were not able to buy one Negroe: whereupon he asked for a watring place, and they pointed him a place two leagues off, called Sancta Fee, where we found maruelous goodly watring, and commodious for the taking in thereof: for that the fresh water came into the Sea, and so our shippes had aboord the shoare 20. fathome water. Neere about this place, inhabited certaine Indians, who the next day after ter we came thither, came downe to vs, presenting mill & cakes of bread, which they had made of a kind of corne called Maise, in bignes of a peasle, the eare whereof is much like to a teasell, but a span in length, hauing thereon a number of graines. Also they brought downe to vs which we bought for beades, pewter whistles, glasses, knines, and other trifles, Hennes, Potatoes and pines. These Potatoes be the most delicate rootes that may bee eaten, and doe farre exceede their passeneps or carets. Their pines be of the bignesse of two fistes, the outside whereof, is of the making of a pine-apple, but it is soft like the rinde of a Coucomber, and the inside eateth like an apple, but it is more delicious then any sweete apple sugred. These Indians be of colour tawnie like an Oliue, hauing euery one of them both men and women, haire all blacke, and no other colour, the women wearing the same hanging downe to their shoulders, and the men rounded, and without beards, neither men nor women suffering any haire to growe in any part of their body, but daily puls it off as it groweth. They goe all naked, the men couering no part of their body but their yard, vpon the which they weare a gourd or piece of cane, made fast with a threed about his loines, leauing the other partes of their members vncouered, whereof they take no shame. The women also vncouered, sauing with a cloth which they weare a handbreadth, where with they couer their priuities both before and behind. These people be very small feeders, for trauelling, they carrie but two small bottels of gourdes, wherein they put in one the iuice of Sorrell whereof they haue great store, and in the other flowre of their Maise, which being moist, they eate, taking sometime of the other. These men carie euery man his bowe and arrowes, whereof some arrowes are poisoned for warres, which they keepe in a Cane together, which Cane is of the bignesse of a mans arme, other some with broad heades of iron wherewith they strike fishe in the water: the experience whereof we sawe not once nor twise, but daily for the time we taried there, for they are so good archers that the Spaniards for feare thereof arme themselues and their horses with quilted canuas of two inches thicke, and leaue no place of their bodie open to their enemies, sauing their eyes which they may not hide, and yet oftentimes are they hit in that so small a scantling: their poison is of such a force, that a man being stricken there with, dieth within foure and twentie howers, as the Spaniards doe affirme, and in my iudgement it is like there can bee no stronger poyson as they make it, vsing therevnto apples which are very faire and red of colour, but are a strong poison, with the which together with venemous Bats, Vipers, Adders and other serpents, they make a medley, and there with anoint the same.

The vse of Sorrell.

The making of their poison.

The Indian women delight not when they are yong in bearing of children, because it maketh them haue hanging breasts which they account to bee great deforming in them, and vpon that occasion while they bee yong, they destroy their seede, saying, that it is fittest for olde women. Moreouer, when they are deliuered of childe, they goe straight to washe themselues, without making any further ceremonie for it, not lying in bed as our women doe. The beds which they haue are made of Gossopine cotton, and wrought artificially of diuers colours, which they carie about with them when they trauell, and making the same fast to two trees, lie therein they and their women. The people bee surely gentle and tractable, and such as desire to liue peaceablie, or els had it bene vnpossible for the Spaniards to haue conquered them as they did, and the more to liue vnpeaceable, they being so many in number, and the Spaniards so few.

The manners of the yong women.

From hence we departed the eighe and twentie, and the next day we passed betweene the maine land and the Iland called Tortuga, a very lowe Iland, in the yeere of our Lord God one thousand fiue hundred sixtie fiue aforesaid, and sailed along the coast vntill the first of April, at which time the Captaine sayled along in the Iesus pinnace to discerne the coast, & saw many Caribes ashore, and some also in their Canowas, which made tokens vnto him of friendship, and shewed him golde, meaning thereby that they would traffique for wares. Whereupon hee staied to see the maners of them, and so for two or three trifles gaue such things as they had about them and departed: but the Caribes were very importunate to haue them come ashore, which if it had not bene for want of wares to traffique with them, he would not haue denied them, because the Indians we sawe before were very gentle people, and such as doe no man hurt. But as God would haue it, hee wanted that thing, which if hee had had, would haue bene his confusion: for these were no such kinde of people as wee tooke them to bee, but more diuelish a thousand partes, and are eaters and deuouters of any man they catche, as it was afterwardes declared vnto vs at Burboata, by a Caruell comming out of Spaine with certaine souldiours, and a captaine generall sent by the king for those East ward parts of the Indians, who sailing along in his pinnace as our Captaine did to descrie the coast, was by the Caribes called ashore with sundrie tokens made to him of friendshippe, and golde shewed as though they desired traffique, with the which the Spaniardes being mooued, suspecting no deceite at all, went ashore amongst them, who was no sooner a shore, but with 4. or 5. more was taken, the rest of his company being vnaded by them, saued themselues by flight, but they that were taken, paied their ransome with their liues, and were presently eaten. And this is their practise to toll with their golde the ignorant to their snares: they are bloudsuckers both of Spaniards, Indians, and all that light in their laps, not sparing their owne countrymen if they can conueniently come by them. Their pollicie in fight with the Spaniards is marueious: for they choose for their refuge the mountaines and woods where the Spaniards with their horses cannot follow them, and if they fortune to bee met in the plaine where one horseman may ouerrunne 100. of them, they haue a deuise of late practised by them to pitch stakes of wood in the ground, and also small iron pikes to mischiefe their horses, wherein they shew themselues politike warriours. They haue more abundance of gold then all the Spaniards haue, and liue vpon the mountains where the Pines are in such number, that the Spaniards haue much adoe to get any of them from them, and yet sometimes by assembling a great number of them, which happeneth once in two yeeres, they get a piece from them, which afterwards they keepe sure inough.

The crueltie of the Caribes.

Thus hauing escaped the daunger of them, wee kept our course along the coast, and came the third of Aprill to a Towne called Burborata, where his ships came to an anker, and her himselfe went a shore to speake with the Spaniardes, to whom he declared himselfe to be an Englishman, and came thither to trade with them by the way of merchandize, and therefore required licence for the same. Vnto whom they made answere, that they were forbidden by the king to traffique with any forren nation, vpon penaltie to forfeit their goods, therfore they desired him not to molest them any further, but to depart as he came, for other comfort he might not looke for at their hands, because they were subiects & might not goe beyond the law. But he replied that his necessitie was such, he might not so doe: for being in one of the Queenes Armados of England, and hauing many souldiours in them, he had neede both of some refreshing for them, and of victuals, and of money also, without the which hee could not depart, and with much other talke perswaded them not to feare any dishonest part of his behalfe towards them, for neither would he commit any such thing to the dishonour of his prince, nor yet for his honest reputation and estimation, vnlesse hee were too rigorously delt withall, which hee hoped not to finde at their handes, in that it should as well redound to their profite, as his owne, and also hee thought they might doe it without daunger, because their princes were in amitie one with another, and for our partes wee had free traffique in Spaine and Flaunders, which are in his dominions, and therefore hee knew no reason why hee should not haue the like in all his dominions. To the which the Spaniardes made answere, that it laie not in them to giue any licence, for that they had a gouernour to whom the gouernment of those partes was committed, but if they would stay tenne dayes, they would send to their gouernour who was three score leagues off, and would returne answere within the space appointed, of his mind.

Burborata.

In the meane time they were contented he should bring his ships into harbour, and there they would deliuer him any victuals he would require. Whereupon, the fourth day we went in, where being one day and receiuing all things according to promise, the captaine aduised himselfe, that to remaine there tenne dayes idle, spending victuals and mens wages, and perhaps in the ende receiue no good answere from the gouernour, it were meere follie, and therefore determined to make request to haue licence for the sale of certaine leane and sicke Negroes which he had in his shippe like to die vpon his hands if he kept them ten dayes, hauing litle or no refreshing for them, whereas other men hauing them, they would bee recouered well inough. And this request hee was forced to make, because he had not otherwise wherewith to pay for victuals & for necessaries which he should take: which request being put in writing and presented, the officers and townedwellers assembled together, and finding his request so reasonable, graunted him licence for thirtie Negroes, which afterwardes they caused the officers to view, to the intent they should grant to nothing but that were very reasonable, for feare of answering thereunto afterwardes. This being past, our captaine according to their licence, thought to haue made sale, but the day past and none came to buy, who before made shewe that they had great neede of them, and therefore wist not what to surmise of them, whether they went about to prolong the time of the Gouernour his answere because they would keepe themselues blamelesse, or for any other pollicie hee knew not, and for that purpose sent them worde, marueiling what the matter was that none came to buie them. They answered, because they had graunted licence onely to the poore to buie those Negroes of small price, and their money was not so readie as other mens of more wealth. More then that, as soone as euer they sawe the shippes, they conueyed away their money by their wiues that went into the mountaines for feare, and were not yet returned, and yet asked two dayes to seeke their their wiues and fetch their money. Notwithstanding, the next day diuers of them came to cheapen, but could not agree of price, because they thought the price to high. Whereupon the Captaine perceiuing they went about to bring downe the price, and meant to buie, and would not consent if hee had licence, that hee might sell at any reasonable rate, as they were worth in other places, did send for the Principals of the Towne, and made a shew hee would depart, declaring himselfe to be very sory that hee had so much troubled them, and also that hee had sent for the gouernour to come downe, seeing now his pretence was to depart, whereat they maruelled much, and asked him what cause mooued him thereunto, seeing by their working he was in possibilitie to haue his licence. To the which he replied that it was not onely a licence that he sought, but price, which hee perceiued was not there to be had, and therefore would seeke further, and withall shewed him his writings what he paied for his Negroes, declaring also the great charge he was at in his shipping, and mens wages, and therefore to counteruaile his charges, hee must sell his Negroes for a greater price then they offered. So they doubting his departure, put him in comfort to sell better there then in any other place. And if it fell out that hee had no licence, that hee should not loose his labour in tarying, for they would buie without licence. Whereupon, the captaine being put in comfort, promised them to stay, so that hee might make sale of his leane Negroes, which they graunted vnto. And the next day did sell some of them, who hauing bought and paied for them, thinking to haue had a discharge of the Customer for the custome of the Negroes, being the kings duetie, they gaue it away to the poore for Gods sake, and did refuse to giue the discharge in writing, and the poore not trusting their wordes, for feare, least hereafter it might bee demaunded of them, did refraine from buying any more, so that nothing els was done vntill the Gouernours comming downe, which was the fourteenth day, and then the Captaine made petition, declaring that hee was come thither in a shippe of the Queenes maiesties of England, being bound to Guinie, and thither driuen by winde and weather, so that being come thither, hee had neede of sundry necessaries for the reparation of the sayde Naule, and also great neede of money for the paiment of his Souldiours, vnto whom hee had promised paiment, and therefore although hee would, yet would not they depart without it, and for that purpose requested licence for the sale of certaine of his Negroes, declaring that although they were forbidden to traffique with straungers, yet for that there was a great amitie betweene their princes, and that the thing pertained to our Queenes highnesse, hee thought he might doe their prince great seruice, and that it would bee well taken at his handes, to doe it in this cause. The which allegations with diuers others put in request, were presented vnto the Gouernour, who sitting in counsell for that matter, granted vnto his request for licence. But yet there fell out another thing which was the abating of the kings custome, being vpon euery slaue 30. duckets, which would not be granted vnto.

Whereupon the captaine perceiuing that they would neither come neere his price hee looked by a great deale, nor yet would abate the kings custome of that they offered, so that either hee must bee a great looser by his wares, or els compell the officers to abate the same kings custome which was too vnreasonable, for to a higher price hee could not bring the buiers: Therefore the fifteenth of Aprill hee prepared one hundred men well armed with bowes, arrowes, harquebusses and pikes, with the which he marched to the towne wardes, and being perceiued by the Gouernour, hee straighe with all expedition sent messengers to know his request, desiring him to marche no further forward vntill hee had answere againe, which incontinent hee should haue. So our captaine declaring how vnreasonable a thing the kings custome was, requesting to haue the same abated, and to pay seuen and a halfe per centum, which is the ordinarie custome for wares thorough his dominions there, and vnto this if they would not graunt, he would displease them. And this worde being caried to the Gouernour, answere was returned that all things should bee to his content, and thereupon hee determined to depart, but the souldiours and mariners finding so litle credite in their promises, demaunded gages for the performance of the premisses, or els they would not depart. And thus they being constrained to send gages, we departed, beginning our traffique, and ending the same without disturbance.

An hundred Englishmen in armour.

Thus hauing made traffique in the harborough vntill the 28. our Captaine with his ships intended to goe out of the roade, and purposed to make shew of his departure, because now the common sort hauing imploied their money, the rich men were come to towne, who made no shew that they were come to buie, so that they went about to bring downe the price, and by this pollicie the captaine knew they would be made the more eger, for feare least we departed, and they should goe without any at all.

The nine and twentie we being at anker without the roade, a French shippe called the Greene Dragon of Newhauen, whereof was captaine one Bon Temps came in, who saluted vs after the maner of the Sea, with certaine pieces of ordinaunce, and we resaluted him with the like againe: with whom hauing communication, he declared that he had bene at the Mine in Guinie, and was beaten off by the Portingals Gallies, and inforced to come thither to make sale of such wares as he had: and further that the like was happened vnto the Minion, besides the captaine, Dauit Carlet and a merchaunt, with a dozen mariners betrayed by the Negroes at their first arriuall thither, and remaining prisoners with the Portingals, besides other miseduentures of the losse of their men, happened thorough the great lacke of fresh water, with great doubts of bringing home the ships, which was most sorowfull for vs to vnderstand.

The reports of the mishaps of the Minion in Guinie.

May. Thus hauing ended our traffique here the 4. of May, wee departed, leauing the French man behind vs, the night before the which, the Caribes whereof I haue made mention before, being to the number of 200. came in their Canowas to Burborata, intending by night to haue burned the towne, and taken the Spaniards, who being more vigilant because of our being there, then their custome was, perceiuing them comming, raised the towne, who in a moment being a horsebacke, by meanes their custome is for all doubts to keepe their horses readie sadled, in the night fell vpon them, and tooke one, the rest making swift for themselues, escaped away. But this one, because hee was their guide, and was the occasion that diuers times they had made inuasion vpon them, had for his trauell a stake thrust thorough his fundement, and so out at his necke.

Horses kept ready sadled.

The first of May aforesayd, wee came to an Iland called Curasao, where wee had thought to haue ankred, but could not finde ground, and hauing let fall an anker with two cables, were faine to weie it againe, and the 7. sayling along the coast to seeke an harborow, and could finde none, came to an anker where wee rode open in the sea. In this place we had traffique for Hides, and found great refreshing both of beefe, mutton and lambes, whereof there was such plentie, that saluing the skinnes, we had the flesh giuen vs for nothing, the plentie whereof was so abundant, that the worst in the ship thought scorne not onely of mutton, but also of sodden lambe, which they disdained to eate vnrosted.

Exceeding plentie of cattell in Curasao

The increase of cattell in this Iland is maruellous, which from a dozen of each sort brought thither by the gouernour, in 25. yeeres had 100. thousand at the least, and of other cattell was able to kill without spoile of the increase, 15. hundred yeerely, which he killeth for the skinnes, and of the flesh saueth onely the tongues, the rest he leaueth to the foule to deuour. And this I am able to affirme, not onely vpon the Gouernours owne report, who was the first that brought the increase thither, and so remaineth vnto this day, but also by that I sawe my selfe in one field, where an hundred oxen lay one by another all whole, sauing the skinne and tongue taken away, and it is not so maruelous a thing why they doe thus cast away the flesh in all the Islands of the West Indies, seeing the land is great, and more then they are able to inhabite, the people fewe, hauing delicate fruits and meates inough besides to feede vpon, which they rather desire, and the increase which passeth mans reason to beleeue, when they come to a great number: for in S. Domingo an Iland called by the finders thereof, Hispaniola, is so great quantitie of cattell, and such increase thereof, that notwithstanding the daily killing of them for their hides, it is not able to asswage the number of them, but they are deuoured by wild dogs, whose number is such by suffering them first to range the woods and mountains, that they eate and destroy 60000. a yeere, and yet small lacke found of them. And no maruell, for the said Iland is almost as big as all England, and being the first place that was found of all the Indies, and of long time inhabited before the rest, and therefore it ought of reason to be most populous, and to this hower the Viceroy and counsell roiall, abideth there as in the chiefest place of all the Indies to prescribe orders to the rest for the kings behalfe, yet haue they but one citie and 13. villages in all the same Iland, whereby the spoile of them in respect of the increase is nothing.

The 15. of the foresaid moneth we departed from Curasao, being not a little to the reioycing of our captaine and vs, that we had there ended our traffique, for notwithstanding our sweete meat, we had sower sauce, for by reason of our riding so open at sea, what with blasts whereby our ankers being a ground, three at once came home, and also with contrary windes blowing, whereby for feare of the shore we were faine to hale off to haue anker hold, sometimes a whole day and a night turning vp and downe, and this happened not once, but halfe a dozen times in the space of our being there.

The 16. wee passed by an Iland called Aruba, and the 17. at night, ankred 6. bowers at the West end of Cabo de La vela, and in the morning being the 18. weied againe, keeping our course, in the which time the captaine sailing by the shore in the pinnace, came to the Rancharia, a place where the Spaniards vse to fish for pearles, and there spoke with a Spaniard, who told him how farre off he was from Rio de la Hacha, which because he would not ouershoote, ankered that night againe, and the 19. came thither, where hauing talke with the kings treasurer of the Indies resident there, declared his quiet traffique in Burboroata, and shewed a certificate of the same, made by the gouernour thereof, and therefore he desired to haue the like there also: but the treasurer made answere that they were forbidden by the Uiceroy and counsell of S. Domingo, who hauing intelligence of our being on the coast, did send expresse commission to resist vs, with all the force they could, insomuch that they durst not traffique with vs in no case, alleaging that if they did, they should loose all that they did traffique for, besides their bodies at the magistrates commaundement. Our captaine replied, that hee was in an Armado of the Queenes maiesties of England, and sent about other her affaires, but driuen besides his pretended voiage, was inforced by contrary windes to come into those partes, where he hoped to find such friendship as hee should doe in Spaine, to the contrary wherof he knew no reason, in that there was amitie betwixt their princes. But seeing they would contrary to all reason goe about to withstand his traffique, he would it should not be said by him, that hauing the force he hath, to be driuen from his traffique perforce, but he would rather put it in aduenture to trie whether he or they should haue the better, and therefore willed them to determine either to giue him licence to trade, or els to stand to their owne harmes: So vpon this it was determined hee should haue licence to trade, but they would giue him such a price as was the one halfe lesse then he had sold for before, and thus they sent word they would do, and none otherwise, & if it liked him not, he might do what he would, for they were not determined to deale otherwise with him. Wherupon, the captaine waying their vnconscionable request, wrote to them a letter, that they delt too rigorously with him, to goe about to cut his throte in the price of his commodities, which were so reasonablie rated, as they could not by a great deale haue the like at any other mans hands. But seeing they had sent him this to his supper, hee would in the morning bring them as good a breakefast. And therefore in the morning being the 21. of May, he shot of a whole Culuering to summon the towne, and preparing one hundred men in armour, went a shore, hauing in his great boate two Faulcons of brasse, and in the other boates double bases in their noses, which being perceiued by the Townesmen, they incontinent in battell araie with their drumme and ensigne displayed, marched from the Towne to the sands, of footemen to the number of an hundred and fiftie, making great bragges with their cries, and weauing vs a shore, whereby they made a semblant to haue fought with vs in deede. But our Captaine perceiuing them so bragge, commaunded the two Faulcons to bee discharged at them, which put them in no small feare to see, as they afterward declared, such great pieces in a boate. At euery shotte they fell flat to the ground, and as we approched neere vnto them, they broke their araie, and dispersed themselues so much for feare of the ordinaunce, that at last they went all away with their ensigne. The horsemen also being about thirtie, made as braue a shew as might be, coursing vp and downe with their horses, their braue white leather Targets in the one hand, and their Iauelings in the other, as though they would haue receiued vs at our landing. But when we landed, they gaue ground, and consulted what they should doe, for litle they thought wee would haue landed so boldly: and therefore as the Captaine was putting his men in aray, and marched forward to haue encountred with them, they sent a messenger on horsebacke with a flagge of truce to the Captaine, who declared that the treasurer maruelled what hee ment to doe to come a shore in that order, in consideration that they had graunted to euery reasonable request that hee did demaund: but the Captaine not well contented with this messenger, marched forwardes. The messenger praied him to stay his men, and said, if hee would come apart from his men, the treasurer would come and speake with him, whereunto he did agree to common together. The captaine onely with his armour without weapon, and the treasurer on horseback with his iaueling, was afraid to come neere him for feare of his armour, which he said was worse then his weapon, and so keeping aloofe communing together, granted in fine to all his requests. Which being declared by the captaine to the company, they desired to haue pledges for the performance of all things, doubting that otherwise when they had made themselues stronger, they would haue bene at defiance with vs: and seeing that now they might haue what they would request, they iudged it to be more wisedome to be in assurance then to be forced to make any more labours about it. So vpon this, gages were sent, and we made our traffique quietly with them. In ỹ meane time while we staied here, we watred a good breach off from the shore, where by the strẽgth of the fresh water running into the sea, the salt water was made fresh. In this riuer we saw many crocodils of sundry bignesses, but some as big as a boat, with 4. feet, a long broad mouth, & a long taile, whose skin is so hard, that a sword will not pierce it. His nature is to liue out of the water as a frog doth, but he is a great deuourer, & spareth neither fish, which is his cõmon food, nor beasts, nor men, if he take thẽ, as the proofe thereof was knowen by a Negroe, who as he was filling water in the riuer was by one of them caried cleane away, and neuer seene after. His nature is euer when he would haue his praie, to crie, and sobbe like a christian bodie, to prouoke them to come to him, and then hee snatcheth at them, and thereupon came this prouerbe that is applied vnto women when they weepe, Lachrymæ Crocodili, the meaning whereof is, that as the Crocadile when he crieth, goeth then about most to deceiue, so doth a woman most commonly when she weepeth. Of these the master of the Iesus watched one and by the bankes side stroke him with a pike of a bill in the side, and after 3. or 4. times turning in sight, he sunke downe, & was not afterward seene. In the time of our being in the riuers of Guinie, we saw many of a monstrous bignes, amongst the which the captaine being in one of the barks comming downe the same, shot a faulcon at one, which very narowly he missed, and with a feare plunged into the water, making a streame like the way of a boate.

Now while we were here, whether it were of a feare that the Spaniards doubted wee would haue done them some harme before wee departed, or for any treason that they pretended towardes vs, I am not able to say, but then came thither a captaine from some of the other townes, with a doozen souldiers, who vpon a time that our captaine and the treasurer cleared all things betweene them, and were in a communication of a debt of the gouernours of Burboroata, which was to be paied by the said treasurer, who would not answere the same by any meanes. Certaine words of displeasure passed betwixt the captaine and him, and parting the one from the other, the treasurer possibly doubting that our captaine would perforce haue sought the same, did immediately commaund his men in armour both horsemen and footemen: but because the captaine was in the Riuer on the backe side of the towne with his other boates, and all his men vnarmed and without weapons, it was to be iudged he ment him litle good, hauing that aduantage of him, that comming vpon the sudden, he might haue mischieued many of his men, but the captaine hauing vnderstanding thereof, not trusting to their gentlenesse, if they might haue the aduauntage, departed aboord his ships, and at night returned againe, & demanded amongst other talke, what they ment by assembling their men in that order, and they answered, that their captaine being come to towne did muster his men according to his accustomed maner. But it is to bee iudged to bee a cloake, in that comming for ꝑ purpose he might haue done it sooner, but the trueth is, they were not of force vntill then, whereby to enterprise any matter against vs, by meanes of pikes and harquebusses, whereof they haue want, and were now furnished by our captaine, and also 3. faulcons, which hauing got in other places, they had secretly conueied thither, which made them the bolder, and also for that they saw now a conuenient place to do such a feat, and time also seruing thereunto, by the meanes that our men were not only vnarmed and vnprouided, as at no time before the like, but also were occupied in hewing of wood, & least thinking of any harme: these were occasions to prouoke them thereunto. And I suppose they went about to bring it to effect, in that * I with another gentleman being in the towne, thinking of no harme towards vs, and seeing men assembling in armour to the treasurers house, whereof I maruelled, and reuoking to minde the former talke betweene the captaine and him, and the vnreadinesse of our men, of whom aduauntage might haue bene taken, departed out of the Towne immediately to giue knowledge thereof, but before wee came to our men by a flight shot, two horsemen riding a gallop were come neere vs, being sent, as we did gesse, to stay vs least we should carie newes to our captaine, but seeing vs so neere our men staied their horses, comming together, and suffering vs to passe, belike because we were so neere, that if they had gone about the same, they had bene espied by some of our men which then immediately would haue departed, whereby they should haue bene frustrate of their pretence: and so the two horsemen ridde about the bushes to espie what wee did, and seeing vs gone, to the intent they might shadow their comming downe in post, whereof suspicion might be had, fained a simple excuse in asking whether he could sell any wine, but that seemed so simple to the captaine, that standing in doubt of their curtesie, hee returned in the morning with his 3. boates, appointed with bases in their noses, and his men with weapons accordingly, where as before he caried none: and thus dissembling all iniuries conceiued of both partes, the captaine went a shore, leauing pledges in the boates for himselfe, & cleared all things betweene the treasurer and him, sauing for the gouernors debt, which the one by no means would answere, nor the other, because it was no his due debt, he would not molest him for it, but was content to remit it vntill another time, & therefore departed, causing the two barkes which rode neere the shore to weie and goe vnder saile, which was dont to the intent that captaine demaunding a testimoniall of his good behauiour there, could not haue the same vntill he were vnder the saile readie to depart, and therefore at night went for the same againe, and receiued it at the treasurers hand, of whom very curteously he tooke his leaue, and departed shooting of the bases of his boate for his farewell, and the townesmen also shot off foure faulcons and thirtie harquebusses, and this was the first time that we knew of the conueyance of theyr faulcons.

The 31 of May we departed, keeping our course to Hispaniola, and the fourth of June wee had sight of an Iland, which we made to be Iamaica, marueiling that by the vehement course of the seas we should be driuen so farre to leeward: for setting our course to the West end of Hispaniola we fell with the middle of Iamaica, notwithstanding that to all mens sight it shewed a head land, but they were all deceiued by the clouds that lay vpon the land two dayes together, in such sort that we thought it to be the head land of the said Iland. And a Spanyard being in the ship, who was a merchant, and inhabitant in Iamaica, hauing occasion to go to Guinie, and being by treason taken of the Negroes, & afterwards bought by the Tangomangoes, was by our captaine brought from thence, and had his passage to go into his countrey, who perceiuing the land, made as though he knew euery place therof, and pointed to certaine places, which he named to be such a place, and such a mans ground, and that behinde such a point was the harborow, but in the end he pointed so from one point to another, that we were a leeboord of all places, & found our selues at the West end of Iamaica before we were aware of it, and being once to leeward, there was no getting vp againe, so that by trusting of the Spanyards knowledge, our captaine sought not to speake with any of the inhabitãts, which if he had not made himselfe sure of, he would haue done, as his custom was in other places: but this man was a plague not onely to our captaine, who made him loose, by ouershooting the place, two thousand pounds by hides, which he might haue gotten, but also to himselfe, who being three yeeres out of his countrey, and in great misery in Guinie, both among the Negroes and Tangomangoes, and in hope to come to his wife and friends, as he made sure account, in that at his going in to the pinnesse, when he went a shoare he put on his new clothes, and for ioy flung away his olde, could not afterwards finde any habitation, neither there nor in all Cuba, which we sayled all along, but it fell out euer, by one occasion or other, that we were put beside the same, so that he was layne to be brought into England, and it happened to him as it did to a Duke of Samaria, when the Israelites were besieged, and were in great misery with hunger, and being tolde by the Prophet Elizæus, that a bushell of flower should be solde for a sickle, would not beleeue him, but thought it impossible: and for that cause Elizæus prophesied he should see the same done, but he should not eate thereof: so this man being absent three yeeres, and not euer thinking to haue seene his owne countrey, did see the same, went vpon it, and yet was it not his fortune to come to it, or to any habitation, whereby to remayne with his friendes according to his desire.

Thus hauing sailed along the coast two dayes, we departed the seuenth of June, being made to beleeue by the Spanyard, that it was not Iamaica, but rather Hispaniola, of which opinion the captaine also was, because that which he made Iamaica seemed to be but a piece of the land, and thereby tooke it rather to be Hispaniola, by the lying of the coast, and also for that being ignorant of the force of the currant, he could not beleeue he was so farre driuen to leeward, and therefore setting his course to Iamaica, and after certaine dayes, not finding the same, perceiued then certainly that the Iland which he was at before, was Iamaica, and that the clouds did deceiue him, wherof he marueiled not a little: and this mistaking of the place came to as ill a passe as the ouershooting of Iamaica: for by this did he also ouerpasse a place in Cuba, called Santa Cruz, where, as hee was informed, was great store of hides to be had: and thus being disappointed of two of his ports, where he thought to haue sailed great profit by his traffike, and also to haue found great refreshing of victuailes and water for his men, was now disappointed greatly, and such want he had of fresh water, that he was forced to seeke the shoare to obtaine the same, which he had sight of after certaine dayes ouerpassed with stormes and contrary windes, but yet not of the maine of Cuba, but of certaine Ilands, in number two hundred, wherof the most part was desolate of inhabitants: by the which Ilands the captaine passing in his pinnesse, could finde no fresh water vntill he came to an Iland bigger then all the rest, called the Isle of Pinas, where we ankered with our shippes the sixteenth of June, and found water, which although it were neither so toothsome as running water, by the meanes it is standing, and but the water of raine, and also being neere the sea was brackish, yet did we not refuse it, but were more glad therof, as the time then required, then we should haue beene another time with fine conduct water. Thus being reasonably watred we were desirous to depart, because the place was not very conuenient for such shippes of charge as they were, because there were many shoales leeward, and also lay open to the sea for any winde that should blowe, and therefore the captaine made the more haste away, which was not vnneedfull: for little sooner were there ankers weyed, and foresayle set, but there arose such a storme, that they had not much to spare for doubling out of the shoales: for one of the barks not being fully ready as the rest

The cape of S. Anthony in Cuba.

Thus the seuenteenth of June we departed and the twentith fell with the West end of Cuba, called Cape S. Anthony, where for the space of three dayes, we doubled along till we came beyond the shoales, which are 20 leagues beyond S. Anthony. And the ordinary brise taking vs, which is the Northeast winde, put vs the 24 from the shoare, and therfore we went to the Northwest to fetch winde, and also to the coast of Florida to haue the helpe of the currant, which was iudged to haue set to the Eastward: so the 29 wee found our selues in 27 degrees, and in the soundings of Florida, where we kept our selues the space of foure dayes, sailing along the coast as neere as we could, in teene or twelue fathome water, hauing all the while no sight of land.

Florida.

July. The iles of Tortugas. Great store of birds.

The fift of July we had sight of certaine Ilandes of sand, called the Tortugas (which is lowe land) where the captaine went in with his pinnesse, and found such a number of birds, that in halfe an houre he laded her with them, and if they had beene tenne boats more, they might haue done the like. These Ilandes beare the name of Tortels because of the number of them, which there doe breed, whose nature is to liue both in the water and vpon land also, but breed onely vpon the shoare, in making a great pit wherein they lay egges to the number of three or foure hundred, and couering them with sand, are hatched by the heat of the sunne, and by this meanes commeth the great increase. Of these we tooke very great ones, which haue both backe and belly all of bone of the thickenesse of an inch, the fish whereof we proued, eating much like veale, and finding a number of egges in them, called also of them, but they did eate very swelly. Heere we ankered sixe houres, and then springing a fayre gale of winde, we weyed anker, and made saile to ward Cuba, whither we came the sixt day, and weathered as farre as the Table, being a hill so called, because of the forme thereof: heere we lay off and on all night, to keepe that wee had gotten to windeward, intending to haue watered in the morning, if we could haue done it, or els if the winde had come larger, to haue plyed to windeward to the Hauana, which is a harborow whereunto all the fleet of the Spanyards come, and doe there tarry to haue one the company of another. This hill we thinking to haue bene the Table, made account (as it was in deed) the Hauana, to be but eight leagues to windeward, but by the persuasion of a French man, who made the captaine beleeue hee knew the Table very well, and had beene at the Hauana, said that it was not the Table, and that the Table was much higher, and neerer to the sea side, and that there was no plaine ground to the Eastward, nor hilles to the Westward, but all was contrary, and that behinde the hilles to the Westward was the Hauana: to which persuasion credit being giuen by some, and they not of the worst, the captaine was persuaded to go to leeward, and so sailed along the seuenth and eight dayes, finding no habitation, nor no other Table, and then perceiuing his folly to giue eare to such praters, was not a little sorry, both because he did consider what time he should spend ere he could get so farre to windeward againe, which would haue bene with the weathering which we had 10 or 12 dayes worke, and what it would haue beene longer he knew not, and that (which was worst) he had not aboue a dayes water, and therefore knew not what shift to make: but in fine, because the want was such, that his men could not liue with it, he determined to seeke water, and to go further to leeward, to a place (as it is set in the card) called Rio de los porcos, which he was in doubt of both whether it were inhabited, and whether there were water or not, and whether for the shoales he might haue such accesse with his shippes that he might conueniently take in the same: and while we were in these troubles, and kept our way to the place aforesaid, almighty God our guide (who would not suffer vs to ruine into any further danger, which we had beene like to haue incurred, if we had ranged the coast of Florida along as we did before, which is so dangerous (by reports) that no shippe escapeth which commeth thither, as the Spanyards haue very well proued the same) sent vs the eight day at night a fayre Westerly winde, whereupon the captaine and company consulted, determining not to refuse Gods gift, but euery man was contented to pinch his owne belie whatsoeuer had happened, and taking the sayd winde, the ninth day of July got to the Table, and sailing the same night, vnawares ouershot the Hauana, at the which place we thought to haue watered, but the next day, not knowing that we had ouershot the same, sailed along the coast, seeking it, and the eleuenth day in the morning, by certaine knowen markes, we vnderstood that we had ouershotte it twentie leagues: in which coast ranging, we found no conuenient watering place, whereby there was no remedy but to dissemble, and to water vpon the coast of Florida: for, to go further to the Eastward, we could not for the shoales, which are very dangerous, and because the currant shooteth to the Northeast, we doubted by the force therof to be set vpon them, and therfore durst not approch them: so making but reasonable way the day aforesaid, & all night: the 12 day in the morning, we fell with the Ilands vpon the cape of Florida, which we could scant double by the

meanes that fearing the shoales to the Eastwards, and doubting the currant comming out of the West, which was not of that force we made account of, for we felt little or none till we fell with the cape, and then felt such a currant, that bearing all sailes against the same, yet were driuen backe againe a great pace: the experience whereof we had by the Iesus pinnesse, and the Sallomons boate, which were sent the same day in the afternoone, while the shippes were becalmed, to see if they could finde any water vpon the Ilands aforesayd, who spent a great part of the day in rowing thither, being further off then they deemed it to be, and in the meane time a fayre gale of winde springing at sea, the shippes departed, making a signe to them to come away, who although they saw them depart, because they were so neere the shoare would not loose all the labour they had taken, but determined to keepe their way, and see if there were any water to be had, making no account but to finde the shippes well enough: but they spent so much time in filling the water which they had founde, that the night was come before they coulde make an end, and hauing lost the sight of the shippes, rowed what they could, but were wholly ignorant which way they should seeke them againe, as in deede there was a more doubt then they knew of. For when they departed, the shippes were in no currant, and sayling but a mile further, founde one so strong, that bearing all sailes, it coulde not preuaile against the same, but were driuen backe: whereupon the captaine sent the Sallomon, with the other two barkes, to beare neere the shoare all night, because the currant was lesse there a great deale, and to beare light with shooting off a piece now and then, to the intent the boates might better knowe how to come to them. The state of the currant of Florida.

The Iesus also bare a light in her toppe gallant, and shot off a piece also now and then, but the night passed and the morning was come, being the thirteenth day, and no newes could be heard of them, but the shippes and barkes forlooke not, but to looke still for them, yet they thought it was all in vaine, by the meanes they heard not of them all the night past, and therefore determined to tarry no longer, seeking for them till noone, and if they heard no newes, then they would depart to the Iesus, who perforce (by the vehemency of the currant) was carryed almost out of sight, but as God would haue it, now time being come, and they hauing tacked about in the pinnesses top, had sight of them, and tooke them vp: they in the boates, being to the number of one and twentie, hauing sight of the shippes, and seeing them tacking about, whereas before at the first sight of them did greatly reioyce, were now in a greater perplexitie then euer they were: for by this they thought themselues vtterly forsaken, whereas before they were in some hope to haue found them. Truely God wrought maruellously for them, for they themselues hauing no victualles but water, and being sore oppressed with hunger, were not of opinion to bestowe any further time in seeking the shippes then that present noone time: so that if they had not at that instant espyed them, they had gone to the shoare to haue made prouision for victualles, and with such thinges as they could haue gotten, either to haue gone for that part of Florida, where the French men are (which would haue beene very hard for them to haue done, because they wanted victualles to bring them thither, being one hundred and twentie leagues off) or els to haue remayned amongest the Floridians, at whose handes they were put in comfort by a French man, who was with them, that had remayned in Florida at the first finding thereof, a whole yeere together, to receiue victualles sufficient, and gentle intertainement, if neede were, for a yeere or two, vntill which time God might haue prouided for them. But how contrary this would haue fallen out to their expectations, it is hard to iudge, seeing those people of the cape of Florida, are of more sauage and fierce nature, and more valiant then any of the rest, which the Spanyardes well prooued, who being fiue hundred men, who intended there to land, returned few or none of them, but were inforced to forsake the same, and of their cruelty mention is made in the booke of the Decades, of a fryer, who taking vpon him to perswade the people to subiection, was by them taken with his skinne cruelly pulled ouer his eares, and his flesh eaten.

In these Ilandes they being a shoare, founde a dead man dried in a maner whole, with other heads and bodyes of men, so that those sorts of men are eaters of the flesh of men, as well as the Canibals. But to returne to our purpose.

The fourteenth day the shippe and barks came to the Iesus, bringing them newes of the recouery of the men, which was not a little to the reioycing of the captaine, and the whole company: and so then altogether they kept on their way along the coast of Florida, and the fifteenth day came to an anker, and so from sixe and twenty degrees to thirtie degrees & halfe, where the French men are, ranging all the coast along, seeking for fresh water, ankering euery night, because we woulde ouershoote no place of fresh water, and in the day time the captaine in the shippes pinnesse sayled along the shoare, went into euery creeke, speaking with diuers of the Floridians, because he would vnderstand where the French men inhabited, and not finding them in eight and twentie degrees M. Hawkins ranged all the coast of Florida.

as it was declared vnto him, maruelled thereat, and neuer left sailing along the coast till he found them, who inhabited in a riuer, by them called the riuer of May, and standeth in thirtie degrees and better. In ranging this coast along, the captaine found it to be all an Island, and therefore it is all lowe land, and very scant of fresh water, but the countrey was maruellously sweet, with both marish and medow ground, and goodly woods among. There they found Sorrell to growe as abundantly as grasse, and where their houses were, great store of mayes and mill, and grapes of great bignesse, but of taste much like our English grapes. Also Deere great plenty, which came vpon the sands before them. Their houses are not many together, for in one house a hundred of them do lodge: they being made much like a great barne, and in strength not inferiour to ours, for it hath stanchions and rafters of whole trees, and couered with Palmito leaues, hauing no place diuided, but one small roome for their King and Queene. In the middest of this house is a hearth where they make great fyers all night, and vpon certaine pieces of wood hewen in for the bowing of their backes, and another place made high for their heads, they lye vpon the same, which they put one by another all along the walles on both sides. In their houses they remaine onely in the nights, and in the day they desire the fieldes, where they dresse their meat, and make prouision for victualles, which they prouide onely for a meale from hand to mouth. There is one thing to be maruelled at, for the making of their fire, and not onely they but also the Negroes doe the same, which is made onely by two stickes, rubbing them one against another: and this they may doe in any place they come, where they finde sticks sufficient for the purpose. In their apparell the men onely vse deere skinnes, wherewith some only couer their priuy members, other some vse the same as garments to couer them before and behinde, which skinnes are painted, some yellow & red, some blacke and russet, and euery man according to his owne fancy. They do not omit to paint their bodies also with curious knots, or antike worke, as euery man in his owne fancy deuiseth, which painting, to haue it to continue the better, they vse with a thorne to pricke their flesh, and dent in the same, whereby the painting may haue better holde. In their warres they vse a slighter couler of painting their faces, therby to make themselues shew the more fierce: which after their warres ended they wash away againe. In their warres they vse bowes and arrowes, whereof their bowes are made of a kinde of Yew, but blacker then ours, but many passing the strength of the Negroes or Indians, for it is not greatly inferior to ours, their arrowes also of a great length, but yet of reeds like other Indians, but varying in two points both for length, and also for nocks and fethers, which the other lacke, whereby they shoot very steddy: the heads of the same are vipers teeth, bones of fishes, flint stones, piked points of kniues, which hauing gotten of the French men, broke the same, and put the points of them in their arrowes heads: some of them haue their heads of siluer, other some that haue want of these, put in a kinde of hard wood, notched, which pearceth as farre as any of the rest. In their fight, being in the woods, they vse a maruellous pollicie for their owne safegard, which is by clasping a tree in their armes, and yet shooting notwithstanding: this pollicy they vsed with the French men in their fight, whereby it appeareth that they are people of some pollicy: and although they are called by the Spanyards Gente triste, that is to say, Bad people, meaning therby, that they are not men of capacity: yet haue the French men found them so witty in their answers, that by the captaines owne report, a councellour with vs could not giue a more profound reason.

The women also in their apparell vse painted skinnes, but most of them gownes of mosse, somewhat longer then our mosse, which they sowe together artificially, & make the same surplewise, wearing their haire downe to their shoulders, like the Indians. In this riuer of May aforesaid, the captaine entring with his pinnesse, found a French ship of fourescore tunne, and two pinnesses of fifteene tunne a piece, by her, and speaking with the keepers thereof, they tolde him of a fort two leagues vp, which they had built, in which their captaine Mounsieur Laudonier was, with certaine souldiers therin. To whom our captaine sending to vnderstand of a watring place, where he might conueniently take it in, and to haue licence for the same, he straight because there was no conuenient place but vp the riuer fiue leagues, where the water was fresh, did send him a pilot for the more expedition thereof, to bring in one of his barkes, which going in with other boats prouided for the same purpose, ankered before the fort, into the which our captaine went, where he was by the general, with other captaines and souldiers, very gently intertained, and declared vnto him the time of their being there, which was 14 months, with the extremity they were driuen to for want of victuals, hauing brought very little with them, in which place they being 200 men at their first comming, had in short space eaten al the mayes they could buy of the inhabitants about them & therfore were driuen certeine of thē to serue a king of the Floridians against other his enemies for mill, and other victualles, which hauing gotten, could not serue them, being so many so long a time, but but want came vpon them in such sort, that they were faine to gather acorns, which being stamped small, and often washed to take away the bitternesse of them, did vse the same for bread, eating withall sundry times roots, whereof they found many good and wholesome, and such as serue rather for medicines then for meates alone. But this hardnesse not contenting some of them, who would not take the paynes so much as to fish in the riuer before their doores, but would haue all things put in their mouthes, did rebell against the captaine, taking away first his armour, & afterward imprisoning him: and so to the number of fourescore of them, departed with a barke and a pinnesse, spoyling their store of victuall, and taking away a great part therof with them, and so went to the Islands of Hispaniola & Iamaica a rouing, where they spoiled, and pilled the Spaniardes, and hauing taken two caruels laden with wine and Casaua, which is a bread made of roots, and much other victualles and treasure, had not the grace to depart therewith, but were of such hautie stomacks, that they thought their force to be such that no man durst meddle with them, and so kept harborough in Iamaica, going daily a shoare at their pleasure. But God which would not suffer such euill doers vnpunished, did indurate their hearts in such sort, that they lingered the time so long, that a shippe and galeasse being made out of S. Domingoes, came thither into the harborough, and tooke twentie of them, wherof the most part were hanged, and the rest carried into Spayne, and some (to the number of fiue and twentie) escaped in the pinnesse, and came to Florida, where at their landing they were put in prison, and incontinent foure of the chiefest being condemned, at the request of the souldiours, did passe the harquebussers, and then were hanged vpon a gibbet. This lacke of threescore men was a great discourage & weakning to the rest, for they were of the best souldiors that they had: and whereas they had now made the inhabitants weary of them by their dayly craning of mayis hauing no wares left to content them withall, and therefore inforced to robbe them, and to take away their victuall perforce, was the occasion that the Floridians (not well contented therewith) did take certaine of their company in the woods, and slew them, whereby there grew great warres betwixt them and the French men, and therefore they being but a few in number durst not venture abroad, but at such time as they were inforced thereunto for want of food to do the same: and going twentie harquebussers in a company, were set vpon by eighteene kings, hauing seuen or eight hundred men, which with one of their bowes slew one of their men, and hurt a dozen, and droue them all downe to their boats, whose policy in fight was to be maruelled at: for hauing shot at diuers of their bodies which were armed, and perceiuing that their arrowes did not preuaile against the same, they shot at their faces & legs, which were the places that the French men were hurt in. Thus the French men returned, being in ill case by the hurt of their men, hauing not aboue forty souldiors left vnhurt, whereby they might ill make any more inuasions vpon the Floridians, and keepe their fort withall: which they must haue beene driuen vnto, had not God sent vs thither for their succour, for they had not aboue ten dayes victuall left before we came. In which perplexity our captaine seeing them, spared them out of his ship twenty barrels of meale, and foure pipes of beanes, with diuers other victuals and necessaries which he might conueniently spare: and to helpe them the better homewards whither they were bound before our comming, at their request we spared them one of our barks of fifty tunnes. Notwithstanding the great want that the French men had, the ground doth yeeld victuals sufficient, if they would haue taken paines to get the same, but they being souldiors, desired to liue by the sweat of other mens browes: for while they had peace with ỹ Floridians, they had fish sufficient, by weares which they made to catch the same: but when they grew to warres, the Floridians tooke away the same againe, and then would not the French men take the paines to make any more. The ground yeldeth naturally grapes in great store, for in the time that the French men were there, they made twenty hogsheads of wine. Also it yeldeth roots passing good, deere maruellous store, with diuers other beasts, and fowle, seruiceable to the vse of man. These be things where with a man might liue, hauing corne or mayis wherwith to make bread: for mayis maketh good sauory bread, and cakes as fine as flower. Also it maketh good meale beaten and sodden with water and eateth like pappe wherwith we feed children. It maketh also good beuerage sodden in water, and nourishable: which the French men did vse to drinke of in the morning, and it alluaged their thirst, so that they had no need to drinke all the day after. And this mayis was the greatest lacke they had, because they had no labourers to sowe the same, and therefore to them that should inhabit the land it were requisite to haue labourers to till and sowe the ground. For they hauing victuals of their owne, whereby they neither rob nor spoile the inhabitants, may liue not onely quietly with them, who naturally are more desirous of peace then of warres, but also shall haue abundance of victuals proffered them for nothing: for it is with them as it is with one of vs, when we see another man euer taking away from vs, although we haue enough besides, yet then we thinke all to little for our selues: for surely we haue heard the French men men repoꝛt, and I know it by the Indians that a very little contenteth them: foꝛ the Indians with the head of mapis roasted, will trauel a whole day, and when they are at the Spanyards finding, they giue them nothing but sodden herbs and mapis, & in this oꝛder I saw threescoꝛe of them fed, who were laden with wares, and came fiftie leagues off. The Floridians when they trauell haue a kinde of herbe dryed, which with a cane, and an earthen cup in the end, with fire, and the dried herbs put together, do sucke thoꝛow the cane the smoke thereof, which smoke satisfieth their hunger, and therewith they liue foure oꝛ fiue dayes without meat oꝛ drinke, and this all the French men vsed foꝛ this purpose: yet do they holde opinion withall, that it causeth water and fleame to void from their stomacks. The commodities of this land are moꝛe then are yet know̄e to any man: foꝛ besides the land it selfe, whereof there is moꝛe then any king Christian is able to inhabit, it flourisheth with medow, pasture ground, with woods of Cedar and Cypres, and other soꝛts, as better can not be in the woꝛld: they haue foꝛ apothicary herbes, trees, roots and gumme great stoꝛe, as Storax liquida, Turpintine, Gumme, Myrre and Frankinsence, with many others, wheroꝛ I know not the names. Coulers both red, blacke, yellow, and russet, very perfect, wherewith they paint their bodies, and deere skinnes which they weare about them, that with water it neither fadeth away, noꝛ altereth couler. Golde and siluer they want not: foꝛ at the French mens first comming thither, they had the same offered them foꝛ little oꝛ nothing: foꝛ they receiued foꝛ a hatchet two pound weight of golde, because they knew not the estimation thereof: but the souldiours being greedy of the same, did take it from them, giuing them nothing foꝛ it: the which they perceiuing, that both the French men did greatly esteeme it, and also did rigoꝛously deale with them, by taking the same away from them, at last would not be know̄en they had any moꝛe, neither durst they weare the same foꝛ feare of being taken away: so that sauing at their first comming, they could get none of them: and how they came by this golde and siluer, the French men know not as yet, but by gesse, who hauing trauelled to the South west of the cape, hauing found the same dangerous, by meanes of sundry banks, as we also haue found the same, and there finding masts which were wracks of Spanyards comming from Mexico, iudged that they had gotten treasure by them. Foꝛ it is most true that diuers wracks haue beene made of Spanyards, hauing much treasure. Foꝛ the French men hauing trauelled to the capeward a hundred and fiftie miles, did finde two Spanyards with the Floridians, which they brought afterward to theyꝛ foꝛt, wheroꝛ one being in a Caruell, comming from the Indias was cast away foureteene yeeres ago, and the other twelue yeeres, whose fellowes some escaped, other some were slaine by the inhabitants. It seemeth they had estimation of theyꝛ golde and siluer, foꝛ it is wrought flat and grauen, which they weare about their necks, other some made round like a pancake, with a hole in the middest to boalster vp their brests withall, because they thinke it a deformitie to haue great brests. As foꝛ mines either of golde oꝛ siluer, the French men can heare of none they haue vpon the Island, but of copper, wheroꝛ as yet also they haue not made the proofe, because they were but few men: but it is not vnlike, but that in the maine where are high hilles, may be golde and siluer as well as in Mexico, because it is all one maine. The French men obtained pearles of them of great bignesse, but they were blacke, by meanes of wasting of them, foꝛ they do not fish foꝛ them as the Spanyards do, but foꝛ their meat: foꝛ the Spanyardes vse to keepe dayly a fishing some two oꝛ three hundred Indians, some of them that be of choyse a thousand: and their oꝛder is to goe in Canoaes, oꝛ rather great pinnesses, with thirtie men in a piece, whereof the one halfe, oꝛ most part be diuers, the rest doe open the same foꝛ the pearles: foꝛ it is not suffered that they should vse dragging, foꝛ that would bring them out of estimation, and marre the beads of them. The oysters which haue the smallest soꝛt of pearles are found in seuen oꝛ eight fathome water, but the greatest in eleuen oꝛ twelue fathom.

The Floridians haue pieces of Unicoꝛnes hoꝛnes, which they were about their necks, wherein the French men obtayned many pieces. Of those Unicoꝛnes they haue many, foꝛ that they doe affirme it to be a beast with one hoꝛne, which comming to the riuer to drinke, putteth the same into the water before shee drinketh. Of these Unicoꝛnes there is of our company, that hauing gotten the same of the French men, brought home thereof to shewe. It is therefoꝛe to be presupposed that there are moꝛe commodities, as well as that, which foꝛ want of time, and people sufficient to inhabite the same, can not yet come to light: but I trust God will reueale the same before it be long, to the great profite of them that shall take it in hand. Of beastes in this countrey besides Deere, Foxes, Hares, Polcats, Cunnies, Dwnces, Leopards, I am not able certainely to say: but it is thought that there are Lions and Tygers as well as Unicoꝛnes, Lions especially, if it bee true that is said of the enmity betweene them & the Unicoꝛnes. Foꝛ there is no beast but hath his enemy, as the Cunny the Polcat, a Sheepe the Wolfe, the Elephant the Rinoceros, and so of other beasts the like: insomuch, that whereas the one is the other can not be missing. And seeing I haue made mention of the beastes of this Countrey, it shal not be from my purpose to speake also of the venemous beastes, as Crocodiles, whereof there is great abundance, Adders of great bignesse, whereof our men killed some of a yard and a halfe long. Also I heard a miracle of one of these adders, upon the which a Faulcon seazing, the same adder did clasp her taile about her, which the French Capeaine seeing, came to the rescue of the faulcon, and tooke her slaying the adder, and this faulcon being wilde hee did reclaime her, and kept her for the space of 2. moneths, at which time for very want of meat he was faine to cast her off. On these adders the Frenchmen did feede to no little admiration of vs, and affirmed the same to be a delicate meate. And the Capeaine of the Frenchmen sawe also a Serpent with 3. heads and 4. feete, of the bignesse of a great Spaniell which for want of a harquebusse he durst not attempte to slay. Of fishe also they haue in the riuer, pike, roche, salmon, troute, and diuers other small fishes, and of great fish, some of the length of a man and longer, being of bignesse accordingly, hauing a snoute much like a swoorde of a yarde long. There be also of sea fishes which wee sawe comming along the coast flying, which are of the bignesse of a smelt, the biggest sort whereof haue foure winges, but the other haue but two: Of these we sawe comming out of Guinea, a hundreth in a companie, which being chased by the Gilt heads, otherwise called the Bonitoes, doe to auoyde them the better take their flighte out of the water, but yet are they not able to flie farre, because of the drying of their winges, which serue them not to flye but when they are moyste, and therefore when they can flye no further, fall into the water, and hauing wette their wings take a newe flighte againe. These Bonitoes be of bignesse like a carpe, and in colour like a makarell, but it is the swiftest fish in swimming that is, and followeth her praye very fiercely, not onely in the water, but also out of the water: for as the flying fish taketh her flighte, so doeth this Bonito leape after them, and taketh them sometimes aboue the water. They were some of those Bonitoes, which being galled by a fisgig did follow our ship comming out of Guinea 500. leagues. There is a sea foule also that chaseth this flying fish as wel as the Bonito: for as the flying fish taketh her flighte, so doth this foule pursue to take her, which to beholde is a greater pleasure then hauking, for both the flighes are as pleasant, and also more often then 100. times: for the foule can flie no way but one or other lighteth in her pawes, the nomber of them are so abundant. There is an innumerable pong frie of these flying fishes, which commonly keepe about the shippe, and are not so bigge as butterflies, and yet by flying doe auoyde the insatiablenesse of the Bonito. Of the bigger sort of these fishes we tooke many, which both night and day flew into the sailes of our shippe, and there was not one of them which was not worth a Bonito: for being put vpon a hooke trabling in the water, the Bonito would leape thereat, and so was taken. Also, we tooke many with a white clothe made fast to a hooke, which being tied so short in the water, that it might leape out, and in, the greedie Bonito thinking it to be a flying fish leapeth thereat, and so is deceiued: Wee tooke also Dolphins which are of very goodly colour and proportion to beholde, and no lesse delicate in taste. Foules also there be many, both vpon lande and vpon sea: But concerning them on the lande I am not able to name them, because my abode was there so short. But for the foule of the fresh riuers, these two I noted to bee the chiefe, whereof the Flemengo is one, hauing all redde feathers, and long redde legges like a Herne, a necke according to the bill redde, whereof the vpper nebbe hangeth an inche ouer the nether; And an Egipte which is all white as the swanne, with legges like to an hearneshewe, and of bignesse accordingly, but it hath in her taile feathers of so fine a plume, that it passeth the Estridge his feather. Of sea foule aboue all other not knowen in Englande, I noted the Pellicane, which is saigned to be the louingest birde that is: which rather then her yong should want, will spare her heart blood out of her bellie, but for all this loouingnesse shee is very deformed to beholde, for shee is of colour russet, notwithstanding in Guinea I haue seene of them as white as a swanne, hauing legges like the same, and a body like a Herne, with a long necke, and a thicke long beake, from the nether sawe whereof downe to the breast passeth a skinne of such a bignesse, as is able to receiue a fishe as bigge as ones thigh, and this her bigge thoate and long bill, doeth make her seeme so ougly.

Here I haue declared the estate of Florida, and the commodities therein to this day knowen, which although it may seeme vnto some, by the meanes that the plentie of Golde and Siluer is not so abundant, as in other places, that the cost bestowed vpon the same, will not bee able to yeelde the charges: Yet am I of the opinion, that by that which I haue seene in other Ilandes of the Indians, where such increase of cattell hath bene that of twelue head of beastes in 25. yeeres, they be in the dayes of them raise 1000. pound profite yeerely, that the increase of cattell onely would raise profite sufficient for the same: For wee may consider, if so small a portion did raise so much gaines in such short time, What would a greater doe in many yeeres?

Meanes to reape a sufficient profite in Florida and Virginia.

And surely I may this affirme, that the ground of the Indians for the breede of cattell, is not in any point to be compared to this of Florida, which all the yeere long is so greene, as any time in the Sommer with vs: which surely is not to be marueiled at, seeing the Countrey standeth in so warrie a climate: for once a day without faile they haue a showre of raine. Which by meanes of the Countrey it selfe, which is drie, and more feruent hot then ours, doeth make all things to flourish therein: and because there is not the thing wee all seeke for, being rather desirous of present gaines, I do therefore affirme the attempt therof to be more requisite for a prince, who is of power able to goe thorow with the same, rather then for any subiect.

From thence we departed the 28. of July, vpon our voyage homewards, hauing there al things as might be most conuenient for our purpose: and tooke leaue of the Frenchmen that there still remained, who with diligence determined to make great speede after, as they could. Thus by meanes of contrary windes oftentimes, we prolonged our voyage in such manner that victuals scanted with vs, so that wee were diuers (or rather the most part) in despaire of euer comming home, had not God of his goodnesse better prouided for vs, then our deseruing. In which state of great miserie, we were prouoked to call vpon him by feruent prayer, which mooued him to heare vs, so that wee had a prosperous winde, which did set vs so farre shotte, as to be vpon the banke of Newfound land, on S. Bartlemewes eue, & sounded thereupon finding ground, at 130. fathoms, being that day somewhat becalmed, and tooke a great number of fresh codde fish, which greatly relieued vs: and very glad thereof, the next day departing, by lingring little gales for the space of foure or fiue dayes, at the which we sawe a couple of French ships, and had so much fish as would serue vs plentifully for all the rest of the way, the Captaine paying for the same both golde and siluer, to the iust value thereof, vnto the chiefe owners of the saide shippes, which they not looking for any thing at all, were glad in themselues to meete with such good intertainement at sea, as they had at our handes. After which departure from them, with a good large winde the 20. of September we came to Padstow in Cornewall God be thanked, in safetie, with the losse of 20. persons in all the voyage, and profitable to the venturers of the saide voyage, as also to the whole Realme, in bringing home both golde, siluer, pearles and other iewels great store. His name therefore be praised for euermore. Amen.

The Register and true accompts of all herein expressed, hath bene approoued by mee Iohn Sparke the yonger, who went vpon the same voyage, and wrote the same.

The arriuall and courtesie of M. Hawkins to the distressed Frenchmen in Florida, is elsewhere also recorded, both in French, and English, in the historie of Laudonier, written by himselfe, and printed in Paris, Anno 1586. And translated into English by me Richard Hakluyt, Anno 1587. and published as followeth.

Laudoniers and his companie.

AS eche of vs were much tormented in minde with diuers cogitations, the thirde of August I descried foure sailes in the Sea, as I walked vpon a little hill, whereof I was exceeding well apayde: I sent immediatly one of them which were with me, to aduertise those of the fort thereof, which were so glad of those newes, that one would haue thought them to be out of their wits, to see them laugh and leape for ioy. After these shippes had cast ancre, we descried that they sent off their shippe boates to land: whereupon I caused one of mine to be armed with diligence to sende to meete them, and to knowe who they were.

In

In the meane while fearing leaſt they were Spaniards, I ſet my ſouldiers in order and readineſſe, attending the returne of Captaine Vaſſeur, and my lieutenant, which were gone to meete them, who brought me word that they were Englishmen. And in trueth they had in their companie one whoſe name was Martine Attinas of Diepe, which at that time was in their ſeruice: which on the behalfe of M. Iohn Haukins their Generall came to requeſt me that I would ſuffer them to take freſh water, whereof they ſtoode in great neede, ſignifying vnto me that they had bene aboue 15. dayes on the coaſt to get ſome. He brought vnto me from the Generall 2. flagons of wine, & bread made of wheate, which greatly refreſhed mee, for aſmuch as for 7. moneths ſpace, I neuer taſted a drop of wine: neuertheleſſe it was all deuided among ỳ greateſt part of my ſouldiers: this Martin Attinas had guided ỳ Engliſhmen to our coaſt, wherwith he was acquainted. For in ỳ yere 1562. he came thither with me, & therfore the General ſent him to me. Therfore after I had granted his requeſt, he ſignified the ſame vnto ỳ general, which the next day following cauſed one of his ſmall ſhips to enter into the riuer, & came to ſee me in a great ſhipboat, accompanied wᵗ gentlemē honorably apparelled, yet vnarmed: he ſent for great ſtore of bread & wine to diſtribute thereof to euery one. On my part I made him the beſt cheare I could poſſibly, & cauſed certaine ſheepe & poultry to be killed, which vnto this preſent I had cauſed carefully to be preſerued, hoping to ſtore ỳ cõtrey withal. Now 3. dayes paſſed while the Engliſh general remained wᵗ me, during which time the Indians came in frõ all parts to ſee me, & aſked me whether he were my brother: I told them he was ſo, & ſignified vnto them, that he was come to ſee me, & ayde me with ſo great ſtore of victuals, that frõ hence forward I ſhould haue no need to take any thing of them. The bruit hereof incontinently was ſpred ouer all ỳ countrie, in ſuch ſort, as Ambaſſadors came vnto me frõ al parts, which on the behalfe of the kings their maſters, deſired to make alliance wᵗ me, & euen they which before ſought to make warre againſt me, came to offer their ſeruice & friendſhip vnto me: whereupon I receiued them, & gratified them with certaine preſents. The general immediatly vnderſtood the deſire and vrgent occaſion which I had to returne into France; whereupon he offred to tranſport me, & al my company home: whereunto notwithſtanding I would not agree, being in doubt vpon what occaſion he made ſo large an offer. For I knew not how the caſe ſtood betwixt the French & the Engliſh: and although he promiſed me on his faith to put me on land in France, before he would touch in England, yet I ſtood in doubt leaſt he would attempt ſomewhat in Florida in the name of his Miſtreſſe: wherefore I flatly refuſed his offer. Whereupon there roſe a great mutinie among my ſouldiers, which ſaid that I ſought to deſtroy them al, And that the Bzigandine whereof I ſpake before, was not ſufficient to tranſport them, conſidering the ſeaſon of the yeere, wherein wee were. The bruite and mutinie increaſed more and more: for after that the generall was returned to his ſhips, he told certaine gentlemen and ſouldiers which went to ſee him, partly to make good cheere with him, he declared and ſaid vnto them, that he greatly doubted, that hardly we ſhould be able to paſſe ſafely in thoſe veſſels which we had, and that in caſe we ſhould enterpriſe the ſame, we ſhould no doubt be in great ieopardie: Notwithſtanding, if I were ſo cõtented, he would tranſport part of my men in his ſhips, and that he would leaue me a ſmall ſhip to tranſport the reſt. The ſouldiers were no ſooner come home, but they ſignified the offer vnto their companions, which incontinently conſented together, that in caſe I would not accept the ſame, they would imbarke themſelues with him, and forſake me, ſo that he would receiue them according to his promiſe. They therefore aſſembled themſelues together, and came to ſeeke me in my chamber, and ſignified vnto me their intention, Whereunto I promiſed to anſwere them in one houre after. In which meane ſpace I gathered together the principall members of my companie, which, after that I had broken the matter with them, anſwered mee all with one voyce, that I ought not to refuſe his offer, nor contemne the occaſion which preſented it ſelfe. And that they could not thinke euill of it in France, if, being forſaken as we were, wee ayded our ſelues with ſuch meanes, as God hath ſent to vs. After ſundrie debatings of this matter, in concluſion I gaue my aduiſe that wee ought to deliuer him the price of the ſhippe which hee was to leaue vs, and that for my part I was content to giue him the beſt of my ſtuffe, and the ſiluer which I had gathered in the Countrey.

Siluer in Florida.

Whereupon notwithſtanding it was determined, that I ſhould keepe the ſiluer, for feare leaſt the Queene of Englande ſeeing the ſame, ſhoulde the rather bee incouraged to ſet footing there, as before ſhe had deſired: That it was farre better to carry it into Fraunce, to giue incouragement to our Princes not to leaue off ſuch an enterpriſe of ſo great importance for our Common wealth. And that ſeeing wee were reſolued to depart, it was farre better to giue him our Artillerie, which otherwiſe wee ſhould be conſtrained to leaue behinde vs, or to hide in the ground, by reaſon of the weakeneſſe of our men, being not able to imbarke the ſame. This point being thus concluded, and reſolued on, I went (my ſelfe) vnto the Engliſh Generall, accompanied with my lieuetenant, and Captaine Vasseur, Captaine Verdier, and Trenchant the pilot, and my seriant, al men of experience in such affaires, & knowing sufficiently how to driue such a bargaine. We therefore tooke a view of the ship, which the Generall would sell, whom we drew to such reason, that he was content to stand vnto mine owne mens iudgement, who esteemed it to bee worth 700. crownes, whereof we agreed very friendly. Wherefore I deliuered him in earnest of the summe, 2. bastards, 2. minions, one thousand of yron, & one thousand of pouder: this bargaine thus made, he considered the necessitie wherein we were, having for al our sustenance but mil & water: whereupon being mooued with pitie, he offered to relieue me with 20. barrels of meale, 6. pipes of beanes, one hogshead of salt, and 100. of waxe to make candles. Moreouer, for somuch as he saw my souldiers goe barefoote, he offered me besides 50. paire of shoes, which I accepted, and agreed of a price with him, and gaue him a bill of my hand for the same, for which vntil this present I am indebted to him. He did more then this, for particularly he bestowed vpon my selfe a great iarre of oyle, a iarre of vineger, a barrel of oliues, and a great quantitie of rise, and a barrel of white bisket: besides he gaue diuers presents to the principall officers of my company, according to their qualities. So that I may say, that we receiued as many courtesies of the General, as it was possible to receiue of any man liuing. Wherein doubtelesse, he hath wonne the reputation of a good & charitable man, deseruing to be esteemed as much of vs al, as if he had saued all our liues. Incontinent after his departure, I spared no paines to hasten my men, to make biscuits of the meale which he had left me, and to hoope my caske to take in water needefull for the voyage.

Thus farre Laudoniere, concerning M. Haukins and his courtesie.

A relation of the commodities of Noua Hispania, and the maners of the inhabitants, written by Henry Hawkes mar- chant, which liued 5. yeeres in the said Countrey, and drewe the same at the request of M. Richard Hakluyt Esquire of Eiton in the Countie of Hereford, 1572.

S. Iohn de Vllua.

Saint Iohn de Vllua, is an Iland not high aboue the water, whereas now the Spaniards, vpon M. Iohn Hawkins being there, are in making a strong fort. In this place all the shippes that come out of Spaine with goods for their parts do vnlade. For they haue none other port so good as this is. The comming into this place hath 3. chanels, and the best of all is the Northermost, which goeth by the maine land: and on euery side of the chanels, there are many small rockes as bigge as a small barrell: they will make men stand in doubt of them, but there is no feare of them. There is another Iland thereby called the Iland of sacrifices, whereas the Spaniards did in times past vnlade their goods. And for that they say there are vpon it spirits or deuils, it is not frequented as it hath bene. In these places the North winde hath so great dominion, that oftentimes it destroyeth many shippes and barkes. This place is giuen to great sicknesse. Their Ilands stand in 18. degrees and a halfe, and about the same is great plentie of fish.

Spirits.

Vera Cruz.

Fiue leagues from S. Iohn de Vllua is a faire riuer: it lieth North west from the porte, and goeth to a little towne of the Spaniards called Vera Cruz, and with small vessels or barkes, which they call Fragates, they carry all their marchandise which commeth out of Spaine, to the said towne: and in like maner bring all the golde, siluer, Cochonelio, hides, and all other things that the shippes carry into Spaine vnto them. And the goods being in Vera Cruz, they carry it to Mexico, and to Pueblo del los Angelos, Sacatecas, and Saint Martin, and diuers other places so farre within the Countrey, that some of them are 700. miles off, and some more and some lesse, all vpon horses, mules, and in waynes drawne with oxen, and in carres drawne with mules. In this towne of Vera Cruz within these 20. yeres, when women were brought to bedde, the children newe borne incontinently died: which is not so now in these dayes, God be thanked.

Muskito.

This towne is inclined to many kinde of diseases by reason of the great heate, and a certaine gnat or flie which they call a Muskito, & biteth both men and women in their sleepe, and as soone as they are bitten, incontinently the flesh swelleth as though they had bene bitten with some venemous worme. And this Muskito or gnat doeth most follow such as are newly come into the Countrey: Many there are that die of this annoyance.

This towne is situated vpon the riuer aforesaide, and compassed with woods of diuers maners and sortes, and many fruits, as Oranges and lemmons, Guiaues, and diuers others, and birds in them, them, popiniayes both ſmall and great, and ſome of them as bigge as a rauen, and their tailes as long as the taile of a Feſant. There are alſo many other kinde of birdes of purple couller, and ſmall monkies marueilous proper. Popiniayes. Monkies.

This hotte or ſicke Countrey continueth 45. miles towardes the Citie of Mexico: and the 45. miles being paſſed, then there is a temperate Countrey and full of tillage: but they water all their corne with riuers which they turne in vpon it. And they gather their wheate twiſe a yeere. And if they ſhould not water the ground where as their corne is ſowne, the Countrey is ſo hotte it would burne all. Wheate twiſe in a yeere.

Before you come to Mexico, there is a great towne called Tlaxcalla, which hath in it aboue 16000. houſeholds. All the inhabitants thereof are free by the kings of Spaine: for theſe were the occaſion that Mexico was wonne in ſo ſhort time, and with ſo little loſſe of men. Wherefore they are all Gentlemen and pay no tribute to the king. In this towne is all the Cochonilio growing. Tlaxcalla a free Citie.

Mexico is a great Citie: it hath more then fiftie thouſande houſeholds, whereof there are not paſt fiue or ſixe thouſande houſes of Spaniards, all the other are the people of the Countrey, which liue vnder the Spaniards lawes. There are in this Citie ſtately buildings and many Monaſteries of friers and nonnes which the Spaniards haue made. And the building of the Indians is ſomewhat beautifull outwardly, and within full of ſmall chambers, with very ſmall windoes, which is not ſo comely as the building of the Spaniards. This Citie ſtandeth in the middeſt of a great lake, and the water goeth through all or the moſt part of the ſtreetes, and there come ſmall boates, which they call Canoas, and in them they bring all things neceſſary, as wood and coales, and graſſe for their horſes, ſtones and lime to builde, and corne. Mexico.

This Citie is ſubiect to many earthquakes, which oftentimes caſt downe houſes, and kill people. This Citie is very well prouided of water to drinke, and with al maner of victuals, as fruits, fleſh and fiſh, bread, hennes and capons, Guinie cocks and hennes, and all other foule. There are in this Citie euery weeke three faires or marktes, which are frequented with many people as well Spaniards as the people of the Countrey. There are in theſe faires or markets all maner of things that may bee inuented to ſell, and in eſpeciall things of the Countrey. The one of theſe faires is vpon the Monday, which is called S. Hypolitos faire, and S. Iames his faire is vpon the Thurſday, and vpon Saturday is S. Iohns faire. In this Citie is alwayes the kings Gouernour or Viceroy, and there are kept the Termes and Parliaments. And although there bee other places of Iuſtice, yet this is aboue all; ſo that all men may appeale vnto this place, and may not appeale from this Citie, but onely into Spaine before the King: and it muſt be for a certaine ſumme; And if it be vnder that ſumme, then there is no appellation from them. Many riuers fall into this lake which the Citie ſtandeth in: but there was neuer any place founde whither it goeth out.

The Indians knowe a way to drowne the Citie, and within theſe 3. yeeres they would haue practiſed the ſame: but they which ſhoulde haue bene the doers of it were hanged, and euer ſince the Citie hath bene well watched both day and night, for feare leaſt at ſometime they might be detried: for the Indians loue not the Spaniards. Round about the towne there are very many gardens and Orchards of the fruits of the Countrey marueilous faire, where the people haue great recreation. The men of this Citie are marueilous vicious, and in like maner the women are diſhoneſt of their bodies, more then they are in other Cities or townes in this Countrey. A way to drowne Mexico.

There are neere about this Citie of Mexico many riuers and ſtanding waters, which haue in them a monſtrous kinde of fiſhe which is marueilous rauening, and a great deuourer of men and cattell. He is wont to ſleepe vpon the drie land many times: and if there come in the meane time any man or beaſt and wake or diſquiet him, he ſpeedeth well if he get from him. Hee is like vnto a ſerpent ſauing that he doeth not flye, neither hath he wings. Crocodiles.

There is Weſt out of Mexico a port towne which is on the Southſea, called Puerto de Nauidad, whereas there are ſhippes which they haue ordinarily for the Nauigation of China, which they haue newly found. This port is threeſcore leagues from Mexico. Nauigation to China from port de Nauidad.

There is another porte towne which is called Culluacan on the South Sea which lyeth Weſt and by North out of Mexico, and is 150. leagues from the ſame. And there the Spaniards made two ſhips to goe ſeeke the ſtreight or gulfe, which as they ſay, is betweene the Newfoundland and Groenland, and they call it the Engliſhmens ſtraite, which as yet was neuer fully found. They ſay, that Straight lieth not farre from the maine land of China, which the Spaniards accompt to be marueilous rich. The North-weſt ſtraight.

Towarde the North from Mexico, there are great ſtore of ſiluer mynes. There is greater quan-quantitie of siluer founde in these mines towarde the North, then there is in any other parte: and as the most men of experience said alwayes, they finde the richer mines the more Northerly. These mines are commonly vpon great hilles and stonie ground, maruailous hard to be laboured and wrought.

Painting earth. Out of some of the mines, the Indians finde a certaine kinde of earth of diuers coulers, wherewith they paint themselues in times of their daunces, and other pastimes which they vse.

Golde mines. In this Countrey of Noua Hispania, there are also mines of gold, although the golde be commonly found in riuers, or very neere vnto riuers. And nowe in these dayes there is not so much golde found as there hath bene heretofore.

There are many great riuers and great store of fishe in them, not like vnto our kindes of fish. And there are marueilous great woods, and as faire trees as may bee seene of diuers sortes, and especially firre trees that may maste any shippe that goeth vpon the sea, okes and pineapples, and another tree which they call a Miskitoth beareth a fruite like vnto a peasecod marueilous sweete, which the wilde people gather and keepe it all the yeere, and eate it in steede of bread.

The Spaniards haue notice of seuen Cities which olde men of the Indians shewe them should lie towards the Northwest from Mexico. They haue vsed and vse dayly much diligence in the seeking them, but they cannot finde any one of them. They say that the witchcraft of the Indians is such, that when they come by these townes they cast a misse vpon them, so that they can not see them.

7. Cities by witchcraft not found of the seekers.

They haue vnderstanding of another Citie which they call Copalla, and in like maner, at my being in the Countrey, they haue vsed much labour and diligence in the seeking of it: they haue found the lake on which it should stande, and a Canoa, the head whereof was wrought with copper curiously, and coulde not finde nor see any man nor the towne, which to their vnderstanding should stand on the same water or very neere the same.

The beastes of Noua Hispania. There is a great nomber of beastes or kine in the Countrey of Cibola, which were neuer brought thither by the Spaniards, but breed naturally in the Countrey. They are like vnto our oxen, sauing that they haue long haire like a Lion, and short hornes, and they haue vpon their shoulders a bunche like a Camell, which is hier then the rest of their body. They are marueilous wilde and swift in running. They call them the beastes or kine of Cibola.

Cibola abandoned. This Cibola is a Citie which the Spaniards founde nowe of late, without any people in the same, goodly buildings, faire chimneis, windoes made of stone and timber excellently wrought, faire welles with wheeles to drawe their water, and a place where they had buried their dead people, with many faire stones vpon the graues. And the Captaine woulde not suffer his souldiers to breake vp any part of these graues, saying, hee would come another time to doe it.

They asked certaine people which they mette, whither the people of this Citie were gone: And they made answere, they were gone downe a riuer which was thereby very great, and there had builded a Citie which was more for their commoditie.

This Captaine lacking things necessarie for himselfe and his men, was faine to returne backe againe without finding any treasure according to his expectation: neither founde they but fewe people, although they founde beaten wayes, which had bene much haunted and frequented. The Captaine at his comming backe againe, had a great checke of the gouernour, because he had not gone forwards and seene the ende of that riuer.

Water congealed to salt. They haue in the Countrey farre from the seaside, standing waters which are salt: And in the moneths of Aprill and May, the water of them congealeth into salt, which salt is all taken for the kings vse and profite.

Dogs of India described. Their dogges are all crooked backt as many as are of the Countrey breede, and cannot runne fast: their faces are like the face of a pigge or an hogge, with sharpe noses.

Cacao a fruit currant as money. In a certaine prouince which is called Guatimala, and Sacanosco, there is growing great store of Cacao; which is a berrie like vnto an Almond: It is the best Marchandise that is in all the Indies. The Indians make drinke of it, and in like maner meate to eate. It goeth currantly for money in any market or faire, and may buy any flesh, fish, bread or cheese or other things.

Fruites. There are many kinde of fruites of the Countrey which are very good, as Plantans, Sapotes, Guiaues, Pinas, Aluacatas, Tunas, Mamios, Lymons, Orenges, Walnuts, very small and hard, and little meate in them, grapes which the Spaniards brought into the Countrey, and also wilde grapes, which are of the Countrey, and are very small, quinses, peches, figges, and but few apples, and very small, and no peares: but there are melons and Calabasses.

There is much honie both of bees, and also of a kind of tree which they cal Maguez. This hony of of Maguez is not so sweete as the other hony is, but it is better to be eaten onely with bread, then the other is: and the tree serueth for many things, as the leaues make threed to sowe any kinde of bags, and are good to couer or thatch houses, and for diuers other things.

They haue in diuers places of the Countrey many hot springs of water. As aboue all other, I haue seene one in the prouince of Mechuacan. In a plaine field without any mountaine, there is a spring which hath much water, and it is so hot, that if a whole quarter of beefe bee cast into it, within one halfe howre, it will be as well sodden, as it will be ouer a fire in halfe a daye. I haue seene halfe a Sheepe cast in, and immediatly it hath beene sodden, and I haue eaten parte of it. Hot springs.

There are many Hares and some Conies. There are no Partridges, but aboundance of Quayles. Hares and conies.

They haue great store of fishe in the South Sea, and many Oysters, and very great. The people doe open the Oysters, and take out the meate of them, and dry it, as they doe any other kind of fishe, and keepe them all the yeere: and when the times serue, they sende them abroad into the Countrey, to sell as all other fishe. They haue no Salmon, nor Trowte, nor Pele, nor Carpe, Teach, nor Pike, in all the Countrey. Sea fishe.

There are in the Countrey mightie high mountaines, and hils, and snowe vpon them. They commonly burne, and twise euery day they cast out much smoke, and ashes, at certaine open places, which are in the toppes of them. Mountaines.

There is among the wild people much Manna. I haue gathered of the same, and haue eaten it, and it is good. For the Apothecaries sende their seruants at certain times, to gather of the same, for purgations, and other vses. Manna.

There are in the mountaines many wild hogs, which all men may kill, and Lyons and Tygers, which Tygers doe much harme to men that trauell in the wildernes.

In this Countrey, not long since, there were two poore men that found a meruelous rich myne, and when these men went to make a register of the same, according to the Lawe and custome, before the Kings officers, they thought this myne not meete for such men as they were, and violently tooke the said myne for the King, and gaue no part thereof vnto the two poore men. And within certaine daies the Kings officers reloyned thither to labour in the myne, and they found two great mightie hils were come together, so they founde no place to worke in. And in the time, while I was among them, which was fiue yeeres, there was a poore sheepheard, who keping of his sheepe, happened to finde a Well of quicke siluer, and he went in like manner to manifest the same, as the custome and manner is. The Kings officers dealt in like order, as they did with the two poore men that found the rich myne, taking it quite from the sheepheard: but when they went to fetch home the quicke siluer, or part therof, they could neuer finde it againe. So these things haue bene declared vnto the King, who hath giuen commandement, that nothing being found in the fieldes, as mynes, and such like, shall be taken away from any man. And many other things haue bene done in this Countrey, which men might count for great meruels. Mines discouered, not found againe.

There is great abundance of suger here, and they make diuers conserues, and very good, & send them into Peru, whereas they sell them meruelous well, because they make none in those parts. Suger and conserues.

The people of the Countrey, are of a good stature, tawnie coloured, broad faced, flat nosed, and giuen much to drinke both wine of Spaine, & also a certain kind of wine, which they make w hony of Maguez, and rootes, and other things which they vse to put into the same. They call the same wine Pulco. They are soone drunke, and giuen to much beastlines, and void of all goodnes. In their drunkennes they vse and commit sodomie, and with their mothers and daughters they haue their pleasures and pastimes. Whereuppon they are defended from the drinking of wines, vpon paines of money, as well he that selleth the wines, as the Indian that drinketh the same. And if this commandement were not, all the wine in Spaine, and in France, were not sufficient for the West Indias onely. Description of the Indians person and manners.

They are of much simplicitie, and great cowards, void of all valour, and are great Witches. They vse diuers times to talke with the Deuill, to whome they doe certaine sacrifices and oblations: many times they haue bene taken with the same, and I haue seene them most cruelly punished for that offence.

The people are giuen to learne all maner of occupations and sciences, which for the most part they learned since the comming of the Spaniards: I say all manner of artes. They are very artificiall in making of Images, with feathers, or the proportion or figure of any man, in all kinde of maner as he is. The finenes and excellencie of this is wonderfull, that a barbarous people as they are, should giue themselues to so fine an arte as this is. They are Goldsmiths, Blacksmiths, and

Copper-

Copper Smiths, Carpenters, Masons, Shoemakers, Tailers, Sadlers, Imbroderers, and of all other kind of sciences: and they will, and doe worke so good cheape, that poore yong men that go out of Spaine, to get their liuing, are not set on worke. Which is the occasion there are many idle people in the Countrey. For the Indian will liue all the weeke with lesse then one groate, which the Spaniard cannot doe, nor any man else.

The Indians ignorance from whence they came.

They say, that they came of the linage of an olde man, which came thither in a boate of wood, which they call a Canoa. But they cannot tell whether it were before the flood, or after, neither can they giue any reason of the flood, nor from whence they came. And when the Spaniards came first among them, they did certaine sacrifice to an Image made in stone, of their owne invention. The stone was set vpon a great hill, which they made of bricks of earth, they call it their Cowa. And certaine daies in the yeere, they did sacrifice certaine olde men, and yong children, and onely beleeued in the Sunne and the Moone, saying, that from them they had all things that were needfull for them. They haue in these parts great store of cotton wooll, with which they make a maner of linnen cloth, which the Indians weare, both men and women, and it serueth for shirts & smocks and all other kind of garments, which they weare vpon their bodies: and the Spaniards vse it to all such purposes, especially such as cannot buy other. And if it were not for this kind of cloth, all manner of cloth that goeth out of Spaine, I say, linnen cloth would be sold out of all measure.

The Sunne and Moone honored.

The wild Indians.

The wild people goe naked, without any thing vpon them. The women weare the skinne of a Deere, before their priuities, and nothing else vpon all their bodies. They haue no care for any thing but only from day to day for that which they haue neede to eate. They are bigge men, and likewise the women. They shoote in bowes, which they make of a cherrie tree, and their arrowes are of a Cane, with a sharpe flint stone in the end of the same: they will pierce any coate of maile, and they kill Deere, and Cranes, and wild Geese, Duckes, and other fowle, and Wormes, and Snakes, and diuers other vermin, which they eate. They liue very long, for I haue seene men that haue bene 100. yeeres of age. They haue but very litle haire in their face, nor on their bodies.

Friers in reuerence.

The Indians haue the Friers in great reuerence. The occasion is, that by them, and by their meanes, they are free, & out of bondage, which was so ordained by Charles the Emperour, which is the occasion, that now there is not so much gold and siluer comming into Europe, as there was while the Indians were slaues. For when they were in bondage, they could not chuse but doe their taske euery daye, and bring their Masters so much mettall out of their Mynes. But now they must be well paied, and much entreated to haue them worke. So it hath bene, and is a great hinderance to the owners of the Mynes, and to the Kings quinto or custome.

Copper mines

There are many Mynes of Copper, in great quantitie, whereof they spend in the Countrey, as much as serueth their turnes. There is some gold in it, but not so much as will pay the costes of the fining. The quantitie of it is such, and the Mynes are so farre from the sea, that it will not be worth the fraight to carry it into Spaine. On the other side, the Kings officers will giue no licence to make Ordinance thereof: whereupon the Mynes lie vnlaboured, and of no valuation.

There is much lead in the Countrey, so that with it they couer Churches, and other religious houses: wherefore they shal not neede any of our lead, as they haue had neede thereof in times past.

The pompe of owners of Mynes.

The pompe and liberalitie of the owners of the Mynes, is meruelous to behold. The apparell both of them, and of their wiues, is more to be compared to the apparell of Noble persons, then otherwise. If their wiues goe out of their houses, as vnto the Church, or any other place, they goe out with great Maiestie, and with as many men and maides, as though she were the wife of some Noble man. I will assure you, I haue seene a Myners wife goe to the Church, with 100. men, and 20. Gentlewomen, and maides. They keepe open house, who will, may come to eate their meate. They call men with a bell to come to dinner and supper. They are Princes in keeping of their houses, and bountifull in all manner of things.

A good owner of Mynes must haue at the least 100. slaues, to carrye, and to stampe his mettals: he must haue many Mules, and men to keepe the Mynes: he must haue mils to stampe his mettals: he must haue many waines, and Oxen to bring home wood to fine the ore: he must haue much quicksiluer, and a meruelous quantitie of salt brine, for the mettals, and he must be at many other charges. And as for this charge of quicksiluer, it is a newe inuention, which they finde more profitable, then to fine their ore with lead. Howbeit the same is very costly. For there is neuer a hundreth of quicksiluer, but costeth at the least 60. pounds sterling. And the Mynes fall dayly in decay, and of lesse value: and the occasion is, the fewe Indians that men haue to labour their Mynes.

The plentie of cattell.

There is in new Spaine, a meruelous increase of cattel, which daily doth increase, and they are of a greater growth then ours are. You may haue a great Oxeere that hath an hundred weight of tallowe tallowe in his bellie for 16. ſhillings, and ſome one man hath 20. thouſand head of cattell of his owne. They ſel the hides vnto the Merchants, who lade into Spaine as many as may be wel ſpared. They ſpend many in the Countrey in ſhoes and bootes, and in the mynes: and as the Countrey is great, ſo is the increaſe of the cattell wonderfull. In the Iſland of Santo Domingo, they commonly kil the beaſts for their hides and tallowe, and the fowles eate the carkaſes: and ſo they doe in Cuba, and Porto Ricco, whereas there is much ſuger, and Cana fiſtula, which daily they ſend into Spaine. They haue great increaſe of ſheepe in like maner, and daily doe intende to increaſe them. They haue much wool, and as good as the wooll of Spaine. They make cloth as much as ſerueth the Countrey, for the common people, and ſend much cloth into Peru. I haue ſeene cloth made in the Citie of Mexico, which hath bene ſold for ten pezos a vare, which is almoſt 4. pounds Engliſh, and the vare is leſſe then our yard. They haue Dad growing in the Countrey, and Alam, and Bzaſill, and diuers other things to dye withall, ſo that they make all colours. In Peru they make no cloth, but hereafter our cloth will be little ſet by in theſe partes, vnleſſe it be ſome fine cloth. The wools are commonly 4. ſhillings euery roue, which is 25. pounds: and in ſome places of the Countrey that are farre from the places whereas they make cloth, it is worth nothing, and doth ſerue but onely to make beds for men to lye on.

Sheepe, wool. Cloth. Dad. Alam. Bzaſill.

They make hats, as many as doe ſerue the Countrey, very fine and good, and ſell them better cheape, then they can be brought out of Spaine, and in like manner ſend them into Peru.

Many people are ſet on worke, both in the one, and in the other: they ſpin their wooll as we do, and in ſteede of oile, they haue hogs greaſe: they twiſt not their threed ſo much as we doe, neither worke ſo fine a threed. They make no kerſies, but they make much cloth, which is courſe, and ſell it for leſſe then 12. pence the vare. It is called Bayall.

They haue much ſilke, and make all maner of ſortes thereof, as Taffataes, Sattins, Veluets of all colours, and they are as good as the ſilkes of Spaine, ſauing that the colours are not ſo perfect: but the blackes are better then the blackes that come out of Spaine.

They haue many horſes, and mares, and mules, which the Spaniards brought thither. They haue as good Iennets, as any are in Spaine, and better cheape then they be in Spaine. And with their Mules they carry all their goods from place to place.

Horſes. Mules. Iennets.

There is raine vſually in this Countrey, from the moneth of May, to the midſt of October, euery day, which time they call their winter, by reaſon of the ſaid waters. And if it were not for the waters which fal in theſe hot ſeaſons, their Maiz, which is the greateſt part of their ſuſtenance, would be deſtroied. This Maiz is the greateſt maintenance which the Indian hath, and alſo all the common people of the Spaniards. And their horſes and mules which labour, cannot be without the ſame. This graine is ſubſtantiall, and increaſeth much blood. If the Miners ſhoulde bee without it, they could not labour their Mines: for all their ſeruants eate none other bread, but only of this Maiz, and it is made in cakes, as they make oaten cakes, in ſome places of England.

Maiz graine for man and beaſt.

The Indians pay tribute, being of the age of 20. yeeres, 4. ſhillings of money, and an hanege of Maiz, which is worth 4. ſhillings more, vnto the King euery yeere. This is paid in all Noua Hiſpania, of as many as be of the age of 20. yeeres, ſauing the citie of Tlaſcalla, which was made free, becauſe the Citizens thereof were the occaſion that Cortes tooke Mexico in ſo litle a time. And although at the firſt, they were freed from payment of tribute, yet the Spaniards now begin to claime vpon them, and make them to till a great field of Maiz, at their owne coſtes euery yeere for the King, which is as beneficiall vnto him, and as great coſt vnto them, as though they paid their tribute, as the others doe.

The ſhips which goe out of Spaine with goods from Peru, goe to Nombre de dios, and there diſcharge the ſaid goods: and from thence they be carried ouer the necke of a lande, vnto a porte towne, in the ſouth ſea, called Panama, which is 17. leagues diſtant from Nombre de dios. And there they doe ſhip their goods againe, and ſo from thence goe to Peru. They are in going thither 3. moneths, and they come backe againe in 20. daies. They haue ſeldome foule weather, and few ſhips are loſt in the ſouth ſea. Foure yeeres paſt, to wit, 1568. there was a ſhip made out of Peru, to ſeeke Salomons Iſlands, and they came ſomewhat to the ſouth of the Equinoctiall, and founde an Iſland with many blacke people, in ſuch number, that the Spaniards durſt not goe on land among them. And becauſe they had bene long vppon the voyage, their people were very weake, and ſo went not on land, to know what commoditie was vpon it. And for want of victuals, they arriued in Noua Hiſpania, in a porte called Porte de Nauidad, and thence returned backe againe vnto Peru, whereas they were euill entreated, becauſe they had not knowen more of the ſame Iſland.

Salomons Iſlands ſought, and found in the South ſea 1568.

They haue in this porte of Nauidad, ordinarily their ſhips, which goe to the Iſlands of China, which are certain Iſlands, which they haue found within theſe 7. yeeres. They haue brought from thence thence gold, and much Cinamon, and dishes of earth, and cups of the same, so fine, that euery man that may haue a peece of them, will giue the weight of siluer for it. There was a marriner that brought a pearle, as big as a doues egge, from thence, & a stone, for which the Viceroy would haue giuen 3000. duckets. Many things they bring from thence, most excellent. There are many of these Ilands, & the Spaniards haue not many of them as yet: "for the Portingals disturbe them much, & combate with them euery day, saying, it is part of their conquest, & to the maine land they cannot come at any hand. There are goodly people in them, & they are great marriners, richly apparelled in cloth of gold, & siluer, & silke of all sorts, & goe apparelled after the maner of ꝑ Turkes. This report make such as come from thence. The men of the maine lande, haue certaine traffike with some of these Ilanders, & come thither in a kind of ships, which they haue with one saile, and bring of such merchandize as they haue neede of. And of these things there haue bene brought into Newe Spaine both cloth of gold, & siluer, & diuers maners of silkes, & workes of gold and siluer, maruelous to be seene. So by their saying, there is not such a Countrey in the whole world. The maine land is from the Ilands 150. leagues: and the Ilands are not farre from the Moluccas northwards. And the people of those Ilands, which the Spaniards haue, say, that if they would bring their wiues & children, that then they should haue among them what they would haue. So there goe women daily, & the king paieth all the charges of the maried men & their wiues, that go to those Ilands. And there is no doubt, but the trade will be meruelous rich in time to come.

"This is to be vnderstood of the time when this discourse was written. Anno 1572.

China ships with one saile.

It was my fortune to be in companie with one Diego Gutieres, who was the first Pilot that euer went to that Countrey of the Phillipinaes. He maketh report of many strange things in that Countrey, aswel riches, as others, and saith, if there be any Paradise vpon earth, it is in that countrey: and addeth, that sitting vnder a tree, you shall haue such sweete smels, with such great content and pleasure, that you shall remember nothing, neither wife, nor children, nor haue any kinde of appetite to eate or drinke, the odoriferous smels will be so sweete. This man hath good liuings in Noua Hispania, notwithstanding he will returne thither, with his wife and children, and as for treasure, there is aboundance, as he maketh mention. In this Countrey of Noua Hispania, there are many Bucks and Does, but they haue not so long hornes as they haue here in England. The Spaniards kill them with handguns, and with grayhounds, and the Indians kill them with their bowes, and arrowes, and with the skins they make chamoyce, such as we in England make doublets and hose of, as good as the skins that are wrought in Flanders, and likewise they make maruelous good Spanish leather of them. There is a bird, which is like vnto a Rauen, but he hath some of his feathers white: there is such aboundance of them, that they eate all the corrupt and dead flesh which is in the Countrey. Otherwise the aboundance of carren is so much, that it would make a maruelous corrupt aire in all the Countrey, and be so noisome, that no man could abide it. Therefore it is commanded, there shall none of them be killed. These birds are alwaies about Cities, and Townes, where there is much flesh killed.

India Rauens not killed, to deuoure carrion.

The Indians are much fauoured by the Iustices of the Countrey, and they call them their Ophanes. And if any Spaniard should happen to doe any of them harme, or to wrong him in taking any thing from him, as many times they doe, or to strike any of them, being in any towne, whereas iustice is, they are aswell punished for the same, as if they had done it one Spaniard to another. When a Spaniard being farre from Mexico, or any place of iustice, thinking to doe with the poore Indian what he list, considering he is so farre from any place of remedie, he maketh the Indian doe what he commandeth him, and if he will not doe it, he beateth and misuseth him, according to his owne appetite. The Indian holdeth his peace, vntill he find an opportunitie, and then taketh a neighbour with him, and goeth to Mexico, although it be 20. leagues off, and maketh his complaint. This his complaint is immediatly heard, and although it be a Knight, or a right good Gentleman, he is forthwith sent for, and punished both by his goods, and also his person is imprisoned, at the pleasure of the Iustice. This is the occasion that the Indians are so tame and ciuill, as they are: and if they should haue this fauour, the Spaniards would soone dispatch all the Indians, or the Indians would kill them. But they may call them dogs, and vse other euill words, as much as they will, and the Indian must needes put it vp, and goe his way.

Wrongs done to the Indians punished.

Iustice cause of ciuilitie.

The poore Indians will goe euery day 2. or 3. leagues to a Faire or Market, with a childe vpon their necks, with as much fruite or rootes, or some kind of ware, as cotton woll, or Cadis of all colours, as shall be not past worth a pennie: and they will maintaine themselues vpon the same. For they liue with a maruelous small matter.

They are in such pouertie, that if you neede to ride into the Countrey, you shall haue an Indian to goe with you all the day, with your bed vpon his backe, for one rial of plate: and this you shall haue from one Towne to another. Here you are to vnderstand, that all men that trauell by the

the way,are alwaies wont to carry their beds with them. They are great theeues, and will ſteale all that they may,and you ſhall haue no recompence at their hands.

The garments of the women, are in this manner. The vppermoſt part is made almoſt like to a womans ſmock,ſauing that it is as broad aboue as beneath,and hath no ſleeues, but holes on eche ſide one to put out their armes. It is made of linnen cloth, made of cotton wooll, and filled full of flowers,of red Cadis and blewe,and other colours. This garment commeth downe to the knees, and then they haue another cloth made after the ſame manner, and that goeth round about their waſte,and reacheth to their ſhoes,and ouer this a white fine ſheete vpon their heads, which goeth downe halfe the legge. Their haire is made vp round with an haire lace about their head. And the men haue a ſmall paire of breeches,of the ſame cotton wooll, and their ſhirtes which hang ouer their breeches,and a broad girdle about their middles,and a sheete with flowers vpon their backs, and with a knot vpon one ſhoulder,and an hat vpon their heads,and a paire of ſhoes. And this is all their apparell,although it be a Caſique,which they vſe in all the Countrey. The apparell of the Indians.

The wals of the houſes of the Indians are but plaine, but the ſtones are laid ſo cloſe, that you ſhall not well perceaue the ioynts betweene one ſtone and another, they are ſo finely cut: and by the meanes that the ſtones are ſo workmanly done,and finely ioyned together,there is ſome beautie in their wals. They are meruelous ſmall and light,as Pumie ſtones. They make their doores very little,ſo that there can goe in but one man at a time. Their windowes, and roomes within their houſes,are ſmall,and one roome they haue reſerued for their friendes, when they come to talke one with another,and that is alwaies faire matted, and kept meruelous cleane, and hanged full of images,and their chaires ſtanding there to ſit in. They eate their meate vpon the ground, and ſleepe on the ground vpon a mat,without any bed,both the gentlemen,and other. The houſes of the Indians.

The Indians ſtrike their fire with one ſticke in another,alſwell the tame people, as the wilde. For they know not howe to doe it with an yron,and a ſtone. Fire rubbed out of two ſticks.

In Noua Hiſpania,euery 10. or 12. leagues they haue a contrarie ſpeech, ſauing onely about Mexico: ſo there is a number of ſpeeches in the Countrey. Diuers ſpeeches.

Mutezuma which was the laſt King of this Countrey, was one of the richeſt Princes which haue bene ſeene in our time,or long before. He had all kind of beaſts,which were then in the country,and all maner of birds,and fiſhes,and all maner of wormes, which creepe vpon the earth,and all trees,and flowers,and herbes,all faſhioned in ſiluer and gold,which was the greateſt part of al his treaſure,and in theſe thinges had he great ioy,as the olde Indians report. And vnto this day, they ſay that the treaſure of Mutezuma,is hidden,and that the Spaniards haue it not. This King would giue none of his people freedome, nor forgiue any of them that ſhoulde paye him tribute, though he were neuer ſo poore. For if it had bene told him, that one of his tributaries was poore, & that he was not able to pay his tribute,according to the cuſtome, then he would haue him bound to lying at ſuch times as tributes ſhould be paid, a quill full of Lyce, ſaying, he would haue none free,but himſelfe. He had as many wiues,or concubines, as he would haue, and ſuch as liked him. Alwaies whenſoeuer he went out of his Court,to paſſe the time,he was borne vpon 4. of his noble mens ſhoulders,ſet vpon a table,ſome ſay,of gold,and very richly veſſed with feathers, of diuers and many colours and flowers. He waſhed all his body euery day,were it neuer ſo cold. And vnto this day,ſo doe all the Indians,and eſpecially the women. Mutezuma, and his riches. The Indians waſh themſelues euery day.

The Spaniards keepe the Indians in great ſubiection. They may haue in their houſes no ſword nor dagger,nor knife with any pointe,nor may weare vppon them any manner of armes, neither may they ride vpon any horſe, nor mules, in any ſadle nor bridle, neither may they drinke wine, which they take for the greateſt paine of all. They haue attempted diuers times to make inſurrections,but they haue bene ouerthrowen immediatly by their owne great and beaſtly cowardines.

There remaine ſome among the wild people,that vnto this day eate one another. I haue ſeene the bones of a Spaniard,that haue bene as cleane burniſhed, as though it had bene done by men that had no other occupation. And many times people are carried away by them, but they neuer come againe, whether they be men or women. Campbalo.

They haue in the ſea Iſlands of red ſalt in great aboundance, whereas they lade it from place to place,about the ſea coaſt: and they ſpend very much ſalt with ſalting their hides, and ſilke: and in their mynes they occupie a great quantitie. Iſland of ſalt.

They haue much Allam,and as good as any that is in all the Leuant, ſo that they neede none of that commoditie. Allam.

They haue alſo of their owne growing,much Cana fiſtula, and much Salſa Perilla, which is meruelous good for many kind of diſeaſes. Caſſia fiſtula. Salſa Perilla.

The 3. vnfortunate voyage made with the Iesus, the Minion, *and foure other shippes, to the partes of Guinea, and the VVest In*dias, in the yeeres 1567. and 1568. by M. Iohn Hawkins.

October. THe shippes departed from Plymmouth, the second day of October, Anno 1567.

A storme. and had reasonable weather, vntil the seuenth day, at which time foure leagues North from Cape Finester, there arose an extreame storme, which continued foure daies, in such sorte, that the fleete was dispersed, and all our great boates lost, and the Iesus our chiefe shippe, in such case, as not thought able to serue the voyage: whereupon in the same storme we sette our course homeward, determining to giue ouer the voyage: but the eleuenth day of the same moneth, the winde changed with faire weather, whereby we were animated to followe our enterprise, and so did, directing our course with the Islands of Grand Canaries, where according to an order before prescribed, all

Gomera. our shippes before dispersed, mette in one of those Islands, called Gomera, where we tooke water, and departed from thence the fourth day of November. November, towards the coast of Guinea, and arriued at Cape Verde, the eighteenth of November: where wee landed 150. men, hoping to obtaine some Negroes, where we gatte but fewe, and those with great hurt and damage to our men, Enuenomed arrowes. which chiefly proceeded of their enuenomed arrowes: & although in the beginning, they seemed to be but small hurtes, yet there hardely escaped any, that had bloode drawen of them, but died in strange sorte, with their mouthes shutte, some ten dayes before he died, and after their woundes were whole, where I my selfe had one of the greatest woundes, yet thankes be to God, escaped.

December. Ianuarie. From thence we past the time vpon the coast of Guinea, searching with all diligence, the Riuers from Rio grande, vnto Sierra Leona, till the twelfth of Ianuarie, in which time wee had not gotten together a hundreth and fiftie Negroes: yet notwithstanding the sickenes of our men, and the late time of the yeere commanded vs away: and thus hauing nothing wherewith to seeke the coast of the West Indias, I was with the rest of our companie in consultation to goe to the coast of the Myne, hoping there to haue obtained some golde for our wares, and thereby to haue defraied our charge. But euen in that present instant, there came to vs a Negro, sent from a King, oppressed by other Kings his neighbours, desiring our aide, with promise, that as many Negroes as by these wares might be obtained, as well of his part, as of ours, should be at our pleasure: whereupon we concluded to giue aide, and sent 120. of our men, which the fifteenth of Ianuarie, assaulted

A towne of 8000. Negroes taken. a towne of the Negroes of our Allies aduersaries, which had in it 8000. Inhabitants, and very strongly impaled and fenced, after their manner, but it was so well defended, that our men preuailed not, but lost fiue men, and 40. hurt: so that our men sent foorthwith to me for more helpe: whereupon considering that the good successe of this enterprise might highly further the commodity of our voyage, I went my selfe, and with the helpe of the King of our side, assaulted the towne, both by land and sea, and very hardly with fire (their houses being couered with dry Palme leaues) obtained the towne, and put the Inhabitaunts to flight, where we tooke 250. persons, men, women, and children, and by our friend the King of our side, there was taken 600. prisoners, whereof we

No truth in Negroes. hoped to haue had our choise: but the Negro (in which nation is seldome or neuer found truth) meant nothing lesse: for that night he remooued his campe, and prisoners, so that we were faine to content vs with those fewe which we had gotten our selues.

Now had we obtained betweene 4. and 500. Negroes, wherewith we thought it somewhat reasonable to seeke the coast of the West Indias, and there, for our Negroes, and other our merchandize, we hoped to obtaine, whereof to counteruaile our charges with some gaines, whereunto we proceeded with all diligence, furnished our watering, tooke fuell, and departed the coast of Guinea

February. the third of February, continuing at the sea with a passage more hard, then before hath been accustomed, til the 27. day of March, which day we had sight of an Island, called Dominica, vpon the March. Dominica. coast of the west Indias, in 14. degrees: from thence we coasted from place to place, making our traffike with the Spaniards, as we might, somewhat hardly, because the King had straightly commanded all his Gouernours in those partes, by no meanes to suffer any trade to be made with vs:

April. notwithstanding we had reasonable trade, & courteous entertainment, from the Ile of Margarita

May. vnto Cartagena, without any thing greatly worth þ noting, saue at Capo de la Vela, in a towne called Rio de la Hacha, from whence come all the pearles: the treasurer who had þ charge there, would by no meanes agree to any trade, or suffer vs to take water, he had fortified his towne with diuers diuers bulwarkes in all places where it might be entred, and furnished himselfe with a 100. Hargabusiers, so that he thought by famine to haue inforced vs to haue put a land our Negroes: of which purpose he had not greatly failed vnles we had by force entred the towne: which (after we could by no means obtaine his fauour) we were enforced to do, & so with 200. men brake in vpon their bulwarkes, & entred the towne with the losse only of ii. men of our partes, and no hurt done to the Spanyards because after their volye of shott discharged, they all fled.

June. Rio de la Hacha taken.

Thus hauing the town, with some circūstance, as partly by the Spanyards desire of Negroes, & partly by friendship of the Treasorer, we obtained a secrete trade: whereupon the Spanyards resorted to vs by night, & bought of vs to the nomber of 200. Negroes: in all other places where we traded the Spanyards inhabitants were glad of vs and traded willingly.

Cartagena.

At Cartagena the last towne we thought to haue seene on the coast, we could by no meanes obtaine to deale with any Spanyard the gouernor was so straight, & because our trade was so neere finished we thought not good either to aduenture any landing, or to detract further time, but in peace departed from thence the 24. of July, hoping to haue escaped ỳ time of their stormes which then soone after began to raigne, the which they cal Furicanos, but passing by the west end of Cuba, towardes the coast of Florida there happened to vs the xii. day of August an extreme storme which continued by the space of 4. daies, which so beat the Jesus, that we cut downe all her higher buildings, her ruddar also was sore shaken, and with all was in so extreame a leake that we were rather vpon the point to leaue her then to keepe her any longer, yet hoping to bring all to good passe sought the coast of Florida where we found no place nor Hauen for our ships because of the shalownes of the coast: thus being in greater dispaire, & taken with a new storme which continued other 3. dayes, we were inforced to take for our succor ỳ Port which serueth the Citie of Mexico called Saint John de Vllua which standeth in xix. degrees: in seeking of which Port we tooke in our way iii. ships which carried passengers to ỳ nomber of C. which passengers we hoped should be a meane to vs the better to obtaine victuals for our money, and a quiet place for the repairing of our fleete: shortly after this the xvi. of September we entered the Port of Saint John de Vllua and in our entrie the Spanyardes thinking vs to be the fleete of Spaine, the chiefe officers of the Countrey came aborde vs, which being deceiued of their expectation were greatly dismayed: but immediatly when they sawe our demaund was nothing but victuals, were recomforted. I found also in the same Port xii. ships which had in them by the report. 200000. li. in golde and siluer, all which (being in my possession, with the Kinges Iland as also the passengers before in my way thitherwarde stayde) I set at libertie, without the taking from them the wayght of a grote: onely because I woulde not bee delayed of my dispatch, I stayed two men of estimation and sent post immediatly to Mexico, which was 200. miles from vs, to the Presidentes and Counsell there, shewing them of our arriuall there by the force of weather, and the necessitie of the repaire of our shippes and victualles, which wantes wee required as friends to king Philip to be furnished of for our money: and that the Presidentes and Counsell there shoulde with all conuenient speede take order, that at the arriuall of the Spanishe fleete, which was daily looked for, there might no cause of quarrel rise betweene vs and them, but for the better maintenance of amitie, their commaundement might bee had in that behalfe. This message being sent away the sixteenth day of September at nyght, being the very day of our arriuall, in the next morning which was the sixteenth day of the same moneth, we sawe open of the Hauen xiii. great shippes, and vnderstanding them to be the fleete of Spaine, I sent immediatly to aduertise the General of the fleete of my being there, doing him to vnderstand, that before I would suffer them to enter ỳ Port, there should some order of condicions passe betweene vs for our safe being there, and maintenance of peace: now it is to be vnderstood that this Port is a little Iland of stones not three foote aboue the water in the hiest place, and but a bow shoote of length any way, this Iland standeth from the maine land two bowe shootes or more, also it is to be vnderstood that there is not in all this coaste any other place for shippes to arriue in safetie, because the North wind hath there such violence, that vnles the shippes be very safely moored with their ancres fastned vpon this Iland, there is no remedie for these North windes but death: also the place of the Hauen was so little, that of necessitie the shippes must ride one aboord the other, so that we could not giue place to them, nor they to vs: & here I began to bewaile ỳ which after followed, for now said I, I am in two dangers, & forced to receaue the one of them. That was, either I must haue kept out the fleete from entring the Port, ỳ which with Gods helpe I was very well able to do, or els suffer them to enter in with their accustomed treason, which they neuer faile to execute, where they may haue opportunitie, or circumuent it by any meanes: if I had kept thē out, then had there bin ymet shipwarke of al ỳ fleete which amounted in value to sixe Millions, which was in 1800 thousand pound. value of our money 1800000. li. which I considered I was not able to aunswere, fearing the Queens Maiesties indignation in so waighty a matter. Thus with my selfe reuoluing ẏ doubts, thought rather better to abide ẏ iust of the vncerteinty, then the certeinty. The vncertein doubt I accompt was their treason which by good policy I hoped might be preuented, & therefore as chusing the least mischief I proceeded to conditions. Now was our first messenger come & returned from the fleete with report of the arrival of a vice Roy, so that he had auctority, both in all this Prouince of Mexico (otherwise called noua Hispania) & in the sea, who sent vs word that we should send out cõditions, which of his part should (for the better maintenãce of amity betweene ẏ Princes) be both fauorably granted, & faithfully performed, with many faire words how passing the coast of the Indies he had vnderstood of our honest behauiour towards the inhabitants where we had to do aswel elswhere as in ẏ same Port, the which I let passe, thus following our demand we required victual for our mony, & licence to sel asmuch ware as might furnish our wãts, & that there might be of either part xii. gentlemen as hostages for the maintenance of peace: and that the Iland for our better safety might be in our owne possession, during our abode there, & such ordinance as was planted in the same Iland which was xi. peeces of Brasse: & that no Spanyarde might land in the Iland with any kind of weapon: these conditions at the first, he somewhat misliked, chiefly the gard of the Iland to be in our owne keeping, which if they had had, we had soone knowen our fare: for with the first North wind they had cut our cables and our ships had gone a shore: but in the ende hee concluded to our request, bringing the xii. hostages to vs. which with all speede of either part weare receaued, with a writing from the vice Roy signed with his hand and sealed with his seale of all the conditions concluded, & forthwith a trumpet blowne with cõmandement that none of either part should be meane to inuiolate the peace vpon paine of death: & further it was concluded that the two generals of the fleetes should meete, & giue faith eche to other for the performance of the premisses which was so done. Thus at the end of 3. daies all was concluded and the fleete entred the Port, saluting one another as the maner of the sea doth require. Thus as I said before, thursday we entred the Port, friday we sawe the fleete, and on monday at night they entred the Port: then we laboured ii. daies placing the English ships by them selues & the Spanish ships by them selues, the captaines of each part & inferiour men of there parties promising great amity of all sides: which euen as th all fidelity was ment of our part, so the Spanyardes ment nothing lesse of their parts, but from the maine land had furnished them selues with a supplie of men to the nomber of 1000. and ment the next thursday being the 23. of September at dinner time to set vpon vs of all sides, the same thursday in the morning the treason being at hand, some appearance shewed, as shifting of weapon from ship to ship, planting and bending of ordinãce from the ship to the Iland where our men warded, passing too & fro of companies of men more then required for their necessary busines, and many other yll lickly hoodes which caused vs to haue a vehement suspition, and therewithall sent to the vice Roy to enquire what was ment by it, which sent immediatly straight commandement to implant all thinges suspicious, & also sent word that he in the faith of a vice Roy would be our defence from all villanies. Yet we being not satisfied with this aunswere because we suspected a great nomber of men to be hid in a great ship of 900 tonnes which was mored next vnto the Minion sent againe to the vice Roy the master of the Iesus which had the Spanish tongue and required to bee satisfyed if any such thing were or not, which seeing the vice Roy that the treason must bee discouered, forthwith stayd our master, blewe the trumpet, and of all sides set vpon vs: our men which warded a shore being stricken with sodein feare, gaue place, fled, and sought to recouer succour of the shippes, the Spanyardes being before prouided for the purpose landed in all places in multitudes from their shippes which they might easely doe without boates, and slewe all our men a shore without mercy, a fewe of them escaped aborde the Iesus. The great shippe which had by the estimation 300. men placed in hir secretly, immediatly fell aborde the minion which by Gods apointment in the time of the suspition we had, which was onely one halfe houre, the Minion was made ready to auoide and so leesing hir hedfastes, and hayling away by the sterne fastes shee was gotten out: thus with Gods helpe she defended the violence of the first hunt of these CCC. men. The Minion being paste out they came aborde the Iesus, which also with very much a doe and the losse of many of our men weare defended and kept out. Then were there also two other shippes that assaulted the Iesus at the same instant, so that shee had hard getting loose, but yet with some time we had cut our hedfastes and gotten out by the sterne fastes. Now when the Iesus and the Minion weare gotten aboad two shippes length from the Spanish fleete, the fight beganne hot of all sides that within one houre the Admirall of the Spanyardes was supposed to be sincke their vice Admirall burned and one other of there principall ships supposed to be sunke, so that the ships, ships were little to annoy vs.

Then is it to bee vnderstood that all the ordinance vpon the Iland was in the Spanyardes handes, which did vs so great annoyance, that it cutt all the Maſtes and yardes of the Ieſus, in ſuch ſort that there was no hope to cary her away: alſo it ſunke our ſmall ſhippes, whereupon wee determined to place the Ieſus on that ſide of the Mynion that ſhee myght abide all the batterie from the lande, and ſo be a defence for the Mynion till night, and then to take ſuch reliefe of victuall and other neceſſaries from the Ieſus as the time would ſuffer vs, and to leaue her. As wee were thus determining and had placed the Minion from the ſhott of the lande, ſuddenly the Spanyardes had fired two great ſhippes which were coming directly with vs, and hauing no meanes to auoide the fire, it dread among our men a marueilous feare, ſo that ſome ſayd, let vs depart with the Minion, other ſayde, let vs ſee where the winde will carrie the fyre from vs. But to bee ſhort, the Mynions men which had alwayes there ſayles in a readineſſe, thought to make ſure worke, and ſo without eyther conſent of the Captayne or Maſter cutte their ſayle, ſo that verie hardly I was receaued into the Mynion.

A hard caſe.

Fire.

The moſt part of the men that were left a lyue in the Ieſus, made ſhift and followed the Minion in a ſmall boat, the reſt which the little boate was not able to receaue, were inforced to abide the mercy of the Spanyards (which I doubt was very little): ſo with the Minion onely and the Iudith (a ſmall barke of fiftye tunne) wee eſcaped, which barke the ſame nyght forſooke vs in our great myſerie: wee were nowe remooued with the Mynion from the Spanyſhe ſhippes two bowe ſhootes and there roade all that nyght: the next morning wee recouered an Iſlande a myle from the Spanyardes where there tooke vs a North winde, and being left onely with two Ankers and two cables (for in this conflicte wee loſte three Cables and two Ankers) wee thought alwayes vpon death which euer was preſent, but God preſerued vs to a longer tyme.

Small hope to be had of tyrants.

A ſtorme.

The weather waxed reaſonable, and the Saturday wee ſet ſayle, and hauing a great number of men and lyttle victuals our hope of life waxed leſſe and leſſe: ſome deſired to yelde to the Spanyardes, ſome rather deſired to obtayne a place where they might giue themſelues to the Infidels, and ſome had rather abide with a little pittance the mercie of God at Sea: ſo thus with manie ſorowfull hearts wee wandred in an vnknowen Sea by the ſpace of fourteene dayes, tyll hunger inforced vs to ſeeke the lande, for hides were thought very good meate, ratts, cattes, miſe and dogges none eſcaped that myght bee gotten, parrotts and monkayes that were had in great price, were thought there very profitable if they ſerued the tourne one dinner: thus in the ende the eyght day of October wee came to the lande in the bottome of the ſame bay of Mexico in twenty three degrees and a halfe where wee hoped to haue founde inhabitantes of the Spanyardes, reliefe of victualles, and place for the repaire of our ſhippe, which was ſo ſore beaten with ſhotte from our enemyes and bruſed with ſhooting of our owne ordinance, that our weary and weake armes were ſcarce able to defende and keepe out the water. But all thinges happened to the contrary, for we founde neyther people, victuall, nor hauen of reliefe, but a place where hauing faire weather with ſome perill we might land a boate: our people being forced with hunger deſired to be ſet a land, whereunto I concluded.

Small hope of life.

Hard choiſe.

Myſeries.

October 1568.

Many miſeries.

And ſuch as were willing to land I put them apart, and ſuch as were deſirous to goe homewards, I put apart, ſo that they were indifferently parted a hundred of one ſide and a hundred of the other ſide: theſe hundred men we ſet a land with all diligence in this little place before ſaid, which being landed, we determined there to refreſh our water, and ſo with our little remaine of victuals to take the Sea.

The next day hauing a lande with me fiftie of our hundreth men that remained for the ſpeedier preparing of our water aboorde, there aroſe an extreme ſtorme, ſo that in three dayes we could by no meanes repayre our ſhippes: the ſhippe alſo was in ſuch perill that euery houre we looked for ſhipwracke.

The greateſt miſerie of all.

But yet God againe had mercie on vs, ſent faire weather, had aboorde our water, and departed the ſixteene day of October, after which day wee had faire and proſperous weather till the ſixteene day of Nouember, which day God be prayſed wee were cleere from the coaſt of the Indians, and out of the Chanell and Goulfe of Bahama, which is betweene the Cape of Florida, and the Ilandes of Cuba. After this growing neere to the colde Countrie, our men being oppreſſed with Famine, died continually, and they that were left, grewe into such weakenes that wee were scantly able to manure our ship, and the wind being alwaies ill for vs to recouer England, determined to go with Galicia in Spaine, with intent there to releeue our company & other extreame wants. And being arriued the last day of December. December in a place neare vnto Vigo called Ponte vedra, our men with excesse of fresh meate grew into miserable diseases, and died a great part of them. This matter was borne out as long as it might be, but in the end although there was none of our men suffered to goe a lande, yet by accesse of the Spanyardes, our feblenes was knowen to them. Whereupon they ceassed not to secke by all meanes to betraie vs, but with all speede possible we departed to Vigo, where we had some helpe of certaine English ships & xii. fresh men wherewith we repaired our wants as wee might, and departing the xx. day of January 1568. arriued in Mounts bay in Cornewale the xxv. Iannarie. of the same moneth, praised be God therefore.

If all the miseries and troublesome affaires of this sorowfull voyage should be perfectly and throughly written, there should neede a paynfull man with his penne, and as great a time as hee had that wrote the liues and deathes of the martirs.

The Relation of Dauid Ingram of Barking, in the Countie of Essex Sayler, of sundry things which he with others did see, in traueiling by land from the most Northerly partes of the Baie of Mexico (where he with many others were set on shoare by Master Hawkins) through a great part of America, vntill he came within fiftie leagues or there abouts of Cape Britton.

About the beginning of October, Anno 1568. Dauid Ingram with the rest of his company being 100. persons in all, were set on land by M. Iohn Hawkins, about fiue Leagues to the West of the riuer La mina, or Rio de Minas, which standeth about 140. leagues west & by North from the cape of Florida, who traueling towards cape Britton, spent about 12. moneths in the whole, And about seuen moneths thereof in those Countries, which lie towards the North of the riuer of May, in which time (as the said Ingram thinketh) he traueiled by land two thousand miles at the least, and neuer continued in any one place aboue three or foure dayes, sauing onely at the Citie of Balma, where he stayed fiue or seuen dayes.

Kings. There are in those partes (sayth he) very many Kings, commonly within a hundreth or a hundreth and twenty miles one from an other, who are at continual warres together: The first King that they came before, dwelt in a Countrey called Giricka, who caused them to be stripped naked, and wondring greatly at the whitenes of their skins, let them depart without further harme.

Large pretious stones. The Kings in those Countries are clothed with painted or coloured garments, and thereby you may know them, and they weare great pretious stones, which commonly are Rubies, being 4. inches long, and two inches broad. And if the same bee taken from them, either by force or sleight, they are presently depriued of their kingdomes.

The Kings in their maiestie. When they meane to speake with any person publikely, they are alwaies carried by men in a sumptuous chaire of Siluer or Christal, garnished with diuers sortes of pretious stones.

The maner of saluting their kings. And if you will speake with the king at your first approching neere to him, you must kneele downe on both your knees, and then arise againe and come somewhat neerer him, within your length, thē kneele downe againe as you did before. Then take of the earth or grasse betwen both your hands, kissing the backside of each of them, and put the earth or grasse on the crowne of your head, and so come, & kisse the kings feete. Which circumstances being performed, you may then arise and stand vp, and talke with him.

How to know the noble men. The Noble men and such as be in special fauour with the King, do commonly weare feathers in the haire of their heads for the most part, of a Byrde, as bigge as a goose of russet collour. And this is the best marke that this Ingram can giue to know him by.

Pearle. There is in some of those Countries great aboundance of pearle, for in euery cottage be found pearle, in some houses a quart, in some a pottle, in some a pecke, more or lesse, where he did see some as great as a beane. And Richard Browne one of his companions, found one of these great pearles in one of their Canoes or boats, which pearle he gaue to Mounsier Campain, who tooke them aboard his ship, and brought them to Newhauen in France,

Bracelets of Gold. All the people generally do weare Manilios or Bracelets, as big as a mans finger, vpon each of of their armes, and the like on the small of eche of their legs, whereof commonly one is golde and two siluer.

And many of the women also doe weare plates of golde, couering their bodies in maner of a payre of curets, and many bracelets and chaines of great pearle. Curets of golde.

The people commonly are of good fauour, feuter & shape of body, of growth aboue fiue foote high, somewhat thicke, with their faces and skins of colour like an oliefe, and toward the North somewhat tawnie, but some of them are painted with diuers colours, they are very swift of foote, the haire of their heads is shauen in sundry spots, and the rest of their head is traced. The fauour and shape of the people.

In the South partes of these countreys they go all naked, sauing that the Noble mens priuities are couered with the necke of a goose, and the womens priuities with the hayre or leafe of the palme tree. But in the North partes they are clothed with beastes skins, the hayrie side being next to their bodies in winter. Naked people

They are so brutish & beastly, that they wil not forbeare the vse of their wiues in open presence. Brutish behauiour.

They are naturally very courteous, if you do not abuse them, either in their persons or goods, but vse them courteously. The killing or taking of their beasts, birds, fishes, or fruites cannot offende them, except it be of their cattell which they keepe about their houses, as Kine, Guinie hennes, or such like. People courteous.

If any of them doe holde vp both their hands at length together, and kisse the backes of them on both sides, then you may vndoubtedly trust them, for it is the greatest token of friendship that may be. A sure token of friendship.

If any of them shal come vnto you with a horsetaile in his hand, then you may assure your selfe that hee is a Messenger from the King, and to him you may safely commit your person, or go to the king, or any where els, or by him send any thing or message to the king. For these men are alwayes either Ensigne bearers in the warres, or the kings messengers, who wil neuer betray you. Messengers from the king

If you will haue any of the people come aboorde your ship, hang out some white cloth vpon a staffe, for that is a signe of amitie. To allure the people to speach.

If you will bargaine for ware with them, leaue the thing that you will sell vpon the ground, and go from it a prettie way off: then wil they come and take it, and set downe such wares as they will giue for it in the place: And if you thinke it not sufficient, leaue the wares with signes that you like it not, and they will bring more, vntill either they or you be satisfied, or will giue no more. Otherwise you may hang your wares vpon a long poles end, and so put more or lesse on it, vntill you haue agreed on the bargaine. The maner of trafique and dealing with them.

When they goe to the warres, they march in battell aray two and three in a ranck. Howe they march in battell.

Their Trumpets they doe make of certaine beasts teeth, they haue a kinde of Drum which they make of beastes skins, they make shields and Targets of the skins of beastes, compassed with willowe twigs, and being dried, they are strong and defensible. Their weapons and instruments for warre.

Their weapons are dartes, headed with yron, the heads are two fingers broad, and halfe a foot long, which are fastened within a socket.

They haue also short bowes, strung with ỹ barke of trees, being halfe an inch broad, & the arrowes are of bone, a yarde long, nocked and headed with siluer & bone, and their arrowes are of small force within a stones cast of them, and you may put them by with a staffe a prettie way off.

They haue short broad swordes of blacke yron of the length of a yarde, or very neere an elle, bearing edges thicker then backs of kniues, somewhat like the foyles in our fence schooles.

They haue crooked kniues of yron, somewhat like a woodknife, or hanger, wherewith they will carue excellently both in wood and bone.

Their Ensigne is a horse taile, with glasse or Christall in some of them being dyed in sundry colours, as red, yellow, greene, &c.

The people in those Countreys are professed enemies to the Canibals or men eaters: The Canibals doe most inhabite betweene Norumbega, & Bariniah, they haue teeth like dogs teeth, and thereby you may know them. In the warres they doe pitch their campe as neere as they may vnto some wood of Palme tree, which yeelde them meate, drinke, and present remedy against poysoned arrowes. Canibals.

Their buildings are weake and of small force, their houses are made round like Doue houses, and they doe dwell together in Townes and Villages. And some of them haue banqueting houses in the top of them, made like the louer of a hall, builded with pillars of massie siluer, and chrystall, framed square: whereof many of them are as big as a boyes leg of fifteene yeeres of age, and some lesse. Their houses and buildings

Ochala, a great Towne a mile long.

Balma, a rich Citie, a mile and a halfe long.

Bega, a Countrey, and Towne of that name, three quarters of a mile long, where are great store of Oxe hides.

Saguanah, a Towne almost a mile in length.

Bariniah, a Citie a mile and a quarter long: Also there is a Riuer and a Towne of that name, but lesse then the first aboue named.

Gunda, a small Towne and a Riuer, both of that name. And this is the most Northerly part, that this Ingram was at.

There are besides those Townes aforenamed, many other great Townes which this Ingram passed by, commonly distant fiue or eight miles one from the other, which haue diuers small Villages within eight or ten miles from them.

Vessels of massie siluer, for common vses.

They haue in euery house scoupes, buckets, and diuers other vessels of massie siluer, wherewith they doe throwe out water and dust, and otherwise doe imploy them to their necessary vses in their houses: All which this Ingram did see common and vsuall in some of these Countreys, especially where he found the great Pearles.

Gold in the heads of Riuers.

There are also great riuers, at the heads whereof, this Ingram & his companions did find sundry pieces of golde, some as big as a mans fist, the earth being washed away with the water.

Rocks of chrystall.

And in other places, they did see great rockes of Chrystal, which growe at the heads of great and many Riuers, being in quantitie to loade shippes.

Fine Furres.

There are also in those partes, plentie of fine Furres, vnknowen to this Ingram, dressed after the maner of the Countrey.

Sweete turfe to burne.

The people there do burne a kind of white Turfe or earth, which they dig out of the marishes, a fadome deepe in the ground. It burneth very cleare, and smelleth as sweete as muske, and that earth is as wholesome, sweete, and comfortable, to smell vnto, as any Pomander. They do make their fire of this earth for the sweetnes thereof, hauing great aboundance of wood.

Their maner of kindling fire

When they want fire, they take briers, and rub them very hard together betweene their fists, and so with hard and often rubbing they kindle and make fire.

Iron and Minerall salt.

They haue great plentie of Iron, and there is also great plentie of minerall salt, in the marish ground which looketh reddish, a thing necessary for the great fishings neere the sea shore, which are there aboundant, and the fish very large and huge.

The fertilitie of the soyle.

The ground & Countrey is most excellent, fertile and pleasant, & specially towards the Riuer of May. For the grasse of ỳ rest is not so greene, as it is in these parts, for the other is burnt away with the heate of the Sunne. And as all the Countrey is good and most delicate, hauing great plaines, as large & as fayre in many places as may be seene, being as plaine as a board: And then great & huge woods of sundry kind of trees, as cedar, Lignum vitæ, Bombasse, plants & bushes, bark that biteth like Pepper, (of which kind, yong M. Winter brought home part from ỳ straight of Magelane) with the fruitfull Palme tree, & great plentie of other sweete trees to this Ingram

vnknowen. And after that plaines againe, and in other places great closes of pasture, enuironed with most delicate trees, in stead of hedges: they being as it were set by the hands of men: Yet the best grasse for the most part is in the high Countries, somewhat farre from the Sea side, and great Riuers, by reason that the lowe grounds there be so rancke, that the grasse groweth faster then it can be eaten, whereby the olde grasse lieth withered thicke, and the newe grasse growing through it. Whereas in the vpper partes, the grasse and ground is most excellent and greene. The ground not being ouercharged with any olde withered grasse, as is afore specified.

The Palme tree.

The Palme tree aforesayd carieth hayres on the leaues thereof, which reach to the ground, Whereof the Indians doe make ropes and cords for their Cotten beds, and doe vse the same to many other purposes.

Wine of the Palme.

The which Tree, if you pricke with your knife, about two foote from the roote, it will yeelde a Wine in colour like whey, but in taste strong and somewhat like Bastard, which is most excellent drinke. But it wil distemper both your head and body, if you drinke too much thereof, as our strong Wines wil doe in these partes.

Meate of the Palme.

The branches of ỳ top of ỳ tree, are most excellent meat raw, after you haue pared away ỳ bark.

Oyle against poysoned arrowes.

Also there is a red oyle that commeth out of ỳ roote of this tree, which is most excellent against poisoned arrowes & weapons: for by it they doe recouer themselues of their poysoned wounds.

The Plantine with his fruits

There is a tree called a Plantine, with a fruite growing on it like a pudding, which is most excellent meate rawe.

They

They haue also a red berry like a Pescod, called Guyathos, two or three inches long, which groweth on short bushes full of pricks like the Sloe or Thorne tree, and the fruite eateth like a greene Raisin, but sharper somewhat: They stampe this berry and make Wine thereof, which they keepe in vessels made of wood.

They haue also in many places, Vines which beare Grapes as big as a mans thumbe. Vines with great Grapes.

There is also great plentie of herbes, and of all kinde of flowers, as Roses, and Gilliflowers, like ours in England, and many others which he knewe not. Herbes and flowers.

Also, they haue a kinde of Graine, the eare whereof is as big as the wrist of a mans arme: the Graine is like a flat pease, it maketh very good bread and white. Graine.

They doe also make bread of the roote called Cassaua, which they doe drie, and beate it as small as they can, and temper it with water, and so bake it in cakes on a stone. Bread of a Cassada.

There is also great plenty of Buffes, Beares, Horses, Kine, Woolues, Foxes, Deare, Goats, Sheepe, Hares, and Conies: Also other cattell like ours, to this Examinate vnknowen, the most part being wilde: the Hides and skinnes of them are good Marchandize. There is very great store of those Buffes, which are beasts as big as two Oxen, in length almost twentie foot, hauing long eares like a Blood hound, with long haires about their eares, their hornes be crooked like Rams hornes, their eyes blacke, their haires long, blacke, rough, & shagged as a Goat: The Hides of these beasts are solde very deare, this Beast doeth keepe companie onely by couples, male and female, & doeth alwayes fight with others of the same kinde when they do meete. There is also great plentie of Deare both red, white, and speckled. This last sort this Examinate knoweth not. There is also great plentie of another kinde of Sheepe which carie a kinde of course wooll: This Sheepe is very good meate, although the flesh be very red. They are exceeding fatte, and of nature loth to rise when they are laid, which is alwayes from fiue a clocke at night, vntill fiue a clocke in the morning: betweene which time you may easily kill them, but after they be on foote they are very wilde, & rest not in one place, but liue together in heards, in some 500. as it happeneth, more or lesse: And these red Sheepe are most about the Bay of Saint Marie, as this Examinate gesseth. There are Beares both blacke and white. There are Woolues. The Foxes haue their skins more grilled then ours in England. There are Conies both white and red, and grey in euery place great plentie. Beasts of sundry kindes. Vacca giboſa, supposed a Buffe. Deare. Sheepe bearing woolle the flesh red.

This Examinate did also see in those Countries a Monstrous beast twise as big as an Horse, and in proportion like to an Horse, both in maine, hoofe, haire, and neighing, sauing it was small towards the hinder partes like a Grey hound. These Beasts hath two teeth or hornes of a foote long growing straight foorth by their nosethrilles: they are naturall enemies to the Horse. A strange Beast.

Hee did also see in that Countrey both Elephants and Ounces. Hee did also see one other strange Beast bigger then a Beare, he had neither head nor necke: his eyes and mouth were in his breast. This beast is very vgly to beholde, and cowardly of kinde. It beareth a very fine skin like a Rat, full of siluer haires. Elephants and Ounces. A strange shapen Beast.

There are in those Countries abundance of Russet Parrots, but very fewe greene. There are also Birds of all sortes as we haue, and many strange Birds to this Examinate vnknowen. There are great plenty of Guinie hennes which are tame Birds, and proper to the Inhabitants, as big as Geese, very blacke of colour, hauing feathers like Downe. There is also a Bird called a Flamingo, whose feathers are very red, and is bigger then a Goose, billed like a Shoueil, and is very good meate. There is also another kinde of Foule in that Countrey which hunteth the Riuers neere vnto the Ilands: They are of the shape and bignesse of a Goose but their wings are couered with small yelowe feathers, and cannot flie: You may driue them before you like sheepe: They are exceeding fatte and very delicate meate, they haue white heads, and therefore the Countrey men call them Penguins (which seemeth to be a Welsh name.) And they haue also in vse diuers other Welsh words, a matter worthy the noting. There is also a very strange Bird, thise as big as an Eagle, very beautifull to beholde, his feathers are more orient then a Peacockes feathers, his eyes are glistering as an Hawkes eyes, but as great as a mans eyes, his head and thigh as big as a mans head and thigh: It hath a crest and tuffe of feathers of sundry colours on the top of the head like a Lapwing hanging backwards: His beake and talents in proportion like Egles, but very huge and large. Russet Parrots. Birds like ours. Guinie hens. A red Bird. Penguins. A great strage Bird.

Touching Tempests and other strange monstrous things in those partes, this Examinate saith, that he hath seene it Lighten and Thunder in sommer season by the space of foure & twentie houres together: the cause whereof he iudgeth to be the heate of the Climate. Tempests.

He farther saith, that there is a Cloud sometime of the yeere seene in the ayre, which commonly turneth to great Tempests. And that sometimes of the yeere there are great windes in maner Furicanes. Turnados.

of Whirlewindes.

Their maner of Religion.

Touching their Religion, he saith that they honor for their God a Deuil, which they call Colluchio, who speaketh vnto them sometimes in the likenesse of a blacke Dogge, and sometimes in the likenesse of a blacke Calfe.

And some doe honor the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres.

Adulterie punished with death.

He saith ẏ the people in those Countries are allowed many Wiues, some fiue, some tenne, & a king sometimes an hundred: And ẏ Adulterie is very seuerely punished in maner following, that is to say: The woman taken in adulterie, must with her owne hands cut ẏ throte of the Adulterer, and the next of his kindred both likewise cut ẏ throte of the Adulteresse. And being asked in what maner they take their executions, he saith: That they are brought to execution by certaine Magistrates, who do deliuer vnto ẏ woman the knife, wherewith she cutteth ẏ throte of the Adulterer.

Then appeareth their Colluchio or Deuil, in the likenesse aforesaid, and speaketh vnto them, and to that Deuil the parties brought to execution doe great reuerence, and with many prayers to it doe take their death.

Their maner of Burials.

He saith that such persons as are put to death in such sort, haue not any of their friends buried with them: but such as die naturally, haue alwayes buried quicke with them one of their dearest friendes to keepe them companie, and to prouide necessaries and victuall for them, who doe willingly cõsent thereto, being thereto perswaded by their Colluchio or Deuil, whõ they do worship.

The Deuil fled away at the name of the holy Trinitie.

He saith further, that he & his two fellowes, namely, Richard Browne, and Richard Twide, went into a poore mans house, & there they did see the said Colluchio or Deuil, with very great eyes like a blacke Calfe: Vpon the sight whereof, Browne saide, There is the Deuil, and thereupon he blessed himselfe: In the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost. And Twide said very vehemently, I defie thee and all thy workes. And presently the Colluchio shrancke away in a stealing maner forth of the doores, and was seene no more vnto them.

Great Riuers.

Also they passed ouer many great Riuers in those Countries, in Canoes or Boates: some foure, some sixe, some eight, some tenne miles ouer: whereof one was so large, that they could scarse crosse the same in foure and twentie houres.

Musicall instruments.

Also he saith, that in the same Countrie, the people haue instruments of Musicke made of a piece of a Cane, almost a foote long, being open at both endes: which sitting downe, they smite vpon their thighes and one of their handes, making a pleasant kind of sound.

And they do vse an other kind of instrument like a Taber, couered with a white skinne somewhat like Parchment.

This Examinate can very well describe their gestures, daunsing, and songs.

After long trauaile, the aforesaide Dauid Ingram with his two companions Browne and Twide, came to the head of a riuer called Garinda, which is 60. Leagues West frõ Cape Britton: where they vnderstood by the people of that Countrey of ẏ arriuall of a Christian. Whereupon they made their repaire to the Sea side, and there found a French Captaine named Monsieur Champaigne, who tooke them into his Shippe and brought them vnto Newhauen, & from thence they were transported into England, Anno. Dom. 1569.

Siluer mens change of trifles.

This Monsieur Campaigne, with diuers of his companie was brought into ẏ Village of Bariniah, about twentie miles vp into the Countrie by ẏ said Examinate and his two Companions, by whose meanes he had a trade with the people of diuers sortes of fine furres, & of great redde leaues of trees almost a yard long, & about a foote broade, which he thinketh are good for dying.

Also the said Monsieur Champaigne, had there for exchange of trifling wares, a good quantitie of rude, and wrought siluer.

He saith further, that diuers of the said Frenchmen which were in the said Shippe called the Gargarine, are yet liuing in Homflewe vpon the coast of France, as he thinketh, for he did speake with some of them within these three yeeres.

About a fortnight after their comming from Newhauen into England, this saide Examinate and his two companions came to master John Hawkins, who had set them on shore vpon the Baie of Mexico, and vnto eche of them he gaue a reward.

Richard Browne his companion was slaine about fiue yeeres past in the Elizabeth of master Cockins of London: And Richard Twide his other cõpanion died at Ratcliffe in John Sherewoods house there, about three yeeres past.

Alſo the ſayd Dauid Ingram trauelling towardes the Nꝛth, fonnd the maine ſea vpon the Nꝛthſide of America, and trauailed in the ſight thereof the ſpace of two whole dayes, where the people ſignified vnto him, that they had ſeene ſhippes on that coaſt, and did dꝛaw vpon the ground the ſhape and figure of ſhippes, and of their ſailes and flagges. Which thing eſpecially pꝛoueth the paſſage of the Nꝛthweſt, and is agreeable to the experience of Vaſques de Coronado, which found a ſhippe of China oꝛ Cataia vpon the Nꝛthweſt of America. The maine Sea on the Nꝛth parte of America.

Alſo the ſayd examinate ſayth, that there is an Iland called Corraſau, and there are in it fiue oꝛ ſix thouſand Indians at the leaſt, and all thoſe are gouerned by one onely Negro, who is but a ſlaue to a Spaniard. And moꝛeouer the Spanyardes will ſend but one of their ſlaues with an hundꝛed oꝛ two hundꝛed of the Indians, when they goe to gather golde in the Riuers deſcending from the mountaines. And when they ſhal be abſent by the ſpace of twentie oꝛ thirty dayes at the leaſt, euery one of the Indians will neuertheleſſe obey all the Slaues commaundements with as great reuerence, as if he were their naturall King, although there be neuer a Chriſtian neere them by the ſpace of an hundꝛed oꝛ two hundꝛed miles: which argueth the great obedience of thoſe people, and how eaſily they may be gouerned when they be once conquered. The firſt Chapter.

Wherein is ſhewed the day and time of our departure from of the coaſt of England, with the number, and names of the ſhippes, their Captaines and Maſters, and of our traffique and dealing vpon the coaſt of Africa.

VPon mundᵃy being the ſecond of October, 1567. the weather being reaſonable fayꝛe, our Generall M. Iohn Hawkins, hauing commaunded all his captaines and maſters to be in a readineſſe to make ſayle with him, hee himſelfe being imbarked in the Ieſus, wherof was appointed foꝛ Maſter, Robert Barret, hoyſed ſayle, and departed from Plymmoth vpon his intended voyage foꝛ the parts of Africa, & America, being accompanied with fiue other ſayle of ſhippes, as namely the Mynion, wherein went foꝛ Captaine Maſter Iohn Hampton, and Iohn Garret Maſter. The William and Iohn, wherein was Captaine Thomas Bolton, and James Raunce Maſter. The Iudith, in whome was Captaine M. Francis Drake now knight, and the Angel whoſe Maſter, as alſo the Captaine and Maſter of the Swallow I now remember not. And ſo ſayling in companie together vpon our voyage vntill the tenth of the ſame moneth, an extreame ſtoꝛme then tooke vs neere vnto cape Finiſter, which dured foꝛ the ſpace of foure dayes, and ſo ſeparated our ſhippes, that wee had loſt one another, and our Generall finding the Ieſus to be but in yll caſe, was in minde to giue ouer the voyage, and to returne home. Howbeit the eleuenth of the ſame moneth the ſeas waxing calme, and the winde comming fayꝛe, he altered his purpoſe, and helde on the foꝛmer entended voyage: And ſo comming to the Iland of Gomera being one of the Ilands of the Canaries, where according to an oꝛder befoꝛe appoynted, we met with all our ſhippes which were befoꝛe diſperſed, wee then tooke in freſh water and departed from thence the fourth of Nouember, and holding on our courſe, vpon the eightenth day of the ſame moneth we came to an anker vpon the coaſte of Africa, at cape Verde in twelue fadome water, and here our Generall landed certaine of our men, men, to the number of 160 or there about, seeking to take some Negroes. And they going vp in to the countrey for the space of six miles, were incountred with a great number of the Negroes: who with their inuenomed arrowes did hurt a great number of our men, so that they were inforced to retyre to the shippes, in which conflict they recouered but a fewe Negroes, and of these our men which were hurt with their enuenomed arrowes, there died to the number of 7. or 8. in very strange maner, with their mouths shut, so that we were forced to put stickes & other things into their mouths to keepe them open, & so afterward passing the time vpon the coast of Guinea, vntill the twelft of Januarie, we obteined by that time the number of 150 Negroes. And being ready to depart from the sea coast, there was a Negro sent as an Ambassadour to our Generall, from a King of the Negroes, which was oppressed with other Kings his bordering neighbours, desiring our Generall to graunt him succour and ayde against those his enemies, which our Generall graunted vnto, and went himselfe in person a land, with the number of 200 of our men or thereabouts, and the sayde King which had requested our ayde, did ioyne his force with ours, so that thereby our Generall assaulted, and set fyre vpon a towne of the sayd King his enemies, in which there was at the least the number of 8 or 10 thousand Negroes, and they perceiuing that they were not able to make any resistance sought by flight to saue themselues, in which their flight there were taken prisoners to the number of 8 or 900, which our Generall ought to haue had for his share: howbeit the Negro King which requested our ayde falsifying his worde and promise, secretly in the night conuayed himselfe away with as many prisoners as hee had in his custodie: but our Generall notwithstanding finding himselfe to haue nowe very neere the number of 500 Negroes thought it best without longer abode to depart with them, and such marchandize as he had from the coast of Africa towardes the west Indies, and therefore commanded with all diligence to take in fresh water and fewel, and so with speede to prepare to depart. Howbeit before we departed from thence, in a storme that we had, we lost one of our ships namelie the William and Iohn, of which ship and of her people, we heard no tidings during the time of our voyage.

The 2. Chapter.

Wherein is shewed the day and time of our departure from the coast of Africa, with the day and time of our arriuall in the West Indies, also of our trade, and traffike there, and also of the great crueltie that the Spaniards vsed towards vs, by the Vice-Roy his direction, and appointment, falsifying his faith and promise giuen, and seeking to haue intrapped vs.

ALl things being made in a readinesse, at our Generall his appointment, vpon the third day of Februarie, 1568. we departed from the coast of Affrica, hauing the weather somewhat tempestuous, which made our passage the more hard, and sayling so for the space of 25. dayes, vpon the 27. of March, 1568. we came in sight of an Iland, called Dominica, vpon the coast of America in the West Indies, situated in 14. degrees of latitude, and 222. of longitude: from thence our Generall coasted from place to place, euer making traffike with the Spaniards, and Indians as he might, which was somewhat hardly obtayned, for that the king had straightly charged all his gouernours in those partes not to trade with any: yet notwithstanding, during the months of April, and May, our General had reasonable trade and traffike, and curteous entertainement in sundry places, as at Margarita, Coraisao, and els where, til we came to Cape de la vela, & Rio de Hacha, (a place from whence all the pearles doe come:) the gouernour there would not by any meanes permit vs to haue any trade or traffike, nor yet suffer vs to take in fresh water: By meanes whereof our Generall for the auoyding of famine & thirst about the beginning of June, was enforced to lande two hundreth of our men, and so by maine force and strength to obtaine that which by no faire meanes he coulde procure: And so recouering the Towne with the losse of two of our men, there was a secrete and peaceable trade admitted, and the Spaniards came in by night, and bought of our Negroes to the number of two hundreth and vpwards, and of our other marchandize also. From thence we departed for Carthagena, where the Gouernour was so straight, that we coulde not obteine any traffike there, and so for that our trade was neere finished, our Generall thought it best to depart from thence the rather for the auoiding of certaine dangerous stormes called the Huricanos, which accustomed to beginne there about that time of the yeere, and so the 24. of July 1568. wee departed from thence directing our course North, leauing the Ilands of Cuba vpon our right hand, to the East ward of vs, and so sayling towarde Florida, vpon the 12 of August, an extreme tempest arose, which dured for the space of eight dayes, in which our ships were most dangerously tossed & beaten hither, & thither, so that wee were in continuall feare to bee drowned by reason of the shallownesse of the coaste, and in the ende we were constrayned to flee for succour to the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, or Vera Cruz, scituated in 19 degrees of latitude, and in 200. seuentie nine degrees of longitude which is the porte that serueth for the citie of Mexico: in our seeking to recouer this porte our Generall met by the way, three small shippes that caryed passengers, which hee tooke with him, and so the sixtenth of September, 1568 wee entred the sayde port of S. Iohn de Vllua. The Spaniards there supposing vs to haue bene the King of Spaynes fleete, the chiefe officers of the countrey there abouts came presently aborde our Generall, where perceiuing themselues to haue made an vnwise aduenture, they were in great feare to haue bene taken and staied: howbeit our Generall did vse them all very curteously: in the sayd porte there were twelue shippes, which by report had in them in treasure to the valew of 200 thousand pound, all which being in our Generall his power and at his deuotion, he did freely set at libertie, as also the passengers which he had before staied, not taking from any of them all the valewe of one groate: onely he staied two men of credite and account, the one named Don Laurenzo de Alua, and the other Don Pedro de Reuera, and presently our Generall sent to the Vizroye to Mexico which was tweluescore leagues of, certifying him of our arriuall there by force of weather, desiring that forasmuch as our Queene his Soueraigne, was the King of Spayne his louing sister and friend, that therefore he would, considering our necessities and wants, furnish vs with victuals for our mony, and quietly to suffer vs to repaire and amend our shippes. And furthermore that at the arriuall of the Spanish fleete which was there dayly expected and looked for, to the ende that there might no quarrell arise betweene them, and our Generall and his companye for the breach of amitie, hee humbly requested of his excellencie, that there might in this behalfe some speciall order bee taken. This message was sent away the 16 of September, 1568, it being the very day of our arriuall there. The next morning being the seuentenih of the same moneth, we descryed 13 sayle of great shippes: and after that our Generall vnderstood, that it was the king of Spaynes Fleete then looked for, hee presently sent to aduertise the Generall hereof, of our being in the sayde porte, and giuing him further to vnderstande, that before hee should enter there into that harbour, it was requisite that there shoulde passe betweene the two Generals some orders and conditions to bee obserued on either part, for the better continuing of peace betweene them and theirs, according to our Generals request made vnto the Viceroye. And at this instant our Generall was in a great perplexitie of minde, considering with himselfe that if he should keepe out that fleete from entring into the porte, a thing which he was very wel able to doe with the helpe of God, then should that fleete be in danger of present shipwracke and losse of all their substance, which amounted vnto the valewe of one myllion and 800 thousande crownes. Againe he saw that if he suffered them to enter, hee was assured that they would practise by all maner of meanes to betray him and his, and on the other side the hauen was so litle, that the other fleete entring, the shippes were to ride one hard aborde of another: also hee sawe that if their fleete should perish by his keeping of them out, as of necessitie they must if he should haue done so, then stoode he in great feare of the Queene our Soueraignes displeasure in so weighty a cause, therefore did hee choose the lest euill, which was to suffer them to enter vnder assurance, and so to stande vpon his garde, and to defende himselfe and his from their treasens which we were wel assured they would practise, and so the messenger being returned from Don Martine de Henriques, the new Viceroy, who came in the same Fleete, and had sufficient authoritie to commaund in al cases both by sea and by land in this prouince of Mexico or new Spaine, did certifie our General, that for the better maintenance of amitie betweene the king of Spaine and our Soueraigne, all our requests should bee both fauourably graunted, and faithfully performed: signifying further that he heard and vnderstood of the honest and friendly dealing of our Generall, toward the King of Spaynes subiects in all places where he had bene, as also in the sayde porte: so that to be breefe our requests were articled, and set downe in writing. viz.

1 The first was that wee might haue victuals for our money, and license to sell as much wares, as might suffice to furnish our wants.

2 The second, that we might be suffered peaceably to repayre our shippes.

3 The third that the Iland might bee in our possession during the time of our abode there, in which Iland our Generall for the better safetie of him and his, had alreadie planted and placed certaine ordinance which were eleuen peeces of brasse, therefore hee required that the same might so continew, and that no Spaniard should come to land in the sayde Iland, hauing or bearing any kinde of weapon about him.

men, to the number of 160 or there about, seeking to take some Negroes. And they going vp in to the countrey for the space of six miles, were incountred with a great number of the Negroes: who with their inuenomed arrowes did hurt a great number of our men, so that they were inforced to retyre to the shippes, in which conflict they recouered but a fewe Negroes, and of these our men which were hurt with their enuenomed arrowes, there died to the number of 7. or 8. in very strange maner, with their mouths shut, so that we were forced to put stickes & other things into their mouths to keepe them open, & so afterward passing the time vpon the coast of Guinee, vntill the twelft of Ianuarie, we obteined by that time the number of 150 Negroes. And being ready to depart from the sea coast, there was a Negro sent as an Ambassadour to our Generall, from a King of the Negroes, which was oppressed with other Kings his bordering neighbours, desiring our Generall to graunt him succour and ayde against those his enemies, which our Generall graunted vnto, and went himselfe in person a land, with the number of 200 of our men or thereabouts, and the sayde King which had requested our ayde, did ioyne his force with ours, so that thereby our Generall assaulted, and set fyre vpon a towne of the sayd King his enemies, in which there was at the least the number of 8 or 10 thousand Negroes, and they perceiuing that they were not able to make any resistance sought by flight to saue themselues, in which their flight there were taken prisoners to the number of 8 or 900. which our Generall ought to haue had for his share: howbeit the Negro King which requested our ayde falsifying his worde and promise, secretly in the night conuayed himselfe away with as many prisoners as hee had in his custodie: but our Generall notwithstanding finding himselfe to haue nowe very neere the number of 500 Negroes thought it best without longer abode to depart with them, and such marchandize as he had from the coast of Africa towardes the west Indies, and therefore commanded with all diligence to take in fresh water and fewel, and so with speede to prepare to depart. Howbeit before we departed from thence, in a storme that we had, we lost one of our ships namelie the William and Iohn, of which ship and of her people, we heard no tidings during the time of our voyage.

ſo that wee were in continuall feare to bee drowned by reaſon of the ſhallowneſſe of the coaſte, and in the ende we were conſtrayned to flee for ſuccour to the porte of S. Iohn de Vllua, or Vera Cruz, ſcituated in 19 degrees of latitude, and in 200. ſeuentie nine degrees of longitude which is the porte that ſerueth for the citie of Mexico: in our ſeeking to recouer this porte our Generall met by the way, three ſmall ſhippes that caryed paſſengers, which hee tooke with him, and ſo the ſixteenth of September, 1568 wee entred the ſayde porte of S. Iohn de Vllua. The Spaniards there ſuppoſing vs to haue bene the King of Spaynes fleete, the chiefe officers of the countrey there abouts came preſently aborde our Generall, where perceiuing themſelues to haue made an vnwiſe aduenture, they were in great feare to haue bene taken and ſtayed: howbeit our Generall did vſe them all very curteouſly: in the ſayd porte there were twelue ſhippes, which by report had in them in treaſure to the valew of 200 thouſand pound, all which being in our Generals his power and at his deuotion, he did freely ſet at libertie, as alſo the paſſengers which he had before ſtayed, not taking from any of them all the valewe of one groate: onely he ſtayed two men of credite and account, the one named Don Laurenzo de Alua, and the other Don Pedro de Reuera, and preſently our Generall ſent to the Vizroye to Mexico which was ripeſcore leagues of, certifying him of our arriuall there by force of weather, deſiring that foraſmuch as our Queene his Soueraigne, was the King of Spayne his louing ſiſter and friend, that therefore he would, conſidering our neceſſities and wants, furniſh vs with victuals for our Fleete, and quietly to ſuffer vs to repaire and amend our ſhippes. And furthermore that at the arriuall of the Spaniſh fleete which was there dayly expected and looked for, to the ende that there might no quarrell ariſe betweene them, and our Generall and his companye for the breach of amitie, hee humbly requeſted of his excellencie, that there might in this behalfe ſome ſpeciall order bee taken. This meſſage was ſent away the 16 of September, 1568, it being the very day of our arriuall there. The next morning being the ſeuentenih of the ſame moneth, we deſcryed 13 ſayle of great ſhippes: and after that our Generall vnderſtood, that it was the king of Spaynes Fleete then looked for, hee preſently ſent to aduertiſe the Generall hereof, of our being in the ſayde porte, and giuing him further to vnderſtande, that before hee ſhoulde enter there into that harbour, it was requiſite that there ſhoulde paſſe betweene the two Generals ſome orders and conditions to bee obſerued on either part, for the better continuing of peace betweene them and theirs, according to our Generals requeſt made vnto the Viceroye. And at this inſtant our Generall was in a great perplexitie of minde, conſidering with himſelfe that if he ſhould keepe out that fleete from entring into the porte, a thing which he was very wel able to doe with the helpe of God, then ſhould that fleete be in danger of preſent ſhipwracke and loſſe of all their ſubſtance, which amounted vnto the valewe of one myllion and 800 thouſande crownes. Againe he ſaw that if he ſuffered them to enter, hee was aſſured that they would practiſe by all maner of meanes to betray him and his, and on the other ſide the hauen was ſo litle, that the other fleete entring, the ſhippes were to ride one hard aborde of another: alſo hee ſawe that if their fleete ſhould periſh by his keeping of them out, as of neceſſitie they muſt if he ſhould haue done ſo, then ſtoode he in great feare of the Queene our Soueraignes diſpleaſure in ſo weighty a cauſe, therefore did hee chooſe the leſt euill, which was to ſuffer them to enter vnder aſſurance, and ſo to ſtande vpon his garde, and to defende himſelfe and his from their treaſens which we were wel aſſured they would practiſe, and ſo the meſſenger being returned from Don Martine de Henriques, the new Viceroy, who came in the ſame Fleete, and had ſufficient authoritie to commaund in al cafes both by ſea and by land in this prouince of Mexico or new Spaine, did certifie our General, that for the better maintenance of amitie betweene the king of Spaine and our Soueraigne, all our requeſts ſhould bee both fauourably graunted, and faithfully performed: ſignifying further that he heard and vnderſtood of the honeſt and friendly dealing of our Generall, toward the King of Spaynes ſubiects in all places where he had bene, as alſo in the ſayde porte: ſo that to be briefe our requeſts were articled, and ſet downe in writing. viz.

1 The firſt was that wee might haue victuals for our money, and licenſe to ſell as much heere, as might ſuffice to furniſh our wants.

2 The ſecond, that we might be ſuffered peaceably to repayre our ſhippes.

3 The third that the Iland might bee in our poſſeſſion during the time of our abode there, In which Iland our Generall for the better ſafetie of him and his, had already planted and placed certaine ordinance which were eleuen peeces of braſſe, therefore hee required that the ſame might ſo continew, and that no Spaniard ſhould come to land in the ſayde Iland, hauing or bearing any kinde of weapon about him.

peace, and of all the conditions, there might twelue gentilmen of credite be deliuered of either part as hostages. These conditions were concluded and agreed vpon in writing by the viceroy and signed with his hande, and sealed with his seale, and tenne hostages vpon either part were receiued. And further it was concluded that the two Generals should meete, and giue faith eche to other for the performance of the promises. All which being done, the same was proclaymed by the sound of a trumpet, and commaundement was giuen that none of either part should violate or breake the peace vpon payne of death: thus at the end of three dayes all was concluded, and the fleete entred the port, the ships saluting one another as the manner of the sea doth require: the morow after being Friday we laboured on al sides in placing the English ships by themselues, and the Spanish ships by them selues, the captaines and inferiour persons of either part, offering, and shewing great curtesie one to another, and promising great amitie vpon all sides. Howbeit as the sequel shewed, the Spaniards ment nothing lesse vpon their parts. For the Viceroye, and gouernour thereabout, had secretly at land assembled to the number of 1000 chosen men, and well appoynted, meaning the next thursday being the 24 of September at dinner time to assault vs, and set vpon vs on all sides. But before I goe any further, I think it not amisse briefely to discribe the maner of the Iland as it then was, and the force & strength that it is now of. For the Spaniards since the time of our Generals being there, for the better fortifying of the same place, haue vpon the same Iland built a faire castle, and bulwarke very well fortified: this porte was then at our being there, a litle Iland of stones, not past three foote aboue water in the highest place, and not past a bow shotte ouer any way at the most, and it standeth from the mayne land, two bowshootes or more: and there is not in all this coast any other place for ships safely to arriue at: also the North windes in this coast are of great violence and force, and vnlesse the shippes bee safely mored in, with their ankers fastened in this Iland, there is no remedie, but present destruction and shipwracke. All this our generall wisely foreseeing, did prouide that hee would haue the sayde Iland in his custodie, or els the Spaniardes might at their pleasure, haue but cut our cables, and so with the first Northwinde that blewe wee had had our passport, for our shippes had gone a shore. But to returne to the matter. The time approching that their treason must bee put in practise, the same Thursday morning, some appearance thereof beganne to shewe it selfe, as shifting of weapon from shippe to shippe, and planting, and bending their ordinance against our men that warded vpon the lande, with great repayre of people: which apparant shewes of breache of the Viceroyes fayth, caused our Generall to sende one to the Viceroye, to enquire of him what was ment thereby, which presently sent and gaue order, that the ordinance aforesayde, and other things of suspicion shoulde bee remooued, returning answere to our Generall in the fayth of a Viceroye, that hee woulde bee our defense, and safetie from all villanous treacherye: this was vpon Thursday in the morning. Our Generall not being therewith satisfied, seeing they had secretly conuaied a great number of men aboorde a great hulke or ship of theyrs of 900 tunne, which shippe rode hard by the Mynion, hee sent againe to the Viceroy Robert Barret the master of the Iesus, a man that coulde speake the Spanish tongue very well, and required that those men might bee vnshipt againe, which were in that great hulke. The Viceroy then perceiuing that their treason was throughly espied, stayed our Master, and sounded the trumpet, and gaue order that his people should vpon all sides charge vpon our men, which warded on shore, and elsewhere, which strooke such a mase, and sudden feare among vs, that many gaue place, and sought to recouer our ships for the safetie of themselues. The Spaniards which secretly were hid in ambush at lande were quikly conuaied ouer to the Iland in their long boates, and so comming to the Iland, they slewe all our men that they coulde meete with, without any mercie. The Mynion which had somewhat before prepared her selfe to auoyde the danger, haled away and abode the first hunt, of the 300 men that were in the great hulke: then they sought to fall aboorde the Iesus, where was a cruel fight, and many of our men slayne: but yet our men defended themselues, and kept them out: so the Iesus also gotte loose, and ioyning with the Mynion, the fight waxed hot vpon all sides: but they hauing wonne and got our ordinance on shore, did greatly annoy vs. In this fight, there were two great ships of the Spaniards sunke, and one burnt, so that with their shippes they were not able to harme vs, but from the shore they beat vs cruelly with our owne ordinance, in such sort that the Iesus was very sore spoyled, and suddenly the Spaniards hauing fired two great shippes of their owne, they came directly against vs, which bred among our men a maruelous feare. Howbeit the Mynion which had made her sayles ready, shifted for her selfe, without consent of the Generall, captaine or master, so that very hardly our Generall could be receiued into the Mynion: the most of our men that were in the Iesus shifted for themselues ſelues, and followed the Minion in the boate, and thoſe which that ſmall boate was not able to receiue, were moſt cruelly ſlaine by the Spanyards. Of our ſhippes none eſcaped ſauing the Minion and the Iudith: and all ſuch of our men as were not in them were inforced to abide the tyrannous cruelty of the Spanyards. For it is a certaine trueth, that whereas they had taken certaine of our men at ſhoare, they tooke and hung them vp by the armes vpon high poſtes vntill the bloud burſt out of their fingers ends: of which men ſo vſed, there is one Copſlowe, and certaine others yet aliue, who through the mercifull prouidence of the almighty, were long ſince arriued here at home in England, carrying ſtill about with them (and ſhall to their graues) the markes and tokens of thoſe their inhumane and more then barbarous cruell dealing.

The third Chapter.

Wherein is ſhewed, how that after we were eſcaped from the Spanyards, we were like to periſh with famine at the Sea, and how our Generall, for the auoiding thereof was conſtrained to put halfe of his men on land, and what miſeryes wee after that ſuſtayned amongſt the Sauage people, and how we fell againe into the hands of the Spanyards.

After that the Vice Roy, Don Martin Henriques, had thus contrary to his faith and promiſe, moſt cruelly dealt with our Generall maiſter Hawkins, at S. Iohn de Vllua, where moſt of his men were by the Spanyards ſlaine and drowned, and all his ſhippes ſunke and burnt, ſauing the Minion, and the Iudith which was a ſmall barke of fiftie tunne, wherein was then captaine, maiſter Francis Drake, aforeſaid: the ſame night the ſaid barke loſt vs, we being in great neceſſitie, and inforced to remoue with the Minion two bowſhoote from the Spaniſh fleete, where we ankered all that night: and the next morning we weyed anker, and recouered an Iſland a mile from the Spanyards, where a ſtorme tooke vs with a North winde, in which we were greatly diſtreſſed, hauing but two cables, and two ankers left: for in the conflict before, we had loſt three cables and two ankers. The morrow after, the ſtorme being ceaſed, and the weather fayre, wee weyed, and ſet ſaile, being many men in number, and but ſmall ſtore of victuailes to ſuffice vs for any long time: by meanes whereof we were in diſpayre and feare that wee ſhould periſh through famine, ſo that ſome were in minde to yeelde themſelues to the mercie of the Spanyardes, other ſome to the Sauages or Infidels, and wandering thus certayne dayes in theſe vnknowne Seas, hunger conſtrained vs to eate hides, cattes and dogges, mice, rattes, parats and munkyes: to be ſhort, our hunger was ſo great, that wee thought it ſauourie and ſweete, whatſoeuer we could get to eate.

And on the eight of October we came to lande againe, in the bottome of the bay of Mexico, where we hoped to haue found ſome inhabitants, that we might haue had ſome reliefe of victuailes, and a place where to repayre our ſhippe, which was ſo greatly bruiſed, that wee were vnable with our weary armes to keepe cooth the water: being thus oppreſſed with famine on the one ſide, and danger of drowning on the other, not knowing where to finde reliefe, we began to be in woonderfull deſpayre, and we were of many mindes, amongſt whome there were a great many that did deſire our Generall to ſet them on lande, making they choyſe rather to ſubmit themſelues to the mercie of the Sauages or Infidels then longer to hazard themſelues at Sea, where they very well ſaw, that if they ſhould all remayne together, if they periſhed not by drowning, yet hunger would inforce them in the ende to eate one another: to which requeſt our Generall did very willingly agree, conſidering with himſelfe that it was neceſſary for him to leſſen his number, both for the ſafetie of himſelfe and the reſt: and thereupon being reſolued to ſet halfe his people on ſhoare that hee had then left aliue, it was a woonder to ſee howe ſuddenlie mens mindes were altered, for they which a little before deſired to be ſet on land, were nowe of another minde, and requeſted rather to ſtay: by meanes whereof our Generall was inforced, for the more contentation of all mens mindes, and to take away all occaſions of offence, to take this order: Firſt hee made choyſe of ſuche perſons of ſeruice and account, as were needefull to ſtay, and that being done, of thoſe which were willing to goe he appointed ſuch as hee thought might be beſt ſpared, and preſently appointed that by the boate they ſhould be ſet on ſhoare, our Generall promiſing vs that the next yeere he would either come himſelfe, or elſe ſende to fetche vs home. Heere agayne it would haue caused any stoup heart to haue relented to heare the pitifull mone that many did make, and how loth they were to depart: the weather was then somewhat stormie and tempestuous, and therefore we were to passe with great danger, yet notwithstanding there was no remedy, but we that were appointed to goe away, must of necessitie doe so. Howbeit those that went in the first boate were safelie set a shoare, but of them which went in the second boate, of which number I my selfe was one, the seas wrought so high, that we could not attayne to the shoare, and therefore we were constrayned through the cruell dealing of John Hampton captaine of the Minion, and John Sanders boatswaine of the Jesus, and Thomas Pollard his mate, to leape out of the boate into the maine Sea, hauing more then a mile to shoare, and so to shift for our selues, and either to sincke or swimme. And of those that so were (as it were) thrown out, and compelled to leape into the Sea, there were two drowned, which were of captaine Blands men.

In the euening of the same day, it being Sunday the eight of October, 1568, when we were all come to shoare, we found fresh water, whereof some of our men drunke so much, that they had almost cast themselues away, for we could scarse get life in them for the space of two or three hours after: other some were so cruelly swollen, what with the drinking in of the salt water, and what with the eating of the fruite which wee found on lande, hauing a stone in it much like an almond (which fruite is called Capule) that they were all in very ill case, so that we were in a manner all of vs both feeble, faint and weake.

The next morning it being Tuesday, the ninth of October, we thought it best to trauell along by the Sea coast, to seeke out some place of habitation: whether they were Christians or Sauages, we were indifferent, so that wee might haue wherewithall to sustaine our hungrie bodyes, and so departing from an hill where wee had rested all night, not hauing any dry threed about vs, for those that were not wet being throwne into the Sea, were throughly wet with raine, for all the night it rained cruelly: As we went from the hill, and were come into the plaine, we were greatly troubled to passe for the grasse and woods that grew there higher then any man. On the left hand we had the Sea, and vpon the right hand great woods, so that of necessitie we must needes past on our way Westward, though those marshes, and going thus, suddenly we were assaulted by the Indians, a warlike kinde of people, which are in a maner as Canibals, although they do not feed vpon mans flesh as Canibals do.

Chichemici a warlike and cruell people.

These people are called Chichemici, and they vse to weare their haire long, euen downe to their knees, they doe also colour their faces greene, yellow, red and blew, which maketh them to seeme very ougly and terrible to beholde. These people doe keepe warres against the Spanyards, of whome they haue beene oftentimes very cruelly handled: for with the Spanyards there is no mercy. They perceiuing vs at our first comming on land, supposed vs to haue beene their enemies, the bordering Spanyards, and hauing by their forerunners descryed what number wee were, and how feeble and weake without armour or weapon, they suddenly according to their accustomed maner, when they encounter with any people in warlike sort, raysed a terrible and huge crie, and so came running fiercely vpon vs, shooting off their arrowes as thicke as haile, into whose mercy we were constrained to yeeld, not hauing amongst vs any kinde of armour, nor yet weapon, sauing one caliuer, and two olde rustie swoordes, whereby to make any resistance, or to saue our selues: which when they perceiued, that we sought not any other then fauour and mercy at their hands, and that we were not their enemies the Spanyards, they had compassion on vs, and came and caused vs all to sit downe: and when they had a while surueyed, and taken a perfect view of vs, they came to all such as had any coloured clothes amongst vs, and those they did stripp starke naked, and tooke their clothes away with them, but they that were apparelled in blacke they did not meddle withall, and so went their wayes, and left vs, without doing vs any further hurt, onely in the first hunt they killed eight of our men. And at our departure, they perceiuing in what weake case we were, pointed vs with their hands which way we should goe to come to a towne of the Spanyards, which as we afterwards perceiued, was not past ten leagues from thence, vsing these words: Tampeco, tampeco Christiano, tampeco Christiano, which is as much (we thinke) as to say in English, Go that way, and you shall finde the Christians. The weapons that they vse are no other but bowes and arrowes, and their aime is so good, that they very seldome misse to hit any thing that they shoot at. Shortly after they had left vs stripe (as aforesaid) we thought it best to diuide our selues into two companies, and so being separated, halfe of vs went vnder the leading of one Anthony Godard, who is yet a man aliue, and dwelleth at this instant in the towne of Plimmouth, whom before we chose to be captaine ouer vs all, and those which went vnder his leading, of which number I Miles Phillips was one, trauelled Westward that way which the Indians with their hands had before pointed vs to go. The other halfe went vnder the leading of of one Iohn Hooper, whome they did choose for their captaine, and with the company that went with him, Dauid Ingram was one, and they tooke their way and trauelled Northward, and shortly after, within the space of two dayes, they were againe incountred with the sauage people, and their captaine Hooper and two more of his company were slaine: then againe they diuided themselues, and some held on their way still Northward, and other some, knowing that we were gone Westward, sought to meet with vs againe, as in truth there was about the number of fiue & twentie or sixe and twentie of them that mette with vs in the space of foure dayes againe, and then we began to reckon amongst our selues, how many we were that were set on shoare, and we found the number to be an hundred & foureteene, whereof two were drowned in the Sea, and eight were slaine at the first incounter, so that there remained an hundred and foure, of which fiue and twentie went Westward with vs, and two and fiftie to the North with Hooper and Ingram: and as Ingram since hath often tolde me, there were not past three of their company slaine, and there were but sixe and twenty of them that came againe to vs, so that of the company that went Northward, there is yet lacking, and not certainely heard of, the number of three and twentie men. And verely I doe thinke that there are of them yet aliue, and marryed in the sayd countrey, at Sibola, as hereafter I purpose (God willing) to discourse of more particularly, with the reason and causes that make me so to thinke of thē that were lacking, which were Dauid Ingram, Twide, Browne, and sundry others, whose names we could not remember. And being thus met againe together, we trauelled on still Westward, sometime through such thicke woods, that we were inforced with angels to breake away the brambles and bushes from tearing our naked bodies: other some times we should trauell through the plaines, in such high grasse that we could scarse see one another, and as we passed in some places, we should haue of our men slaine, and fall downe suddenly, being stricken by the Indians, which stood behinde trees and bushes, in secret places, and so killed our men as they went by, for we went scatteringly in seeking of fruits to relieue our selues. Wee were also oftentimes greatly annoyed with a kinde of flie, which in the Indian tongue is called Tequani, and the Spanyards called them Musketas. There are also in the sayd countrey a number of other kinde of flies, but none so noysome as these Tequanies be: you shall hardly see them they be so small, for they are scarse so bigge as a gnat: they will sucke ones blood maruellously, and if you kill them while they are sucking, they are so venemous that the place will swell extremely, euen as one that is stoong with a waspe or bee: but if you let them sucke their fill, and to goe away of themselues, then they doe you no other hurt, but leaue behinde them a redde spotte somewhat bigger then a fleabiting. At the first we were terriblie troubled with these kinde of flies, not knowing their quallities, and resistance we coulde make none against them, being naked: as for colde we feared not any, the countrey there is alwayes so warme. And as we trauelled thus for the space of tenne or twelue dayes, our captaine did oftentimes cause certaine to goe vpinto the toppes of high trees, to see if they could descrie any towne or place of inhabitants, but they coulde not perceiue any, and vsing often the same order to climbe vp into high trees, at the length they descryed a great riuer that fell from the Northwest in the maine Sea, and presentlie after, we heard an harquebusse shotte off, which did greatly incourage vs, for thereby we knew that we were neere to some Christians, and did therefore hope shortly to finde some succour and comfort, and within the space of one houre after, as we trauelled, we heard a cocke crowe, which was also no small ioy vnto vs, and so we came to the North side of the riuer of Panuco, where the Spanyards haue certaine Salines, at which place it was that the harquebusse was shot off, which before we heard: to which place we went not directly, but missing thereof, we left it about a bowshoot vpon our left hand: of this riuer we dranke very greedilie, for we had not mette with any water in sixe dayes before, and as we were heere by the riuer side resting our selues, and longing to come to the place where the cocke did crowe, and where the harquebusse was shot off, we perceiued many Spanyardes vpon the other side of the riuer, riding vp and downe on horsseback, and they perceiuing vs, did suppose that wee had beene of the Indians their bordering enemies, the Chichemici, the riuer was not past halfe a bowe shoot ouer: and presently one of the Spanyards tooke an Indian boate called a Canoa, and so came ouer, being rowed by two Indians, and hauing taken the view of vs, did presently rowe ouer backe againe to the Spanyards, who without any delay made out about the number of twentie horssemen, and imbarking themselues in the Canoas, they led their horsses by the reines swimming ouer after them, and being come ouer to that side of the riuer where wee were, they sadled their horsses, and being mounted vpon them with their launces charged, they came very fiercely, running at vs. Our captaine Anthony Godard seeing them come in that order, did persuade vs to submitte and yeelde our liues vnto them, for beeing naked, as wee at this time were, and without weapon, we could not make any resistance, whose bidding wee obeyed, and vpon the yeelding of our selues, they perceiued vs to be Christians, and did call for more Canoas, and carryed vs ouer by foure and foure in a boate, and being come on the other side, they vnderstanding by our captaine how long we had beene without meate, imparted betweene two and two a loafe of bread made of that countrey wheate, which the Spanyardes call Mayse, of the bignesse of one of our halfpennie loaues, which bread is named in the Indian tongue Clashacally. This bread was very sweet and pleasant vnto vs, for wee had not eaten any in a long time before, and what is it that hunger doth not make to haue a sauory and a delicate taste? and hauing thus imparted the bread amongst vs, those which were men they sent afore to the Towne, hauing also many Indians inhabitants of that place to garde them: they which were young, as boyes, and some such also as were feeble, they tooke vp vpon their horses, behinde them, and so carryed vs to the Towne where they dwelt, which was very neere distant a mile from the place where we came ouer.

This Towne is well situated, and well replenished with all kindes of fruites, as Orinages, Limmons, Pomgranets, Apricoks, and Peaches, and sundry others, and is inhabited with a great number of tame Indians, or Mexicans, and had in it also at that time about the number of two hundred Spanyards, men, women, and children, besides Negroes. Of their Salines, which lie vpon the West side of the riuer, more then a mile distant from thence, they make a great profite, for it is an excellent good merchandize there: the Indians doe buy much thereof, and carrie it vp into the Countrey, and there sell it to their owne Countrey people, in doubling the price. Also much of the Salt made in this place, is transported from thence by Sea to sundry other places, as to Cuba, S. Iohn de Vllua, and the other Portes of Tamiago, and Tamachos, which are two barred Hauens West and by South aboue threescore leagues from S. Iohn de Vllua. When we were all come to the Towne, the Gouernour there shewed himselfe very seuere vnto vs, and threatened to hang vs all: and then he demanded what money wee had, which in truth was very little, for the Indians which we first met withall, had in a maner taken all from vs, and of that which they left, the Spanyardes which brought vs ouer, tooke away a good part also: howbeit, from Anthony Godard the Gouernour heere had a chaine of golde, which was giuen vnto him at Carthagena, by the Gouernour there: and from others he had some small store of money: so that we accounted that amongst vs all he had the number of fiue hundred Pezoes, besides the chaine of golde.

And hauing thus satisfied himselfe, when he had taken all that we had, he caused vs to be put into a little house much like a Hogstie, where we were almost smoothered: and before we were thus shutte vp into that little coate, they gaue vs some of the Countrey wheat, called Mayse, sodden, which they feed their Hogges withall. But many of our men which had beene hurt by the Indians at our first comming on land, whose wounds were very sore and grieuous, desired to haue the helpe of their Surgions to cure their wounds. The Gouernour, and most of them all answered, that we should haue none other Surgion but the hangman, which should sufficiently heale vs of all our griefes: and thus reuiling vs, and calling vs English dogges, and Lutheran heretikes, we remayned the space of three dayes in this miserable state, not knowing what should become of vs, waiting euery houre to be bereaued of our liues.

The fourth Chapter.

Wherein is shewed how we were vsed in Panuco, and in what feare of death we were there, and how we were carryed to Mexico to the Vice Roy, and of our imprisonment there and at Tescuco, with the courtesies and cruelties wee receiued during that time, and how in the end we were by proclamation giuen to serue as slaues to sundrie Gentlemen Spanyardes.

VPon the fourth day after our comming thither, and there remayning in a perplexitie, looking euery houre when we should suffer death, there came a great number of Indians and Spanyardes weaponed to fetch vs out of the house, and amongst them we espyed one that brought a great many of newe halters, at the sight whereof wee were greatly amazed, and made no other account but that we should presently haue suffered death, and so crying and calling to God for mercy and for forgiuenesse of our sinnes, we prepared our selues, making vs ready to die, yet in the end, as the sequell shewed, their meaning was not so: for when we were come out of the house, with those halters they bound our armes behinde vs, and so so coupling vs two and two together, they commanded vs to march on through the Towne, and so along the country from place to place toward the citie of Mexico, which is distant from Panuco West and by South the space of threescore leagues, having onely but two Spanyards to conduct vs, they being accompanyed with a great number of Indians warding on either side with bowes and arrowes, least we should escape from them. And trauelling in this order, vpon the second day at night we came vnto a Towne which the Indians call Nohele, and the Spanyardes call it Santa Maria: in which Towne there is a house of White fryers, which did very courteously relieue vs, and gaue vs hote meat, as mutton and broth, and garments also to couer our selues withall, made of white bayes: we fed very greedily of the meat, and of the Indian fruite, called Nochole, which fruite is long and small, much like in fashion to a little Cowcumber. Our greedie feeding caused vs to fall sicke of hote burning agues. And heere at this place one Thomas Baker one of our men died of a hurt: for he had beene before shot in with an arrowe into the throat at the first incounter.

The next morrow about ten of the clocke, we departed from thence, bound two & two together, and garded as before, and so trauelled on our way toward Mexico, till we came to a towne within fiue leagues of Mexico, named Mesticlan, where is a house of Blacke fryers: and in this towne there are about the number of three hundred Spanyards, both men, women, and children. The fryers sent vs meat from the house ready dressed, and the fryers, and men and women, vsed vs very courteously, and gaue vs some shirts and other such things as we lacked. Heere our men were very sicke of their agues, and with eating of another fruite called in the Indian tongue, Guiaccos, which fruite did binde vs so fore, that for the space of tenne or twelue dayes we could not ease our selues. The next morning we departed from thence with our two Spanyards & Indian gard, as aforesaid. Of these two Spanyards the one was an aged man, who all the way did very courteously intreat vs, and would carefully goe before to prouide for vs both meat and things necessary to the vttermost of his power: the other was a yoong man, who all the way trauelled with vs, and neuer departed from vs, who was a very cruell caitiffe, and he carryed a iauelin in his hand, and sometimes when as our men with very feeblenesse and faintnesse were not able to goe so fast as he required them, he would take his iauelin in both his hands, and stricke them with the same betweene the necke and the shoulders so violently, that hee would strike them downe, then would he cry, and say: Marches, marches Engleses perros, Luterianos, enemicos de Dios: which is as much to say in English: March, march on you English dogges, Lutherans, enemies to God. And the next day we came to a towne called Pachuca, and there are two places of that name: as this towne of Pachuca, and the mines of Pachuca, which are mines of siluer, and are about fiue leagues distant from this towne of Pachuca towardes the Northwest.

Heere at this towne the good olde man our Gouernour suffered vs to stay two dayes and two nights, hauing compassion of our sicke and weake men, full fore against the minde of the yoong man his companion. From thence we tooke our iourney, and trauelled foure or fiue dayes by little villages, and Stantias, which are Farmes or Dairie houses of the Spanyardes, and euer as we had neede, the good olde man would still prouide vs sufficient of meates, fruites, and water to sustaine vs. At the end of which fiue dayes wee came to a towne within fiue leagues of Mexico, which is called Quoghliclan, where we also stayed one whole day and two nights, where was a fayre house of Gray fryers, howbeit, we sawe none of them. Heere we were tolde by the Spanyards in the Towne, that we had not past fifteene English miles from thence to Mexico, whereat we were all very ioyfull and glad, hoping that when we came thither, we should either be relieued, and set free out of bondes, or els be quickely dispatched out of our liues: for seeing our selues thus carryed bound from place to place, although some vsed vs courteously, yet could wee neuer ioy, nor be merry till we might perceiue our selues set free from that bondage, either by death or otherwise.

The next morning we departed from thence on our iourney towardes Mexico, and so trauelled till we came within two leagues of it, where there was built by the Spanyards a very fayre church, called our Lady church, in which there is an image of our Lady of siluer and gilt, being as high & as large as a tall woman, in which church, and before this image, there are as many lamps of siluer as there be dayes in the yeere, which vpon high dayes are all lighted. Whensoeuer any Spanyards passe by this church, although they be on horsebacke, they will alight, and come into the church, & kneele before this image, and pray to our Lady to defend them from all euill: so that whether he be horsman or footman he will not passe by, but first goe into the church, and pray as aforesaid, which if they doe not, they thinke and beleeue that they shall neuer prosper, which image they call in the Spanish tongue, Nostra signora de Guadalupe. At this place there are certaine colde baths, which arise, springing vp as though the water did seethe: the water whereof is somewhat brackish in taste, but very good for any that haue any sore or wound, to wash themselues therewith, for as they say, it healeth many: and euery yeere once vpon our Lady day the people vse to repayre thither to offer, and to pray in that Church before the image, and they say that our Lady of Guadalupe doeth worke a number of miracles. About this Church there is not any towne of Spanyards that is inhabited, but certaine Indians doe dwell there in houses of their owne countrey building.

Heere wee were met with a great number of Spanyards on horsseback, which came from Mexico to see vs, both gentlemen, and men of occupations, and they came as people to see a wonder: wee were still called vpon to march on, and so about foure of the clocke in the afternoone of the said day we entred into the citie of Mexico, by the way or street called La calia Sancta Catherina: and wee stayed not in any place till wee came to the house or pallace of the Vice Roy, Don Martin Henriques, which standeth in the middell of the city, hard by the market place, called La plaça dell Marquese. Wee had not stayed any long time at this place, but there was brought vs by the Spanyards from the market place great store of meat, sufficient to haue satisfied fiue times so many as we were: some also gaue vs hats, and some gaue vs money: in which place we stayed for the space of two houres, and from thence wee were conueyed by water in to large Canoas to an hospitall where as certaine of our men were lodged, which were taken before the fight at S. Iohn de Vllua: wee should haue gone to our Ladies hospitall, but that there were also so many of our men taken before at that fight that there was no roome for vs. After our comming thither, many of the company that came with me from Panuco died within the space of fouretene dayes: soone after which time we were taken forth from that place, and put altogether into our Ladyes hospitall, in which place wee were courteously vsed, and visited oftentimes by vertuous gentlemen and gentlewomen of the citie, who brought vs diuers things to comfort vs withall, as succats and marmilads, and such other thinges, and would also many times giue vs many things, and that very liberally. In which hospitall we remayned for the space of sixe moneths, vntill we were all whole and sound of body, and then wee were appointed by the Vice Roy to be carryed vnto the towne of Tescuko, which is from Mexico Southwest distant eight leagues: in which towne there are certaine houses of correction and punishment for ill people called Obraches, like to Bridewell here in London: into which place diuers Indians are solde for slaues, some for ten yeeres, and some for twelue. It was no small griefe vnto vs when wee vnderstood that we should be carryed thither, and to be vsed as slaues, wee had rather be put to death: howbeit there was no remedy, but we were carryed to the prison of Tescuko, where we were not put to any labour, but were very straitly kept, and almost famished, yet by the good prouidence of our mercifull God, we happened there to meete with one Robert Sweeting, who was the sonne of an English man borne of a Spanish woman: this man could speake very good English, and by his meanes wee were holpen very much with victualles from the Indians, as mutton, hennes, and bread. And if we had not beene so relieued, we had surely perished: and yet all the prouision that we had gotten that way was but slender. And continuing thus straightly kept in prison there for the space of two moneths, at the length wee agreed amongst our selues to breake forth of prison, come of it what would, for wee were minded rather to suffer death then longer to liue in that miserable state.

And so hauing escaped out of prison, we knew not what way to flie for the safetie of our selues, the night was darke, and it rayned terribly, and not hauing any guide, we went we knew not whither, and in the morning, at the appearing of the day, wee perceiued our selues to be come hard to the citie of Mexico, which is foure & twentie English miles from Tescuko. The day being come we were espyed by the Spanyards, and pursued, and taken, and brought before the Vice Roy and head iustices, who threatned to hang vs for breaking of the kings prison. Yet in the end they sent vs into a garden belonging to the Vice Roy, and comming thither, wee found there our English gentlemen which were deliuered as hostages when as our generall was betrayed at S. Iohn de Vllua, as is afore said, and with them we also found Robert Barret, the Maister of the Iesus, in which place we remayned labouring and doing such things as we were commanded, for the space of foure moneths, hauing but two sheepe a day allowed to suffice vs all, being very neere a hundred men, and for bread, wee had euery man two loaues a day, of the quantity of one halfepennie loafe. At the end of which foure moneths, they hauing remooued our gentlemen hostages, and the Maister of the Iesus to a prison in the Vice Roy his owne house, did cause it to be proclaimed, that what gentleman Spanyard soeuer was willing, or would haue any English man to serue him, and be bound to keepe him forth comming, to appeare before the Iustices within one moneth after notice giuen, that they should repayre to the said garden, and there take their choice: which proclamation was no ſooner made, but the gentlemen came and repaired to the garden amaine, ſo that happie was he that could ſooneſt get one of vs.

The 5. Chapter.

Wherein is ſhewed in what good ſort, and how wealthily we liued with our maſters vntill the comming of the Inquiſition, when as agayne our ſorowes began a freſh: Of our impriſonment in the holy houſe, and of the ſeuere iudgement and ſentences giuen againſt vs, and with what rigour and crueltie the ſame were executed.

THe gentlemẽ that thus tooke vs for their ſeruants or ſlaues, did new apparrel vs throughout, with whom we abode, doing ſuch ſeruice as they appointed vs vnto, which was for the moſt part to attend vpon them at the table, and to bee as their chamberlaines, and to waite vpon them when they went abroade, which they greatly accounted of: for in that countrey no Spaniard will ſerue one another, but they are all of them attended and ſerued by Indians weekely, and by Negroes which be their ſlaues during their life. In this ſort we remained and ſerued in the ſaid citie of Mexico, and thereaboutes for the ſpace of a yeere and ſomewhat longer. Afterwards many of vs were by our maſters appointed to go to ſundry of their Mines where they had to doe, and to bee as ouerſeers of the Negroes and Indians that laboured there. In which Mines many of vs did profite and gaine greatly: for firſt we were allowed three hundred Pezoes a man by a yeere, which is three ſcore pound ſterling, and beſides that the Indians and Negroes which wrought vnder our charge, vpon our well vſing and intreating of them, would at times as vpon Saturdayes whẽ they had left worke, labour for vs, & blow as much ſilver as ſhould be worth vnto vs 3. marks or thereabouts, euery marke being worth 6. Pezoes, & a halfe of their mony, which 19. Pezoes & a half, is worth 4. li. 10. s. of our mony. Sundrie weeks we did gaine ſo much by this meanes beſides our wages, that many of vs became very rich, and were worth three thouſand or foure thouſand Pezoes, for wee liued and gained thus in thoſe Mines ſome three or foure yeeres. As concerning thoſe Gentlemen which were deliuered as hoſtages, and that were kept in priſon, in the Viceroy his houſe, after that we were gone from out the garden to ſerue ſundry Gentlemen as aforeſaid, they remained priſoners in the ſayde houſe for the ſpace of foure moneths after their comming thither, at the ende whereof the Fleete beyng readie to depart from S. Iohn de Vllua, to goe for Spaine, the ſaid Gentlemen were ſent away into Spaine with the fleete, where as I haue heard it credibly reported, many of them died with the cruell handling of the Spaniards in the Inquiſition houſe, as thoſe which haue bene deliuered home after they had ſuffered the perſecution of that houſe can more perfectly declare. Robert Barret alſo the maſter of the Jeſus, was ſent away with the fleete into Spaine the next yeere following, where afterwards he ſuffered perſecution in the Inquiſition, and at the laſt was condemned to bee burnt, and with him three or foure more of our men, of whom one was named Gregorie, and another John Browne, whom I knew, for they were of our Generall his Muſitians, but the names of the reſt that ſuffered with them I know not.

Now after that ſixe yeeres were fully expired ſince our firſt comming into the Indies, in which time we had bene impriſoned and ſerued in the ſaid countreys as is before truely declared, In the yeere of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie foure, the Inquiſition begamne to be eſtabliſhed in the Indies, very much againſt the mindes of many of the Spaniards themſelues: for neuer vntill this time ſince their firſt conquering and planting in the Indies, were they ſubiect to that bloodie and cruell Inquiſition. The chiefe Inquiſitor was named Don Pedro Moya de Contreres, and Iohn de Bouilla his companion, and Iohn Sanchis the Fiſchall, and Pedro de la Rios, the Secretarie: they being come and ſetled, and placed in a very faire houſe neere vnto the white Friers, conſidering with themſelues that they muſt make an entrance and beginning of that their moſt deteſtable Inquiſition here in Mexico, to the terrour of the whole country, thought it beſt to call vs that were Engliſhmen firſt in queſtion, and ſo much the rather, for that they had perfect knowledge and intelligence, that many of vs were become very rich, as hath bene alreadie declared, and therefore we were a very good bootie and praie to the Inquiſitors: ſo that now again began our ſorowes a freſh, for we were ſent for, and ſought out in all places of the countrey, and proclamation made vpon paine of looſing of goods, and excommunication, that no man ſhould hide or keepe ſecret any Engliſhman or any part of their goods. By meanes whereof we were all ſoone apprehended in all places, and all our goods ſeized and taken for the Inquiſitors vſe, and ſo from all partes of the countrey we were conueied and sent as prisoners to the citie of Mexico, and there committed to prison in sundry darke dungeons, where we could not see but by candle light, & were neuer past two together in one place, so that we sawe not one another, neither could one of vs tell what was become of an other. Thus we remained close imprisoned for the space of a yeere and a halfe, and others for some lesse time, for they came to prison euer as they were apprehended. During which time of our imprisonment, at the first beginning we were often called before the Inquisitors alone, and there seuerely examined of our faith, and commanded to say the Pater noster, the Aue Maria, and the Creed in Latin, which God knoweth a great number of vs could not say, otherwise then in the English tongue. And hauing the said Robert Sweeting who was our friend at Tescuco alwayes present with thē for an interpreter, he made report for vs, þ in our owne country speach, we could say them perfectly, although not word for word as they were in Latin. Then did they proceed to demaund of vs vpon our othes what we did beleeue of the Sacrament, & whether there did remaine any bread or wine after the words of consecration, yea or no, and whether we did not beleeue that the host of bread which the priest did hold vp ouer his head, and the wine that was in the chalice, was the very true and perfect body & blood of our Sauiour Christ, yea or no: To which if we answered not yea, then was there no way but death. Then they would demaund of vs what we did remember of our selues, what opinions we had held, or had bin taught to hold contrary to the same whiles we were in England: to which we for the safetie of our liues were cōstrained to say, that we neuer did beleeue, nor had bene taught otherwise then as before we had said. Then would they charge vs that we did not tel them the trueth, that they knew to the contrary, and therfore we should call our selues to remembrance, & make them a better answer at the next time, or els we should be rackt, and made to confesse the trueth whether we would or no. And so comming againe before them the next time, we were still demaunded of our beliefe whiles we were in England, and how we had bene taught, & also what we thought or did know of such of our owne company as they did name vnto vs, so that we could neuer be free from such demands, and at other times they would promise vs, that if we would tell them trueth, then should we haue fauour & be set at libertie, although we very wel knew their faire speaches were but meanes to intrap vs, to the hazard and losse of our liues: howbeit God so mercifully wrought for vs by a secret meanes that wee had, that we kept vs still to our first answer, & would stil say that we had told the trueth vnto them, and knew no more by our selues nor any other of our fellowes then as we had declared, and that for our sinnes and offences in England against God and our Ladie, or any of his blessed saintes, we were heartily sory for the same, and did crie God mercy, and besought the Inquisitors for Gods sake, considering that we came into those countries by force of weather, and against our wils, and that neuer in all our liues we had either spoken or done any thing contrary to their lawes, that therfore they would haue mercy vpon vs, yet all this would not serue: for still from time to time we were called vpon to confesse, and about the space of 3. moneths before, they proceeded to their seuere iudgement, we were all rackt, and some enforced to vtter that against themselues, which afterwards cost them their liues. And thus hauing gotten from our own mouthes matter sufficient for thē to proceed in iudgement against vs, they caused a large scaffold to be made in the middest of the market place in Mexico right ouer against the head church, & 14. or 15. dayes before the day of their iudgement, with the sound of a trumpet, and the noise of their Attabalies, which are a kind of drummes, they did assemble the people in all partes of the citie, before whom it was then solemnly proclaimed, that whosoeuer would vpon such a day repaire to the market place, they should heare the sentence of the holy Inquisition against the English heretikes, Lutheranes, and also see the same put in execution. Which being done, and the time approching of this cruell iudgement, the night before they came to the prison where we were, with certaine officers of that holy hellish house, bringing with them certain fooles coats which they had prepared for vs, being called in their language S. Benitos, which coats were made of yealow cotton & red crosses vpon them, both before & behind: they were so busied in putting on their coates about vs, and in bringing vs out into a large yard, and placing and pointing vs in what order we should go to the scaffold or place of iudgement, vpon the morow, that they did not once suffer vs to sleepe all that night long. The next morning being come, there was giuen to euery one of vs for our breakfast a cuppe of wine, and a slice of bread fried in honie, and so about eight of the clocke in the morning, wee set foorth of the prison, euery man alone in his yealow coate, and a rope about his necke, and a great greene Waxe candle in his hand vnlighted, hauyng a Spaniard appointed to go vpon eyther side of euery one of vs: and so marching in this order and maner toward the Scaffold in the Market place, which was a bowe shoote distant or thereaboutes, wee found a great assemblie of people all the way, and such throng, that certayne of the Inquisitors officers on horsebacke were constrained to make way, and ſo comming to the Scaffold, wee went vp by a paire of ſtaires, and found ſeates readie made and prepared for vs to ſit downe on, euery man in order as he ſhould be called to receiue his iudgement. We being thus ſet downe as we were appointed, preſently the Inquiſitors came vp another paire of ſtaires, and the Viceroy and all the chiefe Juſtices with them. When they were ſet downe and placed vnder the cloth of eſtate agreeing to their degrees and calling, then came vp alſo a great number of Friers, white, blacke and gray, about the number of 300. perſons, they being ſet in the places for them appointed. Then was there a ſolemne Oyes made, and ſilence commanded, and then preſently began their ſeuere and cruell iudgement.

The cruell iudgements of the Spaniſh Inquiſitors vpõ our poore countreymen.

The firſt man that was called was one Roger the chiefe Armourer of the Jeſus, and hee had iudgement to haue three hundred ſtripes on horſebacke, and after condemned to the gallies as a ſlaue for 10. yeeres.

After him was called John Gray, John Browne, John Rider, John Moone, James Collier, and one Thomas Browne: theſe were adiudged to haue 200. ſtripes on horſebacke, and after to be committed to the Gallies for the ſpace of 8. yeeres.

Then was called John Keies, and was adiudged to haue 100. ſtripes on horſeback, and condemned to ſerue in the gallies for the ſpace of 6. yeeres.

Then were ſeuerally called the number of 53. one after another, and euery man had his ſeuerall iudgement, ſome to haue 200. ſtripes on horſeback, and ſome 100. and condemned for ſlaues to the gallies, ſome for 6. yeeres, ſome for 8. and ſome for 10.

And then was I Miles Philips called, and was adiudged to ſerue in a monaſterie for 5. yeeres, without any ſtripes, and to weare a fooles coate, or S. Benito, during all that time.

Then were called John Stozie, Richard Williams, Dauid Alexander, Robert Cooke, and Horſewell and Thomas Hull: theſe ſixe were condemned to ſerue in monaſteries without ſtripes, ſome for 3. yeeres and ſome for foure, and to weare the S. Benito during all the ſaid time. Which being done, and it now drawing towards night, George Riuelie, Peter Pomfrie, and Cornelius the Iriſhman, were called, and had their iudgement to be burnt to aſhes, and ſo were preſently ſent away to the place of execution in the market place but a litle from the ſcaffold, where they were quickly burnt and conſumed. And as for vs that had receiued our iudgement, being 68. in number, we were caried backe that night to priſon againe. And the next day in ẏ morning being good Friday, the yeere of our Lord 1575. we were all brought into a court of ẏ Inquiſitors pallace, where we found a horſe in a readineſſe for euery one of our men which were condemned to haue ſtripes, and to be committed to the gallies, which were in number 60. and ſo they being inforced to mount vp on horſebacke naked from the middle vpward, were caried to be ſhewed as a ſpectacle for all the people to behold throughout the chiefe and principall ſtreetes of the Citie, and had the number of ſtripes to euery one of them appointed, moſt cruelly layd vpon their naked bodies with long whips by ſundry men appointed to be the executioners thereof: & before our men there went a couple of criers which cried as they went, Behold theſe Engliſh dogs, Lutherans, enemies to God, and all the way as they went, there were ſome of the Inquiſitors themſelues, and of the familiars of that vnchriſtian order, that cried to the executioners, Strike, lay on thoſe Engliſh heretikes, Lutherans, Gods enemies: and ſo this horrible ſpectacle being ſhewed round about the citie, and they returned to the Inquiſitors houſe, with their backes all gore blood, and ſwollen with great bumps, they were then taken from their horſes, & caried againe to priſon, where they remained vntill they were ſent into Spaine to the gallies, there to receiue the reſt of their martyrdome, and I and the 6. other with me which had iudgement, and were condemned amongſt the reſt to ſerue an apprentiſhip in the monaſteries, were taken preſently & ſent to certaine religious houſes appointed for the purpoſe.

The 6. Chapter.

Wherein is ſhewed how we were vſed in the religious houſes, and that when the time was expired, that wee were adiudged to ſerue in them, there came newes to Mexico of M. Francis Drakes being in the South Sea, & what preparation was made to take him, and how I ſeeking to eſcape, was againe taken and put in priſon at Vera Cruz, and how againe I made mine eſcape from thence.

MIles Phillips and William Lowe, were appointed to the blacke Friers, where I was appointed to be an ouerſeer of Indian workemen, who wrought there in building of a new church: amongſt which Indians I learned their language or Mexican tongue very perfectly, and had great familiaritie with many of them, whom I found to bee a

curteous and louing kind of people, ingenious, and of great vnderstanding, and they hate & abhorre the Spaniards with all their hearts, they haue vsed such horrible cruelties against them, and doe still keepe them in such subiection and seruitude, that they and the Negroes also doe daily lie in waite to practise their deliuerance out of that thraldome and bondage, that the Spaniards doe keepe them in. William Lowe he was appointed to serue the Cooke in the kitchin, Richard Williams and Dauid Alexander were appointed to the gray Friers, John Story and Robert Cooke to the white Friers: Paule Horsewell the Secretarie tooke to be his seruant: Thomas Hul was sent to a monasterie of priests, where afterward he died. Thus we serued out the yeeres that wee were condemned for, with the vse of our fooles coates, and we must needes confesse that the Friers did vse vs very curteously: for euery one of vs had his chamber with bedding and diet, & all things cleane and neat: yea many of the Spaniards and Friers themselues doe vtterly abhorre and mislike of that cruell Inquisition, and would as they durst bewaile our miseries, and comfort vs the best they could, although they stood in such feare of that diuelish Inquisition, that they durst not let the left hand know what the right doeth. Now after that the time was expired for which we were condemned to serue in those religious houses, wee were then brought againe before the chiefe Inquisitor, and had all our fooles coates pulled off and hanged vp in the head church, called Ecclesia Maiore, and euery mans name and iudgement written thereupon with this addition, An heretike Lutheran reconciled. And there are also all their coats hanged vp, which were condemned to the gallies, with their names and iudgements, and vnderneath his coat, Heretike Lutheran reconciled. And also the coats and names of the three that were burned, whereupon were written, An obstinate heretike Lutheran burnt. Then were we suffred to goe vp and downe the country, and to place our selues as we could, and yet not so free, but that we very well knew that there was good espiall alwayes, attending vs and all our actions, so that wee durst not once to speake or looke awrie. Dauid Alexander and Robert Cooke they returned to serue the Inquisitor, who shortly after maried them both to two of his Negro women: Richard Williams maried a rich widow of Biskaie with 4000. Pezoes: Paule Horsewell is maried to a Mestisa, as they name those whose fathers were Spaniards, and their mothers Indians, and this woman which Paule Horsewel hath maried, is sayd to be the daughter of one that came in with Hernando Cortes the Conquerour, who had with her in mariage foure thousand Pezoes, and a faire house: John Storie hee is maried to a Negro woman: William Lowe had leaue and licence to goe into Spaine where he is now married: for mine owne part I could neuer thoroughly settle my selfe to marrie in that country, although many faire offers were made vnto mee of such as were of great abilitie and wealth, but I could haue no liking to liue in that place, where I must euery where see and know such horrible idolatrie committed, and durst not once for my life speake against it: and therefore I had alwayes a longing and desire to this my natiue countrey: and, to returne and serue againe in the Mines where I might haue gathered great riches and wealth, I very well saw that at one time or another I should fall againe into the danger of that diuelish Inquisition, and so be stript of all, with losse of life also, and therefore I made my choise rather to learne to weaue Grograines and Taffataes, and so compounding with a Silke weauer, I bound my selfe for 3. yeeres to serue him, and gaue him 150. Pezoes to teach me the science, otherwise he would not haue taught me vnder seuen yeeres prentiship, and by this meanes I liued the more quiet, and free from suspition. Howbeit I should many times bee charged by familiars of that diuelish house, that I had a meaning to runne away into England, and to bee an heretike Lutherane againe: To whom I would answere that they had no neede to suspect any such thing in mee, for that they knew all very well that it was impossible for mee to escape by any maner of meanes: yet notwithstanding I was called before the Inquisitor, and demaunded why I did not marrie: I answered that I had bound my selfe at an occupation. Well sayd the Inquisitor, I know thou meanest to runne away, and therefore I charge thee here vpon payne of burning as an heretike relapsed, that thou depart not out of this citie, nor come neere to the porte of S. Iohn de Vllua, nor to any other porte, To the which I answered, that I would willingly obey. Yea sayd he, see thou doe so and thy fellowes also, they shall haue the like charge.

So I remained at my science the full time, and learned the Arte, at the end whereof there came newes to Mexico that there were certaine Englishmen landed with a great power at the port of Acapulco, vpon the South sea, & that they were comming to Mexico to take the spoile therof, which wrought a marueilous great feare amongst them, & many of those that were rich, began to shift for themselues, their wiues & children: vpon which hurlie burlie the Viceroy caused a generall muster to be made of all the Spaniards in Mexico, and there were found to the number of 7000. and odde housholders of Spaniards in ỹ citie & suburbs, & of single men vnmaried, the number of 3000. and of Nestizoes, which are counted to be the sonnes of Spaniards borne of Indian women twentie thousand persons, and then was Paule Horsewell and I Miles Phillips sent for before the Viceroy, and were examined if we did know an English man named Francis Drake, which was brother to Captaine Hawkins: to which we answered, that Captaine Hawkins had not any brother but one, which was a man of the age of three score yeeres or thereabouts, and was now gouernour of Plimmouth in England. And then he demaunded of vs if we knew one Francis Drake, and we answered, no.

While these things were in doing, there came newes that all the Englishmen were gone, yet was there eight hundred men made out vnder the leading of seuerall captaines, whereof two hundred were sent to the porte of S. Iohn de Vllua, vpon the North Sea vnder the conduct of Don Luys Suares, two hundred were sent to Guatimala in the South sea, who had for their captaine Iohn Cortes, two hundred more were sent to Guatulco, a port of the South sea, ouer whom went for captaine Don Pedro de Roblis, and two hundred more were sent to Acapulco, the port where it was sayd that Captaine Drake had bene. And they had for Captaine doctor Roblis Alcalde de Corte, with whom I Miles Phillips went as interpreter, hauing licence giuen by the Inquisitors. When we were come to Acapulco, we found that Captaine Drake was departed from thence, more then a moneth before we came thither. But yet our captaine Alcalde de Corte there presently embarked himselfe in a small ship of three score tunne or thereabout, hauing also in companie with him two other small barkes, and not past two hundred men in all, with whom I went as interpreter in his owne ship, which God knoweth was but weake and ill appointed, so that for certaine, if we had met with captaine Drake, he might easily haue taken vs all: Wee being imbarked kept our course and ranne Southward towards Panama, keeping still as nigh the shore as we could, and leauing the land vpon our left hand, and hauing coasted thus for the space of eighteene or twentie dayes, and were more to the South then Guatimala, wee met at last with other ships which came from Panama, of whom we were certainly informed that he was cleane gone off the coast more then a moneth before: and so we returned backe to Acapulco againe, and there landed, our Captaine being thereunto forced, because his men were very sore sea sicke: All the while that I was at Sea with them, I was a glad man, for I hoped that if we met with master Drake, we should all be taken, so that then I should haue bene freed out of that danger and miserie wherein I liued, and should returne to mine owne countrey of England againe. But missing thereof, when I saw there was no remedie but that wee must needes come on land againe, little doth any man know the sorow and griefe that inwardly I felt, although outwardly I was constrained to make faire weather of it. And so being landed, the next morow after, we began our iourney towards Mexico, and past these townes of name in our way, as first the towne of Tuatepec, 90. leagues from Mexico, from thence to Washaca, 40. leagues from Mexico: from thence to Tepuca 24. leagues from Mexico, and from thence to Lo pueblo de los Angelos, where is a high hill which casteth out fire three times a day, which hill is 18. leagues in maner directly West from Mexico, from thence we went to Stapelapa, 8. leagues from Mexico, and there our captaine and most of his men tooke boate, and came to Mexico againe, hauing bene footh about the space of seuen weekes or thereabouts. Our captaine made report to the Viceroy what he had done, and how farre he had trauelled, and that for certaine he was informed that captaine Drake was not to bee heard of. To which the Viceroy replied and said, Surely we shall haue him shortly come into our handes driuen a land though necessitie in some one place or other, for he being now in these seas of Sur, it is not possible for him to get out of them againe, so that if he perish not at sea, yet hunger will force him to land. And then againe I was commanded by the Viceroy that I should not depart the citie of Mexico, but alwayes be at my masters house in a readinesse at an howers warning, when soeuer I should be called for: that notwithstanding within one moneth after certaine Spaniards going to Mecameca, 18. leagues from Mexico, to send away certaine hides and Cuchionelio, that they had there at their Stantiaes or dairie houses, and my master hauing leaue of the Secretarie for me to goe with them, I tooke my iourney with them being very well horsed and appointed, and comming thither and passing the time there at Mecameca certaine dayes till we had perfect intelligence that the fleete was ready to depart, I not being past 3. dayes iourney from the porte of S. Iohn de Vllua, thought it to be the meetest time for me to make an escape, and I was the bolder, presuming vpon my Spanish tongue, which I spake as naturally as any of them all, thinking with my selfe, that when I came to S. Iohn de Vllua, I would get to bee entertained as a souldior, and so goe home into Spaine in the same Fleete, and therefore secretly one euening late, the moone shining faire, I conueied my selfe away, and riding so for the space of two nights and two dayes, sometimes in, and sometimes out, resting very little all that time, vpon the second day at night night I came to the towne of Vera Cruz, distant from the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, where the ships rode, but only 8. leagues, and here purposing to rest my selfe a day or two, I was no sooner alighted, but within the space of one halfe howre after, I was by ill hap arested, and brought before Iustices there, being taken and suspected to be a gentlemans sonne of Mexico, that was runne away from his father, who in trueth was the man they sought for: So I being arrested, and brought before the Iustices, there was a great hurlie burlie about the matter, euery man charging me that I was the sonne of such a man dwelling in Mexico, which I flatly denied, affirming that I knew not the man, yet would they not beleeue me, but urged still vpon me that I was he that they sought for, and so I was conueied away to prison. And as I was thus going to prison, to the further increase of my griefe, it chaunced that at that very instant there was a poore man in the preasse that was come to towne to sell hennes, who told the Iustices that they did me wrong, and that in trueth hee knew very well that I was an Englishman and no Spaniard. They then demaunded of him how hee knew that, and threatened him that he sayd so, for that hee was my companion, and sought to conuey mee away from my father, so that he also was threatened to be laid in prison with mee: he for the discharge of himselfe stood stiffe in it, that I was an Englishman, and one of captaine Hawkins men, and that hee had knowen me weare the S. Benito in the blacke Friers at Mexico, for three or foure whole yeeres together: which when they heard they forsooke him, and began to examine me a new whether that speach of his were true, yea or no, which when they perceiued that I could not denie, and perceiuing that I was run from Mexico, and came thither of purpose to conuey my selfe away with the fleete, I was presently committed to prison with a sorowful heart, often wishing my selfe that that man which knew me had at that time bene further off, howbeit he in sinceritie had compassion of my distressed state, thinking by his speach, and knowing of me, to haue set me free frō that present danger which he saw me in: howbeit, contrary to his expectation, I was thereby brought into my extreme danger, & to the hazard of my life, yet there was no remedie but patience perforce: and I was no sooner brought into prison, but I had a great paire of bolts clapt on my legs, and thus I remained in that prison for the space of 3. weeks, where were also many other prisoners which were thither committed for sundry crimes, and condemned to the gallies. During which time of imprisonment there, I found amōgst those my prison fellowes some that had knowen me before in Mexico, and truely they had compassion of me, and would share of their victuals & any thing els that they had to do me good, amongst whom there was one of them that told me that he vnderstood by a secret friend of his which often came to the prison to him, that I should be shortly sent back againe to Mexico by wagon, so soone as the fleete was gone from S. Iohn de Vllua, for Spaine. This poore man my prison fellow of himselfe, & without any request made by me, caused his said friend which came often vnto him to the grate of the prison to bring him wine & victuals to buie for him two kniues which had files in their backs, which files were so well made that they would serue & suffice any prisoner to file off his irons, and of those knives or files he brought one to me, & told me that he had caused it to be made for me, & let me haue it at ỳ very price it cost him, which was 2. Pezoes, the value of 8. s. of our mony, which knife when I had it, I was a ioyfull man, and conueied the same into the foote of my boot, vpon the inside of my left leg, and so within 3. or 4. dayes after that I had thus receiued my knife, I was suddenly called for, & brought before the head Iustice which caused those my irons with the round bolt to be striken off and sent to a Smiths in ỳ towne, where was a new paire of bolts made readie for me of another fashion, which had a broad iron barre cōming between ỳ shackles, & caused my hands to be made fast with a paire of manacles, and so was I presently laid into a wagon all alone, which was there ready to depart with sundry other wagons to the number of 60. towards Mexico, and they all were laden with sundry merchandize which came in the fleete out of Spaine.

The wagon that I was in was formost of all the companie, and as wee trauelled I being alone in the wagon, began to trie if I could plucke my handes out of the manacles, and as God would although it were somewhat painfull for mee, yet my handes were so slender that I could pull them out, and put them in againe, and euer as we went, when the wagons made most noyse, and the men busied, I would be working to file off my boltes, and trauelling thus for the space of eight leagues from Vera Cruz, wee came to an high hill, at the entring vp of which (as God would) one of the wheeles of the wagon wherein I was, brake, so that by that meanes the other wagons went a fore, and the wagon man that had charge of me set an Indian Carpenter a worke to mend the wheele: and here at this place they baited at an ostrie that a Negro woman keepes, and at this place for that the going vp of the hill is very steepe, for the space of two leagues and better, they doe alwayes accustome to take the mooles of 3. or 4. wagons, and to place them all together for the drawing vp of one wagon, & so to come downe againe, and fetch vp others in that order.

All

All which came very wel to paſſe: for as it drew towards night whē moſt of the Wagoners were gone to draw vp their wagons, in this ſort I being alone had quickly filed off my bolts, & ſo eſpying my time in the darke of the euening before they returned downe the hill againe, I conueyed my ſelfe into the woods there adioyning, carying my bolts and manacles with me, and a few biſkets, and two ſmall cheeſes. And being come into the woods I threw my yrons into a thicke buſh, and then couered them with moſſe and other things, and then ſhifted for my ſelfe as I might all that night. And thus by the good prouidence of Almightie God, I was freed from mine yrons all ſauing the coller, that was about my necke, and ſo got my libertie the ſecond time.

The 7. Chapter.

Wherein is ſhewed how I eſcaped to Guatimala, vpon the South ſea, and from thence to the port of Cauallios, where I got paſſage to goe into Spaine, and of our arriuall at the Hauana, and our comming to Spaine, where I was againe like to haue bene committed priſoner, and how through the great mercie of God I eſcaped, and came home in ſafetie into England, in Februarie 1582.

THe next morning (day light being come) I perceiued by the Sunne riſing what way to take to eſcape their handes, for when I fledde, I tooke the way into the woods vpon the left hande: and hauing left that way that went to Mexico vpon my right hand, I thought to keepe my courſe as the woods and mountaines lay, ſtill direct South as neere as I coulde: by meanes whereof I was ſure to conuey my ſelfe farre ynough from that way that went to Mexico. And as I was thus going on in the woods, I ſaw many great fires made to the North not paſt a league from the mountaine where I was, and trauailing thus in my bootes with mine yron coller about my necke, and my bread and cheeſe, the very ſame forenoone I met with a companie of Indians which were hunting of deare for their ſuſtenance, to whome I ſpake in the Mexicane tongue, and tolde them howe that I had of a long time bene kept in priſon by the cruel Spaniards, and did deſire them to helpe me file off mine yron coller, which they willingly did, reioycing greatly with mee, that I was thus eſcaped out of the Spaniards handes. Then I deſired that I might haue one of them to guide me out of thoſe deſart mountaines towardes the South, which they alſo moſt willingly did: and ſo they brought me to an Indian towne 8. leagues diſtant from thence named Shalapa, where I ſtayed 3. dayes, for that I was ſomewhat ſickely. At which towne (with the golde that I had quilted in my dublet,) I bought me an horſe of one of the Indians, which coſt me 6. Peſoes, and ſo trauailing South, within the ſpace of 2. leagues I happened to ouertake a gray Frier, one that I had bene familiar withall in Mexico, whome then I knewe to be a zealous good man, and one that did much lament the crueltie vſed againſt vs by the Inquiſitors, and truely hee vſed me very courteouſly: and I hauing confidence in him did indeede tell him, that I was minded to aduenture to ſee if I could get out of the ſaid countrey, if I could finde ſhipping, and did therefore pray him of his ayde, direction, and aduice herein, which hee faithfully did, not onely in directing me which was my ſafeſt way to trauaile, but he alſo of himſelfe kept me company for the ſpace of three dayes, and euer as we came to the Indians houſes (who vſed and intertained vs well) he gathered among them in money to the value of 20. Peſoes, which at my departure from him hee freely gaue vnto me. So came I to the citie of Guatimala vpon the South ſea, which is diſtant from Mexico, about 250. leagues, where I ſtayed 6. dayes, for that my horſe was weake. And from thence I trauailed ſtill South and by Eaſt ſeuen dayes iourney, paſſing by certaine Indian townes, vntill I came to an Indian towne diſtant from Mexico, direct South 309. leagues. And here at this towne enquiring to goe to the port Cauallos in the Northeaſt ſea, It was anſwered that in trauailing thither I ſhould not come to any towne in 10. or 12. dayes iourney: ſo here I hired two Indians to be my guide, and I bought hennes, and bread to ſerue vs ſo long time, and tooke with vs things to kindle fire euery night, becauſe of wilde beaſtes, and to dreſſe our meate: and euery night when wee reſted, my Indian guides would make two great fires, betweene the which we placed our ſelues, and my horſe. And in the night time we ſhould here the Lions roare, with Tygers, Dunces, and other beaſtes, and ſome of them we ſhould ſee in the night, which had eyes ſhining like fire. And trauayling thus for the ſpace of twelue dayes wee came at laſt to the port of Cauallos vpon the Eaſt ſea, diſtant from Guatimala South and by Eaſt, two hundreth leagues, and from Mexico 450. or thereabouts. This is a good harborow for ſhippes, and is without either caſtle or bulwarke. I hauing diſpatched away my guids, went downe to the hauen, where I ſaw certaine ſhips loden chiefly with Canary wines, where I ſpake with one of the Maſters, who aſked me what Countrey man I was, and I told him that I was borne in Granado, & he ſaid, that then I was his countreyman. I required him that I might paſſe home with him in his ſhip paying for my paſſage: And he ſaid yea, ſo that I had a ſafe conduct, or letter teſtimonial to ſhew, that he might incurre no danger; for ſaid he, it may be that you haue killed ſome man, or be indebted, and would therfore runne away: To that I anſwered that there was not any ſuch cauſe. Wel, in the end we grew to a price, that for 60. pezoes, he would carry me into Spaine: a glad man was I at this good hap, and I quickly ſold my houſe, & made my prouiſion of hennes and bread to ſerue me in my paſſage; And thus within 2. dayes after we ſet ſaile, and neuer ſtayed vntill wee came to the Hauana, which is diſtant from port de Cauallios by ſea 500. leagues: where we found the whole fleete of Spaine, which was bounde home from the Indies. And here I was hired for a ſouldier to ſerue in the Admiral ſhip of the ſame fleete, wherein the Generall himſelf went. There landed while I was here 4. ſhips out of Spaine, being all ful of ſouldiers and ordinance, of which nomber there were 200. men landed here & 4. great braſſe pieces of ordinance, although the caſtle were before ſufficiently prouided: 200. men more were ſent to Campeche, & certaine ordinance: 200. to Florida with ordinance, And 100. laſtly to S. Iohn de Vllua. As for ordinance there they haue ſufficient, and of the very ſame which was ours, which we had in the Ieſus, and thoſe others which we had planted in the place, where the Vice Roy betraied M. Hawkins our generall, as hath bene declared. The ſending of thoſe ſouldiers to euery of thoſe portes, and the ſtrengthening of them, was done by commandement from the king of Spaine, who wrote alſo by them to the generall of his fleete, giuing him in charge ſo to doe, as alſo directing him what courſe he ſhould keepe in his comming home into Spaine, charging him at any hand not to come nigh to the yles of Azores, but to keepe his courſe more to the Northwarde, aduertiſing him withall, what nomber and power of French ſhips of warre, and other, Don Anthony had at that time at the Terçera, & yles aforeſaid: which the generall of the fleete well conſidering, and what great ſtore of riches he had to bring home with him into Spaine, did in all very duetifully obſerue and obey: for in truth he had in his ſaid fleete 37. ſaile of ſhips, and in euery of them there was as good as 30. pipes of ſiluer one with another, beſides great ſtore of gold, Cochenelio, ſugers, hides, and Cana Fiſtula, with other Apothecarie drugs. This our generall, who was called Don Pedro de Guſman, did prouidently take order for, for their moſt ſtrength and defence, if neede ſhould be to the vttermoſt of his power, and commanded vpon paine of death, that neither paſſenger nor ſouldier ſhould come aboord without his ſword and harquebuſſe, with ſhot and powder, to the end that they might be the better able to encounter the fleete of Don Anthony, if they ſhould hap to meete with them, or any of them: and euer as the weather was faire, the ſaid generall would himſelf go aboord from one ſhip to another, to ſee that euery man had his full prouiſion according to the commandement giuen. Yet to ſpeake truely what I thinke, two good tall ſhips of warre would haue made a foule ſpoile amongſt them. For in all this fleete there were not any that were ſtrong and warlike appointed, ſauing onely the Admiral, and Vice Admiral: And againe ouer and beſides the weakenes and the ill furniſhing of the reſt, they were all ſo deepely laden, that they had not bene able (if they had bene charged) to haue held out any long fight. Wel, thus we ſet ſaile, & had a very il paſſage home, ſ weather was ſo contrary. We kept our courſe in maner Northeaſt, and brought our ſelues to the height of 42. degrees of latitude, to be ſure not to meete with Don Anthony his fleete, and were vpon our voyage from the 4. of June, vntil the 10. of September, & neuer ſaw land til we fell with the Arenas Gordas hard by S. Lucar. And there was an order taken that none ſhould go on ſhoare vntil he had licence: as for me, I was knowne by one in the ſhip, who told the Maſter that I was an Engliſh man, which (as God would) was my good hap to heare: for if I had not heard it, it had coſt me my life. Notwithſtanding, I would not take any knowledge of it, and ſeemed to be merry, & pleaſant that we were all come ſo wel in ſafetie. Preſently after, licence came that we ſhould goe on ſhoare, and I preſſed to be gone with the firſt: howbeit, the M. came vnto me and ſaid, Sirra, you muſt goe with me to Siuil by water: I knew his meaning wel inough, & that he ment there to offer me vp as a ſacrifice to ꝑ Holy houſe. For the ignorant zeale of a nomber of theſe ſuperſtitious Spaniards is ſuch, that they thinke, that they haue done God good ſeruice, when they haue brought a Lutheran heretique to the fire to be burnt: For ſo do they accompt of vs. Well, I perceiuing all this, tooke vpon me not to ſuſpect any thing, but was ſtil iocund and merry: howbeit, I knew it ſtoode me vpon to ſhift for my ſelfe. And ſo wayting my time when the Maſter was in his cabbin aſleepe, I conueyed my ſelfe ſecretly downe by the ſhrowds into the ſhip boate, and made no ſtay but cut the rope wherewithal ſhe was moored, and ſo by the cable haled on ſhoare, where I lept on land & let the boate go whither it would. Thus by the helpe of God I eſcaped that day, & then neuer ſtaied at S. Lucar, but went all night by the way which I had ſeene other take toward Siuil: ſo that the next next morning I came to Siuill, and ſought me out a worke maſter, that I might fall to my ſcience, which was weauing of taffataes, and being intertained I ſet my ſelf cloſe to my worke, and durſt not for my life once to ſtirre abroad for feare of being knowen, and being thus at my worke, within 4. dayes after I heard one of my felowes ſay, that he heard there was great inquirie made for an Engliſhman that came home in the fleete: what an heretique Lutheran (quoth I) was it, I would to God I might knowe him, ſurely I would preſent him to the Holy houſe. And thus I kept ſtill within doores at my worke, and fained my ſelfe not well at eaſe, & that I would labor as I might to get me new clothes. And continuing thus for the ſpace of 3. moneths I called for my wages, and bought me all things newe, different from the apparel that I did weare at ſea, and yet durſt not be ouerbolde to walke abroad: and after vnderſtanding that there were certaine Engliſh ſhips at S. Lucar bound for England, I tooke a boate and went aboord one of them, and deſired the Maſter that I might haue paſſage with him to goe into England, and told him ſecretly that I was one of thoſe which Captaine Hawkins did ſet on ſhoare in the Indies: he very courteouſly prayed mee to haue him excuſed, for he durſt not meddle with me, & prayed mee therefore to returne from whence I came. Which when I perceiued, with a ſorowful heart God knoweth I tooke my leaue of him, not without wattie cheeks. And then I went to S. Mary port, which is 3. leagues from S. Lucar, where I put my ſelf to be a ſouldier to go in the k. of Spaines Gallies, which were bound for Maiorca, and comming thither in the end of ꝑ Chriſtmas holydayes, I found there 2. Engliſh ſhips, the one of London, and the other of the Weſt countrey, which were ready fraighted and ſtayed but for a faire wind. To the M. of the one, which was of the Weſt countrey went I, and told him that I had bene 2. yeeres in Spaine to learne the language, and that I was nowe deſirous to go home and ſee my friends, for that I lacked maintenance: and ſo hauing agreed with him for my paſſage I tooke ſhipping. And thus through the prouidence of Almightie God, after 16. yeres abſence, hauing ſuſtained many and ſundry great troubles and miſeries, as by this diſcourſe appeareth, I came home to this my natiue countrey of England, in the yeere 1582. in the the moneth of February in the ſhippe called the Landret, and arriued at Poole.

The voyage of Robert Tomſon marchant, into Noua Hiſpania in the yere 1555. With diuers obſeruations concerning the ſtate of the Countrey: And certaine accidents touching himſelfe.

RObert Tomſon borne in the towne of Andouer in Hampſhire, begun his trauaile out of England in An. 1553. in the moneth of March, who departing out of ꝑ citie of Briſtol in a good ſhip called the Barke yong, in companie of other marchants of the ſaide citie, within 8. dayes after arriued at Lisbone in Portingal, where the ſaid Robert Tomſon remained 15. dayes, at the end of which he ſhipped himſelfe for Spaine in the ſaid ſhippe, and within 4. dayes arriued in the bay of Cadiz in Andaluſia, which is vnder the kingdome of Spaine, and from thence trauailed vp to the Citie of Siuil by land, which is 20. leagues, and there he repaired to one Iohn Fields houſe an Engliſh marchant, who had dwelt in ꝑ ſaid citie of Siuil 18. or 20. yeres maried with wife and children: In whoſe houſe the ſaid Tomſon remained by the ſpace of one whole yeere or there about, for 2. cauſes: The one to learne the Caſtilian tongue, The other to ſee the orders of the countrey, and the cuſtomes of the people. At the ende of which time hauing ſeene the fleetes of ſhips come out of the Indies to that citie, with ſuch great quantitie of golde and ſiluer, pearles, precious ſtones, ſugar, hides, ginger, and diuers other riche commodities, hee did determine with himſelfe to ſeeke meanes & opportunitie to paſſe ouer to ſee that rich countrey from whence ſuch great quantitie of rich cõmodities came. And it fel out that within ſhort time after the ſaid Field (where the ſaid Tomſon was lodged) did determine to paſſe ouer into the Weſt Indies himſelf, with his wife, children & familie, and at the requeſt of the ſaid Tomſon, he purchaſed a licence of the King to paſſe into the Indies, for himſelfe, his wife & children, & among them alſo for the ſaid Tomſon to paſſe with them: ſo that preſently they made preparation of victual & other neceſſary prouiſion for the voyage. But the ſhips which were prepared to performe the voyage being all ready to depart, vpon certaine conſiderations by the kings commandement were ſtayed & arreſted til further ſhould be knowen of the kings pleaſure. Whereupon the ſaid Iohn Field, with R. Tomſon and his company being departed out of Siuil & come downe to S. Lucar 15. leagues off, and ſeeing the ſtay made vpon the ſhips of the ſaid fleete, & being not aſſured when they would depart, determined to ſhippe themſelues for the ples of the Canaries, which is 250. leagues from S. Lucar, and there to ſtay till the ſaid fleete ſhould come thither: for that is continually their port to make ſtay at fiue or eight dayes, to take freſh water, bread, fleſh, and other neceſſaries.

So that in the moneth of Februarie in An. 1555. the said Rob. Tomson with the said Iohn Field and his company, shipped themselues out of the towne of S. Lucar in a caruel of the citie of Cadiz, and within 6. dayes they arriued at the port of the Grand Canaria, where at our cõming the ships that rode in the said port beganne to cry out of all measure with lowd voyces, in so much that the Castle which stoode fast by began to shoote at vs, and shot 6. or 8. shot at vs, and strooke downe our maine maste, before we could hoise out our boate to go on land, to know what the cause of the shooting was, seeing that we were Spanish ships, and comming into his countrey. So that being on land & complayning of the wrong and damage done vnto vs: they answered, that they had thought wee had bene French rouers, that had come into the said port, to do some harme to the shippes that were there. For that 8. dayes past, there went out of the said port a caruel much like vnto ours, laden with sugers and other marchandise for Spaine, and on the other side of the point of the said Iland, met with a Frenchman of warre, who tooke the said caruel, & vnladed out of her into the said Frenchship, both men & goods. And being demaunded of ỹ said Spaniards what other ships remained in the port whence they came, They answered that there remained diuers other ships, and one laden with sugars (as they were) & ready to depart for Spaine, vpõ the which newes the Frenchmen put 30. tall men of their ship wel appointed, into the said caruel that they had taken, and sent her backe againe to the said port from whence she had departed the day before. And somewhat late towards the euening came into the port, not shewing past 3. or 4. men, and so came to an ancre hard by the other ships ỹ were in the said port, & being seene by the castle & by the said ships, they made no reckoning of her, because they knew her, and thinking that she had found contrary winds at the sea, or had forgot some thing behinde them, they had returned backe againe for the same, & so made no accompt of her, but let her alone riding quietly among the other ships in the said port: So that about midnight the said caruel with the Frenchmen in her, went aboord the other ship that lay hard by laden with sugars, and droue the Spaniards that were in her vnder hatches, and presently let slip her cables and ancres, and set saile and caried her cleane away, & after this sort deceiued them: And they thinking or fearing that we were the like, did shoote at vs as they did. This being past, the next day after our arriual in the said port, we did vnbarke our selues and went on lande vp to the citie or head towne of the great Canaria, where we remained 18. or 20. dayes: and there found certaine Englishmen marchants seruants of one Anthony Hickman & Edward Castelin, marchants of the citie of London, that lay there in traffique, of whome wee receiued great courtesie and much good cheere. After the which 20. dayes being past, in the which we had seene the country, the people, and the disposition thereof, wee departed from thence, and sailed to the next yle of the Canaries 18. leages off, called Teneriffe, & being come on land, went vp to the citie called the La Laguna, where we remained 7. moneths, attending the comming of the whole fleete: which in the ende came, and there hauing taken that which they had neede off, we shipped our selues in a ship of Cadiz, being one of the said fleete, which was belonging to an Englishman maried in the citie of Cales in Spaine, whose name was Iohn Sweeting, and came in the saide ship for captaine also an Englishman maried in Cadiz, & sonne in law to the saide Iohn Sweeting, whose name was Leonard Chilton, and also came in the saide ship another Englishman which had bene a marchant of the citie of Exeter, one of 50. pecres or there about, whose name was Raph Sarre. So that we departed from the said Ilands in the moneth of October the foresaid peere 8. ships in our companie, and so directed our course towards the bay of newe Spaine, and by the way towardes the Iland of S. Domingo, otherwise called Hispaniola. So that within 42. dayes after wee departed from the yles of Canaries, we arriued with our ship at the port of S. Domingo, & went in ouer the barre where our ship knocked her keele at her entrie: and there our ship rid before ỹ towne, where we went on land and refreshed our selues 16. dayes, where we found no bread made of wheat, but bisket brought out of Spaine, and out of the bay of Mexico: for the countrey it selfe doeth yeeld no kinde of graine to make bread withall. But the bread they make there is certaine cakes made of rootes, called Cassaua, which is something substantiall, but it hath but an vnsauery taste in the eating thereof. Flesh of beefe and mutton they haue great store: for there are men that haue 10000. head of cattel, of oxen, bulls and kine, which they do keepe onely for the hides, for the quantitie of flesh is so great, that they are not able to spend the hundreth part. Hogs flesh is there good store, very sweete & sauery, and so holsome, that they giue it to sicke folkes to eat in stead of hennes and capons: although they haue good store of poultrie of that sort, as also of Guinycocks & Guiny hens. At the time of out being there, the citie of S. Domingo was not of aboue 500. houshoulds of Spaniards, but of the Indians dwelling in the suburbs there were more. The countrey is most part of the yere very hot, & very ful of a kind of flies or gnats with long bils, which do pricke & molest the people very much in the night when they are asleepe, in pricking their faces & hands, and other parts of their bodies ẏ lie vncouered, & make them to ſwel wõderfully. Alſo there is another kinde of ſmal worme which creepeth into the ſoles of mens feete & eſpecially of ẏ blacke Moores & children which vſe to go barefoot, and maketh their feete to grow as big as a mans head, & doth ſo ake that it would make one run mad. They haue no remedy for the ſame, but to open ẏ fleſh ſometimes 3. or 4. inches & ſo digge them out. The countrey yeeldeth great ſtore of ſuger, hides of oxen, buls and kine, ginger, Cana fiſtula & Salſa perillia: mines of ſiluer & gold there are none, but in ſome riuers there is found ſome ſmal quantitie of gold. The principal coine that they do trafique withall in that place, is black money made of copper & braſſe: and this they ſay they do vſe not for that they lacke money of golde and ſiluer to trade withall out of the other partes of India, but becauſe if they ſhould haue good money, the marchants that deale with them in trade, would cary away their gold & ſiluer, and let the countrey commodities lie ſtil. And thus much for S. Domingo. So wee were comming frõ the yles of Canaries to S. Domingo, and there ſtaying vntil the moneth of December, which was 3. moneths. About the beginning of January we departed thence towards the bay of Mexico and new Spaine, towarde which we ſet our courſe, and ſo ſayled 24. dayes till we came within 15. leagues of S. Iohn de Vllua, which was the port of Mexico of our right diſcharge: And being ſo neere our ſaid port, there roſe a ſtorme of Northerly winds, which came off from Terra Florida, which cauſed vs to caſt about into the ſea againe, for feare leaſt that night we ſhould be caſt vpon the ſhoare before day did breake, & ſo put our ſelues in danger of caſting away: the winde and ſea grew ſo foule and ſtrong, that within 2. houres after the ſtorme began, 8. ſhips that were together were ſo diſperſed, that we could not ſee one another. One of the ſhippes of our company being of the burthen of 500. tunne called ẏ hulke of Carion, would not caſt about to ſea as we did, but went that night with the land, thinking in the morning to purchaſe the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, but miſſing the port went with the ſhoare & was caſt away. There were drowned of that ſhip 75. perſons, men women and children, and 64. were ſaued that could ſwimme, and had meanes to ſaue themſelues: among thoſe that periſhed in that ſhip, was a gentleman who had bin preſent the yere before in S. Domingo, his wife and 4. daughters with the reſt of his ſeruants and houſhold. We with ẏ other 7. ſhips caſt about into the ſea, the ſtorme during 10. dayes with great might, boyſterous winds, fogs & raine: our ſhip being old & weake was ſo toſſed, that ſhe opened at the ſterne a fathom vnder water, & the beſt remedy we had was to ſtop it wᵗh beds & pilobiers, and for feare of ſinking we threw & lightned into the ſea al the goods we had or could come by: but that would not ſerue. Then we cut our maine maſt & threw all our ordinance into the ſea ſauing one piece, which early in a morning when we thought we ſhould haue ſunke, we ſhot off, & as pleaſed God there was one of the ſhips of our company nere vnto vs, which we ſaw not by meanes of the great fogge, which hearing the ſound of the piece, & vnderſtanding ſome of the company to be in great extremitie, began to make towards vs, & when they came within hearing of vs, we deſired them for ẏ loue of God to help to ſaue vs, for that we were al like to periſh. They willed vs to hoiſe our foreſaile as much as we could & make towards them, for they would doe their beſt to ſaue vs, and ſo we did: And we had no ſooner hoiſed our foreſaile, but there came a gale of winde & a piece of ſea, ſtrooke in the foreſaile, and caried ſaile and maſte all ouerboord, ſo that then wee thought there was no hope of life. And then we beganne to imbrace one another, euery man his friende, euery wife her huſbande, and the children their fathers and mothers, committing our ſoules to Almightie God, thinking neuer to eſcape aliue: yet it pleaſed God in the time of moſt neede when all hope was paſt, to aide vs with his helping hand, & cauſed the wind a litle to ceaſe, ſo that within 2. houres after, the other ſhip was able to come aboord vs, & tooke into her with her boate man, woman & childe, naked without hoſe or ſhoe vpon many of our feete. I do remember that the laſt perſon that came out of the ſhip into the boate, was a woman blacke Moore, who leaping out of the ſhip into the boat with a yong ſucking child in her armes, lept to ſhort and fel into the ſea and was a good while vnder the water before the boat could come to reſcue her, and with the ſpreding of her clothes roſe aboue water againe, and was caught by the coat & pulled into the boat hauing ſtil her childe vnder her arme, both of them halfe drowned, and yet her naturall loue towards her childe would not let her let the childe goe. And when ſhee came aboorde the boate, ſhee helde her childe ſo faſt vnder her arme ſtil, that two men were ſcant able to get it out. So we departed out of our ſhippe and left it in the ſea: it was worth foure hundreth thouſande ducats, ſhippe and goods when we left it. And within three dayes after wee arriued at our port of S. Iohn de Vllua in Newe Spaine. I do remember that in the great and boyſterous ſtorme of this foule weather, in the night, there came vpon the toppe of our maine yarde and maine maſte, a certaine litle light, much like vnto the light of a little candle, which the Spaniards called the Corpos ſancto, and ſaide it was ſaint Elmo, whome they take to be the aduocate of Sailers. At the which sight the Spaniards fell downe vpon their knees and worshipped it, and praying God and saint Elmo to cease the torment, and saue them from the perill that they were in, with promising him that at their comming on lande, they would repaire vnto his Chappell, and there cause Masses to be saide, and other ceremonies to bee done. The Friers cast reliques into the sea, to cause the sea to be stil, and likewise saide Gospels, with other crossings and ceremonies vpon the sea to make the storme to cease: which (as they said) did much good to weaken the furie of the storme. But I could not perceiue it, nor gaue no credite to it, till it pleased God to sende vs the remedie and deliuered vs from the rage of the same, His Name be praised therefore. This light continued aboorde our shippe about 3. houres, flying from maste to maste, and from toppe to toppe: and sometime it would bee in two or three places at once. I informed my selfe of learned men afterward what that light should be, and they saide, that it was but a congelation of the winde and vapours of the sea congealed with the extremitie of the weather, and so flying in the winde, many times doeth chance to hit in the masts and shrowdes of the shippes that are at sea in foule weather. And in trueth I do take it to be so: for that I haue seene the like in other ships at sea, and in sundry ships at once. By this men may see how the Papists are giuen to beleeue and worship such vaine things and copes, as God, to whome all honour doth appertaine, and in their needs and necessities doe lett to call vpon the liuing God, who is the giuer all good things.

The 16. of Aprill in An. 1556. we arriued at the port of S. Iohn de Vllua in newe Spaine, very naked & distressed of apparel, & all other things, by meanes of the losse of our foresaid ship & goods, and from thence we went to the newe towne called Vera cruz, 5. leagues from the said port of S. Ioh. de Vllua, marching stil by ẏ sea side, where we found lying vpon the sands great quantitie of mightie great trees with rootes & al, some of them of 4, 5. & 6. cart load by our estimation, which as the people told vs, were in the great stormy weather which we dured at sea, rooted out of ẏ grou̇nd in Terra Florida, right against that place, which is 300. leagues ouer by sea, and brought thither. So that we came to the said towne of Vera cruz, where we remained a moneth: and there the said Iohn Field chanced to meet with an old friend of his acquaintance in Spaine, called Gonçalo Ruiz de Cordoua, a very riche man of the saide towne of Vera cruz: who hearing of his cōming thither with his wife & family, and of his misfortune by sea, came vnto him & receiued him and al his houshold into his house, & kept vs there a whole moneth, making vs very good cheere, & giuing vs good interteinment. & also gaue vs that were in al 8. persons of the said I. Fields house, double apparel newe out of the shop of very good cloth, coates, cloakes, hose, shirts, smocks, gownes for the women, hose, shoes, and al other necessary apparel, and for our way vp to the citie of Mexico, horse, moyles, & men, & money in our purses for the expences by the way, which by our accompt might amount vnto the summe of 400. crownes. So that after we were entred 2. dayes iourney into the countrey, I the said Robert Tomson fel sicke of an ague, so that the next day I was not able to sit on my horse, but was faine to be caried vpon Indians backs, from thence to Mexico. And when we came within half a dayes iourney of the citie of Mexico, the said I. Field also fel sicke, and within 3. dayes after we arriued at the said citie, he died: And presently sickened one of his children, and 2. more of his houshold people, and within 8. dayes died. So that within 10. dayes after we arriued at the citie of Mexico, of 8. persons that were of vs, of ẏ said company, there remained but 4. of vs aliue. & I the said Tomson at the point of death of the sicknes that I got vpon the way, which continued with me the space of 6. moneths. At the end of which time it pleased almighty God to restore me my health againe, although weake & greatly disabled. And being some thing strong, I purposed to seeke meanes to liue, & to seeke a way how to profit my self in ẏ countrey, seeing it had pleased God to send vs thither in safetie. Then by friēdship of one Th. Blake a Scotish man borne, who had dwelt & had bene maried in the said citie aboue 20. yeeres before I came to the saide Citie, I was preferred to the seruice of a gentleman a Spaniard dwelling there, a man of great wealth, and one of the first conquerers of the saide citie, whose name was Gonçalo Serezo, with whom I dwelt 12. moneths & a half. At the end of which I was maliciously accused by the holy house for matters of religion, & so apprehended and caried to prison, where I lay close prisoner 7. moneths, without speaking to any creature, but to ẏ Iailer that kept the said prison, when he brought me my meate & drinke. In the meane time was brought into the said prison one Augustin Boacio an Italian of Genoua also for matters of religion, who was taken at Sacatecas 80. leagues to the Southeastward of the citie of Mexico: At the ende of the sayde seuen moneths, wee were both caried to the high Church of Mexico, to doe open penance vpon an high Scaffolde, made before the high Altar, vpon a Sunday, in the presence of a very great nomber of people, who were at the least fiue or sixe thousande. For there were that came one hundreth mile off, to see the sayde Auto (as they call it:) for that there were neuer none before, that had done the like in the

ſaide Countrey, nor could not tell what Lutheranes were, nor what it meant: for they neuer heard of any ſuch thing before. We were brought into the Church, euery one with a S. Benito vpon his backe, which is halfe a yard of yellow cloth, with a hole to put in a mans head in the midſt, and caſt ouer a mans heade: both flaps hange one before, and an other behinde, and in the middeſt of euery flap, a S. Andrewes croſſe, made of red cloth, ſowed on vpon the ſame, and that is called S. Benito. The common people, before they ſawe the penitents come into the Church, were giuen to vnderſtand, that we were Heretikes, Infidels, and people that did deſpiſe God, and his workes, and that we had bene more like deuils then men, and thought we had had the fauour of ſome monſters, or Heathen people. And when they ſaw vs come into the Church in our plaiers coates, the women & children began to cry out, and made ſuch a noiſe, that it was ſtrange to ſee and heare, ſaying, that they neuer ſaw goodlier men in all their liues, and that it was not poſſible that there could be in vs ſo much euil, as was reported of vs, and that we were more like Angels among men, then ſuch perſons of ſuch euil religion as by the prieſts and Friers we were reported to be, and that it was great pitie that we ſhould be ſo vſed for ſo ſmal an offence. So that being brought into the ſaide high Church, and ſet vpon the ſcaffold which was made before the high altar, in the preſence of al the people, vntil high Maſſe was done, and the ſermon made by a Frier, concerning our matter, and putting vs in all the diſgrace they could, to cauſe the people not to take ſo much compaſſion vpon vs, for that we were Heretikes, and people that were ſeduced of the deuill, and forſaken the faith of the Catholike Church of Rome, with diuers other reprochful words, which were too long to recite in this place. High Maſſe & ſermon being done, our offences, as they called them, were recited, euery man what he had ſaid and don, and preſently was the ſentence pronounced againſt vs. That was, that the ſaid Auguſtine Boacio was condemned to weare his S. Benito all the daies of his life, and put into perpetual priſon, where he ſhoulde fulfil the ſame, and all his goods confiſcated and loſt. And I the ſaid Tomſon to weare the S. Benito for 3. yeeres, and then to be ſet at libertie. And for the accompliſhing of this ſentence or condemnation, we muſt be preſently ſent downe from Mexico, to Vera Cruz, and from thence to S. Iohn de Vllua, and there to be ſhipped for Spaine, which was 65. leagues by land, with ſtrait commandement, that vpon paine of 1000. duckets, the Maſters euery one ſhould looke ſtraitly vnto vs, and carry vs to Spaine, and deliuer vs vnto the Inquiſitors of the Holy houſe of Siuill, that they ſhould put vs in the places, where we ſhould fulfil our penances that the Archbiſhop of Mexico had enioyned vnto vs, by his ſentence there giuen. For performance of the which, we were ſent downe from Mexico, to the ſea ſide, which was 65. leagues, with fetters vpon our feete, and there deliuered to the Maſters of the ſhips, to be caried for Spaine, as before is ſaid. And it was ſo, that the Italian fearing, that if he had preſented himſelfe in Spaine before the Inquiſitors, that they would haue burned him, to preuent that danger, when we were comming homeward, & were arriued at the Iſland of Tercera, one of the Iſles of the Azores: the firſt night that we came into the ſaid port to an anker, about midnight he found the meanes to get him naked out of the ſhip into the ſea, and ſwamme naked a ſhoare, and ſo preſently got him to the further ſide of the Iſland, where he found a litle Caruel ready to depart for Portingall, in the which he came to Lisbone, and paſſed into France, and ſo into England, where he ended his life in the Citie of London. And I for my part kept ſtill aboord the ſhip, and came into Spaine, and was deliuered to the Inquiſitors of the Holy houſe of Siuill, where they kept me in cloſe priſon, til I had fulfilled the 3. yeeres of my penance. Which time being expired, I was freely put out of priſon, and ſet at libertie: and being in the citie of Siuil a caſher of one Hugh Typton, an Engliſh merchant of great doing, by the ſpace of one yeere, it fortuned that there came out of the Citie of Mexico, a Spaniard, called Iohn de la Barrera, that had bene long time in the Indias, and had got great ſummes of gold and ſiluer, and with one only daughter ſhipped himſelfe for to come for Spaine, and by the way chanced to die, and gaue all that he had vnto his onely daughter, whoſe name was Marie de la Barrera, and being arriued at the Citie of Siuil, it was my chance to marry with her. The marriage was worth to me 2500. pounds in bars of golde and ſiluer, beſides iewels of great price. This I thought good to ſpeake of, to ſhewe the goodnes of God to all them that put their truſt in him, that I being brought out of the Indias, in ſuch great miſerie and infamie to the world, ſhould be prouided at Gods hande in one moment, of more then in all my life before, I could attaine vnto by my owne labour. After we departed from Mexico, our S. Benitoes were ſet vp in the high Church of the ſaid Citie, with our names written in the ſame, according to their vſe & cuſtome, which is and will be a monument and a remembrance of vs, as long as the Romiſh Church doth raigne in that Countrey. The ſame haue bene ſeene ſince by one Iohn Chilton, and diuers others of our nation, which were left in that Countrey long ſince, by ſir Iohn Hawkins. And becauſe it ſhalbe knowen wherefore it was that I was ſo puniſhed by the Clergies hand, as before is mentioned, I will in briefe wordes declare the same.

It is so, that being in Mexico, at the table, among many principal people at dinner, they began to inquire of me being an Englishman, whether it were true, that in England they had ouerthrowen all their Churches, and houses of religion, and that all the images of the saints of heauen that were in them, were throwen downe and broken, and burned, and in some places stoned high waies with them, and denied their obedience to the Pope of Rome, as they had beene certified out of Spaine, by their friends. To whom I made answere, that it was so, that in deede they had in England put downe all the Religious houses of Friers, and Monkes, that were in England, and the images that were in their churches, & other places, were taken away, & vsed there no more: for that (as they say) ỳ making of them, and putting of them where they were adored, was cleane contrary to the expresse commandement of Almightie God, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any grauen image, &c. & that for ỳ cause they thought it not lawful that they should stand in the church, which is the house of adoration. One that was at the declaring of these wordes, who was my Master, Gonsalo Ceresо answered and said, if it were against the commandement of God, to haue images in the churches, that then he had spent a great deale of money in vaine, for that 2. yeeres past, he had made in ỳ monastery of Santo Domingo, in ỳ said city of Mexico, an image of our Lady of pure siluer & gold, with pearles & pretious stones, which cost him 7000. & odde pesos, & euery peso is 6. s. 8. d. of our money, which in deede was true, for that I haue seene it many times my selfe where it stands. At the table was an other gentleman, who presuming to defend the cause, more then any other that was there, said, that they knew wel ynough that they were made but of stocks & stones, & that to them was no worship giuen, but that there was a certaine veneration due vnto them, after they were set vp in the church, & that they were set there to a good intent: the one, for that they were bookes for the simple people, to make them vnderstand the glory of the saints that were in heauen, & a shape of them, to put vs in remembrance to cal vpon them, to be our intercessors vnto God for vs, for that we are such miserable sinners, that we are not worthy to appeare before God, & that vsing deuotion to saints in heauen, they may obtaine at Gods hands the sooner, the thing that wee demand of him. As for example, said he, imagin that a subiect hath offended his king vpon ỳ earth, in any kind of respect, is it for the partie to go boldly to the king in person, & to demand pardon for his offences: no saith he, ỳ presumption were to great, & possibly he might be repulsed, & haue a great rebuke for his labour. Better it is for such a person to seeke some priuate man neere the King in his Court, & make him acquainted with his matter, and let him be a Mediator to his Maiestie, for him, & for the matter he hath to do with him, and so might he the better come to his purpose, & obtaine the thing which he doeth demande: euen so saith he, it is with God & his saintes in heauen, for we are wretched sinners, and not worthy to appeare, nor present our selues before the Maiestie of God, to demand of him the thing that we haue neede of: therefore thou hast neede to be deuout, and haue deuotion to the mother of God, and the saints of heauen, to be intercessors to God for ther, & so maist thou the better obtaine of God the thing that thou doest demand. To this I answered, & saide, sir, as touching the comparison you made of the intercessors to the king, how necessarie they were, I would but aske you this question. Set the case that this king you speake of, if he be so merciful, as, when he knoweth that one, or any of his subiects hath offended him, he send for him to his owne towne, or to his owne house, or place, & say vnto him, come hither, I know we that thou hast offended many lawes, if thou doest know therof, & doest repent thee of the same, with full intent to offend no more, I wil forgiue thy trespasse, & remember it no more: said I, if this be done by the kings owne person, what then hath this man neede to go seeke friendship at any of the kings priuat seruants handes, but goe to the principal, seeing that he is readier to forgiue thee, then thou art to demand forgiuenes at his hands. Euen so is it with our gratious God, who calleth & crieth out vnto vs throughout all the world, by the mouth of his Prophets, Apostles, & by his own mouth, saith, Come vnto me all ye that labour, & are ouer laden, & I wil refresh you, besides 1000. other offers & proffers which he doth make vnto vs in his holy Scriptures. What then haue we need of the saints helpe that are in heauen, wheras the Lord himself doth so freely offer himselfe vnto vs? At which sayings, many of the hearers were astonied, & said, that by that reason, I would giue to vnderstand, that the inuocation of saints was to be disanulled, & by the lawes of God not commanded. I answered, that they were not my words, but the words of God himself: looke into the scriptures your self, & you shal so find it. The talke was perceaued to be preiudiciall to the Romish doctrine, & therfore it was commanded to be no more entreated of, & al remained vnthought vpon, had it not bene for a villanous Portingal that was in the company, who said, Basta ser Ingles para saber todo esto y mas: who the next day, without imparting any thing to any body, went to the Bishop of Mexico, and his Prouisor, & saide, that in a place where he had bene the day before, was an Engliſhman, who had ſaid, that there was no neede of ſaints in ẏ church, nor of any inuocation of Saints, vpon whoſe denomination I was apprehended for the ſame words here rehearſed, and none other thing, and thereupon was vſed, as before is written.

Now to ſpeake ſomewhat of the deſcription of the countrey, you ſhal vnderſtand, that the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, is a very litle Iſland low by the water ſide, the broadeſt or longeſt part thereof not aboue a bowe ſhoote ouer, and ſtandeth within two furlongs of the firme land. In my time there was but one houſe, and a litle Chappell to ſay Maſſe in, in all the Iſland: the ſide to the landwards, is made by mans hands, with free ſtone and grauel, and is 4. fathom deepe downe right, wherfore the great ſhips that come in there, doe ride ſo neere the ſhoare of the Iſland, that you may come and goe aland vpon their beake noſes. They vſe to put great chaines of yron in at their hallers, and an anker to the landward, and all litle ynough to moue well their ſhippes for feare of the northerly winds, which come off the coaſt of Florida, that ſometimes haue caried ſhips, and houſes, & all away to the ſhoare. The king was wont to haue 20. great mightie Negroes, who did ſeruice in nothing elſe, but onely to repaire the ſaid Iſland, where the foule weather doth hurt it. The Countrey al there about, is very plaine ground, & a mile from the ſea ſide a great wildernes, with great quantitie of red Deere in the ſame, ſo that when the marriners of the ſhips are diſpoſed, they go vp into the wildernes, & do kil of the ſame, and bring them aboord to eate, for their recreation.

From this port to the next towne, which is called Vera Cruz, are 5. leagues almoſt by the Sea ſide, til you come within one league of the place, and then you turne vp towards the land, into a wood, till you come to a litle riuer hard by the ſaid townes ſide, which ſometimes of the yeere is dry without water. The towne of Vera Cruz in my time, had not paſt 300. houſholds, and ſerued but for the folke of the ſhips, to buy and bring their goods aland, and deliuer it to their owners, as alſo the owners and their factors to receaue their goods of the Maſters of the ſhips. This towne ſtandeth alſo in a very plaine on the one ſide the riuer, and the other ſide is enuironed with much ſand blowen from the ſea ſide with the tempeſt of weather, many times comming vpon that coaſt. This towne alſo is ſubiect to great ſicknes, & in my time many of the marriners & officers of the ſhips did die with thoſe diſeaſes there accuſtomed, & eſpecially thoſe that were not vſed to the Country, nor knew the danger thereof, but would commonly go in the ſunne in the heat of the day, & did eat fruite of the Countrey, with much diſorder, & eſpecially gaue themſelues to womens company at their firſt comming: whereupon they were caſt into a burning ague, of the which fewe eſcaped.

Halfe a daies iourney from Vera Cruz, towards Mexico, is a lodging of 5. or 6. houſes, called the Rinconado, which is a place, where is a great pinacle made of lime & ſtone, faſt by a riuer ſide, where the Indians were wont to do their ſacrifices vnto their gods, which is a plaine & low ground betwixt that and Vera Cruz, and alſo ſubiect to ſickne: but afterward, halfe a daies iourney that you do begin to enter into the high land, you ſhal find as faire, good, and ſweete Countrey, as any in the world, & the farther you go, the goodlier and ſweeter the countrey is, til you come to Pueblo de los Angelos, which may be ſome 43. leagues from Vera Cruz, which was in my time a towne of 600. houſholds, or thereabout, ſtanding in a goodly ſoile. Betweene Vera Cruz & that, you ſhall come thorough many townes of the Indians, & villages, & many goodly fields of medow grounds, Riuers of freſh waters, foreſts, & great woods, very pleaſant to behold. From Pueblo de los Angelos, to Mexico, is 22. leagues of very faire way, & countrey, as before is declared. Mexico was a city in my time, of not aboue 1500. houſholds of Spaniards inhabiting there, but of India people in the Suburbs of the ſaid City, dwelt aboue 300000. as it was thought, and many more. This Citie of Mexico, is 65. leagues from the North ſea, and 75. leagues from the ſouth ſea, ſo that it ſtandeth in the midſt of the maine land, betwixt the one ſea & the other. It is ſituated in the middeſt of a lake of ſtanding water, & enuironed round about with the ſame, ſauing in many places, going out of the city, are many broad waies through the ſaid lake or water. This lake and city is enuironed alſo with great mountaines round about, which are in compaſſe aboue 30. leagues. & the ſaid city & lake of ſtanding water, doth ſtand in a great plaine in the midſt of it. This lake of ſtanding water doth proceede from the ſhedding of the raine, that falleth vpon the ſaid mountaines, & ſo gather themſelues together in this place. All the whole proportion of this city doth ſtand in a very plaine ground, & in the midſt of the ſaid city, is a ſquare place of a good bow ſhoote ouer from ſide to ſide: & in the midſt of the ſaid place, is the high church, very faire & wel builded al through, at that time not halfe finiſhed, & round about the ſaid place, are many faire houſes built: on the one ſide, are the houſes where Mutezuma the great king of Mexico that was, dwelt, & nowe there lie alwaies the Viceroyes that the king of Spaine ſendeth thither euery 3. yeeres. And in my time was there for Viceroy a gentleman of Caſtil, called Don Luis de Velaſco. And on the other ſide of ẏ ſaid place, euen againſt the ſame, is the Biſhops houſe, very faire built, and many other houſes of goodly building:

ding. And hard by the same, are also other very faire houses, built by the Marques de Valle, otherwise called Hernando Cortes, who was he that first conquered the said Citie and Countrey, who after the said conquest which he made with great labour and trauell of his person, and danger of his life, and being growen great in the Countrey, the King of Spaine sent for him, saying that he had some particular matters to impart vnto him. And when hee came home, he could not be suffered to returne backe againe, as the King before had promised him. With the which, for sorrowe that hee tooke, hee died, and this hee had for the rewarde of his good seruice. The said Citie of Mexico, hath the streetes made very broad, and right, that a man being in the high place, at the one ende of the streete, may see at the least a good mile forward, and in all the one part of the streetes of the North part of their Citie, there runneth a pretie lake of very cleere water, that euery man may put into his house, as much as he will, without the cost of any thing, but of the letting in. Also there is a great caue, or ditch of water, that commeth through the Citie, euen vnto the high place, where come euery morning at the breake of the day, 20. or 30. Canoas, or troughes of the Indians, which bring in them all manner of prouision for the Citie, which is made, and groweth in the Countrey, which is a very good commodity for the Inhabitants of that place. And as for victuals in the said Citie, of Beefe, Mutton, and Hennes, Capons, Quailes, Guinye Cocks, and such like, all are very good cheape: to say, the whole quarter of an Oxe, as much as a slaue can carry away from the Butchers, for 5. tomynes, that is, 5. Roials of plate, which is but 2. shillings and 6. pence, and a fat Sheepe at the Butchers, for 3. Roials, which is 18. pence, and no more. Bread is as good cheape as in Spaine, and all other kind of fruites, as Apples, Peares, Pomegranats, and Quinces, at a reasonable rate. The citie goeth wonderfully forwards in building of Friaries and Nunneries, and Chappels, and is like in time to come, to be the most populous Citie in the world, as it may be supposed. The weather is there alwaies very temperate, the day differeth but one howre of length all the yeere longe. The fieldes and the woods alwaies greene. The woods full of Popiniayes, and many other kind of birdes, that make such an harmonie of singing, and crying, that any man will reioyce to heare it. In the fieldes are such odoriferous smels of flowers and hearbs, that it giueth great content to the senses. About the Citie of Mexico 2. 3. or 4. leagues off, are diuers townes of Indians, some of 4000. or 6000. housholds, which doe stand in such a goodly soile, that if Christians had the inhabitation thereof, it would be put to a further benefite. In my time were dwelling and aliue in Mexico, many ancient men, that were of the Conquerors at the first conquest, with Hernando Cortes: for then it was about 36. yeeres agoe, that the said Countrey was conquered. About Mexico, there are diuers Mynes of siluer, and also in other places there about, but the principall Mynes that are in all New Spaine, are in Sacatecas, 80. leagues from Mexico, and the Mynes of S. Martines, 30. leagues, both to the eastward of Mexico, where is great store of gold and siluer. Also there is a place, called the Misteca, 50. leagues to the north west, which doth yeeld great store of very good silke, and cochinelio. Wine and oile there is none growing in the Countrey, but what commeth out of Spaine. Also there are many goodly fruites in that Countrey, whereof wee haue none such, as Plantanos, Guyanes, Sapotes, Tunes, and in the wildernes great store of black cheries, & other wholsome fruites. The Cochinelle is not a worme, or a Flye, as some say it is, but a berrie that groweth vpon certaine bushes in the wilde fielde, which is gathered in time of the yeere, when it is ripe. Also the Indico that doth come from thence to die blew, is a certaine hearbe that groweth in the wild fieldes, and is gathered at one time of the yeere, and burnt, and of the ashes thereof, with other confections put thereunto, the said Indico is made. Balme, salsa perilla, Cana fistula, suger, Oxe hides, and many other good & seruiceable things the Countrey doth yeeld, which are yeerely brought into Spaine, and there sold and distributed to many nations.

Robert Tomson.

A notable discourse of Master Iohn Chilton, touching the people, manners, Mynes, Cities, riches, forces, and other memorable things of the west Indias, seene and noted by himselfe in the time of his trauails, continued in those partes, the space of 17. or 18. yeeres.

IN the yeere of our Lord, 1561. in the moneth of July, I Iohn Chilton, went out of this Citie of London into Spaine, where I remained for the space of 7. yeeres, and from thence I sailed into Noua Hispania, and so trauelled there, and by the south sea, vnto Peru, the space of 17. or 18. yeres: & after ẏ time expired, I returned into Spaine, and so in the yeere, 1586. in the moneth of July, I arriued at the foresaide Citie of London, where perusing the notes which I had taken in the time of my trauell in those yeeres, I haue set downe, wowne, as followeth.

In the yeere 1568. in the moneth of March, being deſirous to ſee the world, I embarked my ſelfe in the Baye of Cales in Andaluzia, in a ſhip bound for the Iſles of Canaries, where ſhe tooke in her lading, and ſet forth from thence for the voyage, in the moneth of June, the ſame yeere. Within a moneth after, we fell with the Iſle of S. Domingo, and from thence directly to Noua Hiſpania, and came into the port of S. Iohn de Vllua, which is a litle Iſland, ſtanding in the ſea, about 2. miles from the land, where the king maintaineth about 50. ſouldiers, and captaines, that keepe the Forts, and about 150. Negroes, who all the yeere long are occupied in carrying of ſtones for building, and other vſes, and to helpe to make faſt the ſhips that come in there, with their cables. There are built two bulwarkes at each ende of a wall, that ſtandeth likewiſe in the ſaid Iſland, where the ſhips vſe to ride, made faſt to ỹ ſaid wal, with their cables ſo neere, that a man may leape aſhoare. From this port I iourneied by land to a towne called Vera Cruz, ſtanding by a riuers ſide, where all the factors of the Spaniſh merchants dwell, which receaue the goods of ſuch ſhips as come thither, and alſo lade the ſame with ſuch treaſure, and merchandize, as they returne backe into Spaine. They are in number about 400. who onely remaine there, during the time that the Spaniſh fleete diſchargeth, and is loden againe, which is from the ende of Auguſt, to the beginning of Aprill following. And then for the vnwholeſomnes of the place, they depart thence, 16. miles further vp within the Countrey, to a towne called Xalapa, a very healthful ſoile. There is neuer any woman deliuered of child in this port, for ſo ſoone as they perceiue themſelues conceiued with child, they get them into the Countrey, to auoid the perill of the infected aire, although they vſe every morning to driue thorough the towne aboue 2000. head of cattell, to take away the ill vapours of the earth. From Xalapa 7. leagues, I came to another place, named Perota, wherein are certaine houſes builded of ſtraw, called by the name of Ventz, the Inhabitants whereof are Spaniards, who accuſtome to harbour ſuch trauellers, as are occaſioned to iourney that way vp into the land. It ſtandeth in a great wood of Pine, & Cedar trees, the ſoile being very cold, by reaſon of ſtore of ſnow, which lieth on the mountaines there, al the yeere long. There are in that place, an infinit number of Deere, of bignes like vnto great mules, hauing alſo hornes of great length. From Perota, 9. leagues, I came to the fontes of Ozumba, which fontes are ſpringes of water, iſſuing out of certaine rockes, into the middeſt of the high waies, where likewiſe are certaine rainges, and houſes, for the vſes before mentioned. Eight leagues off from this place, I came to the Citie of the Angels, ſo called by that name, of the Spaniards, which inhabite there, to the number of 1000. beſides a great number of Indians. This Citie ſtandeth in very plaine fieldes, hauing neere adioyning to it, many ſumptuous Cities, as namely the Citie of Tlaxcalla, a Citie of two hundreth thouſand Indians, Tributaries to the King, although he exacteth no other tribute of them, then a buſhell of wheate a peece, which amounteth to 13. thouſand Fanneges, yeerely, as hath appeared by the Kings bookes of accompt. And the reaſon why he contenteth himſelfe with this tribute, onely for them, is, becauſe they were the occaſion that he tooke the Citie of Mexico, with whom the Tlaxcallians had warre at the ſame time, when the Spaniards came into the Countrey. The Gouernour of this Citie, is a Spaniard, called among them, the Alcalde Maior, who adminiſtreth chiefeſt cauſes of iuſtice, both vnto the Chriſtians, and Indians, referring ſmaller and lighter vices, as drunkennes, and ſuch like, to the iudgement, and diſcretion of ſuch of the Indians, as are choſen euery yeere to rule amongſt them, called by the name of Alcaldes. Theſe Indians from 14. yeeres olde vpwards, pay vnto the King for their yeerely tribute, one ounce of ſiluer, and an hanege of Maiz, which is valued among them commonly, at 12. Rotals of place. The widowes among them, pay halfe of this. The Indians both of this Citie, and of the reſt, lying about Mexico, are cloathed with mantels of linnen cloth, made of cotton wooll, painted throughout with works of diuers and fine colours. It is diſtant from the Citie of the Angels, 4. leagues to the northward, and 14. from Mexico. There is another Citie a league from it, called Cholula, conſiſting of more then 60. thouſand Indians, tributaries, and there dwelleth not aboue 12. Spaniards there. From it, about two leagues, there is another, called Acaſſingo, of aboue 50000. Indians, and about 8, or 12. Spaniards, which ſtandeth at the foote of the Vulcan of Mexico, on the Eaſt ſide. There are beſides theſe, three other great Cities, the one named Tepiaca, a very famous Citie, Waxazingo, and Tlahamachalcho: all theſe in times paſt, belonged to the kingdom of Tlaxcal, and from theſe Cities, they bring all their Cutchanelio into Spaine. The diſtance from the Citie of the Angels, to the Citie of Mexico, is 20. leagues. This Citie Mexico, is the Citie of greateſt fame in all the Indias, hauing goodly, and coſtly houſes in it, builded all of lime and ſtone, and ſeuen ſtreetes in length, and ſeuen in breadth, with riuers running thorough euery ſecond ſtreete, by which they bring their prouiſion in Canoas. It is ſituated at the foote of certaine hils, which containe in compaſſe passe by estimation, aboue 20. leagues, compassing the said Citie on the one side, and a lake which is 14. leagues about on the other side. Upon which lake, there are built many notable and sumptuous Cities, as the City of Tescuco, where the Spaniards built 6. frigats, at that time when they conquered Mexico, and where also Fernando Cortes made his abode 5. or 6. moneths, in curing of the sicknes of his people, which they had taken at their comming into the countrey. There dwel in this Citie, about 60000. Indians, which pay tribute to the king. In this Citie the said Fernando built the finest Church that euer was built in the Indias, the name whereof is S. Peters. After I had continued 6. yeeres in this Citie, being desirous to see further the Countries, I imploied that which I had, and tooke my voyage towards the prouinces of the California, in the which was discouered a certaine Countrey, by a Byskaine, whose name was Diego de Guiara, and called it

New Biskay. after the name of his Countrey, New Biskaye, where I sold my merchandize for exchange of siluer, for there were there certaine rich Mynes discouered by the aforesaid Biskaine. Going from Mexico, I directed my voyage toward the south west, to certaine Mynes, called Tamascal Tepec, and so trauelled forwarde, the space of 20. daies, through desert places vnhabited, till I came to the valley of S. Bartholomew, which ioyneth to the prouince of New Biskaye. In all these places the Indians for the most part goe naked, and are wild people. Their common armour is bowes, and arrowes, they vse to eate vp such Christians as they come by. At my returne to Mexico, I came along by the coast of the South sea, through the prouince of Sacatula, from thence into the prouince of Coloa, where I imploied the siluer that I had, in a certaine graine, growing like an Almond, called amongst the Indians, Cacao, which in Noua Hispania is currant for money, to buy things of small value, as fruits, &c. for that they haue no small money there, and in which also they pay the King his tribute. They grinde this graine to a powder, and mingle it with water, and so is made both bread, and drinke vnto them, which is a prouision of great profite, and good strength. From hence departing, I came to another prouince, named Xalisco, and from thence to
The hauen where the ships of China and the Philippine arriue. the port of Nauidad, which is 66. leagues from Mexico, in which port arriue alwaies in the moneth of Aprill, all the ships that came out of the South sea, from China, and the Philippinz, and there they laie their merchandize a shoare. The most part wherof, is mantels made of cotton wool, waxe, and fine platters gilded, made of earth, and much gold. The next summer following, being in the yeere 1570. (which was the first yeere that the Popes Buls were brought into the Indias) I vndertooke another voyage towards the prouince of Sonsonate, which is in the kingdome of Guatimala, whether I carried diuers merchandize of Spaine, all by land, on Mules backes. The way thitherward from Mexico, is to the Citie of the Angels, and from thence to another Citie of Christians, 80. leagues off, called Guaxaca, in which there dwelt about 50. Spaniards, and many Indians. All the Indians of this prouince, pay their tribute in mantels of cotton wooll, and Cochonelio, whereof there groweth aboundance throughout this Countrey. Neere to this place
Aquatulca. there lieth a port in the South sea, called Aquatulca, in the which there dwelleth not about 3. or 4. Spaniards, with certaine Negroes, which the King maintaineth there: in which place, Sir Francis Drake arriued, in the yeere, 1579. in the moneth of Aprill, where I lost with his being there, aboue 1000. duckets, which he tooke away, with much other goods of other merchants of Mexico, from one Francisco Gomes Rangifa, factor there for all the Spanish merchants that then traded in the south sea: for from this port they vse to imbarke all their goods that goe for Peru, & to ỳ kingdom of Hunduras. From Guaxaca, I came to a towne named Nixapa, which standeth vpon certaine very high hils, in the prouince of Sapotecas, wherin inhabite about the number of 20. Spaniards, by the king of Spaines commandement to keepe that Countrey in peace, for ỳ the Indians are very rebellious: & for this purpose, he bestoweth on them the townes & cities that be within that prouince. From hence I went to a Citie, called Tecoantepec, which is the farthest towne to the Eastward in al Noua Hispania, which sometimes did belonge to the Marques De Valle, and because it is a very fit port, standing in the south sea, the king of Spaine, vpon a rebelion made by the said Marques against him, tooke it from him, and doth now possesse it as his owne. Here in ỳ yeere 1572. I saw a peece of Ordinance of brasse, called a Demy culuerin, which came out of a ship, called the Iesus of Lubecke, which Captaine Hawkins left in S. Iohn de Vllua, being in fight with the Spaniards, in the yeere, 1568. which peece they afterwardes caried 100. leagues by land, ouer mighty mountains to the said city, to be embarked there for the Philippinas. Leauing Tecoantepec, I went still along by the South sea, about 150. leagues in the desolate prouince of Soconusco, in which prouince there groweth Cacao, which the Christians carry from thence into Noua Hispania, for that it will not growe in any colde Countrey. The Indians of this Countrey, pay the King their tribute in Cacao, giuing him 400. Cargas, and euery Carge is 24000. Almonds, which Carge is worth in Mexico 30. peeces of roials of plate. They are men men of great riches, and withall very prowd, and in all this prouince throughout, there dwell not 20. christians. I trauailed through another prouince called Suchetepec: & thence to ỳ prouince of Guaſacapan: in both which prouinces are very fewe people, the biggeſt towne therin hauing not about 200. Indians, the chiefeſt marchandize there is Cacao, and hence I went to the City of Guatimala, which is the chief city of all this kingdom. In this citie do inhabite about 80. Spanyards, & here the king hath his gouernors, & Counſell, to whom all the people of the kingdome repaire for Juſtice. This City ſtandeth from the coaſt of the South ſea, 14. leagues within the land, and is very riche by reaſon of the gold that they fetch out of the coaſt of Veragua. From this Citie to the Eaſtward 60. leagues, lyeth the prouince Sonſonate, where I ſold the marchandize I carryed out of noua Hiſpania. The chiefeſt Citie of this prouince is called S. Saluador, which lyeth 7. leagues from the coaſt of the South ſea, and hath a port lying by the Sea coaſt called Acaiutla, where the ſhips arriue with the marchãdize they bring from noua Hiſpania: & from thẽce take backe againe the Cacao there dwell here to the number of 60. Spanyards. From Sonſonate I trauailed to Nicoia, which is in the kingdome of Nicaragua, In which Port the king buildeth all the ſhipping that trauel out of the Indies to the Moluccaes. I went forward from thence to Coſtaricca, where the Indians both men and women goe all naked, & the lande lyeth betwern Panama, and the kingdom of Guatimala: and for that the Indians there liue as warriers, I durſt not paſſe by land, ſo that here in a towne called S. Saluador, I beſtowed that which I carryed, in annele (which is a kinde of thing to dye blew withall) which I carryed with mee to the Port of Cauallos, lying in the kindome of Hunduras, which Port is a mighty huge riuer, and at the comming in of the one ſide of it, there lyeth a Towne of little force without ordinance or any other ſtrength, hauing in it houſes of ſtrawe: at which Towne the Spanyards vſe yeerely in the moneth of Auguſt, to vnlade 4. ſhips, which come out of Spaine laden with riche Marchandize and returne againe here their lading of a kind of Marchandize called Annele and Cutchanelio (al, though it be not of ſuch value as that of noua Hiſpania) and ſiluer of the mines of Toma angua, and golde of Nicaragua, and hides, and Salſa perilla, the beſt in all the Indies, al which Marchandize they returne and depart from thence alwaies in the moneth of Apꝛill following, taking their courſe by the Iland of Iamaica, in which Iland there dwell on the Weſt ſide of it certaine Spanyardes of no great number. From this place they goe to the cape of S. Anthonie, which is the vttermoſt part of the Weſtward of the Iland of Cuba, and from thence to Hauana lying hard by, which is the chiefeſt Port that the king of Spaine hath in all the Countries of the Indies, and of greateſt importance: for all the ſhips, both from Peru, Hunduras, Portoricco, S. Domingo, Iamaica, & all other places in his Indies, arriue there at their returne to Spaine, for that in this Port they take in victuals, and water, and the moſt part of their lading: here they meete from all the ſaid places alwaies in the beginning of May by the kings commandement: at the entrance of this Port it is ſo narrow, that there can ſcarſe come in two ſhips together, although it be aboue 6. fadome deepe in the narroweſt place of it. In the North ſide of the comming in their ſtandeth a towne, in which there watcheth euery day a man, to deſcrie the Sailes of ſhips, which he can ſee in the Sea, and as many as he diſcouereth ſo many banners he ſetteth vpon the Tower that the people of the towne (which ſtandeth within the Port about a mile from the Towne) may vnderſtand thereof. Vnder this tower there lyeth a ſandy ſhore, where men may eaſely go a land, and by the Tower there runneth a hill along by the waters ſide, which eaſely with ſmall ſtore of ordinance ſubdueth the towne and Port. The Port within is ſo large that there may eaſely ride a Nauie of ſhips, without anker or cable, for no winde is able to hurt them. There inhabite within the towne of Hauana about 300. Spanyardes, and about 60. Souldiers, which the King maintaineth there for the keeping of a certaine Caſtell, which he hath of late erected, which hath planted in it about 12. peeces of ſmall ordinance, and is compaſſed rounde with a ſmall ditch, where through at their pleaſure, they may let in the ſea. About ti. leagues from Hauana, there lyeth another towne called Wanabacoa, in which there is dwelling, about 100. Indians, and from this place, 60. leagues, there lyeth another towne named Bahama, ſcituate on the Northſide of the Iland. The chiefeſt citie of this Iland of Cuba, (which is aboue 200. leagues in length) is alſo called Cuba, where dwelleth a Biſhop, and about 200. Spanyardes, which towne ſtandeth on the Southſide of the Iland, about C leagues from Hauana. All ỳ trade of this Iland is cattel which they kil only for the hyds ỳ are brought thẽce into Spaine: for which end the Spanyards maintaine there many Negroes to kil their cattel, & foſter a great number of hogges, which being killed, and cut into ſmall pieces, they dry in the ſunne, and ſo make it prouiſion for the ſhips, which come for Spaine. Hauing remained in this Iland ti. moneths, I tooke ſhipping in a Frigat, & went ouer to Nombre de Dios, and from thence by land to Panama, which ſtandeth vpon ỳ Southſea.

The commodities of Cuba

From Nombre de Dios to Panama, it is 17. leagues distant. From which towne there runneth a riuer which is called the riuer of Chagre, which runneth within 5. leagues of Panama, to a place called Cruçes, through which riuer they carry their goods, & dismbarke it at the sayd Cruçes, and from thence it is conueyed on Mules backes to Panama by lande: where they againe imbarke it in certaine small ships in the Southsea for all the coast of Peru. In one of these ships, I went to Potossi, and from thence by lande to Cusco, and from thence to Paita. Heare I remained the space of seuen moneths, & then returned into the kingdome of Guatimall, and arriued in the prouince of Nicoia, and Nicaragua. From Nicaragua I trauelled by lande to a prouince called Nicamula (which lyeth towarde the North sea in certaine high mountaines) for that I could not passe thorough the kingdome of Guatimal at that time for waters, where with all the lowe Countries of the Prouince of Suconusco, lying by the South sea is drowned, with the raine that falleth alone in the mountaines enduring alwaies from Aprill to September: which season for that cause they call their winter. From this prouince, I came into another called de Vera Paz, in which the chiefest Citie is also called after that name, where there dwelleth a Bishop, and about fourtie Spaniards. Among the mountaines of this Countrie toward the North Sea, there is a Prouince called La candona, where are Indian men of warre which the king cannot subdue, for that they haue Townes and Fortes in a great lake of water aboue in the saide mountaines, the most part of them go naked, and some weare mantels of Cotten wooll. Distant from this about eighte leagues, I came into another Prouince called the Prouince of Chiapa, wherein the chiefest Citie is called Sacatlan, where there dwelleth a Bishop, and about a hundred Spaniards. In this Countrie there is great store of Cotton wooll, whereof the Indians make fine linnen cloth, which the Christians buye and carie into Noua Hispania. The people of this Prouince pay their tribute to the king all in Cotton wooll and Fethers. Fourteene leagues from this Citie, there is another called Chiapa, where are the finest Gennets in all the Indies, which are caried hence to Mexico, 300. leagues from it. From this Citie I trauayled still through hilles and mountaines, till I came to the ende of this Prouince, to a hill called Ecatepec, which in English signifieth the hill of wind: for that they say, it is the highest hill that euer was discouered: for from the toppe of it may be discouered both the North, and the South Seas, and it is in height supposed to be nine leagues. They which trauaile ouer it, lie alwayes at the foote of it ouernight, and begin their iourney about midnight, to trauell to the toppe of it before the Sunne rise the next day, because the winde bloweth with such force afterwardes, that it is impossible for any man to goe vp: from the foote of this hill, to Tecoantepec, the first Towne of Noua Hispania, are about fifteene leagues, and so from hence I iourneyed to Mexico. By and by after I came to Mexico (which was in the yeere 1572.) in the companie of another Spaniard, which was my companion in this iourney, we went together toward the Prouince of Panuco, which lieth vpon the coast of the North Seas, and within three dayes iourney we entred a Citie called Mestitlan, where there dwelt twelue Spaniards: the Indian inhabitants there were about thirtie thousand. This Citie standeth vpon certaine high mountaines, which are very thicke planted with Townes very holsome, and fruitfull, hauing plentifull fountaines of water running through them. The hie ways of these hilles are all set with fruites, and trees of diuers kindes, & most pleasant: in euery Towne as we passed through, the Indians presented vs with victuals. Within twentie leagues of this place, there is another Citie called Clanchinoltitpec, belonging to a Gentleman, where there inhabite about fourtie thousand Indians: and there are among them eight or nine Fryers of the order of Saint Augustine, who haue there a Monasterie. Within three dayes after we departed from this place, and came to a Citie called Guaxutla, where there is another Monasterie of Fryers of the same order: there dwell in this Towne about twelue Spaniards. From this place forwards beginneth a Prouince called Guastecan, which is al plaine grownds without any hils. The first Towne we came vnto is called Tanguialabe, in which there dwell many Indians high of stature, hauing all their bodies painted with blewe, and weare their haire long downe to their knees, tyed as women vse to doe with their hairelaces. When they goe out of their doores, they carrie with them their bowes and arrowes, being very great archers, going for the most part naked. In those Countries they take neither golde, nor siluer for exchange of any thing, but onely Salt, which they greatly esteeme, and vse it as a principall medicine for certaine wormes which breede in their lippes, and in their gummes. After nine dayes trauell from this place, we came to a Towne called Tampica, which is a port Towne vpon the Sea, wherein there dwell I thinke fourtie Christians, of which number whilest we abode there, the Indians killed fourteene, as they were gathering of Salt, which is all the trade that they haue in this place: it standeth vpon the entrie of the riuer of Panuco, which is a mightie great riuer, and were it not for a sand that lieth Ecatepec a hill nine leagues high.

at the mouth of it, shippes of 500. tunne might goe vp into it aboue three score leagues. From hence we went to Panuco 14. leagues from Tampeca, which in times past had bene a goodly Citie, where the king of Spaine had his gouernour: but by reason that the Indians there destroyed the Christians, it lieth in a maner waste, conteyning in it not aboue 10. Christians with a Priest: In this towne I fell sicke where I lay 41. dayes, hauing no other sustenance, then fruite and water, which water I sent for aboue 6. leagues of within the countrie. Here I remained til my companion came to me, which had departed from me another way, retayning in my company onely a slaue, which I brought with me from Mexico. And the last day in Easter weeke my companion came to me, finding me in a very weake state, by reason of the vnholsomnes of the place. Notwithstanding my weakenes, I being set on a horse, & an Indian behind me to hold me, we went forward in our voyage all that day till night. The next day in the morning we passed ouer the riuer in a Canoa, and being on the other side, I went my selfe before alone, and by reason there met many wayes, traled by the wilde beastes, I lost my way, and so trauelled through a great wood about two leagues, and at length fell into the hands of certaine wilde Indians, which were there in certaine cottages made of strawe, who seeing me, came out to the number of 20. of them, with their bowes and arrowes, and spake vnto me in their language which I vnderstoode not: and so I made signes vnto them to helpe me from my horse, which they did by commandement of their lord which was there with them, and lighted downe, they carried me vnder one of their cottages, and laid me vpon a mat on the ground: and perceiuing that I could not vnderstand them, they brought vnto me a little Indian wench, of Mexico, of 15. or 16. yeres of age, whom they commaunded to aske me in her language from whence I came, and for what intent I came among them: for (sayth she) doest thou not know Christian, how that these people will kill and eate thee? to whom I answered, let them doe with me what they will, here nowe I am: she replied, saying, thou mayest thanke God thou art leane, for they feare thou hast the pocks, otherwise they would eate thee. So I presented to the king a little wine which I had with me in a bottel, which he esteemed aboue any treasure, for for wine they will sell their wiues, & children. Afterwards the wench asked me what I would haue, and whether I would eate any thing: I answered that I desired a little water to drinke, for that the countrie is very hotte, and she brought me a great Uenice glasse guilded full of water, and marueiling at the glasse, I demanded how they came by it: she told me that the Casique brought it from Shallapa, a great towne distant 30. leagues from this place on the hilles whereas dwelt certaine Christians, and certaine Fryers, of the order of S. Augustine, which this Casique with his people on a night slewe, & burning the Fryers Monasterie, among other things reserued this glasse, and from thence also brought me. Hauing now bene conuersant with them about three or foure houres, they bid her aske me if I would goe my way: I answered her, ꝑ I desired nothing els: so ꝑ Casique caused two of his Indians to leade me forward in my way, going before me with their bowes & arrowes naked, the space of three leagues, till they brought me into a hie way: & then making a signe vnto me, they signified ꝑ in short time I should come to a towne where Christians inhabited, which was called S. Iago de las villas, standing in plaine fields walled about with a mud wall, ꝑ number of ꝑ Christians ꝑ dwelt therein, were not aboue 4. or 5. & twentie, vnto which ꝑ king of Spaine giueth Indiãs, & townes to keepe ꝑ countries subiect vnto him. Here the Christians haue their mightie mules, which they carry for all the parties of ꝑ Indies, & into Peru, for that all their marchandize are caried by this meanes by land. In this towne aforesaid I found my cõpanie which I had lost before, who made no other accoũt of me but that I had bene slaine, & the Christians there likewise marueiled to heare ꝑ I came frõ those kinde of Indians aliue, which was a thing neuer seene nor heard of before: for they take a great pride in killing a Christian, & to weare any part of him where he hath any haire growing, hanging it about their neckes, & so are accounted for valiant men. In this towne I remained 18. dayes, til I recouered my health, & in the meane space there came one Don Francisco de Pago, whom the Uiceroy Don Henrico Manriques had sent for captaine generall, to open & discouer a certaine way frõ ꝑ sea side to ꝑ mines of Sacatecas, which was frõ this place 160. leagues, for to transport their marchãdize by ꝑ way, leauing ꝑ way by Mexico, which is 7. or 8. moneths trauel. To this captaine tooke me, & my companie with the rest of his souldiers to the number of 40. which he had brought wᵗ him, & 500. Indians which we tooke out of ꝑ two townes in this prouince called Tanchipa, & Tamadelipa, al good archers & naked men, & went thence to ꝑ riuer de las Palmas of great bignes, parting ꝑ kingdome of noua Hispania, & Florida, & going still along by this riuer the space of 3. daies seeking passage to passe ouer, & finding none, we were at length inforced to cut timber to make a Balsa, which when we had made we sate on it, & the Indians swimming in ꝑ water, & thrusting it before them to ꝑ other side: within 30. daies after trauayling through woods, hils & mountaines, we came to ꝑ mines of Sacatecas, which are ꝑ richest mines in all the Indies, and from thence they fetch most siluer: In which mines there dwelt aboue 300. Christians, and there our Captaine gaue vs leaue to depart. So we came to the valley of S. Michael towards Mexico, and from thence to Pueblo nouo, & from that place to the prouince of Mechuacan, after which name the chiefest Citie of that place is called, where there dwels a Bishop, and aboue 100. Spanyards in it. It abounds with all kinde of Spanish fruites, and hath woods full of nutt trees, and wilde vines: heare are many mines of copper, and great store of cattel: It lyeth 60. leagues from Mexico, whither we came within 4. daies after: the Indias of this Countrey are very mighty and bygge men. Afterwards I returned another way to the prouince of Sonsonate by Vera cruz, and so to Rio Aluarado, and from thence to the prouince of Campego, which lyeth on the Southside of the bay of Mexico: The chief towne of this prouince is called Merida, in which is a Bishop and almost C. Spanyardes. The Indians of this prouince pay all their tribute in mantles of cotten wooll and cacao. There is no port in all this prouince for a ship of a C. tunne to ryde in, but onely in the riuer of Tabasco, by which riuer this Citie of Merida standeth. The chiefest marchandize which they lade there in smal Frigats is a certaine wood called Campege, (wherewith they vse to dye) as also hydes and annyle. By this there lyeth the prouince Iucatan neere the Hundura by the North sea coast, where there is also another Bishop, and a towne likewise named Iuacatans where there dwell a fewe Spanyardes. They haue no force at all in all this coast to defende themselues withall, saue onely that the Land is low, and there is no Port to receiue any shipping, vnlesse they be Frigats, which carry from thence to the Port of S. Iohn de Vllua waxe, Cacao, hony, & also mantels of cotten wooll, whereof they make there great store, and of which kinde of Marchandize there is great trade thence to Mexico: of the same also they pay their tribute to the King. The king hath tribute brought him yeerely out of the Indies into Spaine betweene ix. and x. Millions of gold, and siluer: for he receiueth of euery Indian which is subiect vnto him, excepting those which doe belong to the Incommenderos (which are the childre of those Spanyards, who first conquered the land) to whom the king gaue, and graunted the gouernment of the Cities and townes subdued for three liues, twelue royals of plate, and a hannege of Mayis (which is a wheat of the Countrey, v. of them making a quarter of English measure) and of euery widow woman he hath vi. royals and halfe a hannege of Mayis, and so if any Infidell haue xx. childzen in his house he payeth for euery one of them being aboue xv. yeres old after that rate: this wheat being duely brought to the Gouernour of euery prouince and Citie, is solde in Mexico by the Kinges gouernours there euery yeere: so that the money receiued for it, is put into the kings Treasurie there, and so is yeerely carryed from thence into Spaine. Of the Spanyards which are owners of the mines of gold and siluer, he receiueth the fift part of it, which hee calleth his Quintas, which being taken out of the heape, there is his armes set on it, for otherwise it may not be brought out of the lande into Spaine, vnder paine of death. The marke of siluer which is 8. ounces, when it commeth out of the mines not hauing the Kinges Seale vpon it, is worth forty three royalles of plate, and so it is currant, and when they will bring it for Spayne, they carry it to the Kinges Treasure house, where his Seale is set vpon it, and so it is raysed in value thereby to three score and foure royals of plate, and so the king hath for his custome of euery marke of plate twenty and one royals. From the yeere of 70. which was the yeere, that the Popes Buls came into the Indies, as is afore mencioned, he hath receiued both of Indians which are tributaries vnto him, and also of all others belonging to the Incommenderos of euery one being aboue 12. yeeres of age, 4. royals of euery bull. Also they carry other pardons with them into the Indies for such as bee dead, although a 100. yeeres before the Spanyards came into the countrey: which pardons the Fryers in their preachings perswaded the poore Indians to take, telling them that with giuing 4. royals of plate for a Palle, they would deliuer their soules out of purgatory. Of the Christians likewise dwelling there he hath 14. royals for euery Bull, and there be certaine Buls brought thither for the Christians besides the former, which serue for pardoning all such faults wherein they haue trespassed either against the king by keeping backe his customes, or one against another by any other iniury, for euery hundred crownes whereof his conscience doth accuse him that hee hath deceiued the king or any other, he must giue 10. for a Bull and so after that rate for euery C which he hath any way stollen, and so is pardoned the fault. The reuenue of his Buls after this maner yeelded vnto his Treasurie yeerely aboue three Millions of gold as I haue bene credibly informed: although of late both the Spanyardes, and Indians do refuse to take the Buls, for that they perceiue he doth make a yeerely custome of it: onely the Indians take one pardon for all his household, whereas in former time euery Indian vsed to take one for euery person in his house, and teareth the same into small peeces, and giueth to euery one of his household a little piece, peace, saying thus, they neede nowe no more, seeing in that which they bought the peere before, they had aboue 10000. peeres pardon. These pieces they sticke vp in the wall of the houses where they lie. Both the Christians and Indians are weary with these infinite taxes and customes, which of late he hath imposed vpon them, more then in the yeeres before. So as the people of both sortes did rebell twise in the time that I was among them, and would haue set vp an other King of them selues: For which cause the King hath commaunded vpon paine of death, that they should not plant either wine or oyle there, but should alwayes stand in neede of them to be brought out of Spaine, although there would more growe there in foure yeeres, then there groweth in Spaine in twentie, it is so fertile a countrey. And the King to keepe the countrey alwayes in subiection, and to his owne vse, hath straightly prouided by Law, vpon paine of death, and losse of goods, that none of these countries should traffike with any other nation, although the people themselues doe much nowe desire to trade with any other then with them, and would vndoubtedly doe, if they feared not the perill ensuing thereupon. Rebellions in Noua Hispania, by two great exactions.

About Mexico, and other places in Noua Hispania, there groweth a certaine plant called Nege, which yeeldeth Wine, vineger, Honey, and black Sugar, and of the leaues of it dried, they make hempe, ropes, shooes which they vse, and tyles for their houses: and at the ende of euery leafe, there groweth a sharpe poinct like an awle, wherewith they vse to bore or pearce through any thing.

Thus to make an ende, I haue here set downe the summe of all the chiefest things that I haue obserued, and noted in my 17. yeeres trauaile in those partes.

The first voyage, attempted and set foorth by the expert, and valiant Captaine M. Francis Drake himselfe, with a ship called the Dragon, and another ship, and a Pinnesse, to Nombre de Dios, and Dariene, about the yeere 1572. Written, and recorded by one Lopez a Spaniard, in this maner folowing: which Spaniard, with the discourse about him, was taken at the Riuer of Plate by the Ships set forth by the Right Honourable the Earle of Cumberland, in the yeere 1586.

There was a certaine English man named Francis Drake, who hauing intelligence howe the Towne of Nombre de Dios in Noua Hispania, had but small store of people remaining there, came on a night, & entred the Porte with foure Pinnesses, and landed about 150. men, and leauing 70. men with a trumpet, in a Forte which was there, with the other 80. he entred the Towne, without doing any harme, till hee came to the market place, and there discharged his caliuers, and sounded a trumpet very loude, and the other which he had left in the Forte answered him after the same maner, with the discharging their caliuers, and sounding their trumpets: the people hereupon not thinking of any such matter, were put in great feare, and waking out of their sleepe fled all into the mountaines, inquiring one of another what the matter should be, remaining as men amazed, not knowing what that vprore was which happened so suddenly in the Towne. But fourteene or fifteene of them ioyning together with their harquebusses, went to the market place to knowe what they were that were in the Towne, and in a corner of the market place they did discouer the English men, and seeing them to be but fewe, discharged their caliuers at those English men: their fortune was such that they killed the Trumpetter, and shot one of the principall men thorow the leg, who seeing himselfe hurt, retyred to the Forte, where the rest of their company was left: they which were in the Forte sounded their trumpet, and seeing that they in the Towne did not answere them, and hearing the caliuers, thought that all they in the Towne had bene slaine, and thereupon fled to their Pinnesses: The English Captaine comming to the Forte, and not finding his men which he left there, hee and his were in so great feare, that leauing their furniture behinde them, and putting off their hose, swamme, and rowed all to their Pinnesses, and so went with their shippes againe out of the Porte.

This this English Captaine called Francis Drake departed from Nombre de Dios, and sawe onely one man in the Towne which was looking out of a windowe to see what the matter was, and of his men had onely his Trumpetter slaine.

But hee being discontented with the repulse which he had receiued there, came to the sound of Dariene, & hauing conference with certaine Negroes which were fled from their masters of Panama, and Nombre de Dios, the Negroes did tell him, that certaine Mules came laden with golde and siluer from Panama to Nombre de Dios, who in companie of these Negroes went thereupon thereupon on land, and staied in the way where the treasure should come with 100. shot, and so tooke two companies of mules, which came onely with their driuers mistrusting nothing, and he caried away the golde only, for they were not able to carrie the siluer though the mountaines. And two dayes after he came to the house of Crosses, where hee killed sixe or seuen marchants, but found no golde nor siluer but much marchandize: so he fired the house, where was burnt aboue 200000. Duckets in marchandize, and so went to his shippe againe: and within halfe an houre after he was a shipborde, there came downe to the sands 300. shot of the Spaniards in the sight of his shippes, of purpose to seeke him, but hee cared litle for them being out of their reach, and so departed with his treasure.

Sr. Francis Drake burnt the house of Crosses.

The voyage of Iohn Oxnam of Plymmouth, to the West India, and ouer the Straight of Dariene into the South Sea. Anno 1575. Written by the foresayd Lopez in the same discourse.

There was another English man, who hearing of the spoyle that Francis Drake had done vpon the coast of Noua Hispania, and of his good aduenture and safe returne home, was thereby prouoked to vndertake the like enterprise, with a ship of 140. tunnes, and 70. men, and came thither, and had also conference with the foresayde Negroes: and hearing that the golde and siluer which came vpon the Mules from Panama to Nombre de Dios, was nowe conducted with souldiers, he determined to doe that which neuer any man before enterprised: and landed in that place where Francis Drake before had had his conference with the Negroes. This man couered his ship after he had brought her aground with boughes of trees, and hid his great Ordinance in the ground, and so not leauing any man in his shippe, hee tooke two small pieces of ordinance, and his caliuers, and good store of victuals, & so went with the Negroes about twelue leagues into the maine land, to a Riuer that goeth to the South sea, and there hee cut wood and made a Pinnesse, which was 45. foote by the keele, and hauing made this Pinnesse, hee went into the South sea, carying sixe Negroes with him to be his guides, & so went to the Iland of Pearles, which is 25. leagues from Panama, which is in the way that they come from Peru to Panama, and there he was ten dayes without shewing himselfe to any man, to see if he might get any ship that came from Peru: At last, there came a small Barke by, which came from Peru from a place called Quito, which he tooke, and found in her 60. thousand waight of golde, and much victuals. But not contenting himselfe with this prise, hee staied long without sending away his prise or any of the men, and in the ende of sixe dayes after, he tooke another Barke which came from Lima, in which he tooke 100. thousande waight of siluer in barres, with the which hee thought to haue gone, and entred the Riuer, but first hee went into the Ilands to see if he could finde any Pearles: Where he found a fewe, and so returned to his Pinnesse againe, and so saying to the Riuer from whence he came, and comming neere to the mouth of the sayd Riuer, he sent away the two prises that he tooke, and with his Pinnesse he went vp the Riuer. The Negroes that dwelt in the Iland of Pearls, the same night that he went from them, went in Canoas to Panama, and the Gouernour within two dayes sent foure Barks with 100. men, twentie fiue men in euery one, and Negroes to rowe with the Captaine, Iohn de Ortega, which went to the Ilands of Pearles, and there had intelligence, which way the English men were gone, and following of them, hee met by the way the ships which the English men had taken, of whome hee learned, that the English men were gone vp the Riuer, and he going thither, when he came to the mouth of the Riuer, the Captaine of Panama knew not which way to take, because there were three partitions in the Riuer to goe vp in, and being determined to goe vp the greatest of the three Riuers, he sawe comming downe a lesser Riuer many feathers of hennes, which the English men had pulled to eate, and being glad thereof, he went vp that Riuer where he sawe the feathers, and after that he had bene in that Riuer foure dayes, he discried the English mens Pinnesse vpon the sands, and comming to her, there were no more then sixe English men, whereof they killed one, and the other fiue escaped away, and in the Pinnesse hee found nothing but victuals: But this Captaine of Panama not herewith satisfied determined to seeke out the Englishmen by land, and leauing twentie men in his Pinnesses, he with 80. shot went vp the countrey: hee had not gone halfe a league, but hee found a house made of boughs, where they found all the English mens goods, and the gold and siluer also, and carying it backe to their Pinnesses, the Spaniards were determined to goe away, without following the English men any further.

The Iland of Pearles 25. leagues from Panama.

But

But at the ende of three dayes, the English Captaine came to the Riuer with all his men, and aboue 200. Negroes, and set vpon the Spaniards with great furie: But the Spaniards hauing the aduantage of trees which they stoode behinde, did easely preuaile, and killed eleuen English men, and fiue Negroes, & tooke other seuen English men aliue, but of the Spaniards, two were slaine and fiue sore hurt. A skirmish betweene the English men, and the Spaniards.

Among other thinges, the Spaniards enquired of the English men which they tooke, why they went not away in fifteene dayes libertie which they had. They answered, that their Captaine had commaunded them to carry all that golde and siluer which they had, to the place where they had left their shippe, and they had promised him to carry it, although they made three or foure iourneys of it, for he promised to giue them part of it besides their wages, but the mariners would haue it by and by, and so their Captaine being angry because they would not take his word, fell out with them, and they with him, in so much that one of the companie would haue killed the Captaine, so that the Captaine would not haue them to carry the treasure, but sayd hee would seeke Negroes to carry it, and so he went, and sought for Negroes, and bringing those Negroes to cary it, he met with the fiue English men that he had left in his Pinnesse which ran from the Spaniards, and the rest also which ran from the house, & they tolde him what the Spaniards had done, and then making friendship with all his men, he promised them halfe of all the treasure if they got it from the Spaniards, and the Negroes promised to helpe him with their bowes and arrowes, and thereupon they came to seeke the Spaniards, and now that some of his companie were killed and taken, he thought it best to returne to his ship, & so to passe backe for England. The Spanish Captaine hearing this, hauing buried the dead bodies, & hauing gotten all things into his Barks, and taking the English men and their Pinnes with him, he returned to Panama: so the voyage of that English man did not prosper with him, as hee thought it would haue done.

Nowe when the foure Barks were come to Panama, they sent aduise also to Nombre de Dios, and they of Nombre de Dios, sent also from them other foure Barks (which, as the Spaniards say) found the English ship where she was hid, and brought her to Nombre de Dios: and that the Viceroy of Peru, not thinking it good to suffer fiftie English men to remaine in the country, sent a seruant of his called Diego de Frees, with 150. shot into the mountaines to seeke them out, who found them making of certaine canoas to go into the North sea, and there to take some Barke or other: some of them were sicke, and were taken, and the rest fled with the Negroes, who in the ende betrayed them to the Spaniards, so that they were brought to Panama. The English betrayed to the Spaniards. And the Iustice of Panama asked the English Captaine whether hee had the Queenes licence, or the licence of any other Prince or Lorde for his attempt. And he answered he had none, whereupon he and all his company were condemned to dye, and so were all executed, sauing the Captaine, the Master, the Pilote, and fiue boyes which were carried to Lima, and there the Captaine was executed with the other two, but the boyes be yet liuing. The death of Iohn Oxnam.

The King of Spaine hauing intelligence of these matters, sent 300. men of warre against those Negroes which had assisted those English men, which before were slaues vnto the Spaniards, and, as before is sayd, fled from their masters into those mountaines, and so ioyned themselues to the English men, to the end they might the better reuenge themselues on the Spaniards.

At the first comming of these 300. souldiers, they tooke many of the Negroes, and executed great iustice vpon them: But after a season, the Negroes grewe wise and wary, and preuented the Spaniards, so that none of them could be taken.

The Spaniards of that Countrey marueiled much at this one thing, to see that since the conquering of this land, there hath bene many French men, that haue come to those Countries, but neuer saw English men there but onely those two of whom I haue spoken. And although there haue many French men bene on the coast, yet neuer durst they put foote vpon land, onely those two English men aduentured it, and did such exployts, as are before remembred.

All these things comming to the hearing of the King of Spaine, he prouided two Gallies well appointed to keepe those coasts: and the first yeere, they tooke sixe or seuen French ships. And after that this was knowen, there were no more English men or French men of warre that durst aduenture to approch the coast, vntill this present yeere 1586. that the aforesayd Francis Drake, with a strong Fleete of 24. shippes arriued there, and made spoyle of S. Domingo, Carthagena, and S. Augustine, things that are knowen to all the world. But it is likely that if the King of Spaine liue, he will in time prouide sufficient remedy, to keepe his Countries, and subiects from the inuasion of other nations. The English mens counting to the Indies, caused the king of Spaine to build Gallies to keepe the Seas.

A discourse

A discourse written by Sir Humfrey Gilbert Knight, to prooue a Passage by the Northwest to Cathaia and the East Indies.

The Table of the matters conteined in euery Chapter of this discourse.

Capitulo 1.

TO prooue by authoritie a passage to be on the Northside of America, to goe to Cataia, China, and to the East India.

Capitulo 2.

To prooue by reason a passage to be on the North side of America, to go to Cataia, Molluccæ, &c.

Capitulo 3.

To prooue by experience of sundry mens trauailes the opening of this Northwest passage, whereby good hope remaineth of the rest.

Capitulo 4.

To prooue by circumstance, that the Northwest passage hath bene sayled throughout.

Capitulo 5.

To prooue that such Indians as haue bene driuen vpon the coasts of Germanie came not thither by the Southeast, and Southwest, nor from any part of Afrike or America.

Capitulo 6.

To prooue that the Indians aforenamed came not by the Northeast, and that there is no thorowe passage nauigable that way.

Capitulo 7.

To prooue that these Indians came by the Northwest, which inducth a certaintie of this passage by experience.

Capitulo 8.

What seuerall reasons, were alleaged before the Queenes Maiestie, and certaine Lordes of her Highnesse priuie Counsel, by M. Ienkinson a Gentleman of great trauaile and experience, to prooue this passage by the Northeast, with my seuerall answeres then alleaged to the same.

Capitulo 9.

Howe that this passage by the Northwest, is more commodious for our traffike, then the other by the Northeast, if there were any such.

Capitulo 10.

What commodities would ensue, this passage being once discouered.

To prooue by authoritie a Passage to be on the North side of A- merica, to goe to Cathaia, and the East India.

Chapter 1.

WHen I gaue my selfe to the studie of Geographie, after I had perused and diligently scanned the descriptions of Europe, Asia, and Afrike, and conferred them with the Mappes and Globes both Antique and Moderne: I came in fine to the fourth part of the world, commonly called America, which by all descriptions I found to be an Island enuironed round about with the Sea, hauing on the Southside of it, the frete, or straight of Magellan, on the West side Mare de sur, which Sea runneth towards the North, separating it from the East partes of Asia, where the Dominions of the Cathaians are. On the East part our West Ocean, and on the North side the Sea that seuereth it from Groneland, thorowe which Northren Seas, the Passage lyeth, which I take nowe in hand to discouer.

Plato in Timæo, and in the Dialogue called Critias, discourseth of an incomparable great Iland, then called Atlantis, being greater then all Affrike, and Asia, which lay Westward from the Straights of Gibralter, nauigable round about: affirming also that the Princes of Atlantis, did aswell enioy ꝑ gouernance of all Affrike, & the most part of Europe, as of Atlantis it selfe.

Also to prooue Platoes opinion of this Iland, and the inhabiting of it in auncient time, by them of Europe, to be of the more credite: Marinæus Siculus, in his Chronicle of Spaine, reporteth that there hath bene found by the Spaniards, in the Golde Mines of America, certaine pieces of Money, ingraued with the Image of Augustus Cæsar: which pieces were sent to the Pope, for a testimonie of the matter, by Iohn Rufus, Archbyshop of Consentinum.

Moreouer, this was not only thought of Plato, but by Marsilius Ficinus, an excellent Florentine Philosopher, Philosopher, Crantor the Græcian, Proclus, also Philo the famous Iewe, (as appeareth in his booke De Mundo, and in the Commentaries vpon Plato) to be ouerflowen, and swallowed vp with water, by reason of a mighty earthquake, and streaming down of the heauenly Fludgates. The like whereof happened vnto some part of Italie, when by the forciblenes of the Sea, called Supertum, it cut of Sicilia from the Continent of Calabria, as appeareth in Iustine, in the beginning of his fourth booke. Also there chaunced the like in Zeland a part of Flanders. Proclus pag. 24. Iustine Lib. 4.

And also the cities of Pyrrha, and Antissa, about Meotis palus: and also, the citie Burys, in the Corynthian bosome, commonly called Sinus Corinthiacus, haue bene swallowed vp with the sea, and are not at this day to bee discerned: By which accident, America grew to bee vnknowen of long time, vnto vs of the later ages, and was lately discouered againe, by Americus Vespucius, in the yere of our Lord, 1497. which some say to haue bene first discouered, by Christophorus Columbus a Genuois, Anno. 1492. Plinie.

The same calamitie happened vnto this Isle of Atlantis 600. and odde yeres before Plato his time, which some of the people of the southeast partes of the world accompted as 9000. yeres: for the manner then was to reckon the moone her Period of the Zodiak for a yeere, which is our vsuall moneth, depending à Luminari minore.

So that in these our dayes there can no other mayne or Islande be found or iudged to bee parcell of this Atlantis, then those Westerne Islands, which beare now the name of America: countervailing thereby the name of Atlantis, in the knowledge of our age.

Then, if when no part of the said Athlantis was oppressed by water, & earthquake, the coasts round about the same were nauigable: a farre greater hope nowe remaineth of the same by the Northwest, seeing the most part of it was, since that time, swallowed vp with water, which could not vtterly take away the old deepes and chanels, but rather, be an occasion of the inlarging of the olde, and also an inforcing of a great many newe: why then shoulde we nowe doubt of our Northwest passage & nauigation from England to India? &c. seeing that Athlantis nowe called America, was euer knowen to be an Island, and in those dayes nauigable round about, which by accesse of more water coulde not be diminished. A minore a maius.

Also Aristotle in this booke de Mundo, and the learned Germaine, Simon Gryneus in his annotations vpon the same, saith that the whole earth (meaning thereby as manifestly doeth appeare, Asia, Africk, and Europe, being all the countries then knowen) to be but one Island, compassed about with the reach of the Sea Atlantine: which likewise approueth America to bee an Island, and in no part adioyning to Asia, or the rest.

Also many Auncient writers, as Strabo and others, called both the Ocean sea (which lieth East of India) Atlanticum pelagus, and that Sea also on the West coastes of Spayne and Afrik, Mare Atlanticum: the distance betweene the two coastes, is almost halfe the compasse of the earth. Strabo lib. 15.

So that it is incredible, as by Plato appeareth manifestly, that the East Indian Sea had the name Atlanticum pelagus, of the mountaine Atlas in Africk, or yet the Sea adioyning to Afrik, or yet the Sea adioyning to Afrik had name Oceanus Atlanticus, of the same mountaine: but that those Seas and the mountaine Atlas, were so called of this great Island Atlantis, and that the one and the other, had their names for a memoriall of the mightie prince Atlas, sometime King thereof, who was Iaphet youngest sonne to Noah, in whose time the whole earth was deuided betweene the three brethren, Sem, Cam, and Iaphet. Valerius Anselmus in Catago annorum et principum. fol. 8. Gen. 9. 10.

Wherefore I am of opinion that America by the Northwest, will be founde fauourable to this our enterprise, and am the rather imboldened to beleeue the same, for that I finde it not only confirmed by Plato, Aristotle, and other ancient Philosophers: but also by all the best moderne Geographers, as (Gemma Frisius, Munsterus, Appianus. Hunterus, Gastaldus, Guyccardinus, Michael Tramesinus, Franciscus Demongenitus, Barnardus Puteanus, Andreas Vauasor, Tramontanus, Petrus Martyr, and also Ortelius) who doth coast out in his generall Mappe (set out Anno 1569. all the countreys and capes, on the Northwestside of America, from Hochelega to C. De Paramantia: describing likewise the sea coastes of Cataia and Grondland, towards any part of America, making both Grondland and America, Islands disioyned by a great sea, from any part of Asia.

All which learned men and painefull trauellers haue affirmed, with one consent and voice, that America was an Island: and that there lyeth a great Sea betweene it, Cataia, and Grondland, by the which any man of our country, that will giue the attempt, may with smal danger passe to Cataia, the Molucæ, India, and all other places in the East, in much shorter time, then either the Spaniard, or Portingale doeth, or may doe, from the neerest parte of any of their countreis treis within Europe.

We ought by reasons right to haue a true rent opinion of worthy men.

What mooued these learned men to affirme thus much, I know not, or to what end so many and sundry trauellers, of both ages, haue allowed the same: But I coniecture that they would neuer haue so constantly affirmed, or notified their opinions therein to the world, if they had not had great good cause, and many probable reasons, to haue lead them thereunto.

How Lorde Burleigh high Treasurer of England.

A Nauigation of one Ochther made in king Alfreds time.

Now least you should make smal accompt of ancient writers or of their experiences which trauelled long before our times, reckoning their authoritie amongst fables of no importance: I haue for the better assurance of those proofes, set downe some part of a discourse, written in the Saxon tongue, and translated into English by M. Nowel seruant to Maister Secretarie Cecill, wherein there is described a Nauigation, which one Ochther made, in the time of King Alfred, King of Westsaxe Anno, 871. the wordes of which discourse were these: He sailed right North, hauing alwaies the desert land on the Starborde, and on the Larbord the mayne sea, continuing his course, vntill he perceiued that the coast bowed directly towardes the East, or else the Sea opened into the lande he could not tel how far, where he was compelled to stay vntil hee had a westerne winde, or somewhat vpon the North and sayled thence directly East, alongst the coast, so farre as he was able in foure dayes, where he was againe inforced to tary vntill he had a North winde, because the coast there bowed directly towards the South, or at least opened he knew not how far into the land, so that he sayled thence along the coast continually ful South, so far as he could trauel in the space of fiue dayes, where he discouered a mightie riuer, which opened far into the lande, and in the entrie of this riuer he turned backe againe.

A perfect description of our Muscouia voyage.

Whereby it appeareth, that he went the very same way, that we now do yerely trade by S. Nicholas into Muscouia, which way no man in our age knew, for certaintie to be sea, vntil it was since discouered by our English men, in the time of King Edward the first: but thought before that time that Groneland had ioyned to Normoria Byarmia, & therefore was accompted a new discouerie, being nothing so in deede, as by this discourse of Ochthers it appeareth.

By Sir Hugh Wyllouhby, knight, Chancellor and Borough.

Neuertheless if any man should haue taken this voiage in hand, by the incouragment of this onely author, he shoulde haue bene thought but simple: considering that this Nauigation was written so many yeres past, in so barbarous a tongue by one onely obscure author, and yet wee in in these our dayes finde by our owne experiences, his former reports to be true.

Howe much more then, ought we to beleeue this passage to Cataia to be, being verified by the opinions of all the best, both Antique, and Moderne Geographers, and plainly set out in the best and most allowed Mappes, Charts, Globes, Cosmographical tables, and discourses of this our age, and by the rest not denyed, but left as a matter doubtfull.

To proue by reason, a passage to be on the Northside of America: to goe to Cataia, &c.

CHAP 2.

Experimented by our english fishers.

FIrst, all seas are maineteined by the abundance of water, so that the neerer the ende, any Riuer, Baye or Hauen is, the shallower it waxeth, (although by some Accidental barre, it is sometime found otherwise) But the farther you saile West, from Island, towards the place, where this fretis thought to be, the more deeper are the seas: which giueth vs good hope, of continuance of the same sea, with Mare del Sur, by some frete that lyeth betweene America, Groneland, and Cataia.

2 Also, if that America were not an Islande, but a part of the continent adioyning to Asia, either the people which inhabite Mangia, Anian, and Quinzay, &c. being borderers vpon it, would before this time, haue made some roade into it: hoping to haue found some like commodities to their owne:

Neede makes the old wife to trotte.

3 Or els the Scythians, and Tartarians (which often times heretofore, haue sought far & nere, for new seats, driuen thereunto, through the necessitie of their colde, and miserable countreys) would in all this time, haue found the way to America, and entred the same, had the passages bene neuer so straite, or difficult: the countrie being so temperate, pleasant and fruitful, in comparison of their own. But there was neuer any such people found there, by any of the Spaniards, Portingals, or Frenchmen, who first discouered the Inland of that Countrie: which Spaniards, or Frenchmen, must then of necessitie, haue seene some one Ciuil man in America, considering how ful of ciuil people Asia is: But they neuer sawe so much as one token, or signe, that euer any man of the known part of the world, had beene there.

4 Furthermore,

4 Furthermore, it is to be thought, that if by reason of mountaines, or other craggy places, the people neither of Cataia, or Tartarie coulde enter the countrie of America, or they of America, haue entred Asia, if it were so ioyned: yet some one sauage, or wandring beast would in so many yeeres, haue passed into it: but there hath not any time bene found any of the beasts proper to Cataia, or Tartarie &c. in America: nor of those proper to America, in Tartarie, Cataia, &c. or any part of Asia. Which thing proueth America, not only to be one Island, and in no part adioyning to Asia, But also that the people of those Countreys, haue not had any traffyke with eache other.

5 Moreouer at the least some one of those paineful trauellers, which of purpose haue passed the Confines of both countreis, with intent only to discouer, would, as it is most likely haue gone from the one to the other: if there had bene any piece of land, or Isthmos, to haue ioyned them together, or else haue declared some cause to the contrary.

6 But neither Paulus venetus, who lyued, and dwelt a long time, in Cataia, euer came into America, and yet was at the Sea coastes of Mangia, ouer against it, where he was imbarked, and performed a great Nauigation along those Seas: Neither yet Verarzanus, or Franciscus vasques de Coronado, who trauelled the North parte of America by lande, euer found entry from thence by land, to Cataia, or any part of Asia.

7 Also it appeareth to be an Island, insomuch as the Sea runneth by nature circularly, from the East to the West, following the Diurnal motion of Primum Mobile, and carieth with it all inferiour bodies moueable, aswel celestial, as elementall: which motion of the waters, is most euidently seene in the Sea, which lyeth on the Southside of Afrik, where the currant that runneth from the East to the West, is so strong (by reason of such motion) that their Portingals in the voyages, Eastward to Callecute, in passing by Cap. De buona sperança, are enforced to make diuers courses, the currant there being so swift, as it striketh from thence, all along Westward, vpon the fret of Magellan, being distant from thence, neere the fourth part of the longitude of the earth: and not hauing free passage and entrance, thorow that fret towardes the West, by reason of the narrownes of the said straite of Magellan, it ruuneth to salue this wrong (Nature not yelding to accidentall restraints) all along the Easterne coasts of America, Northwardes, so farre as Cap. Fredo, being the farthest knowen place of the same continent, towards the North: which is about, 4800. leagues, reconing therewithal the trending of the land.

The Sea hath three motions.
1 Motum ab oriente in occidentem.
2 Motum fluxus & refluxus.
3 Motum circularem.
Ad celi motum elementa omnia (excepta terra) mouentur.

8 So that this Currant, being continually mainteined with such force, as Iaques Cartier affirmeth it to be, who met with the same being at Baccalaos, as he sailed alongst the coastes of America, then, either it must of necessitie, haue way to passe from Cap Fredo, thorowe this frete, Westward towardes Cataia, being knowen to come so farre, onely to salue his former wrongs, by the authoritie before named: or els it must needes strike ouer, vpon the coast of Island, Lappia, Finmarke, and Norway, (which are East from the said place, about 360. Leagues) with greater force, then it did from Cap. de buona Sperança, vpon the fret of Magellan or from the frete of Magellan to Cap. Fredo, vpon which coastes, Iaques Cartier mette with the same, considering the shortnesse of the Cut, from the saide C. Fredro, to Island, Lappia, &c. And so the cause Efficient remaining, it would haue continually followed along our coasts, through the narrowe seas, which it doth not, but is disgested about the North of Labrador, by some through passage there, thorow this fret.

Posita causa, ponitur effectus.

The like course of the water, in some respect, happeneth in the Mediterrane Sea (as affirmeth Conterenus) whereas the currant, which commeth from Tanais, & the Euxinus, running along all the coasts of Greece, Italie, France and Spaine, and not finding sufficient way out through Gibralter, by meanes of the straitnesse of the fret, it runneth backe againe, alongst the coasts of Barbarie, by Alexandria, Natolia, &c.

Conterenus.

It may (peraduenture) bee thought that this course of the sea, doth sometime surcease, and thereby impugne this principle, because it is not discerned all along the coast of America, in such sort as Iaques Cartier found it: Whereunto I answere this: that albeit, in euery part of the Coast of America, or els where, this Currant is not sensibly perceiued, yet, it hath euermore such like motion, either the vppermost, or nethermost part of the sea: as it may bee proued true, if ye sinke a sayle by a couple of ropes, neere the grounde, fastening to the nethermost corners, two gunne chambers or other weights: by the vsing whereof you shall plainely perceiue, the course of the water, and Currant, running with such like course in the bottome.

An Obiection answered. The Sea doth euermore performe this circular motion, either in Suprema, or concaua superficie aquæ.

By the like experiment, you may finde the ordinarie motion of the sea, in the Ocean: howe farre soeuer you be off the land.

9 Also there commeth another Currant from out the Northeast from the Sythian Sea (as

M. Ienkinson

M. Ienkinson a man of rare vertue, great trauaile and experience, told me, which runneth Westward towardes Labrador, as the other did, which commeth from the South: so that both these Currants, must haue way thorow this our frete, or else incounter together and runne contrary courses, in one line, but no such conflictes of streames, or contrary courses are found about any part of Labrador, or Terra noua, as witnesse our yeerely fishers, and other saylers that way, but is there digested, as aforesaid, and founde by the experience of Barnard de la Torre, to fall into Mare del Sur.

10 Furthermore, the Currant in the great Ocean, coulde not haue beene maintained to runne continually one way, from the beginning of the world, vnto this day, had there not beene some thorow passage by the frete aforesaide, and so by circular motion, bee brought againe to maintaine it selfe: For the Tides, and courses of the Sea are maintained by their interchangeable motions: as freshriuers are by springes, by ebbing and flowing, by rarifaction and condensation.

The flowing is occasioned by reason that the peate of the moone dopleth, and maketh the water thinne by way of rarefaction.

So that it resteth not possible (so farre as my simple reason can comprehend) that this perpetuall currant, can by any meanes be maintained, but onely by continuall reaccesse of the same water, which passeth thorow the fret, and is brought about thither againe, by such Circular motion as aforesaid. And the certaine falling therof by this fret into Mare del Sur, is proued by the testimonie & experience, of Barnarde del la Torre, who was sent from P. del la Natiuidad to the Molluccæ, Anno domini 1542. by commaundement of Anthonie Mendoza, then Viceroy of Noua Hispania, which Barnarde, sayled 750. Leagues, on the Northside of the Æquator, and there met with a currant, which came from Northeast the which droue him backe againe to Tidore.

An experience to proue the falling of this Currant, into Mare del sur.

Wherefore, this currant being proued to come from C. de buona Speranca, to the fret of Magellan, and wanting sufficient entrance there, by narrownes of the straite, is by the necessitie of natures force, brought to Terra de Labrador, where Iacques Cartier met the same, and thence certainly knowen, not to strike ouer vpon Island, Lappia, &c. and found by Barnard de la Torre, in Mare del Sur, on the backeside of America, therefore this currant (hauing none other passage) must of necessity, fal out thorow this our fret into Mare del Sur, and so trending by the Molluccæ, China, and C. De buona speranza, maintaineth it selfe by circular motion, which is all one in nature, with Motus ab Oriente in Occidentem.

So that it seemeth, we haue now more occasion to doubt of our returne, then whether there be a passage that way, yea or no: which doubt, hereafter shalbe sufficiently remooued. Wherefore, in mine opinion, reason it self, grounded vpon experience, assureth vs of this passage, if there were nothing els to put vs in hope thereof. But least these might not suffice, I haue added in this Chapter following, some further proofe hereof, by the experience of such as haue passed some part of this discouerie: and in the next adioyning to that the authoritie of those, which haue sayled wholy, thorow euery part thereof.

To proue by experience of sundrie mens trauels, the opening of some part of this Northwest passage: whereby good hope remaineth of the rest.

PAulus Venetus, who dwelt many yeeres in Cataia, affirmed that he sailed 1500 myles, vpon the coastes of Mangia, and Anian, towardes the Northeast: alwayes finding the Seas open before him, not onely as farre as he went: but also as farre as he could discerne.

2 Also Franciscus Vasques de Coronado passing from Mexico by Ceuola, through the countrey of Quiuir, to Sierra Neuada, found there a great Sea, where were certaine Shippes laden with Merchandise, the mariners wearing on their heads the pictures of certaine birds, called Alcatrarzi, part wherof were made of golde, and part of siluer: who signified by signes, that they were thirtie dayes comming thither: which likewise proueth America by experience to bee disioyned from Cataia, on that part, by a great Sea, because they could not come from any part of America, as Natiues therof: for that, so farre as is discouered, there hath not bene founde there any one Shippe of that countrey.

Baros lib. 9. Of his first Decas. cap. 1.

3 In like maner, Iohan. Baros, testifieth that the Cosmographers of China (where hee himselfe ſide had bene) affirme that the Sea coaſt, trendeth from thence Northeaſt, to 50. degrees of Septentrionall lacitude, being the farthest part that way, which the Portingals had then knowledge of: And that the ſaide Coſmographers knewe no cauſe to the contrary, but that it might continue further.

By whoſe experiences, America is proued to be ſeparate from thoſe partes of Aſia, directly againſt the ſame. And not contented with the iudgements of theſe learned men onely, I haue ſearched what might be further ſaid for the confirmation hereof.

4 And I found that Franciſcus Lopes de Gomara affirmeth, America to be an Iland, and likewiſe Grondland: and that Grondland is diſtant from Lappia 40. leagues, and from Terra de Labrador, 50.

5 Moreouer, Aluarus Nunnius a Spaniard, and learned Coſmographer, and Iacobus Cartier, who made two voyages into thoſe partes, and ſayled 500. myles vpon the Northeaſt coaſtes of America.

6 Likewiſe Hieronimus Fracaſtorius, a learned Italian, and trauailer in the North partes of the ſame land.

7 Alſo Iaques Cartier hauing done the like, heard ſay at Hochelaga in Noua Francia, howe that there was a great Sea at Saguinay, whereof the end was not knowen: which they preſuppoſed to be the paſſage to Cataia.

Furthermore, Sebaſtian Cabota, by his perſonal experience and trauell hath ſet foorth, and deſcribed this paſſage in his Charts, which are yet to be ſeene in the Queenes Maieſties priuie Gallerie at Whitehall, who was ſent to make this diſcouerie by king Henrie the ſeuenth, and entred the ſame feet: affirming, that he ſayled very farre Weſtward, with a quarter of the North, on the Northſide of Terra de Labrador, the elleuenth of June, vntill he came to the Septentrionall latitude of 67. & a halfe degrees, and finding the Seas ſtill open, ſaid, that he might, and would haue gone to Cataia, if the mutinie of the Maſter and Mariners had not bene. Written in the diſcourſes of Hamgarton.

Now as theſe mens experience hath proued ſome part of this paſſage: ſo the chapter following ſhall put you in full aſſurance of the reſt, by their experiences which haue paſſed through euery part thereof.

To prooue by circumſtance that the Northweſt paſſage hath bene ſailed throughout.

Cap. 4.

THe diuerſitie betweene bruite beaſtes and men, or betweene the wiſe and the ſimple is, that the one iudgeth by ſenſe onely, and gathereth no ſkuertie of any thing that he hath not ſeene, feale, heard, taſted, or ſmelled: And the other not ſo onely, but alſo findeth the certaintie of things by reaſon, before they happen to be tryed. Wherefore I haue added proofes of both ſortes, that the one and the other might thereby be ſatisfied.

Singularia ſenſu, vniuerſalia vero mente percipiuntur.

1 Firſt, as Gemma Friſius reciteth, there went from Europe three brethren through this paſſage: whereof it tooke the name of Fretum trium fratrum.

2 Alſo Plinie affirmeth out of Cornelius Nepos, (who wrote 57. yeeres before Chriſt) that there were certaine Indians driuen by tempeſt, vpon the coaſt of Germanie which were preſented by the king of Sueuia, vnto Quintus Metellus Celer, then Proconſull of France.

3 And Plinie vpon the ſame faith, that it is no maruell though there be Sea by the North, where there is ſuch abundance of moiſture: which argueth, that he doubted not of a nauigable paſſage that way, through which thoſe Indians came. lib. 2. cap. 66.

4 And for the better proofe that the ſame authoritie of Cornelius Nepos, is not by me miſled, to proue my opinion of the Northweſt paſſage: you ſhall finde the ſame affirmed more plainely in that behalfe, by the excellent Geographer Dominicus Marius Niger, who ſheweth howe many wayes the Indian Sea ſtretcheth it ſelfe, making in that place recital of certaine Indians, that were likewiſe driuen through the North Seas from India, vpon the coaſtes of Germanie, by great tempeſt, as they were ſayling in trade of merchandize. Pag. 590.

5 Alſo whiles Frederic Barbaroſſa reigned Emperour, Anno Do. 1160. there came certaine other Indians vpon the coaſt of Germanie. Auouched by Franciſcus Lopes de Gomara in his hiſtorie of India, lib. 1. cap. 10.

6 Likewiſe Othon, in the ſtorie of the Gothes affirmeth, that in the time of the Germane Emperours, there were alſo certaine Indians caſt by force of weather, vpon the coaſt of the said countrey, which foresaid Indians could not possibly haue come by the Southeast, Southwest, nor from any part of Affrike or America, nor yet by the Northeast: therefore they came of necessitie by this our Northwest passage.

To prooue that these Indians aforenamed, came not by the Southeast, Southwest, nor from any other part of Affrike, or America,

Cap. 5.

FIrst, they could not come from the Southeast by Cape de buona Speranza, because the roughnesse of the Seas there is such (occasioned by the currants and great winds in that part) that the greatest Armadoes the king of Portingal hath, cannot without great difficultie passe that way, much lesse then a Canoa of India could liue in those outragious seas without ship wracke (being a vessell but of very small burden) and haue conducted themselues to the place aforesayd, beyng men vnexpert in the Arte of nauigation.

2 Also, it appeareth plainly that they were not able to come from alongst the coast of Affrike aforesaid, to those partes of Europe, because the windes doe (for the most part) blow there Easterlie off from the shore, and the currant running that way in like sort, should haue driuen them Westward vpon some part of America, for such windes and tides could neuer haue led them from thence to the said place where they were found, nor yet could they haue come from any of the countries aforesaid, keeping the seas alwayes, without skilfull mariners to haue conducted them such like courses as were necessarie to performe such a voiage.

3 Presuppoling also, if they had bene driuen to the West (as they must haue bene, comming that way) then they should haue perished, wanting supplie of victuals, not hauing any place (once leauing the coast of Affrike) vntill they came to America, nor from America, vntill they arriued vpon some part of Europe, or the Islands adioining to it to haue refreshed themselues.

4 Also, if (notwithstanding such impossibilities) they might haue recouered Germanie, by comming from India by the Southeast, yet must they without all doubt haue striken vpon some other part of Europe before their arriuall there, as the Iles of Madera, Portingall, Spaine, France, England, Ireland, &c. which if they had done, it is not credible that they should or would haue departed vndiscouered of the inhabitants: but there was neuer found in those dayes any such ship or men, but onely vpon the coasts of Germanie, where they haue bin sundry times and in sundrie ages cast a land: neither is it like that they would haue committed themselues againe to sea, if they had so arriued, not knowing where they were, nor whither to haue gone.

Why the Indians could not come by the Southwest.

5 And by the Southwest it is vnpossible, because the currant aforesaid which commeth from the East, striketh with such force vpon the fret of Magellan, and falleth with such swiftnesse and furie into Mare de Zur, that hardly any ship (but not possible a Canoa, with such vnskilfull mariners) can come into our Westerne Ocean through that fret, from the West seas of America, as Magellans experience hath partly taught vs.

That the Indians could not be natiues either of Affrica, or of America.

6 And further, to prooue that these people so arriuing vpon the coast of Germanie, were Indians, and not inhabiters of any part either of Affrica or America, it is manifest, because the natiues both of Affrica and America, neither had, or haue at this day (as is reported) other kind of boates then such as do beare neither maste nor saile, (except onely vpon the coasts of Barbarie and the Turkes ships) but do carie themselues from place to place neere the shore, by the oze onely.

To prooue that those Indians came not by the Northeast, and that there is no thorow Nauigable passage that way.

Cap. 6.

IT is likely that there should be no thorow passage by the Northeast, whereby to goe round about the world, because all Seas (as aforesayd) are maintained by the abundance of water, waxing more shallow and shelfie towards the ende, as we find, it doeth by experience, in Mare Glaciali, towards the East, which breedeth small hope of any great continuance of that sea, to be nauigable towards the East, sufficient to saile thereby round about the world.

2 Also

2 Alſo, it ſtandeth ſcarcely with reaſon, that the Indians dwelling vnder Torrida Zona, could endure the iniurie of the cold ayre, about the Septentrionall latitude of 80. degrees, vnder which eleuation, the paſſage by the Northeaſt, cannot bee (as the often experience had of all the South parts of it ſheweth) ſeeing that ſome of the inhabitants of this cold climate (whoſe Sommer is to them an extreme Winter) haue bene ſtroken to death, with the cold damps of the aire, about 72 degrees, by an accidentall miſhap, and yet the aire in ſuch like Eleuation is alwayes cold, and too cold for ſuch as the Indians are. Quicquid naturali loco poſitum, quam citiſſimè corrumpitur. Qualis cauſa, talis effectus.

3 Furthermore, the piercing cold of the groſſe thicke aire ſo neere the Pole, will ſo ſtiffen and freeze the ſailes and ſhip tackling, that no mariner can either hoiſe or ſtrike them (as our experience farre neerer the South, then this paſſage is preſuppoſed to bee, hath taught vs) without the vſe whereof no voiage can be performed.

4 Alſo, the aire is ſo darkened with continuall miſtes and fogs ſo neere the Pole, that no man can well ſee, either to guide his ſhip, or direct his courſe.

5 Alſo the compaſſe at ſuch eleuation doeth very ſuddenly varie, which things muſt of force haue bene their deſtructions, although they had bene men of much more ſkill then the Indians are.

6 Moreouer, all Baies, Gulfes and Riuers doe receiue their increaſe vpon the flood, ſenſiblie to be diſcerned on the one ſide of the ſhore or the other, as many wayes as they be open to any main Sea, as Mare Mediterraneum, Mare Rubrum, Sinus Perſicus, Sinus Bodicus, Thameſis, and all other knowen hauens or riuers in any part of the world, and each of them opening but on one part to the maine ſea, doe likewiſe receiue their encreaſe vpon the flood the ſame way, and none other, which Mare Glaciale doeth, onely by the Weſt (as M. Jenkinſon affirmed vnto me) and therefore it followeth that this Northeaſt ſea, receiuing increaſe but onely from the Weſt, cannot poſſiblie open to the maine Ocean by the Eaſt. Similium ſimilis eſt ratio.

7 Moreouer, the farther you paſſe into any ſea towards the end of it, on that part which is ſhut vp from the maine Sea (as in all thoſe abone mentioned) the leſſe and leſſe the tides riſe and fall. The like whereof alſo happeneth in Mare Glaciale, which proueth but ſmall continuance of that Sea toward the Eaſt.

8 Alſo, the further ye goe toward the Eaſt in Mare Glaciale, the leſſe ſalt the water is: which could not happen, if it were open to the ſalt Sea towards the Eaſt, as it is to the Weſt onely, ſeeing (Euery thing naturally ingendereth his like) and then muſt it bee like ſalt throughout, as all the ſeas are, in ſuch like climate and eleuation. Quicquid corrumpitur à contrario corrumpitur.

And therefore it ſeemeth that this Northeaſt ſea is maintained by the riuer Ob, and ſuch like freſhets as Mare Ponticum, and Mare Mediterraneum, in the vppermoſt parts thereof by the riuer Nilus, Danubius, Neper, Tanais, &c. Omne ſimile gignit ſui ſimile.

9 Furthermore, if there were any ſuch Sea at that eleuation, or like it ſhould be alwayes froſen throughout (there being no tides to hinder it) becauſe the extreme coldneſſe of the aire in the vppermoſt part, and the extreme coldneſſe of the earth in the bottome, the ſea there being but of ſmall depth, where by the one accidentall coldneſſe doeth meet with the other, and the Sunne not hauing his reflection ſo neere the Pole, but at very blunt angles, it can neuer bee diſſolued after it is froſen, notwithſtanding the great length of their day: for that the ſunne hath no heate at all in his light or beames, but proceeding onely by an accidentall reflection, which there wanteth in effect.

10 And yet if the Sunne were of ſufficient force in that eleuation, to preuaile againſt this ice, yet muſt it be broken before it can be diſſolued, which cannot bee but through the long continuance of the ſunne aboue their Horizon, and by that time the Sommer would be ſo farre ſpent, and ſo great darkenes and cold enſue, that no man could be able to endure ſo cold, darke, and diſcomfortable a nauigation, if it were poſſible for him then, and there to liue.

11 Further, the Ice being once broken, it muſt of force ſo driue with the windes and tides, that no ſhippe can ſaile in thoſe ſeas, ſeeing our Fiſhers of Iſland, and the New found land, are ſubiect to danger through the great Iſlands of Ice which fleete in the Seas (to the ſailers great danger) farre to the South of that preſuppoſed paſſage.

12 And it cannot be that this Northeaſt paſſage ſhould bee any neerer the South, then before written, for then it ſhould cut of Ciremiſſi, and Turbi, Tartarij, with Vzeſucani, Chiſani, and others from the Continent of Aſia, which are knowen to be adioining to Scythia, Tartaria, &c. with the other part of the ſame Continent.

And if there were any thorow paſſage by the Northeaſt, yet were it to ſmall ende and purpoſe for our traffique, becauſe no ſhippe of great burden can Nauigate in ſo ſhallow a Sea:

and ships of small burde are very vnfit and vnprofitable, especially towards the blustering North, to performe such a voiage.

To proove that the Indians aforenamed, came onely by the Northwest, which induceth a certaintie of our passage by experience.

Cap. 7.

IT is as likely that they came by the Northwest, as it is vnlikely that they should come either by the Southeast, Southwest, Northeast, or from any other part of Africa or America, and therefore this Northwest passage hauing bene alreadie so many wayes prooued, by disprooving of the others, &c. I shall the lesse need in this place, to vse many wordes otherwise then to conclude in this sort, That they came onely by the Northwest from England, hauing these many reasons to lead me thereunto.

1 First, the one halfe of the windes of the compasse might bring them by the Northwest, bearing alwayes betweene two sheats, with which kinde of sayling the Indians are onely acquainted, not hauing any vse of a bowe line, or quarter winde, without the which no shippe can possibly come either by the Southeast, Southwest or Northeast, hauing so many sundry Capes to double, whereunto are required such change and shift of windes.

2 And it seemeth likely that they should come by the Northwest, because the coast whereon they were driuen, lay East from this our passage, And all windes doe naturally drive a ship to an opposite point from whence it bloweth, not being otherwise guided by Arte, which the Indians do vtterly want, and therefore it seemeth that they came directly through this our fret, which they might doe with one wind.

True, both is ventis obliquè flantibus, as also in ventis ex diametro spirantibus.

3 For if they had come by Cape de buona Sperança, then must they (as aforesaid) haue fallen vpon the South partes of America.

4 And if by the fret of Magellan, then vpon the coasts of Affrike, Spaine, Portingall, France, Ireland or England.

5 And if by the Northeast, then vpon the coasts of Ceremissi, Tartarij, Lappia, Island, Terra de Labrador, &c. and vpon these coasts (as aforesaid) they haue neuer bene found.

So that by all likelihood they could neuer haue come without shipwracke vpon the coastes of Germanie, if they had first striken vpon the coastes of so many countries, wanting both Arte and shipping to make orderly discourrie, and altogether ignorant both in the Arte of Nauigation, and also of the Rockes, Flats, Sands or Hauens of those parts of the world, which in most of these places are plentifull.

6 And further it seemeth very likely, that the inhabitaunts of the most part of those countries, by which they must haue come any other way besides by the Northwest, being for the most part Anthropophagi, or men eaters, would haue deuoured them, slaine them, or (at the least wise) kept them as wonders for the graze.

So that it plainly appeareth that those Indians (which as you haue heard in sundrie ages were driuen by tempest vpon the shore of Germanie) came onely through our Northwest passage.

7 Moreouer, the passage is certainely prooued by a Nauigation that a Portingall made, who passed through this fret, giuing name to a Promontorie farre within the same, calling it after his owne name, Promontorium Corterialis, neere adioyning vnto Polisacus fluuius.

8 Also one Scolmus a Dane, entred and passed a great part thereof.

9 Also there was one Salua Terra, a Gentleman of Victoria in Spaine, that came by chance out of the West Indias, into Ireland, Anno 1568. who affirmed the Northwest passage from vs to Cataia, constantly to be beleeued in America nauigable. And further said in the presence of sir Henry Sidney (then lord Deputie of Ireland) in my hearing, that a Frier of Mexico, called Andro Vrdaneta, more then eight yeeres before his then comming into Ireland, told him there, that he came frō Mare del Sur into Germanie through this Northwest passage, and shewed Salua Terra (at that time being then with him in Mexico) a Sea Card made by his owne experience and trauell in that voiage, wherein was plainly set downe and described this Northwest passage, agreeing in all points with Ortelius mappe.

And

And further, this Frier tolde the king of Portingall (as hee returned by that countrey homeward) that there was (of certaintie) ſuch a paſſage Northweſt from England, and that he meant to publiſh the ſame: which done, the king moſt earneſtly deſired him not in any wiſe to diſcloſe or make the paſſage knowen to any nation: For that (ſayde the king) if England had knowledge and experience thereof, it would greatly hinder both the king of Spayne and me. This Frier (as Salua Terra reported) was the greateſt Diſcouerer by ſea, that hath bene in our age. Alſo Salua Terra, being perſwaded of this paſſage by the frier Vrdaneta, and by the common opinion of the Spaniards inhabiting America, offered moſt willingly to accompanie mee in this Diſcouerie, which of like he would not haue done if he had ſtood in doubt thereof.

The words of the king of Portugall, to Andrie Vrdaneta a Frier, touching the concealing of this Northweſt paſſage from England to Cataia.

And now as theſe moderne experiences cannot be impugned, ſo, leaſt it might be obiected that theſe things (gathered out of ancient writers, which wrote ſo many yeeres paſt) might ſerue little to proue this paſſage by the North of America, becauſe both America and India were to them then vtterly vnknowen: to remooue this doubt, let this ſuffiſe: That Ariſtotle, (who was 300. yeeres before Chriſt) named Mare Indicum. Alſo Beroſus (who liued 330. yeeres before Chriſt) ſaith theſe woordes, Ganges in India. Alſo in the firſt chapter of Heſter bee theſe woordes, In the dayes of Aſſuerus which ruled from India to Aethiopia, which Aſſuerus liued 580. yeeres before Chriſt. Alſo Quintus Curtius (where hee ſpeaketh of the Conqueſts of Alexander) mentioneth India. Alſo, Arianus Philoſtratus, and Sidrach in his diſcourſes of the warres of the king of Bactria, and of Garaab, who had the moſt part of India vnder his gouernment. All which aſſureth vs, that both India and Indians were knowen in thoſe dayes.

Ariſtotle lib. de mundo, cap. 2. Beroſus lib. 3.

Theſe things conſidered, we may (in my opinion) not onely aſſure our ſelues of this paſſage by the Northweſt, but alſo that it is nauigable both to come and goe, as hath bene proued in part and in all, by the experience of diuers, as Sebaſtian Cabota, Corterialis, the three brethren aboue named, the Indians, and Vrdaneta the Frier of Mexico, &c.

And yet notwithſtanding all which, there be ſome that haue a better hope of this paſſage to Cataia by the Northeaſt then by the Weſt, whoſe reaſons with my ſeuerall anſweres enſue in the chapter following.

Certaine reaſons alleaged for the prouing of a paſſage by the Northeaſt, before the Queenes Maieſtie, and certaine Lordes of the Counſell, by Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon, with my ſeuerall anſweres then vſed to the ſame.

Cap. 8.

BEcauſe you may vnderſtand as well thoſe things alleaged againſt mee, as what doth ſerue for my purpoſe, I haue here added the reaſons of M. Anthonie Jenkinſon a worthie gentleman, and a great trauceller, who conceiued a better hope of the paſſage to Cataia from vs, to be by the Northeaſt, then by the Northweſt.

He firſt ſaid that hee thought not to the contrary, but that there was a paſſage by the Northweſt, according to mine opinion: but aſſured he was, that there might be found a Nauigable paſſage by the Northeaſt from England, to goe to all the Eaſt parts of the world, which he endeuoured to proue three wayes.

The Northweſt paſſage aſſented vnto.

The firſt was that he heard a Fiſherman of Tartaria ſay in hunting the Morce, that he ſailed very farre towards the Southeaſt, finding no ende of the Sea: whereby he hoped a thorow paſſage to be that way.

The firſt reaſon.

Whereunto I anſwered, that the Tartarians were a barbarous people, and vtterly ignorant in the Arte of Nauigation, not knowing the vſe of the Sea Carde, Compaſſe or Scarre, which hee confeſſed true: and therefore they could not (ſaid I) certainly know the Southeaſt from the Northeaſt, in a wide ſea, and a place vnknowen from the ſight of the land.

The anſwer or reſolution.

Or if he ſailed any thing neere the ſhore, yet hee (being ignorant) might bee deceiued by the doubling of many points and Capes, and by the rounding of the land, albeit he kept continually alongſt the ſhore.

And further, it might be that the poore Fiſherman through ſimplicitie, thought that there was nothing that way but Sea, becauſe hee ſawe no land: which proofe (vnder correction) giueth ſmall aſſurance of a Nauigable Sea by the Northeaſt, to goe rounde about the world, For that hee iudged by the eye onely, ſeeing wee in this our cleare ayre doe account twentie miles a ken at Sea.

Viſus nonnunquam fallitur in ſuo obiecto.

The second reason of allegation.

His second reason is, that there was an Unicornes horne found vpon the coast of Tartaria, which could not come (sayd he) thither by any other meanes then with the tides, through some streit in the Northeast of Mare Glaciale, there being no Unicorne in any part of Asia, sauing in India and Cataia, which reason (in my simple iudgement) foreeth as litle.

The answer of resolution.

First, it is doubtfull whether those barbarous Tartarians do know an Unicornes horne, yea, or no: and if it were one, yet it is not credible that the Sea could haue driuen it so farre, being of such nature that it will not swimme.

Also the tides running too & fro, would haue driuen it as farre backe with the ebbe, as it brought it forward with the flood.

There is also a beast called Asinus Indicus (whose horne most like it was) which hath but one horne like an Unicorne in his forehead, whereof there is great plentie in all the North parts thereunto adioining, as in Lappia, Noruegia, Finmarke, &c. as Iacobus Zeiglerus writeth in his historie of Scondia.

And as Albertus saieth, there is a fish which hath but one horne in his forehead like to an Unicorne, and therefore it seemeth very doubtfull both from whence it came, and whether it were an Unicornes horne, yea, or no.

The third and last reason of assertion.

His third and last reason was, that there came a continuall streame or currant, through Mare Glaciale, of such swiftnesse (as a Colmax told him) that if you cast any thing therein, it would presently be caried out of sight towards the West.

The answer of resolution.

Wherunto I answered, that there doth the like from Mæotis Palus, by Pontus Euxinus, Sinus Bosphorus, and along the coast of Græcia, &c. As it is affirmed by Contarenus, and diuers others that haue had experience of the same: and yet that Sea lieth not open to any maine Sea that way, but is maintained by freshets as by Tanais, Danubius, &c.

In like maner is this currant in Mare Glaciale increased and maintained by the Dwina, the riuer Ob, &c.

Now as I haue here briefly recited the reasons alleaged, to proue a passage to Cataia by the Northeast, with my seuerall answeres thereunto: so will I leaue it to your iudgement, to hope or dispaire of either at your pleasure.

How that the passage by the Northwest is more commodious for our traffique, then the other by the East, if there were any such.

Cap. 9.

FIrst, by the Northeast (if your windes doe not giue you a marueilous speedie and luckie passage) you are in danger (being so neere the Pole) to bee benighted almost the one half of the yeere, and what danger that were, to line so long comfortlesse, void of light, (if the cold killed you not) each man of reason or vnderstanding may iudge.

2 Also Mangia, Quinzai, and the Molluccæ, are neerer vnto vs by the North west, then by the Northeast, more then two fiue parts, which is almost by the halfe.

3 Also we may haue by the West a yeerely returne, it being at all times nauigable, whereas you haue but 4. moneths in the whole yeere to goe by the Northeast: the passage, being at such a leuation as it is formerly expressed, for it cannot be any neerer the South.

4 Furthermore, it cannot be finished without diuers wintrings by the way, hauing no hauens in any temperate climate to harbour in there: for it is as much as wee can well saile from hence to S. Nicholas, in the trade of Postrouia, and returne in the nauigable season of the yeere, and from S. Nicholas to Cerimissi Tartarij, which standeth at 80. degrees of the Septentrional latitude, it is at the least 400. leagues, which amounteth scarce to the third part of the way, to the ende of your voiage by the Northeast.

5 And yet after you haue doubled this Cape, if then there might be found a nauigable Sea to carie you Southeast according to your desire, yet can you not winter conueniently, vntil you come to 60. degrees, and to take vp one degree running Southeast, you must saile 24. leagues and three foure partes, which amounteth to 495. leagues.

6 Furthermore, you may by the Northwest saile thither with all Easterlie windes, and returne with any Westerly windes, whereas you must haue by the Northeast sundrie windes, and those proper, according to the lying of the coast and Capes, you shall bee inforced to double, which which windes are not alwayes to be had, when they are looked for: whereby your iourney should be greatly prolonged, and hardly endured so neere the Pole. As we are taught by sir Hugh Willoughbie, who was frozen to death farre neerer the South.

7 Moreouer, it is very doubtfull, whether we should long inioy that trade by the Northeast, if there were any such passage that way, the commodities thereof once knowne to the Vulcouite, what priuilege soeuer he hath granted, seeing pollicie with the maze of excellius gaine, to the inriching (so greatly) of himselfe and all his dominions, would perswade him to presume the same, hauing so great opportunitie, to beter the commodities of those countries by the Narue.

But by the Northwest, we may safely trade without danger, or annoyance of any prince liuing, Christian or Heathen, it being out of all their trades.

8 Also the Queenes Maiesties dominions are neerer the Northwest passage then any other great princes that might passe that way, and both in their going and returne, they must of necessitie succour themselues and their shippes vpon some part of the same, if any tempestuous weather should happen.

Further, no princes nauie of the world, is able to incounter the Queenes Maiesties nauie, as it is at this present: and yet it should be greatly increased by the traffike insuing vpon this discouery, for it is the long voyages that increase and maintaine great shipping.

Now it seemeth necessarie, to declare what commodities would growe thereby, if all these things were, as we haue heeretofore presupposed, and thought them to be: which next adioyning artificly declared.

What commodities would ensue, this passage once discouered.

Chap. 10.

FIrst, it were the onely way for our princes, to possesse the wealth of all the East parts (as they terme them) of the world, which is infinite: as appeareth by the experience of Alexander the great, in the time of his conquest of India, and other the East partes of the world, alleged by Quintus Curtius, which would be a great aduancement to our countrey, woonderfull inriching to our prince, and vnspeakable commodities to all the inhabitants of Europe.

2 For though the shortnesse of the voyage, we should be able to sell all maner of merchandize, bought from thence, farre better cheape then either the Portingall or Spanyard doth or may doe. And further, share with the Portingall in the East, and the Spanyard in the West, by trading to any part of America, thorow Mare del Sur, where they can no maner of way offend vs.

3 Also we sayle to diuers maruellous rich countreys, both ciuill and others, out of both their iurisdictions, trades and traffikes, where there is to be found great abundance of golde, siluer, precious stones, cloth of golde, silkes, all maner of spices, grocery wares, and other kindes of merchandize of an inestimable price, which both the Spanyard and Portingall, though the length of their iournies, can not well attaine vnto.

4 Also we might inhabite some part of those countreys, and settle there such needie people of our countrey, which now trouble the common wealth, and though want be here at home, are inforced to commit outragious offences, whereby they are dayly consumed with the gallowes.

5 Moreouer, we might from all the aforesaid places haue a yeerely returne, inhabiting for our staple some conuenient place of America, about Sierra Neuada, or some other part, whereas it shall serue best for the shortning of the voyage.

6 Beside vttering of our countrie commodities, which the Indians, &c. much esteeme: as appeareth in Hester, where the pompe is expressed of the great king of India, Assuerus, who matched the coloured clothes, where with his houses and tents were apparelled, with golde and siluer, as part of his greatest treasure: not mentioning either veluets, silkes, cloth of golde, cloth of siluer, or such like, being in those countreys most plentifull: whereby it plainely appeareth in what great estimation they would haue the clothes of this our countrey, so that there would be found a farre better vent for them by this meanes, then yet this realme euer had: and that without depending either vpon France, Spayne, Flanders, Portingall, Hamborow, Emden, or any other part of Europe.

7 Also

7 Also, heere we shall increase, both our shippes and mariners, without burthening of the state.

8 And also haue occasion to set poore meng children to learne handie crastes, and thereby to make trifles and such like, which the Indians and those people do much esteeme: by reason whereof, there should be none occasion to haue our country combred with loiterers, vagabonds, and such like idle persons.

All these commodities would grow by following this our discouery, without iniury done to any Christian prince, by crossing them in any of theyr vsed trades, whereby they might take any iust occasion of offence.

Thus haue I briefly shewed you some part of the grounds of mine opinion, trusting that you will no longer iudge me fantastike in this matter: seeing I haue conceiued no hope of this voyage, but am persuaded thereunto by the best Cosmographers of our age, the same being confirmed both by reason and certaine experiences.

Also this discouery, hath beene diuers times heeretofore by others, both offered, attempted and performed.

This discouery offered.

It hath beene offered by Stephan Gomes vnto Carolus the fift Emperour, in the yeere of our Lord God 1527, as Alphonso Vllua testifieth in the story of Carolus life: who would haue set him forth in it (as the story mentioneth) if the great want of money, by reason of his long warres had not caused him to surceasse the same.

And the king of Portingall, fearing lest the Emperour would haue persewered in this his enterprise, gaue him, to leaue the matter vnattempted, the summe of 350000 crownes: and it is to be intended that the king of Portingall would not haue giuen to the Emperour such summes of money for egges in moonshine.

This discouery attempted.

It hath beene attempted by Corterialis the Portingall, Scolmus the Dane, and by Sebastian Cabota in the time of king Henry the seuenth.

This discouery performed.

And it hath beene performed by the three heathen, the Indians aforesaid, and by Vrdaneta the frier of Mexico.

Also diuers haue offered the like vnto the French king, who hath sent two or three times to haue discouered the same: The discouerers, spending & consuming their victualles, in searching the gulfes and bayes betweene Florida and Terra de Labrador, whereby the ile is broken to the after commers.

So that the right way may now easily be found out in short time: and that with little iourney and lesse expences.

The labour of this discouerie shortned by other mens trauell.

For America is discouered so farre towards the North, as Cape Fredo, which is at 62 degrees, and that part of Grondland next adioyning, is known to stand but at 72 degrees. So that we haue but 10 degrees to saile North and South, to put the world out of doubt heereof: and it is likely that the king of Spaine, and the king of Portingall would not haue sat out all this while, but that they are sure to possesse to themselues, all that trade they now vse, and feare to deale in this discouerie, least the Queenes Maiestie, hauing so good opportunitie, and finding the commoditie which thereby might ensue to the common wealth, would cut them off, and enioy the whole traffique to her selfe, and thereby the Spanyardes and Portingalles, with their great charges, should beate the bushe, and other men catch the birds: which thing they foreseeing, haue commanded, that no pilot of theyrs, vpon paine of death, shoulde seeke to discouer to the Northwest, or plat out in any Sea card any thorow passage that way by the Northwest.

Why the kings of Spaine and Portingall would not persener in this discouery.

Now, and if you will indifferently compare the hope that remayneth, to animate me to this enterprise, with those likelihoodes which Columbus alleged before Ferdinando the king of Castile, to proone that there were such Ilands in the West Ocean, as were after by him and others discouered, to the great commoditie of Spaine and all the world: you will thinke then this Northwest passage to be most worthy trauell therein.

For Columbus had none of the West Ilands set forth vnto him, either in globe or card, neither yet once mentioned of any writer (Plato excepted, and the commentaries vpon the same) from 942 yeeres before Christ, vntill that day.

Moreouer, Columbus himselfe had neither seene America nor any other of the Ilands about it, neither vnderstood he of them, by the report of any other that had seene them, but onely comforted himselfe with this hope, that the land had a beginning where the Sea had an ending: for as touching that which the Spanyards doe write of a Biscaine, which should haue taught him the way thither, it is thought to be imagined of them, to depriue Columbus of his honour, being none of their countrey man, but a stranger borne.

And

And if it were true of the Biſcane, yet did her but roue at the matter, or (at the leaſt) gathered the knowledge of it, by coniectures onely.

And albeit, my ſelfe haue not ſeene this paſſage, or any part thereof, but am ignorant of it as touching experience (as Columbus was before his attempt made) yet haue I both the report, relation, and authoritie of diuers moſt credible men, which haue both ſeene and paſſed through ſome and euery part of this diſcouerie, beſides ſundry reaſons for my aſſurance thereof: all which Columbus wanted.

Theſe things conſidered, & indifferently weighed together, with the wonderfull commodities which this diſcouerie may bring, eſpecially to this realme of England: I muſt needes conclude with learned Baptiſta Ramuſius, and diuers other learned men, who ſaid, that this diſcouerie hath beene reſerued for ſome noble prince or worthie man, thereby to make himſelfe rich, and the world happie: deſiring you to accept in good part this briefe and ſimple diſcourſe, written in haſte, which if I may perceiue that it ſhall not ſufficiently ſatisfie you in this behalfe, I will then impart vnto you a large diſcourſe, which I haue written onely of this diſcouery.

And further, becauſe it ſufficeth not, onely to know that ſuch a thing there is, without abilitie to performe the ſame, I will at leaſure make you partaker of another ſimple diſcourſe of nauigation, wherein I haue not a little trauelled, to make my ſelfe as ſufficient to bring theſe things to effect, as I haue beene readie to offer my ſelfe therein.

And therein I haue deuiſed to amend the errors of vſuall ſea cards, whoſe common fault is, to make the degrees of longitude in euery latitude of one like bigneſſe.

And haue alſo deuiſed therin a Sphericall inſtrument, with a compaſſe of variation for the perfect knowing of the longitude.

And a preciſe order to pricke the ſea card together, with certaine infallible rules for the ſhortning of any diſcouery, to know at the firſt entring of any freet, whether it lie open to the Ocean more wayes then one, how farre ſoeuer the ſea ſtretcheth it ſelfe into the land.

Deſiring you hereafter neuer to miſlike with me, for the taking in hand of any laudable and honeſt enterpriſe: for if though pleaſure or idleneſſe we purchaſe ſhame, the pleaſure vaniſheth, but the ſhame remaineth for euer.

And therefore to giue me leaue without offence, alwayes to liue and die in this minde, That he is not woorthie to liue at all, that for feare, or danger of death, ſhunneth his countrey ſeruice, and his owne honour: ſeeing death is ineuitable, and the fame of vertue immortall. Wherefore in this behalfe, Mutare vel timere ſperno. Peress qui vnquam bras timas.

Certaine other reaſons, or arguments to prooue a paſſage by the Northweſt, learnedly written by M. Richard Willes Gentleman.

FOure famous wayes there be ſpoken of to thoſe fruitfull and wealthie Ilands, which we do vſually call Molucaes, continually haunted for gaine, and dayly trauelled for riches therein growing. Theſe Ilandes, although they ſtand Eaſt from the Meridian, diſtant almoſt halfe the length of the world, in extreame heate, vnder the Equinoctiall line, poſſeſſed of Infidelles and Barbarians: yet by our neighbours great abundance of wealth there is painefully fought in reſpect of the voyage derely bought, and from thence dangerouſly brought home vnto vs. Our neighbours I call the Portingalles in compariſon of the Molucchians for neerenesſe vnto vs, for like ſituation Weſtward as we haue, for they vſuall trade with vs, for that the farre Southeaſterlinges doe know this part of Europe by no other name then Portingall, not greatly acquainted as yet with the other Nations thereof. They voyage is very well vnderſtood of all men, and the Southeaſterne way rounde about Affrike by the cape of Good hope, more ſpoken of, better knowen and trauelled, then that it may ſeeme needfull to diſcourſe thereof any further. 1. By the Southeaſt.

The ſeconde way lyeth Southweſt, betweene the Weſt Indie or South America, and the South continent, though that narrow ſtraight where Magellanus firſt of all men that euer we doe reade of, paſſed theſe latter yeeres, leauing thereunto thereof his name. This way no doubt the Spanyards would commodiouſly take, for that it lyeth neere vnto their dominions there, could the Eaſterne currant and leuant windes as eaſily ſuffer them to returne, as ſpeedily therewith they may be carryed thither: for the which difficultie, or rather impoſſibility of ſtriuing 2. By the Southweſt.

against the force both of winde and streame, this passage is little or nothing vsed, although it be very well knowne.

3. By the Northeast. The third way by the Northeast, beyond all Europe and Asia, that worthy and renowmed knight Syr Hugh Willoughbie sought to his perill, enforced there to end his life for colde, congealed and frozen to death. And truely this way consisteth rather in the imagination of Geographers, then allowable either in reason, or approoued by experience, as well it may appeare by the dangerous trending of the Scythish Cape set by Ortelius vnder the 80 degree North, by the vnlikely sailing in that Northerne sea alwaies clad with ise & snow, or at the least continually pestred therewith, if happely it be at any time dissolued: besides bayes and shelfes, the water waxing more shallow towards the East, that we say nothing of the foule mists and darke fogs in the colde clime, of the little power of the Sunne to cleare the ayre, of the vncomfortable nights, so neere the Pole, fiue moneths long.

Ortel. tab. Asiæ. 1.

4. By the Northwest. A fourth way to go vnto these aforesaid happy Ilands Moluccæ, Syr Humfrey Gilbert a learned and valiant knight, discourseth of at large in his new passage to Cathayo. The enterprise of it selfe being vertuous, the fact must doubtlesse deserue high praise, and whensoeuer it shall be finished, the fruits therof can not be small: where vertue is guide, there is fame a follower, and fortune a companion. But the way is dangerous, the passage doubtfull, the voyage not throughly knowne, and therfore gainsaid by many, after this maner.

Ob. 1. First, who can assure vs of any passage rather by the Northwest then by the Northeast: doe not both wayes lye in equall distance from the North Pole: stande not the North Capes of either continent vnder like eleuation: Is not the Ocean Sea beyonde America farther distant from our Meridian by thirtie or fortie degrees West, then the extreame poyntes of Cathayo Eastwarde, if Ortelius generall Carde of the woylde be true. In the Northeast that noble Knight Syr Hugh Willoughbie perished for colde: and can you then promise a passenger any better happe by the Northwest: who hath gone for triall sake, at any time, this way out of Europe to Cathayo.

In Theatro.

Ob. 2. If you seeke the aduise herein of such as make profession in Cosmographie, Ptolome the father of Geographie, and his eldest children, will answere by their mappes with a negatiue, concluding most of the sea within the land, and making an end of the woyld Northward, neere the 63 degree. The same opinion, when learning chiefly florished, was receiued in the Romans time, as by their Poets writings it may appeare: Et te colet vltima Thule, said Virgil, being of opinion, that Island was the extreame part of the woyld habitable toward the North. Ioseph Moletius an Italian, and Mercator a Germane, for knowledge men able to be compared with the best Geographers of our time, the one in his halfe Sphearcs of the whole woyld, the other in some of his great globes, haue continued the West Indies land, euen to the North Pole, and consequently, cut off all passage by sea that way.

The same doctors, Mercator in other of his globes and mappes, Moletius in his sea carde, nuertheless doubting of so great continuance of the former continent, haue opened a gulfe betwixt the West Indies and the extreame Northerne land: but such a one, that either is not to be trauelled for the causes in the first obiection alleged, or cleane shut vp from vs in Europe by Groenland: the South end whereof Moletius maketh firme land with America, the North part continent with Lappeland and Norway.

Ob. 3. Thirdly, the greatest fauourers of this voyage, can not deny but that if any such passage be, it lyeth subiect vnto ise and snow for the most part of the yere, whereas it standeth in the edge of the frostie Zone. Before the Sunne hath warmed the ayre, and dissolued the ise, eche one well knoweth that there can be no sailing: the ise once broken though the continuall abode the Sunne maketh a certaine season in those parts: how shall it be possible for so weake a vessell as a shippe is, to bolte out amid whole Ilands, as it were of ise continually beating on eche side, and at the mouth of that gulfe, tilting downe furiously from the North safely to passe, when whole mountaines of ise and snow shall be tombled downe vpon her.

Ob. 4. Well, grant the West Indies not to continue continent vnto the Pole, grant there be a passage betweene these two lands, let the gulfe lye neerer vs then commonly in cardes we finde it set, namely, betweene the 61 and 64 degrees North, as Gemma Frisius in his mappes and globes imagineth it, and so left by our country man Sebastian Cabot in his table which the Earle of Bedford hath at Theinies: Let the way be voyde of all difficulties, yet doeth it not follow that we haue free passage to Cathayo. For examples sake: You may trend all Norway, Finmarke, and Lappeland, and then bow Southward to Saint Nicholas in Moscouia: you may likewise in the Mediterranean Sea fetch Constantinople, and the mouth of Tanais: yet is there no passage by Sea through Moscouia into Pont Euxine, now called Mare Maggiore. Againe, in the aforesaid Mediterranean sea, we saile to Alexandria in Egypt, the Barbarians bring their pearle and spices from the Moluccaes by the red sea and Arabian goulph to Sues, scarsly three dayes iourney from the aforesayd hauen: yet haue we no way by sea from Alexandria to the Moluccaes, for that Isthmos or little straight of land betweene the two seas. In like manner although the Northerne passage be free at 61 degrees latitude, and the West Ocean beyond America, vsually called Mar del Zur, knowen to be open at 40 degrees eleuation, for the Island Giapan, yea three hundred leagus Northerly aboue Giapan: yet may there be lande to hinder the knowe passage that way by Sea, as in the examples aforesayde it falleth out, Asia and America there being ioyned together in one continent. Ne can this opinion seeme altogether friuolous vnto any one that diligently perviseth our Cosmographers doinges. Iosephus Moletius is of that minde, not onely in his plaine Hemispheres of the worlde, but also in his Sea card. The French Geographers in like maner, be of the same opinion, as by their mappe cut out in forme of a Hart you may perceiue: as though the West Indies were part of Asia. Which sentence well agreeth with that olde conclusion in the Schooles: Quidquid præter Africam & Europam est, Asia est. Whatsoeuer land doth neither appertaine vnto Afrike nor to Europe, is part of Asia.

Furthermore it were to small purpose to make so long, so painefull, so doubtfull a voyage by suche a newe found way, if in Cathayo you shoulde neither be suffered to lande for silkes and siluer, nor able to fetche the Molucca spices and pearle for piracie in those Seas. Of a late denying all Aliens to enter into China, and forbidding all the inhabiters vnder a great penaltie to let in any stranger into those countryes, shall you reade in the report of Galeotto Perera there imprisoned with other Portingalles: as also in the Giaponish letters, howe for that cause the worthie traueller Xauierus bargened with a Barbarian merchant for a great summe of pepper to be brought into Canton, a port in Cathayo. The great and daungerous piracie vsed in those Seas, no man can beignorant of, that listeth to reade the Giaponish and East Indian hystorie. Obj.5.

Finally, all this great labour would be lost, all these charges spent in vaine, if in the end our trauellers might not be able to returne againe, and bring safely home into their owne native country, that wealth and riches, they in forren regions with aduenture of goods, and danger of their lines, haue sought for. By the Northeast there is no way, the Southeast passage the Portingalles dor holde, as the Lords of those Seas. At the Southwest Magellanus experience hath partly taught vs, and partly we are perswaded by reason, how the Easterne currant striketh so furiously on that straight, and falleth with such force into that narrow goulph, that hardly any ship can returne that way into our West Ocean out of Mar del Zur. The which, if it be true, as truely it is, then we may say that the aforesaid Easterne currant or leuant course of waters continually following after the heauenly motions, looseth not altogether his force, but is doubled rather by an other currant from out the Northeast, in the passage betweene America and the North land, whither it is of necessitie carryed: hauing none other way to maintaine it selfe in circular motion, and consequently the force and fury thereof to be no lesse in the straight of Anian, where it striketh South into Mar del Zur, beyond America (if any such straight of Sea there be) then in Magellans free, both straights being of like breath: as in Belognine Zalterius table of new France, and in Don Diego Hermano de Toledo his card for nauigation in that region we do finde precisely set downe. Obj.6.

Neuertheless to approoue that there lyeth a way to Cathayo at the Northwest, from out of Europe, we haue experience, namely of three brethren that went that iourney, as Gemma Frisius recordeth, and left a name vnto that straight, whereby nowe it is called Fretum trium Fratrum. We dor reade againe of a Portingall that passed this straight, of whome Maister Furbisher speaketh, that was imprisoned therefore many yeeres in Lisbone, to verifie the olde Spanish prouerbe, I suffer for doing well. Likewise An. Vrdaneta a fryer of Mexico came out of Mar del Zur this way into Germanie: his Carde, for he was a great discourer, made by his owne experience and trauell in that voyage, hath beene seene by Gentlemen of good credit.

Now if the obseruation and remembrance of things breedeth experience, and of experience proceedeth arte, and the certaine knowledge we haue in all faculyes, as the best Philosophers that euer were do affirme: truely the voyage of these aforesaid trauellers that haue gone out of Europe into Mar del Zur, and returned thence at the North west, do most euidently conclude that way to be nauigable, and that passage free. So much the more we are to thinke, for that the Cic. 1. de orat. Arist. pri. Metaph.

first principle and chiefe ground in all Geographie, as Ptolome saith, is the history of trauell, that is, reports made by trauellers skilfull in Geometrie and Astronomie, of all such things in their iourney as to Geographie do belong. It onely then remaineth, that we now answere to those arguments that seemed to make against this former conclusion.

Lib. 1. Geog. cap. 2.

Sol. 1. The first obiection is of no force, that generall table of the world set foorth by Ortelius or Mercator, for it greatly skilleth not, being vnskilfully drawen for that point: as manifestly it may appeare vnto any one that conferreth the same with Gemma Frisius his vniuersall mappe, with his rounde quartered carde, with his globe, with Sebastian Cabota his table, and Ortelius his generall mappe alone, worthily preferred in this case before all Mercator and Ortelius other doinges: for that Cabota was not onely a skilfull Sea man, but a long traueller, and such a one as entred personally that straight, sent by king Henry the seuenth to make this aforesaid discouery, as in his owne discourse of nauigation you may reade in his carde drawen with his owne hand, that the mouth of the Northwesterne straight lyeth neere the 318 Meridian, betweene sixe one and sixtie foure degrees in the elevation, continuing the same breadth about tenne degrees West, where it openeth Southerly more and more, vntill it come vnder the tropike of Cancer, and so runneth into Mar del Zur, at the least eighteene degrees more in breadth there then it was where it first begaune: otherwise I coulde as well imagine this passage to be more vnlikely then the voyage to Moscouia, and more impossible then it for the farre situation and continuance thereof in the frostie clime: as now I can affirme it to be very possible and most likely in comparison thereof, for that it neither coasteth so farre North as the Moscouian passage doeth, neither is this straight so long as that, before it bowe downe Southerly towardes the Sunne againe.

The second argument concludeth nothing. Ptolome knew not what was about sixtene degrees South beyond the Equinoctiall line, he was ignorant of all passages Northward from the elevation of sixtie three degrees, he knew no Ocean sea beyond Asia, yet haue the Portingals trended the cape of Good hope at the South point of Afrike, and trauelled to Giapan an Iland in the East Ocean, betweene Asia and America: our merchants in the time of king Edward the first discouered the Moscouian passage farther North then Thule, and shewed Groenland not to be continent with Lappeland and Norway: the like our Northwesterne trauellers haue done, declaring by their nauigation that way, the ignorance of all Cosmographers that either doe ioyne Groenland with America, or continue the West Indies with that frostie region vnder the North pole. As for Virgil he sang according to the knowledge of men in his time, as an other Poet did of the hot Zone:

Ouid. 1. Met. Quarum quæ media est, non est habitabilis æstu. Imagining, as most men then did, Zonam torridam, the hot Zone, to be altogether vnhabited for heat, though presently we know many famous and worthy kingdomes and cities in that part of the earth, and the Iland of S. Thomas neere Aethiopia, & the wealthie Ilands for the which chiefly all these voyages are taken in hand, to be inhabited euen vnder the equinoctiall line.

Sol. 3. To answere the third obiection, besides Cabota and all other trauellers nauigations, the onely credit of M. Frobisher may suffice, who lately though all these Ilands of ise, and mount aines of snowe, passed that way, euen beyonde the guilfe that tumbleth downe from the North, and in some places though he drew one inch thicke ise, as he returning in August did, came home safely againe.

Sol. 4. The fourth argument is altogether frivolous and vaine, for neither is there any isthmos or straight of lande betweene America and Asia, nor can these two landes ioyntly be one continent.

Lib. Geog. The first part of my answere is manifestly allowed of by Homer, whom that excellent Geographer Strabo followeth, yeelding him in this faculty the price. The author of that booke likewise ὁδὸς κόσμου to Alexander, attributed vnto Aristotle, is of the same opinion that Homer and Strabo bee of, in two or three places. Dionisius in περιηγήσει hath this verse ὠκεανὸς ἀπείριτος ἀπείριτον ἔνθεν ἀνάγει. So doeth the Ocean Sea runne round about the world: speaking onely of Europe, Afrike, and Asia, as then Asia was trauelled and knowen. With these Plotz. Doctours may you ioyne Pomponius Mela. capit. 2. lib. 1. Plinius lib. 2. capit. 67. and Pius 2. cap. 2. in his description of Asia. All the which writers doe no lesse confirme the whole Easterne side of Asia to be compassed about with the Sea, then Plato doeth affirme in Timæo, vnder the name Atlantis, the West Indies to be an Iland, as in a speciall discourse thereof R. Eden writeth, agreeable vnto the sentence of Proclus, Marsilius Ficinus, and others. Out of Plato it is gathered that America is an Iland. Homer, Strabo, Aristotle, Dionisius, Mela, Plinie, Pius 2. affirme the continent of Asia, Afrike, and Europe, to be enuironed with the Ocean. I may therefore boldly say, (though later intelligences thereof had me none at all) that Asia and the West Indies be not tied together by any Isthmos or straight of lande, contrary to the opinion of some newe Cosmographers, by whome doubtfully this matter hath bene brought in controuersie. And thus much for the first part of my answere vnto the fourth obiection.

The second part, namely that America and Asia cannot be one continent, may thus be proued, ὅτι ἡ γῆ καὶ ὁ τόπος ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ τοιοῦτος ἐστὶν. The most Riuers take downe that way their course, where the earth is most hollowe and deepe, writeth Aristotle: and the Sea, (saith hee in the same place,) as it goeth further, so is it founde deeper. Into what gulfe doe the Moscouian riuers Onega, Duina, Ob, powre out their streames? Northward out of Moscouia into the sea. Which way doeth that sea strike? The South is maine lande, the Easterne coast waxeth more and more shalowe: from the North, either naturally, because that part of the earth is higher Aristot. 2. Met. cap. 1. or of necessitie, for that the forcible influence of some Northerne starres causeth the earth there to shake off the Sea, as some Philosophers doe thinke: or finally for the great store of waters engendred in that frostie and colde climate, that the bankes are not able to holde them, Alber. in 2. Meteo. cap. 6. From the North I say, continually falleth downe great abundance of water. So that this Northeasterne currant must at the length abruptly bowe towarde the South on the West side of Finmarke and Norway: or else strike downe South west aboue Groneland, or betwixt Groneland and Iseland, into the North west straight wee speake of, as of congruence it doeth, if you marke the situation of that Region, and by the report of M. Frobisher, experience teacheth vs. And M. Frobisher the further hee trauailed in the former passage, as hee told me, the deeper alwayes he found sea. Lay you now the summe hereof together. The riuers runne where the chanels are most hollowe, the sea in taking his course waxeth deeper, the sea waters fall continually from the North Southward, the Northeasterne currant striketh downe into the straight we speake of, and is there augmented with whole mountaines of yce and snowe, falling downe furiously out from the land vnder the North pole. Where store of water is, there is it a thing impossible to want sea, where sea not onely doeth not want, but waxeth deeper, there can be discouered no land. Finally, whence I pray you came the contrary tide, that M. Frobisher mette withal after that hee had sailed no small way in that passage, if there be any Isthmos or straight of land betwixt the aforesaid North westerne, gulfe and Mar del Zur, to ioyne Asia and America together? That conclusion frequented in scholes Quidquid præter, &c. was ment of the partes of the world then known, and so is it of right to be vnderstoode.

Lib. 1. Meteor. cap. 13.

Plin. lib. 2. cap. 67.

The fift obiection requireth for answere, wisedome and policie in the trauailer, to winne the Barbarians fauour by some good meanes: and so to arme and strengthen himselfe, that when he shall haue the repulse in one coast, he may safely trauaile to an other, commodiously taking his conuenient times, and discreetely making choise of them with whome hee will thoughly deale. To force a violent entrie, would for vs Englishmen be very hard, considering the strength and valour of so great a Nation, farre distant from vs, and the attempt thereof might bee most perillous vnto the doers, vnlesse their part were very good. Sol. 5.

Touching their lawes against strangers, you shall reade neuertheleese in the same relations of Galeotto Perera, that the Cathaian king is wont to graunt free accesse vnto all forreiners that come into his Countrey for Marchandise, and a place of libertie for them to remaine in: as the Moores had, vntil such time as they had brought the Loutea or Lieutenant of that coast to be a circumcised Saracene: wherefore some of them were put to the sword, the rest were scattered abroad: at Fuquien, a great citie in China, certaine of them are yet this day to be seene. As for the Giapans they bee most desirous to bee acquainted with strangers. The Portingals though they were finely handled there at the first, yet in the ende they founde great fauour at the Prince his handes, insomuch that the Loutea or president that misused them, was therefore put to death. The rude Indian Canoa halleth those seas, the Portingals, the Saracenes, and Moores trauaile continually vp and downe that reache from Giapan to China, from China to Malacca, from Malacca to the Moluccaes: and shall an Englishman, better appointed then any of them al (that I say no more of our mate) feare to saile in that Ocean? What seat at all doe want piracie? what Nauigation is there voyde of perill?

To the last argument. Our trauellers needs not to seeke their returne by the Northeast, neither shall they be constrained, except they list, either to attempt Magellane straight at the Southwest, or to be in danger of the Portingals for the Southeast: they may returne by the Northwest, the same way they doe goe sooth, as experience hath shewed. Sol. 6.

The reason alleadged for proofe of the contrary, may be disproued after this maner. And first, it may be called in controuerſie, whether any currant continually be forced by the motion of Primum mobile, round about the world, or no: for learned men doe diuerſly handle that queſtion. The naturall courſe of all waters is downeward, wherefore of congruence they fall that way where they finde the earth moſt lowe and deepe: in reſpect whereof, it was erſt ſaide, the ſeas do ſtride from the Northren landes Southerly. Violently the ſeas are tolled and troubled diuers wayes with the windes, encreaſed and diminiſhed by the courſe of the Moone, hoiſed vp & downe through the ſundry operations of the Sunne and the ſtarres: finally, ſome be of opinion, that the ſeas bee caried in part violently about the world, after the daily motion of the higheſt moueable heauen, in like maner as the elements of aire and fire, with the reſt of the heauenly ſpheres are, from the Eaſt vnto the Weſt. And this they doe call their Eaſterne currant, or leuant ſtreame. Some ſuch currant may not be denied to be of great force in the hot Zone, for the neerenelle thereof vnto the centre of the Sunne, and bluſtring Eaſterne windes violently driuing the ſeas Weſtward: howbeit, in the temperate climes, the Sunne being further off, and the windes more diuers, blowing as much from the North, the Weſt and South, as from the Eaſt, this rule doeth not effectually withholde vs from trauailing Eaſtward, neither be wee kept euer backe by the aforeſayde Leuant windes and ſtreame. But in Magellans ſtreight wee are violently driuen backe Weſtward: Ergo, though the Northweſterne ſtraight or Anian frette ſhall wee not be able to returne Eaſtwarde? it followeth not. The firſt, for that the Northweſterne ſtraight hath more ſea roome at the leaſt by one hundreth Engliſh miles, then Magellans fret hath, the onely want whereof cauſeth all narrowe paſſages generally to be moſt violent. So would I ſay in Anian gulfe, if it were ſo narrowe as Don Diego and Zalterius haue painted it out, any returne that way to bee full of difficulties, in reſpect of ſuch ſtreightnelle thereof, not for the neerenelle of the Sunne, or Eaſterne windes, violently forcing that way any leuant ſtreame: But in that place there is more ſea rome by many degrees, if the Cardes of Cabota, and Gemma Friſius, and that which Tramezine imprinted, be true.

Lucan. lib. 1. Pharſal.

What the Eaſterne currant is.

And hitherto reaſon ſee I none at all, but that I may as well giue credite vnto their doings, as to any of the reſt. It muſt be Peregrinationis hiſtoria, that is, true reportes of skilful trauailers, as Ptolome writeth, that in ſuch controuerſies of Geographie muſt put vs out of doubt. Ortelius in his vniuerſall tables, in his particuler Mappes of the Weſt Indies, of all Aſia, of the Northren kingdomes, of the Eaſt Indies, Mercator in ſome of his globes, and generall Mappes of the world, Moletius in his vniuerſall table of the Globe diuided, in his ſea Carde, and particuler tables of the Eaſt Indies, Zalterius and Don Diego, with Fernando Bertely, and others, doe ſo much differ both from Gemma Friſius and Cabota, among themſelues, and in diuers places from themſelues, concerning the diuers ſituation and ſundry limits of America, that one may not ſo raſhly, as truely ſurmiſe, theſe men either to be ignorant in thoſe points touching the aforeſaide region, or that the Mappes they haue giuen out vnto the worlde, were collected onely by them, and neuer of their owne drawing.

The firſt voyage of M. Martine Frobiſher, to the Northweſt for the ſearch of the ſtraight or paſſage to China, written by Chriſtopher Hall, and made in the yeere of our Lord 1576.

May.

VPon Munday the 13. of May the Barke Gabriel was launched at Redriffe, and vpon the 27. day following ſhe vailed from Redriffe to Ratcliffe.

June.

The 7. of June being Thurſday, the two barkes, viz. the Gabriel, the Michael, and our pinneſſe ſet ſaile at Ratcliffe, and bare downe to Detford, and there we ancred: the cauſe was, that our pinneſſe burſt her bouliſprit, and foremaſt aboard of a ſhippe that rode at Detford, elſe wee ment to haue paſt that day by the Court then at Greenewiche.

M. Matthew Kinderſlye was Captaine of the Michael.

The 8. day being Friday, about 12. of the clocke we wayed at Detford, and ſet ſaile all three of vs, and bare downe by the Court, where we ſhotte off our ordinance, and made the beſt ſhewe wee could: Her Maieſtie beholding the ſame commended it, and bade vs farewell with ſhaking her hand at vs out of the window we. Afterward ſhe ſent a Gentleman a boorde of vs, who declared that her Maieſtie had good liking of our doings, and thanked vs for it, and alſo willed our Captaine to come the next day to the Court to take his leaue of her.

The ſame day towards night M. Secretarie Woolly came aboorde of vs, and declared to the companie, that her Maieſtie had appointed him to giue them charge to be obedient, and diligent to their Captaine, and gouernours in all things, and wiſhed vs happie ſucceſſe.

The ninth day about noone the winde being Weſterly, hauing our ancres aboorde ready to ſet ſaile to depart, wee wanted ſome of our companie, and therefore ſtayed, and moared them againe.

Sunday the 10. of June, wee ſet ſaile from Blackewall at a South weſt, and by Weſt ſunne, the winde being at North Northweſt, and ſailed to Grauеſend, and ancred there at a Weſt northweſt ſunne, the winde being as before.

The 12. day being ouer againſt Grauеſend, by the caſtle or blockehouſe we obſerued the latitude, which was 51. degrees 33. min. And in that place the variation of the Compaſſe is 11. degrees and a halfe. This day we departed from Grauеſend, at a Weſt South weſt ſunne, the winde at North and by Eaſt a faire gale, and ſailed to the Weſt part of Tilberie hope, & ſo turned downe the Hope, and at a Weſt ſunne the winde came to the Eaſt Southeaſt, and wee ancred in 7. fathome being lowe water.

The 13. day wee ſet ſaile at a Northeaſt ſunne, the winde at Weſt Southweſt, and ſailed downe the Sweane and ouer the Spits, and at a South ſouthweſt ſunne, the winde came to the Eaſt Northeaſt, then we turned downe to the Naze and ſo ouer the Naze, & in the traling ground, and ſo came to ancre.

The 14. day we waped at 3. of the clocke afternoone, the winde at Southeaſt, and ſailed downe by Orfordneſſe, and there ancred being litle winde, and the floud in hand.

The 15. we waped at 2. a clocke in the morning being litle winde at North northweſt, and ſailed down to Alborough, and thwart of Alborough the wind came to the Northnortheaſt, we turned downe to Solde, and there ancred at 9. a clocke in 5. fathoms, and rode all the floud, and at a high water being a ſtiffe gale at North Northeaſt wee waped and put roome with Harwiche at a ſouthweſt ſunne, being 9. a clocke at night.

The 16. day wee waped and ſet ſaile at 3. of the clocke afternoone the winde at South ſouthweſt, & ſailed to Alborough. And at that preſent the winde came to the Northnorthweſt, and North a ſtiffe gale. We put roome with Orfordneſſe, and there rode all the night.

The 17. day we waped at Orfordneſſe at a Southeaſt, & by Eaſt ſunne, the winde at Northweſt and by North, a good gale, and put roome with Harwich, and ancred there at a South, and by Eaſt ſunne, and did obſerue the latitude of the place which was 51. deg. 54. min.

The 18. day we waped at Harwich, at a Northeaſt ſunne, the winde at Weſt ſouthweſt, and ſailed out of Harwich Hauſe. Their departure from Harwich the 18. of June.

The 19. day wee ſet ſaile from Yarmouth roade at a Southweſt ſunne, the winde at Eaſt Southeaſt, and ſailed betwixt the Cockle and the maine in three fathome, and a halfe at three quarters floud. From 7. to 10. a clocke at night the winde at South Southeaſt, the ſhippe ſailed ſouthweſt three leagues.

From tenne a clocke at night to 2. of the clocke in the morning the winde at South ſoutheaſt, a faire gale, the ſhippe ſailed Northweſt 4. leagues.

The 20. day in the morning from 2. of the clocke to ſixe a clocke, the winde at South Southeaſt a faire gale, the ſhippe ſailed Northweſt foure leagues. From 6. a clocke to tenne of the clocke in the forenoone, the winde at South Southeaſt a faire gale, the ſhippe ſailed Northweſt eight glaſſes, foure leagues. From tenne a clocke to two a clocke foure leagues more. And from two to eight ſixe leagues: from eight to midnight we ſailed North Northweſt fiue leagues, we ſounded hauing 30. fathome, and fine ſande with blackes among and one ſhell. From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning, the ſhippe ſailed with all ſailes 6. leagues, and that watch out we ſounded hauing 37. fathomes, and fine gray ſand.

From 4. a clocke in the morning to 8. in the forenoone, being the 21. day, the winde at South Southeaſt, a faire gale, the ſhippe ſailed North Northweſt 8. glaſſes, 5. leagues, then Northnorthweſt 6. leagues, the maine yard a croſſe: we ſounded hauing 40. fathome, and fine ſand. And at that preſent we obſerued the latitude, which was 54. degr. 41. min.

The 22. day from 4. a clocke in the morning till 4. a clocke the next morning we ſailed with a faire Southeaſt winde, 38. leagues. This day from 4. to 8. of the clocke the winde as before the ſhippe ſailed North Northweſt ſixe leagues, ſounded 50. fathome, and fine ſand. From 8. a clocke till 12. a clocke at noone, the winde at South litle winde with fogge, the ſhip ſailed North Northweſt 3. leagues. I ſounded hauing 54. fathome, and fine ſand like ooze. The 23. day.

From 12. to foure of the clocke, the winde at South Southweſt litle winde, the ſhippe ſailed North 1. league with great fogge. At the end of y watch ſounded, hauing 55. fathome & ſmal ſand.

From 4. to 8. a clocke the winde at West Northwest, litle winde with fogge, the ship went North 2. leagues. Sounded hauing 50. fathome, and browne sande. From 8. to midnight, the winde at Northwest litle winde & fog, the ship went Northnortheast 3. leagues. Frō midnight to 4. a clock in the morning ẏ wind at Northwest, & by North, smooth waters, ẏ ship went Northeast 3. leagues.

The 24. day from 4. to 8. a clocke in the forenoone, the wind at North northwest, faire weather, the sea smoothe, the ship went West, 3. leagues and a halfe, and at the end of this watche sounded, hauing 60. fathome, and ozie sand, & litle white shels. From 8. to 12. a clocke at noone, the winde at Northwest and by North, a faire gale, the sea smooth, the ship went West 3. leagues and a halfe: sounded hauing 53. fathome, and streame ground with litle shels. From 12. to 4. in the afternoone the winde at North northwest, the ship went Northnortheast 4. leagues.

Fare Island. At 2. of the clocke after noone I had sight of Faire yle, being from vs 6. leagues North, and by East, and when I brought it Northwest and by North, it did rise at the Southermost ende with a litle hommocke, and swampe in the middes.

From 4. a clocke at afternoone to 8. a clocke litle wind, ẏ ship sailed Northnortheast 2. leagues, I sounded hauing 60. fathomes, & streamie ground with shels, 4. leagues from the land. From 8. a clocke to midnight calme, and without accompt. From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning, the winde Northwest, and by North litle winde, the ship sailed Northnortheast 1. league.

The 25. day from 4. to 8. a clocke in the forenoone, the winde at Northwest, and by North a Shotland. fresh gale, I cast about to the Westward, the Southermost head of Shotland called Swinborne head Northnorthwest from me, and the land of Fare yle, West Southwest from me. I sailed directly to the Northhead of that said land sounding as I ranne in, hauing 60, 50. and 40. fathoms, and gray redde shels: and within halfe a mile of that Island, there are 36. fathoms, for I sailed in that Island to see whether there were any rodstreede for a Northwest winde, and I founde by my sounding hard rockes, and foule ground, and deepe water within two cables length of the shoare, 28. fathome, and so did not ancre but plied to and fro with my foresaile, and mizen till it was high water vnder the Island. The tide setteth there Northwest and Southeast: the floud setteth Southeast, and the ebb Northwest.

Fowlay Island. The 26. day I hauing the winde at South a faire gale, sayling from Fare yle to Swinborne head, I did obserue the latitude, being the Island of Fowlay West Northwest frō me 6. leagues, and Swinborne head East southeast from me, I found my eleuation to be 37. degr. and my declination 22. degr. 46. min. So that my latitude was 59. degr. 46. min. At that present being neere to Swinborne head, hauing a leake which did trouble vs, as also to take in fresh water, I plyed S. Tronions. roome with a sound, which is called S. Tronions, and there did ancre in seuen fathoms water, and faire sande. You haue comming in the sounds mouth in the entring 17. 15. 12. 10. 9. 8. and 7. fathoms, and the sound lyeth in North Northwest, and there roade to a West sunne, and stopped our leake, and hauing refreshed our selues with water, at a North Northwest sunne, I set saile from S. Tronions the winde at South Southeast, and turned out till wee were cleare of the sound, and so sailed West to go cleare of the Island of Fowlay. And running off toward Fowlay, I sounded, hauing fiftie fathome, and streamie ground, and also I sounded Fowlay, being North from me one league off that Island, hauing fiftie fathome at the South head, and streamie grounde, like broken otmell, and one shell being redde and white like mackerell.

Here they begin to saile Northwest. Latitude 59. deg. 59. min. The 27. day at a South sunne I did obserue the latitude, being the Islande of Fowlay, from mee two leagues East Northeast: I founde my selfe to be in latitude 59. degrees, 59. min. truely obserued, the winde at South Southwest: I sailed West, and by North.

From 12. to foure a clocke afternoone, the winde at South, a faire gale the shippe sailed West and by North 6. leagues, and at the ende of this watch, I sounded hauing 60. fathome, with litle stones and shels, the Island from vs 8. leagues East.

From 4. to 8. a clocke the winde at South a good gale, the shippe sailed West and by North 6. leagues.

From 8. a clocke to midnight, the winde at South Southeast, a good gale, the ship sailed west, and by North 7. leagues, I sounded hauing 65. fathoms. In hailing vp the lead the line brake, and so we lost our lead.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning, the winde at Southeast a good gale, our maine saile ferled our maine topsaile, foresaile, and spreetsaile abroad, the ship sailed West and by North 8. leagues.

The 28. day from 4. to eight a clocke, the winde at Southeast a good gale, the shippe sailed West and by North eight leagues: from eight to 12. a clocke, the winde at East Southeast a fresh gale, the shippe sailed West and by North eight leagues.

From

From 12. to 4. a clocke at afternoone, the winde at East Southeast, a freſh gale, the ſhip ſailed East and by North 8. leagues.

From 4. to 8. a clocke at night, the winde at East Southeast a freſh gale, the ſhip ſailed West 8. leagues. I did ſound, and could not get ground at 70. fathome.

From 8. to midnight the winde at East Southeast a good gale, the ſhip ſailed West 8. leagues.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning, the winde at East Northeast, a freſh gale the ſhip ſailed West 8. leagues and a halfe.

From 4. to 8. a clocke the 29. day the winde at East Northeast a good gale, the ſhippe ſailed West 8. leagues. 29.

From 8. to 12. a clocke at noone, the winde at East Northeast, the ſhip ſailed West 8. leagues.

From 12. to 4. a clocke in the afternoone the winde at East Northeast a faire gale, the ſhip ſailed West 6. leagues, and at the ende of this watche I did ſounde, and could get no ground at 100. fathome.

From 4. to 8. a clocke at night, we ſailed West 5. leagues.

From 8. to midnight 4. leagues.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning 4. leagues West.

The 30. day from 4. to 8. a clocke in the forenoone, we ſailed West 3. leagues. 30.

From 8. to 12. a clocke 3. leagues.

From 12. to 4. a clocke at afternoone West 5. leagues. And at the ende of this watch I ſounded hauing 100. fathome and no ground.

From 4. to 8. a clocke 6. leagues.

From 8. to midnight, we ſailed West 8. leagues.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning 8. leagues.

The firſt of July, from 4. to 8. a clocke, we ſailed West 4. glaſſes 4. leagues, and at that preſent we had ſo much winde that we ſpooned afore the ſea Southwest 2. leagues. July the firſt.

From 8. to 12. at noone West and by North 6. leagues.

From 12. to 4. a clocke 6. leagues.

From 4. to 8. foure miles.

From 8. to midnight we ſailed with 2. coarſes 4. leagues West.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning 6. leagues.

The ſecond day from 4. to 8. a clocke, 6. leagues and a halfe West. 2.

From 8. to 12. West 7. leagues. From 12. to 4. at afternoone West 7. leagues more. And at the ende of this watch I ſounded hauing 100. fathome, and no ground.

From 4. to 8. at night 7. leagues. From 8. to midnight West, and by North 7. leagues.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning weſt and by North 6. leagues.

The 3. day we found our Compaſſe to bee varied one point to the Weſtwards: this day from 4. to 8. a clocke we ſailed West, and by North 6. leagues. 3.

From 8. to 12. a clocke at noone West, and by North 4. leagues. At that preſent I found our Compaſſe to be varied 11. deg. and one 4. part to the Weſtwards which is one point. The Compaſſe harping Weſtwards one point.

From 12. to 4. a clocke at afternoone West and by North, one league.

From 4. to 8. West, and by North one league.

From 8. to midnight West, and by North 2. leagues.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning West, and by North 3. leagues.

The 4. day from 4. to 8. the winde at Northweſt and by North 4. leagues. 4.

From 8. to 12. at noone West and by North 2. leagues. And at that preſent we ſent off our pinneſſe from the Gabriel to fiſh being calme.

From 12. to 4. a clocke at afternoone calme, and without accompt.

From 4. to 8. a clocke at night, West and by North 2. leagues.

From 8. to midnight West, and by North 7. leagues.

From midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning 9. leagues.

The 5. day from 4. to 8. a clocke West and by North 8. leagues. 5.

From 8. to 12. hauing raine and fogge, West and by North 6. leagues.

From 12. to 4. at afternoone West and by North 5. leagues. From 4. to 8. North Northweſt 6. leagues. From 8. to midnight North and by West 4. leagues.

From midnight to 6. a clocke in the morning wee hulled by the winde, and went West and by North 5. leagues.

The 6. day from 8. to 12. at noone, West and by North 5. leagues. 6.

From 12. to 4. a clocke West and by North 5. leagues.

7. From 8. at night to 8. in the morning 4. leagues.
From 12. to 4. a clocke at afternoone, North Northwest 4. leagues.
From 4. to 8. at night North Northwest 4. leagues.
From 8. to midnight, North two leagues.
From midnight to 8. a clocke calme, and without accompt.

8. The 8. day from 8. to 12. at noone, 3. leagues West.
From 12. to 4. a clocke West, 6. leagues.
From 4. to 8. eight leagues.
From 8. to midnight wee tooke in all our sailes, and spooned afore the sea because of our pinnesse, and at that present came fogge and mist, and so we lost sight of her. Wee sailed West fiue leagues.
From midnight to 4. a clocke, West southwest 4. leagues, with very much winde.

9. From 4. to 8. in the forenoone, the sea being mightily growne, 4. leagues.
From 8. to 12. Southwest afore the sea 4. leagues.
From 12. to 4. a clocke, West Southwest 5. leagues.

10. From that time to 8. a clocke the next day I layd the ship a hul, her way was south 4. leagues.
From 8. to 4. a clocke calme, and without accompt.
From 4. to 8. sixe leagues. From 8. to midnght 7. leagues.
From midnight to 4. a clocke, North 8. leagues.

11. From 4. to 8. a clocke, West and by south 5. leagues. From 8. to 12. a clocke at noone West, and by south 4. leagues, & at the southeast sunne we had sight of the land of Friseland bering from vs West northwest 16. leagues, and rising like pinacles of steeples, and all couered with snow. I found my selfe in 61. degr. of latitude. We sailed to the shoare & could finde no ground at 150. fathome, we hoised out our boate, & the Captaine with 4. men rowed to the shoare to get on land, but the land lying full of yce they could not get on land, and so they came aboorde againe: We had much adoe to get cleare of the yce by reason of the fogge. Yet from Thursday 8. a clocke in the morning to Friday at noone we sailed Southwest 20. leagues.

The Iland of Friseland.

12. The 13. day, a Northeast wind cleared vs of the thicke mist, & we sailed southwest 5. leagues.

13. The 14. day the vehemencie of the winde brake our foreyarde, and bore ouer boord our mysen masse, so we put our spreet saile yard, with the spreetsaile coarse to our foremast, and spooned afore the sea Southwest 15. leagues, till it was Sunday.

14. This day from 4. in ꝑ afternoone to 8. we sailed Southwest 2. leagues. From thence to Munday morning 4. of the clocke, calme, and without accompt.

15. The 16. day from 4. to 8. the winde at South southwest, we sailed 6. leagues and a half. From 8. to 12. 5. leagues and a halfe, and from 12. to 4. 6. leagues. At the ende of this watch, the head of our maine mast, maine topmaste, with the topsaile brake, and fel into the sea altogether.
From 4. to 8. we ranne somewhat a drift, because we layd vp the ropes of our maine mast, and set our maine saile againe. From 8. to midnight, Northwest and by West 3. leagues.

16. The 17. day from 4. to 8. 3. leagues. From 8. to 12. two leagues, from 12. to 4. at afternoone 3. leagues, from 4. to 8. a clocke 2. leagues, in our old course I prooued to sounde but founde no ground. From 8. to midnight, West and by South 2. leagues, from midnight to 4. a clocke in the morning 2. leagues.

Very deepe seas.

17. From 4. to 8. three leagues, from 8. to 12. at noone 3. leagues, and here at a Southeast sunne, I found the sunne to be eleuated 33. deg. And at a Southsoutheast 40. deg. So I obserued it till I founde it at the highest, and then it was eleuated 52. degr. I iudged the variation of the Compasse to be 2. points and a halfe to the Westward.

The variation of the needle, two points and a halfe to the West.

From 12. to 4. three leagues, from 4. to 8. three leagues, from 8. to midnight 2. leagues. From midnight to 4. a clocke one league, being litle winde.

18. From 4. to 8. North, 4. leagues, from 8. to 12. 8. leagues, from 12. to 4. foure leagues, from 4. to 8. 4. leagues, and at the end of this watch we cast about to the Eastwards. From 8. to midnight 3. leagues, from midnight to 4. a clocke East and by North 3. leagues.

19. From 4. to 8. 3. leagues, from 8. to 12. 3. leagues, from 12. to 4. 4. leagues. From 4. to 8. three leagues, from 8. to midnight 4. leagues. From midnight to 4. a clocke 4. leagues. From 8. to 12.

20. Northnortheast 4. leagues. From 12. to 4. 4. leagues, from 4. to 8. 4. leagues, from 8. to midnight foure leagues Northeast. From midnight to 4. a clocke, Northeast foure leagues, and at the ende of this watch we had sight of a great drift of yce, seeing a firme land, and we cast Westward to be cleare of it.

A great drift of yce.

21. From 4. to 8. southwest 3. leagues, from 8. to 12. 2. leagues, from 12. to 6. 3. leagues, from 6. at night night to ſire the next morning, northeaſt fiue leagues.

From 6. to 12. weſt fiue leagues, from 12. to 4. northnorthweſt, 6. leagues: from 4. to 8. north northeaſt, 8. leagues: from 8. to midnight, 7. leagues: from midnight to 4. of the clocke, North northweſt, 7. leagues. 23

From 4. to 8, 7. leagues: from 8. to 12. 7. leagues more: from 12. to 4, 5. leagues: from 4. to 8, 5. leagues: from thence to midnight, 6. leagues: from midnight to 4. of the clocke in the morning, weſt, northweſt, 6. leagues. 24

From 4. to 8, 7. leagues: from 8. to 12. 7. leagues: from 12 to 4, 8. leagues: from 4. to 8, 8. leagues: from 8. to midnight, 4. leagues, weſt, northweſt, and with fogge: from midnight to 4. of the clocke, 4. leagues. 25

This day was litle wind, and we tried with both our courſes: we had ſight of a land of yce: the latitude was 62. degrees, two minuts. We ran from 12. to 4, 4. miles. 26 The latitude of 62. de. 2. mi.

From 4. to 8, 4. miles: from 8. to 4. calme, and fogge: from thence to 4. of the clocke in the morning calme, and foggie alſo. 27

From 4. to 8, 4. leagues: from 8. to 12, 3. leagues: from 12. to 4. northweſt and by weſt, ſixe leagues, but very foggie: from thence to 8. of the clocke in the morning, litle wind: but at the cleering vp of the fogge, we had ſight of lande, which I ſuppoſed to be Labrador, with great ſtore of yce about the land: I ran in towards it, and ſounded, but could get no ground, at 100. fathom, and the yce being ſo thicke, I could not get to the ſhoare, and ſo lay off, and came cleare of the yce. 28 Sight of land ſuppoſed to haue bene Labrador.

Vpon Sunday, we came within a mile of the ſhoare, and ſought a harborowe: all the ſound was full of yce, and our boate rowing a ſhoare, could get no ground, at 100. fathom, within a Cables length of the ſhoare: then we ſailed Eaſt northeaſt along the ſhoare, for ſo the lande lieth, and the currant is there great, ſetting northeaſt, and ſouthweſt: and if we could haue gotten anker ground, we would haue ſeene with what force it had runne, but I iudge a ſhip may driue a league and a halfe, in one howre, with that tide.

This day, at 4. of the clocke in the morning, being faire and cleere, we had ſight of a head land, as we iudged, bearing from vs north, and by Eaſt, and we ſailed Northeaſt, and by North to that lande, and when wee came thither, wee could not gette to the lande for yce: for the yce ſtretched along the coaſte, ſo that we could not come to the land, by fiue leagues. 31

Wenſday the firſt of Auguſt, it calmed, and in the after noone, I cauſed my boate to be hoyſed out, being hard by a great Iſland of yce, and I and foure men rowed to that yce, and ſounded within two cables length of it, and had ſtreteene fathome, and litle ſtones, and after that ſounded againe within a Minion ſhotte, and had ground, at an hundreth fathome, and faire ſand: we ſounded the next day a quarter of a myle from it, and had ſixtie fathome rough grounde, and at that yeſene being aboord, that great Iſland of yce fell one part from another, making a noyce as if a great cliffe had fallen into the Sea. And at foure of the clocke, I ſounded againe, and had 90. fathome, and ſmall blacke ſtones, and little white ſtones, like pearles. The tide here did ſet to the ſhoare. Auguſt. 1 2

We ſailed this day ſouth ſoutheaſt of ward, and layd it a trie. 3

The next day was calme and thicke, with a great ſea. 4

The next day we ſailed South, and by Eaſt, two leagues, and at eight of the clocke in the foore noone we caſt about to the Eaſtwards. 5

The firſt day it cleered, and we ranne northweſt into the ſhoare, to get a harborough, and being towards night, we notwithſtanding kept at ſea. 6

The ſeuenth day we plied roome with the ſhoare, but being neere it, it waxed thicke, and we bare off againe. 7

The eight day we bended in towards the ſhoare againe. 8

The ninth day we ſounded, but could gette no grounde at 130. fathome: the weather was calme. 9

The tenth I tooke foure men, and my ſelfe, and rowed to ſhoare to an Iſland one league from the maine, and there the floode ſetteth Southweſt alongeſt the ſhoare, and it floweth as neere as I could iudge ſo too, I could not carry to proue it, becauſe the ſhippe was a great way from me, and I feared a fogge: but when I came a ſhoare, it was a lowe water. I went to the toppe of the Iſland, and before I came backe, it was hiey a foote water, and ſo without carrying, I came aboord. 10

The 11. we found our latitude to be 63. degrees, and eight minutes, and this day entred the ſtraight. 11

The 12. we ſet ſaile towardes an Iſland, called the Gabriels Iſland, which was 10. leagues 12

then

then from vs.

13 We espied a sownd, and bare with it, and came to a sandie Baye, where we came to an anker, the lande bearing East southeast of vs, and there we rode all night in 8. fathome water. It sowerh there at a Southeast Moone. We called it Priors sownd, being from the Gabriels Island, tenne leagues.

14 The 14. we waied, and ranne into another sownde, where we ankered in 8. fathome water, faire sand, and blacke oaze, and there calked our ship, being weake from the wales vpward, and tooke in fresh water.

15 The 15. day we waied, and sailed to Priors Baye, being a mile from thence.

16 The 16. day was calme, and wee rode still, without yce, but presently within two howres it was frozen round about the shippe, a quarter of an ynche thicke, and that daye very faire, and calme.

17 The 17. day we waied, and came to Thomas Williams Island.

18 The 18. day, we sailed north northwest, and ankered againe in 23. fathome, and tought oaze, vnder Burchers Island, which is from the former Island, ten leagues.

19 The 19. day in the morning, being calme, and no winde, the Captaine and I, tooke our boate, with eight men in her, to rowe vs a shoare, to see if there were there any people, or no, and going to the toppe of the Island, we had sight of seuen boates, which came rowing from the East side, toward that Island: whereupon we returned aboord againe: at length we sent our boate with fiue men in her, to see whither they rowed, and so with a white cloth brought one of their boates with their men along the shoare, rowing after our boate, till such time as they sawe our shippe, and then they rowed a shoare: then I went on shoare my selfe, and gaue euery of them a threaden point, and brought one of them aboord of me, where he did eate and drinke, and then carried him on shoare againe. Whereuppon all the rest came aboord with their boates, being nineteene persons, and they spake, but we vnderstoode them not. They be like to Tartars, with long blacke haire, broad faces, and flatte noses, and tawnie in colour, wearing Seale skinnes, and so doe the women, not differing in the fashion, but the women are marked in the face with blewe streekes downe the cheekes, and round about the eies. Their boates are made all of Seale skins, with a keele of wood within the skinne: the proportion of them is like a Spanish shallop, saue only they be flat in the bottome, and sharpe at both endes.

Sight of the Countrey people.

The description of the people.

20 The twentieth day, wee waied, and went to the East side of this Island, and I and the Captaine, with foure men more went on shoare, and there wee sawe their houses, and the people espying vs, came rowing towardes our boate: whereuppon wee plied to our boate: and wee being in our boate, and they ashoare, they called to vs, and wee rowed to them, and one of their company came into our boate, and wee carried him aboord, and gaue him a Bell, and a knife: so the Captaine and I willed fiue of our men to set him a shoare at a rocke, and not among the company, which they came from, but their wilfulnes was such, that they would goe to them, and so were taken themselues, and our boate lost.

5. of our men taken by the people.

21 The next daye in the morning, wee stoode in neere the shoare, and shotte of a fauconet, and sownded our trumpet, but wee coulde heare nothing of our men: this sownde wee called the fiue mens sownde, and plyed out of it, but ankered againe in thirtie fathome, and oaze: and riding there all night, in the morning, the snowe laye a foote thicke vppon our hatches.

22 The two and twentieth daye in the morning, we waied, and went againe to the place where wee lost our men, and our boate. Wee had sight of fourescore boates, and some came neere to vs, but we coulde learne nothing of our men: among the rest, we intised one in a boate to our shippes side, with a Bell, and in giuing him the Bell, wee tooke him, and his Boate, and so kept him, and so rowed downe to Thomas Williams Island, and there ankered all night.

26 The 26. day we waied, to come homeward, and by 12. of the clocke at noone, we were thwart of Trumpets Island.

27 The next day, we came thwart of Gabriels Island, and at 8. of the clocke at night, we had the Cape Labradore West from vs, ten leagues.

28 The 28. day we went our course Southeast.

29 We sailed Southeast, and by East, 22. leagues.

September. The first day of September in the morning, we had sight of the land of Friseland, being eight 1 leagues from vs, but we could not come neerer it, for the monstrous yce that lay about it. From this day, till the sixth of this Moneth, wee ranne along Island, and had the South part of it at eight of the clocke, Eaſt from vs ten leagues.

past

The ſeuenth day of this moneth, we had a very terrible ſtorme, by force whereof, one of our men was blowen into the ſea out of our waſte, but he caught holde of the foreſaile ſheate, and there held, till the Captaine pluckt him againe into the ſhip. 7

The 25. day of this moneth, we had ſight of the Iſland of Orknye, which was then Eaſt from vs. 25

The firſt day of October, we had ſight of the Sheld, and ſo ſailed along the coaſt, and ankered at Yarmouth, and the next day we came into Harwiche. October. 1 The Sheld.

The ſecond voyage of Maſter Martin Frobiſher, made to the Weſt, and Northweſt Regions, in the yeere, 1577. With a deſ- cription of the Countrey, and people: Written by Dioniſe Settle.

IN Whitſunday, being the ſixe and twentieth of May, in the yeere of our Lorde God, 1577. Captaine Frobiſher departed from Blacke Wall, with one of the Queenes Maieſties ſhippes, called The Aide, of nine ſcore tunne, or thereabouts: and two other little Barkes likewiſe, the one called The Gabriel, whereof Maiſter Fenton, a Gentleman of my Lord of Warwikes, was Captaine: and the other, The Michael, whereof Maiſter Yorke, a Gentleman of my Lord Admirals was Captaine, accompanied with ſeuen ſcore Gentlemen, ſouldiers, and ſailers, well furniſhed with victuals, and other proviſion neceſſarie for one halfe yeere, on this his ſecond voiage, for the further diſcouering of the paſſage to Cathay, and other countries thereunto adiacent, by weſt and northweſt nauigations: which paſſage or way, is ſuppoſed to be on the north & northweſt parts of America: and the ſaide America to be an Iſland enuironed with the Sea, where through our Merchants might haue courſe and recourſe with their merchandize, from theſe our Vttermoſt parts of Europe, to thoſe Orientall coaſtes of Aſia, in much ſhorter time, and with greater benefite then any others, to their no little commoditie and profite that doe or ſhall trafficke the ſame. Our ſaid Captaine and General of this preſent voyage and companie, hauing the yeere before, with two little pinneſſes, to his great danger, and no ſmall commendations, giuen a worthy attempt towards the performance thereof, is alſo yeelt (when occaſion ſhall be miniſtred, to the benefite of his Prince, and native Countrey) to aduenture himſelfe further therein. As for this ſecond voyage, it ſeemeth ſufficient, that he hath better explored and ſearched the commodities of thoſe people, and Countreis, with ſufficient commoditie vnto the aduenturers, which in his firſt voyage the yeere before, he had found out.

Vpon which conſiderations, the day and yeere before expreſſed, we departed from Blacke Wall to Harwiche, where making an accompliſhment of things neceſſarie, the laſt of May we hoiſed vp ſailes, and with a merrie winde the 7. of June, we arriued at the Iſlands, called Orchades, or vulgarly Orkney, being in number 30. ſubiect and adiacent to Scotland, where we made proviſion The Iſlands Orchades, or Orkney.

of fresh water: in the doing whereof, our General licenced the Gentlemen and souldiers, for their recreation, to goe on shoare. At our landing, the people fled from their poore cottages, with shrikes and alarms, to warne their neighbours of enemies, but by gentle perswasions we reclaimed them to their houses. It seemeth they are often frighted with Pirats, or some other enemies, that moue them to such sudden feare. Their houses are very simply builded with Pibble stone, without any chimneis, the fire being made in the middest thereof. The good man, wife, children, and other of their familie, eate and sleepe on the one side of the house, and their cattell on the other, very beastly and rudely, in respect of ciuilitie. They are destitute of wood, their fire is turffes and Cow shardes. They haue corne, bigge, and oates, with which they pay their Kings rent, to the maintenance of his house. They take great quantitie of fishe, which they drie in the winde, and Sunne. They dresse their meate very filthily, and eate it without salt. Their apparell is after the rudest sort of Scotland. Their money is all base. Their Church and religion is reformed according to the Scots. The fisher men of England, can better declare the disposition of those people then I: wherefore I remit other their vsages to their reports, as yeerely repairers thither, in their course to & from Island for fishe.

The Orchadians vpon final occasion flee their home.

No wood in Orkney.

Fisher men of England haue daily traffike to Orkney.

We departed herehence, the 8. of June, and followed our course betweene West and Northwest, vntill the 4. of Julie: all which time, we had no night, but that easily, and without any impediment, wee had when wee were so disposed, the fruition of our bookes, and other pleasures to passe away the time: a thing of no small moment, to such as wander in vnknowen seas, and long nauigations, especially, when both the windes and raging surges, do passe their common and wonted course. This benefite endureth in those parts not 6. weekes, whilest the sunne is neere the Tropike of Cancer: but where the Pole is raised to 70. or 80. degrees, it continueth the longer.

In June and July no night in those west and northwest regions.

All along these seas, after we were sixe daies sailing from Orkney, we met floting in the Sea, great Firre trees, which as we iudged, were with the furie of great floods rooted vp, and so driuen into the sea. Island hath almost no other wood nor fuell, but such as they take vp vpon their coastes. It seemeth, that these trees are driuen from some part of the New found lande, with the current that setteth from the West to the East.

The 4. of July, we came within the making of Friseland. From this shoare 10. or 12. leagues, we met great Islands of yce, of halfe a mile, some more, some lesse in compasse, shewing aboue the sea, 30. or 40. fathoms, and as we supposed, fast on ground, where, with our lead we could scarce sound the bottome, for depth.

Here, in place of odoriferous and fragrant smels of sweete gums, & pleasant notes of musicall birds, which other Countreis in more temperate Zone do yeeld, we tasted the most boisterous Boreal blasts, mixt with snow & haile, in the moneths of June & July, nothing inferior to our vnctemperate winter: a sudden alteration, and especially in a place or Paralele, where the Pole is not eleuate aboue 61. degrees: at which height other Countreis more to the North, yea, vnto 70. degrees, shew themselues more temperate then this doth.

Yce snow, and haile in June and July.

All along this coast yce lieth, as a continual bulwarke, & so defendeth the Countrey, that those which would land there, incur great danger. Our General 3. daies together, attempted with the ship boate to haue gone on shoare, which, for that without great danger he could not accomplish, he deferred it vntil a more conuenient time. All along the coast lie very high mountaines, couered with snow, except in such places, where, though the steepenes of the mountaines, of force it must needes fall. Foure daies coasting along this land, we found no signe of habitation. Little birds, which we iudged to haue lost the shoare, by reason of thicke fogges, which that Countrey is much subiect vnto, came flying to our ships, which causeth vs to suppose, that the Countrey is both more tollerable, and also habitable within, then the outward shoare maketh shewe or signification.

Friseland subiect to fogge.

From hence we departed the eight of Julie: and the 16. of the same, wee came with the making of land, which land our Generall, the yeere before, had named The Queenes foreland, being an Island, as we iudge, lying neere the supposed continent with America: and on the other side, opposite to the same, one other Island, called Halles Isle, after the name of the Master of the ship, neere adiacent to the firme land, supposed continent with Asia. Betweene the which two Islands there is a large entrance, or streight, called Frobishers streight, after the name of our Generall, the first finder thereof. This said streight, is supposed to haue passage into the sea of Sur, which I leaue vnknowen as yet.

Frobishers streight.

It seemeth that either here, or not farre hence, the sea should haue more large entrance, then in other parts, within the frozen or vntemperate Zone: and that some contrary tide, either from the East or West, with maine force casteth out that great quantitie of yce, which commeth flowing from this coast, euen vnto Friseland, causing that Countrey to seeme more vntemperate then others, much more northerly then the ſame.

I cannot iudge, that any temperature vnder the Pole, being the time of the Sunnes Northern declination, halfe a yeere together, and one whole day, (conſidering, that the Sunnes elcuation ſurmounteth not 23. degrees, and 30. minuts.) can haue power to diſſolue ſuch monſtrous and huge yce, comparable to great mountaines, except by ſome other force, as by ſwift currents and tides, with the helpe of the ſaid day of halfe a yeere. Iſlands of yce comparable to mountaines.

Before we came within the making of theſe lands, we taſted cold ſtormes, in ſo much that it ſeemed, we had changed ſummer with winter, if the length of the dayes had not remooued vs from that opinion.

At our firſt comming, the ſtreights ſeemed to be ſhut vp with a long mure of yce, which gaue no little cauſe of diſcomfort vnto vs all: but our Generall, (to whoſe diligence imminent dangers, and difficult attempts ſeemed nothing, in reſpect of his willing minde, for the commoditie of his Prince, and Countrey,) with two little Pinneſſes prepared of purpoſe, paſſed twiſe thorough them to the Eaſt ſhoare, and the Iſlands thereunto adiacent: and the ſhip, with the two Barkes, lay off and on ſomething further into the ſea, from the danger of the yce. Captain Frobiſher his ſpeciall care and diligence for the benefite of his Prince and Countrey.

Whileſt he was ſearching the Countrey neere the ſhoare, ſome of the people of the Countrey ſhewed themſelues, leaping and dauncing, with ſtrange ſhrikes, and cries, which gaue no little admiration to our men. Our Generall deſirous to allure them vnto him by faire meanes, cauſed knives, and other things, to be proffered vnto them, which they would not take at our handes: but being laid on the ground, and the partie going away, they came and tooke vp, leauing ſome thing of theirs to counteruaile the ſame. At the length, two of them leauing their weapons, came downe to our Generall and Maſter, who did the like to them, commanding the reſt of his companie to ſtay, and went vnto them: who, after certaine dumbe ſignes, and mute congratulations, began to lay handes vpon them, but they deliuerly eſcaped, and ranne to their bowes and arrowes, and came fiercely vpon them, (not reſpecting the reſt of our companie, which were ready for their defence) but with their arrowes hurt diuers of them: we tooke the one, and the other eſcaped. The order of the people appearing on ſhoare. Fierce and bold people. One taken.

Whileſt our Generall was buſied in ſearching the Countrey, and thoſe Iſlands adiacent on the Eaſt ſhoare, the ſhip and barkes hauing great care, not to put farre into the ſea from him, for that he had ſmal ſtore of victuals, were forced to abide in a cruell tempeſt, chancing in the night, amongſt and in the thickeſt of the yce, which was ſo monſtrous, that euen the leaſt of a thouſand had bene of force ſufficient, to haue ſhiuered our ſhip and barkes into ſmal portions, if God (who in all neceſſities, hath care vpon the infirmitie of man) had not prouided for this our extremitie a ſufficient remedie, though the light of the night, whereby wee might well diſcerne to flee from ſuch imminent dangers, which we auoided with 14. Bourdes in one watch the ſpace of 4. howres. If we had not incurred this danger amongſt theſe monſtrous Iſlands of yce, we ſhould haue loſt our Generall and Maſter, and the moſt of our beſt ſailers, which were on the ſhoare deſtitute of victuals: but by the nature of our Maſter Gunner, Maſter Iackman, and Andrew Dier, the Maſters Mates, men expert both in nauigation, and other good qualities, wee were all content to incurre the dangers afore rehearſed, before we would, with our owne ſafetie, runne into the ſeas, to the deſtruction of our ſaid Generall, and his companie. Richard Core, Maſter Gunner. Maſter Iackman. Andrew Dier.

The day following, being the 19. of Julie, our Captaine returned to the ſhippe, with good newes of great riches, which ſhewed it ſelfe in the bowels of thoſe barren mountaines, wherwith we were all ſatiſfied. A ſudden mutation. The one part of vs being almoſt ſwallowed vp the night before, with cruell Neptunes force, and the reſt on ſhoare, taking thought for their greedie paunches, how to find the way to New found land: at one moment we were all wrapt with ioy, forgetting both where we were, and what we had ſuffered. Behold the glorie of man, to night contemning riches, and rather looking for death then otherwiſe: and to morrow we deuiſing howe to ſatiſfie his greedie appetite with golde. New found land.

Within foure dates after we had bene at the entrance of the ſtreights, the northweſt and Weſt winds diſperſed the yce into the ſea, and made vs a large entrance into the ſtreights, that without any impediment, on the 19. of Julie, we entred them, and the 20. thereof, our General and Maſter, with great diligence, ſought out and ſounded the Weſt ſhoare, and founde out a faire Harborough for the ſhippe and barkes to ride in, and named it after our Maſters name, Iackmans ſound, and brought the ſhip, barkes, and all their companie to ſafe anker, except one man, which died by Gods viſitation. Iackmans ſound.

At our firſt arriuall, after the ſhip rode at anker, our Generall, with ſuch companie as could well be ſpared from the ſhippes, in marching order entred the lande, hauing ſpeciall care by exhortation, that at our entrance thereinto, we ſhould all with one voice, kneeling vpon our knees, chiefly thanke God for our safe arriuall: secondly, beseech him, that it would please his diuine Maiestie, long to continue our Queene, for whome he, and all the rest of our companie, in this order tooke possession of the Countrey: and thirdly, that by our Christian studis and endeuour, those barbarous people trained vp in Paganrie, and infidelitie, might be reduced to the knowledge of true religion, and to the hope of saluation in Christ our Redeemer. With other woordes very apt to signifie his willing mind, and affection towards his Prince, and Countrey: whereby all suspicion of an vndutifull subiect, may credibly be iudged to be vtterly exempted from his mind. All the rest of the Gentlemen, and other, deserue worthily herein, their due praise and commendation.

Possession taken.

These things in this order accomplished, our Generall commanded all the companie to be obedient in things needefull for our owne safegard, to Master Fenton, Master Yorke, and Master Beast, his Lieutenant, while he was occupied in other necessary affaires, concerning our comming thither.

After this order we marched through the Countrey, with Ensigne displaied, so farre as was thought needefull, and now and then heaped vp stones on high mountaines, and other places, in token of possession, as likewise to signifie vnto such as hereafter may chance to arriue there, that possession is taken in the behalfe of some other Prince, by those which first found out the country.

Yce needfull to be regarded of seafaring men.

Who so maketh nauigations to these Countreis, hath not onely extreame windes, and furious seas, to encounter withall, but also many monstrous and great Islands of yce: a thing both rare, wonderfull, and greatly to be regarded.

We were forced sundry times, while the ship did ride here at anker, to haue continual watch, with boates & men ready with hallers, to knit fast vnto such yce, which with the ebbe & flood were tossed to & fro in the harborough, & with force of oares to hale them away, for endangering ỳ ship.

Our Generall, certaine daies searched this supposed continent with America, and not finding the commoditie to answere his expectation, after hee had made triall thereof, hee departed thence with two little barkes, and men sufficient, to the East shoare, being the supposed continent of Asia, and left the ship with most of the Gentlemen, souldiers, and sailers, vntill such time as he, either thought good to send, or come for them.

Stones glister with sparckles like gold.

The stones of this supposed continent with America, be altogether sparkled, and glister in the Sunne like gold: so likewise doth the sand in the bright water, yet they verifie the old Prouerbe:

A common prouerbe.

All is not golde that glistereth.

On this West shoare we found a dead fishe floating, which had in his nose a horne streight and torquet, of length two yardes lacking two inches, being broken in the top, where we might perceiue it hollowe, into which some of our sailers putting Spiders, they presently died. I saw not the triall hereof, but it was reported vnto me of a trueth: by the vertue whereof, we supposed it to be the sea Unicorne.

The sea Unicorne.

After our Generall had found out good harborough for the ship and barkes to anker in, and also such store of gold ore, as he thought himselfe satisfied withall, he returned to the Michael, whereof Master Yorke aforesaid, was Captaine, accompanied with our Master, and his Mate: who coasting along the West shoare, not farre from whence the ship rode, they perceiued a faire harborough, and willing to sound the same, at the entrance therof they espied two tents of Seale skins, vnto which the Captaine, our said Master, and other companie resorted. At the sight of our men, the people fled into the mountaines: neuertheless, they went to their tents, where leauing certaine trifles of ours, as glasses, bels, knives, & such like things, they departed, not taking any thing of theirs, except one dogge. They did in like manner leaue behind them, a letter, pen, incke, and paper, whereby our men, whome the Captaine lost the yeere before, and in that peoples custodie, might (if any of them were aliue) be aduertised of our presence, and being there.

The people fled at the sight of our men.

On the same day, after consultation had, all the Gentlemen, and others like wise, that could be spared from the ship, vnder the conduct and leading of Master Philpot, (vnto whome, in our Generall his absence, and his Lieutenant Master Beast, all the rest were obedient) went a shoare, determining to see, if by faire meanes we could either allure them to familiaritie, or otherwise take some of them, & so attein to some knowledge of those men, whom our General lost ỳ yeere before.

Master Philpot.
Master Beast.

At our comming backe againe to the place where their tents were before, they had remoued their tents further into the land vpon Bowne, where they might, if they were driuen from the land, flee with their boates into the sea. Wee parting our selues into two companies, and compassing a mountaine, came suddenly vpon them by land, who espying vs, without any tarying, fled to their boates, leauing the most part of their oares behind them for haste, and rowed downe the bay, where our two Pinnesses met them, and droue them to shore: but, if they had had all their oares, so swift are they in rowing, it had bene long time to haue chased them.

When

When they were landed, they fiercely assaulted our men with their bowes and arrowes, who wounded three of them with our arrowes: and perceiuing themselues thus hurt, they desperatly leapt off the Rocks into the Sea, and drowned themselues: which if they had not done, but had submitted themselues, or if by any meanes we could haue taken aliue (being their enemies as they iudged) we would both haue saued them, and also haue sought remedie to cure their wounds receiued at our hands. But they, altogether voyde of humanitie, and ignorant what mercy meaneth, in extremities looke for no other then death: and perceiuing they should fal into our hands, thus miserably by drowning rather desired death, then otherwise to bee saued by vs: the rest, perceiuing their fellowes in this distresse, fled into the high mountaines. Two women, not being so apt to escape as the men were, the one for her age, and the other being incombred with a yong childe, we tooke. The olde wretch, whom diuers of our Saylers supposed to be either a diuell, or a witch, had her buskins plucked off, to see if she were clouen footed, and for her ougly hewe and deformitie, we let her goe: the yong woman and the childe, we brought away. We named the place where they were slaine, Bloudie point: and the Bay or Harborough, Yorkes sound, after the name of one of the Captaines of the two Barkes.

A fierce assault of a few.

Hauing this knowledge both of their fiercenesse and cruelty, and perceiuing that faire meanes, as yet, is not able to allure them to familiaritie, we disposed our selues, contrary to our inclination, something to be cruel, returned to their tents, and made a spoyle of the same: where we found an olde shirt, a doublet, a girdle, and also shooes of our men, whom we lost the peere before: on nothing else vnto them belonging could we set our eyes.

Faire meanes not able to allure them to familiaritie.

Their riches are not gold, siluer or precious Drapery, but their said tents and boates, made of the skins of red Deare and Seale skins: also, dogges like vnto woolues, but for the most part black, with other trifles, more to be wondred at for their strangenesse, then for any other commoditie needefull for our vse.

Boates of skinnes.

Thus returning to our ship the 3. of August, we departed from the west shoare, supposed firme with America, after we had anchored there 13. dayes: and so, the 4. thereof, we came to our Generall on the East shoare, and anchored in a faire Harborough named Anne Warrwickes sound, vnto which is annexed an Iland both named after the Countesse of Warwicke, Anne Warrwicks sound and Isle.

Our departure from the west shoare.

In this Isle, our Generall thought good, for this voyage, to fraight both the ships and barkes, with such Stone or gold mine all, as he iudged to counteruaile the charges of his first, & this his seconde Nauigation to these countries, with sufficient interest to the venturers, whereby they might both be satisfied for this time, and also in time to come (if it please God and our Prince) to expect a much more benefite, out of the bowels of those Septentrionall Paralels, which long time hath concealed it selfe, till at this present, through the wonderfull diligence, and great danger of our Generall and others, God is contented with the reuealing thereof. It riseth so abundantly, that from the beginning of August, to the 22. thereof (euery man following the diligence of our General) we raysed aboue ground 200. tunne, which wee iudged a reasonable fraight for the ship and two barkes, in the sayd Anne Warrwickes Isle.

In the meane time of our abode here, some of the countrie people, came to shewe themselues vnto vs, sundrie times on the maine shoare, neere adiacent to the said Isle. Our General, desirous to haue some newes of his men, whom he lost the peere before, with some company with him repaired with the ship boat, to common, or signe with them for familiaritie, whereunto he is persuaded to bring them. They, at the first shewe, made tokens, that three of his fiue men were aliue, and desired penne, yncke, and paper, and that within three or foure daies, they would returne, and (as we iudged) bring those of our men, which were liuing, with them.

The countrie people shewe themselues vnto vs.

They also made signes or tokens of their King, whom they called Cacough, & how he was caried on mens shoulders, & a man farre surmounting any of our company, in bignesse & stature.

With these tokens and signes of writing, penne, ynke, and paper was deliuered them, which they would not take at our hands, but being layd vpon the shoare, and the partie gone away, they tooke vp: which likewise they do, when they desire any thing for change of theirs, laying for that which is left, so much as they thinke wil counteruaile the same, and not comming neare together. It seemeth they haue bene vsed to this trade or traffique, with some other people adioyning, or not farre distant from their Countrie.

Their vsage in traffique or exchange.

After 4. daies, some of them shewed themselues vpon the firme land, but not where they were before. Our General very glad thereof, supposing to heare of our men, went from the Iland, with the boate, and sufficient company with him. They seemed very glad, and allured him, about a certaine point of the land: behind which they might perceiue a companie of the craftie villains to lye lurking, whom our Generall would not deale withall, for that he knew not what company they were, & so with few signes dismissed them, & returned to his company.

The people shewe themselues the third time.

The people shewe them selues againe on firme land.

An other time, as our said General was coasting the countrie, with two little Pinisses, whereby at our returne he might make the better relation thereof, three of the craftie villains, with a white skin allured vs to them. Once againe, our Generall, for that he hoped to heare of his men, went towards them: at our comming neare the shoare, whereon they were, we might perceiue a number of them lie hidden behinde great stones, & those three in sight labouring by al meanes possible, that some would come on land: & perceiuing we made no hast by words nor friendly signes, which they vsed by clapping of their hands, and being without weapon, and but three in sight, they sought further meanes to prouoke vs thereunto. One alone layd flesh on the shoare, which wee tooke vp with the Boate hooke, as necessary victuals for the releiuing of the man, woman, and child, whom we had taken: for that as yet, they could not digest our meate: whereby they perceiued themselues deceiued of their expectation, for all their craftie allurements. Yet once againe, to make (as it were) a full shewe of their craftie natures, and subtile sleights, to the intent thereby to haue intrapped and taken some of our men, one of them counterfeited himselfe impotent and lame of his legges, who seemed to descend to the water side, with great difficultie: & to couer his crafte the more, one of his fellowes came downe with him, and in such places, where hee seemed vnable to passe, he tooke him on his shoulders, set him by the water side, and departed from him, leauing him (as it should seeme) all alone, who playing his counterfeite pageant very wel, thought thereby to prouoke some of vs to come on shoare, not fearing, but that one of vs might make our partie good with a lame man.

Their first meanes to allure vs to shoare.

Their second meanes.

Their third and craftiest allurement.

Compassion to cure a craftie lame man.

Our Generall, hauing compassion of his impotencie, thought good (if it were possible) to cure him therof: wherefore, he caused a souldiour to shoote at him with his Caleuer, which grased before his face. The counterfeit villeine deliuerly fled, without any impediment at all, and gott him to his bowe and arrowes, and the rest from their lurking holes, with their weapons, bowes, arrowes, slings, and darts. Our Generall caused some calecuers to be shot off at them, wherby some being hurt, they might hereafter stand in more feare of vs.

This was all the answere, for this time, we could haue of our men, or of our Generals letter. Their craftie dealing, at these three seuerall times, being thus manifest vnto vs, may plainely shewe, their disposition in other things to be correspondent. We iudged, that they vsed these stratagemmes, thereby to haue caught some of vs, for the deliuering of the man woman and childe whom we had taken.

They are men of a large corporature, and good proportion: their colour is not much vnlike the Sunne burnt Countrie [illegible] who laboureth daily in Sunne for his liuing.

They weare their h[illegible] long, and cut before, either with stone or knife, very disorderly. Their women w[illegible] long, and knit vp with two loupes, shewing forth on either side of their faces, and the rest tolled vpon a knot. Also, some of their women race their faces proportionally, as chinne, cheekes, and forehead, and the wristes of their hands, whereupon they lay a colour, which continueth darke azurine.

They eate their meate all rawe, both flesh, fish, and foule, or something perboyled with bloud and a little water, which they drinke. For lacke of water, they wil eate yce, that is hard frosen, as pleasantly as we will doe Sugar, Candie, or other Sugar.

If they, for necessities sake, stand in neede of the premisses, such grasse as the countrie yeelds they plucke vpp, and eate, not delintily, or sallet wise to allure their stomaches to appetite: but for necessities sake, without either salt, oyles, or washing, like brute beasts deuouring the same. They neither vse table, stoole, or table cloth for comelines: but when they are imbrued with bloud, knuckle deepe, and their kniues in like sort, they vse their tongues as apt instrumentes to licke them cleane: in doing whereof, they are assured to loose none of their victuals.

Doggs like vnto wolues.

They frank or keepe certeine doggs, not much vnlike Wolues, which they yoke together, as we do oxen & horses, to a sled or traile: and so carrie their necessaries ouer the yce and snow, from place to place: as the captiue, whom we haue, made perfect signes. And when those doggs are not apt for the same vse: or when with hunger they are constrained for lacke of other victuals, they eate them: so that they are as needful for them, in respect of their bignesse, as our oxen are for vs.

They eate doggs flesh.

They apparell themselues in the skinnes of such beastes as they kill, sewed together with the sinewes of them. All the fowle which they kill, they skin, and make thereof one kinde of garment or other, to defend them from the cold.

Hoods and tailes to their apparel.

They make their apparel with hoods and tailes, which tailes they giue, when they thinke to gratifie any friendshippe shewed vnto them: a great signe of friendshippe with them. The men haue haue them not ſo ſyde as the women.

The men and women weare their hoſe cloſe to their legges, from the waſt to the knee, without any open before, as well the one kind as the other. Upon their legges they weare hoſe of leather, with the furre ſide inward, two or three paire on at once, and eſpecially the women. In thoſe hoſe, they put their kniues, needles, and other things needefull to beare about. They put a bone within their hoſe, which reacheth from the foote to the knee, whereupon they drawe their ſaid hoſe, and ſo in place of garters, they are holden from falling downe about their feete.

They dreſſe their ſkinnes very ſoft and ſouple with the haire on. In cold weather or Winter, they weare the furre ſide inward: and in Summer outward. Other apparell they haue none, but the ſaid ſkinnes.

Thoſe beaſtes, fiſhes, and fowles, which they kill, are their meate, drinke, apparel, houſes, bedding, hoſe, ſhooes, tyed, and ſailes for their boates, with many other neceſſaries, wherof they ſtand in neede, and almoſt all their riches.

Their houſes are tents, made of Seale ſkins, pitched vp with 4. Firre quarters, foure ſquare, meeting at the toppe, and the ſkinnes ſewed together with ſinewes, and layd thereupon: they are ſo pitched vp, that the entrance into them, is alwaies South, or againſt the Sunne. Their houſes of Seale ſkins and Furre.

They haue other ſortes of houſes, which we found, not to be inhabited, which are raiſed with ſtones and Whale bones, and a ſkinne layd ouer them, to withſtande the raine, or other weather: the entrance of them being not much vnlike an Ouens mouth, whereto I thinke, they reſort for a time to fiſhe, hunt, and foule, and ſo leaue them vntill the next time they come thether againe.

Their weapons are bowes, arrowes, darts, and ſlinges. There bowes are of wood, of a yard long, ſinewed on the back with ſtrong ſinewes, not glued too, but faſt girded and tyed on. Their bowe ſtringes are likewiſe ſinewes. Their arrowes are three peeces, nocked with bone, and ended with bone, with thoſe two endes, and the wood in the middeſt, they paſſe not in length halfe a yard or little more. They are fethered with two fethers, the penne end being cutt away, and the fethers layd vpon the arrow with the broad ſide to the wood: in ſomuch that they ſeeme, when they are tyed on, to haue foure fethers. They haue likewiſe three ſorts of heades to thoſe arrowes: one ſort of ſtone or pyon, proportioned like to a heart: the ſecond ſort of bone, much like vnto a ſtopte head, with a hooke on the ſame: the third ſort of bone likewiſe, made charpe at both ſides, and charp pointed. They are not made very faſt, but lightly tyed to, or elſe ſet in a nocke, that vpon ſmall occaſion, the arrowe leaueth theſe heads behinde them: and they are of ſmall force, except they be very neere, when they ſhoote. Their weapons of defence. Three ſorts of heads to their arrowes.

Their Darts are made of two ſorts: the one with many forkes of bones in the fore ende, and likewiſe in the middeſt: their proportions are not much vnlike our toaſting pyons but longer: theſe they caſt out of an inſtrument of wood, very readily. The other ſort is greater then the firſt aforeſayd, with a long bone made charp on both ſides, not much vnlike a Rapier, which I take to bee their moſt hurtfull weapon. Two ſortes of darres.

They haue two ſorts of boats made of leather, ſet out on the inner ſide with quarters of wood, artificially tyed together with thongs of the ſame: the greater ſort are not much vnlike our wherries, wherein ſixteene or twenty men may ſitte: they haue for a ſayle, dreſt the guttes of ſuch beaſts as they kill, very fine and thinne, which they ſewe together: the other boate is but for one man to ſitte and rowe in, with one oare. Two ſortes of Boats made of Leather.

Their order of fiſhing, hunting, and fowling are with theſe ſayd weapons: but in what ſort, or how they vſe them, we haue no perfect knowledge as yet. They vſe to foule, fiſhe, and hunte.

I can ſuppoſe their abode or habitation not to be here, for that neither their houſes or apparel, are of ſuch force to withſtand the extremity of colde, that the countrie ſeemeth to be infected with altogether doe I ſee any ſigne likely to perſuade the ſame. It is to be ſuppoſed that their inhabiting is elſwhere.

Thoſe houſes, or rather dennes, which ſtand there, haue no ſigne of footway, or any thing elſe trodden, which is one of the chiefeſt tokens of habitation. And thoſe tentes, which they bring with them, when they haue ſufficiently hunted and fiſhed, they remoue to other places: and when they haue ſufficiently ſtored them of ſuch victuals, as the country yeldeth, or bringeth forth, they returne to their Winter ſtations or habitations. This coniecture do I make, for the infertilitie, which I perceiue to be in that countrie.

They haue ſome pyon, whereof they make arrowe heades, kniues, and other little inſtrumentes, to worke their boates, bowes, arrowes, and dartes withall, which are very vnapt to doe any thing withall, but with great labour. Their vſe of pyon.

It ſeemeth, that they haue converſation with ſome other people, of whom for exchaunge, they should receiue the same. They are greatly delighted with any thing that is bright, or giueth a sound.

What knowledge they haue of God, or what Idol they adore, we haue no perfect intelligence. Anthropophagi. I thinke them rather Anthropophagi, or deuourers of mans flesh, then otherwise: for that there is no flesh or fishe, which they finde dead (smell it neuer so filthily) but they will eate it, as they finde it, without any other dressing. A loathsome thing, either to the beholders, or hearers.

Signes of gold ore. There is no maner of creeping beast hurtfull, except some Spiders (which, as many affirme, are signes of great store of Gold:) and also certeine stinging Gnattes, which bite so fiercely, that the place where they bite, shortly after swelleth, and itcheth very sore.

Signes of gold from other people. They make signes of certaine people, that weare bright plates of gold in their foreheades, and other places of their bodies.

Description of the Countries. The Countries, on both sides the streights, lye very high with rough stonie mountaines, and great quantitie of snowe thereon. There is very little plaine grounde, and no grasse, except a little, which is much like vnto mosse that groweth on soft ground, such as we get Turfes in. There is no wood at all. To be briefe, there is nothing fitte, or profitable for the vse of man, which that Countrie with roote yeeldeth or bringeth forth: Howbeit, there is great quantity of Deere, whose skinnes are like vnto Asses, their heads or hornes doe farre exceede, as well in length as also in breadth, any in these our partes or Countrie: their feete likewise, are as great as our oxens, which we measured to be seuen or eight inches in breadth. There are also hares, wolues, fishing beares, and Sea foule of sundry sortes.

As the Countrie is barren and vnfertile, so are they rude & of no capacitie to culture the same, to any perfection: but are contented by their hunting, fishing, and fowling, with rawe flesh and warme blood, to satisfie their greedie panches, which is their onely glorie.

A signe of Earthquakes or thunder. There is great likelyhood of Earthquakes, or thunder: for that there are huge & monsterous mounteines, whose greatest substance are stones, and those stones so shaken with some extraordinarie meanes, that one is separated from another, which is discordant from al other Quarries.

No riuers, but such as the Sunne doeth cause to come of snowe. There are no riuers, or running springes, but such, as through the heate of the Sunne, with such water as discendeth from the mountaines and hilles, whereon great drifts of snowe doe lie, are ingendred.

A probability, that there should be neither spring or riuers in the ground. It argueth also, that there should be none: for that the earth, which with the extremitie of the Winter, is so frosen within, that that water, which should haue recourse within the same, to mainteine Springs, hath not his motion, whereof great waters haue their originall, as by experience is seene other where. Such valleies, as are capable to receiue the water, that in the Summer time, by the operation of the Sunne, descendeth from great abundance of snowe, which continually lyeth on the mounteines, and hath no passage, sinketh into the earth, and so vanisheth away without any runnell aboue the earth, by which occasion, or continual standing of the said water, the earth is opened, and the great frost yeldeth to the force thereof, which in other places, foure or fiue fathoms within the ground for lacke of the said moysture, the earth: (euen in the very Summer time) is frosen, and so combineth the stones together, that scarcely instruments, with great force, can vnknit them.

Also, where the water in those vallies can haue no such passage away, by ꝑ continuance of time, in such order as is before rehearsed, the yeerely descent from the mountaines, filleth them full, that at the lowest banke of the same, they fall into the next vallie, and so continue, as fishing ponds or Stagnes in Summer time full of water, and in the Winter hard frosen: as by skarres, that remaine thereof in Summer, may easily be perceiued: so that, the heate of Summer, is nothing comparable or of force, to dissolue the extremitie of colde, that commeth in Winter.

Neuertheless, I am assured that belowe the force of the frost, within the earth, the waters haue recourse, and emptie themselues out of sight into the sea, which though the extremitie of the frost, are constrayned to doe the same: by which occasion, the earth within is kept the warmer, and springes haue their recourse, which is the onely nutriment of Golde and Minerals within the same.

Springs nourish gold.

There is much to be said of the commodities of these Countries, which are couched within the bowels of the earth, which I let passe till more perfect triall be made thereof.

An end of coniecturing till further trueth and triall. Thus coniecturing, till time, with the earnest industrie of our Generall and others (who by all diligence remaine prest to explore the truth of that which is vnexplored, as he hath to his euerlasting praise founde out that which is like to yeelde an innumerable benefite to his Prince and countrie) offer further triall, I conclude.

The

The 23. of Auguſt, after we had ſatiſfied our mindes with fraight ſufficient for our veſſels, though not our couetous deſires, with ſuch knowledge of the country, people, and other commodities as are before rehearſed, the 24. thereof we departed therehence: the 17. of September we fell with the lands end of England, and ſo to Milford Hauen, from whence our Generall rode to the Court for order, to what Porte or Hauen to conduct the ſhippe.

Shippes ſatiſfied with burthen, but mens mindes not contented.

We loſt our two Barkes in the way homeward, the one, the 29. of Auguſt, the other, the 31. of the ſame moneth, by occaſion of great tempeſt and fogge. Howbeit, God reſtored the one to Briſtowe, and the other making his courſe by Scotland, to Yermouth. In this Voyage we loſt two men, one in the way by Gods viſitation, and the other homewarde caſt ouer boorde with a ſurge of the Sea.

Our departure frō thoſe countries.

How, & when, we loſt our 2. Barks, which God neuertheleſſe reſtored.

I Could declare vnto the Readers, the Latitude and Longitude of ſuch places and regions, as we haue bene at, but not altogether ſo perfectly as our maſters and others, with many circumſtances of tempeſts and other accidents incident to Sea faring men, which ſeeme not altogether ſtrange, but I let them paſſe to their reportes as men moſt apt to ſet foorth and declare the ſame. I haue alſo left the names of the Countries on both the ſhores vntouched, for lacke of vnderſtanding the peoples language: as alſo for ſundry reſpects, not needfull as yet to bee declared.

The concluſion.

Countries newe explored, where commoditie is to be looked for, doe better accorde with a newe name giuen by the explorers, then an vncertaine name by a doubtfull Authour.

Our General named ſundry Iſlands, Mountaines, Capes, and Harborroughs after the names of diuers Noble men, & other gentlemen his friends, as wel on the one ſhore, as alſo on the other.

The third and laſt voyage into Meta Incognita, made by M. Martin Frobiſher, in the yeere 1578. VVritten by Thomas Ellis.

THeſe are to let you knowe, that vpon the 25. of May, the Thomas Allen, being Viceadmirall, whoſe Captaine was M. Yorke, M. Gibbes Maſter, M. Chriſtopher Hall Pilot, accompanied with the Reareadmiral named the Hopewel, whoſe Captaine was M. Henrie Carewe, the M. Andrewe Dier, and certaine other ſhippes, came to Graueſend, where we ankred and abode the comming of certaine other of our Fleete, which were not yet come.

Maſter Yorke. Chriſtopher Hall. The Hopewel. Captaine Carew. Andrew Dier.

The 27. of the ſame moneth, our Fleete being nowe come together, and all things preſt in a readineſſe, the winde fauouring, and tide ſeruing, we being of ſailes in nomber eight, waied ankers, and hoyſed our ſailes toward Harwich, to meete with our Admirall, and the reſidue, which then and there abode our arriuall: where we ſafely arriued the 28. thereof, finding there our Admirall, whom we, with the diſcharge of certaine pieces, ſaluted (according to order and duetie) and were welcomed with the like courteſie: which being finiſhed, we landed: where our Generall continued muſtring his Souldiers and Miners, and ſetting things in order appertaining to the voyage, vntill the laſt of the ſayd moneth of May, which day we hoyſed our ſailes, and committing our ſelues to the conducting of Almightie God, we ſet forward toward the Weſt country, in ſuch luckie wiſe, and good ſucceſſe, that by the fift of June, we paſſed the Durſies, being the vtmoſt part of Ireland, to the Weſtward.

Harwich. Durſies. Ireland.

And here it were not much amiſſe, nor farre from our purpoſe, if I ſhould a litle diſcourſe and ſpeake of our aduentures and chances by the way, as our landing at Plymmouth, as alſo the meeting of certaine poore men, which were robbed and ſpoyled of all that they had, by Pirates and Rouers: amongſt whom was a man of Briſtowe, on whom our General vſed his liberalitie, and ſent him away with letters into England.

Plymmouth. Briſtowe.

But becauſe ſuch things are impertinent to the matter, I will returne (without any more mentioning of the ſame) to that, from the which I haue digreſſed, and ſwarued, I meane our ſhippes now ſailing on the ſurging Seas, ſometime paſſing at pleaſure with a wiſhed Eaſterne winde, ſometime hindered of our courſe againe by the Weſterne blaſtes, vntill the 20. day of the ſayd moneth of June, on which day in the morning we fell with Frizeland, which is a very hie and cragged land, and was almoſt cleane couered with ſnowe, ſo that we might ſee nought but craggie rockes, and the tops of high and huge hilles, ſometimes (and for the moſt part) all couered with foggie miſtes. There might we alſo perceiue the great Iſles of yce lying on the ſeas, like mountaines, some small, some big, of sundry kindes of shapes, and such a number of them, that we could not come neere the shore for them.

Thus sailing alongst the coast, at the last we sawe a place somewhat voyde of yce, where our Generall, (accompanied with certaine other) went a shoare, where they sawe certaine tentes made of beasts skins, and boats much like vnto theirs of Meta incognita. The tents were furnished with flesh, fish, skins, and other trifles: amongst the which was found a boxe of nailes: whereby we did coniecture, that they had either Artificers amongst them, or els a traffike with some other nation. The men ranne away, so that we could haue no conference or communication with them. Our Generall (because he would haue them no more to flee, but rather encouraged to stay through his courteous dealing) gaue commaundement, that his men should take nothing away with them, sauing onely a couple of white Dogs, for which he left pins, poynts, kniues, and other trifling things, and departed, without taking or hurting any thing, and so came a boord, and hoysed saples, and passed forwards.

The courtesie of our Generall.

But being scarse out of the sight thereof, there fel such a fogge and hidious mist, that we could not see one another: whereupon we stroke our drums, and sounded our trumpets, to the ende we might keepe together: and so continued all that day and night, till the next day, that the mist brake vp: so that we might easily perceiue all the ships thus sayling together all that day, vntill the next day, being the 22. of the same: on which day wee sawe an infinite number of yce, from the which we cast about to shun the danger thereof.

But one of our small Barkes, named the Michael, whose Captaine was Master Kinderslie, the Master Bartholomewe Bull, lost our companie, insomuch that we could not obteine the sight of her many dayes after, of whom I meane to speake further anon, when occasion shall be ministred, and opportunitie serue. Thus we continued on our course, vntill the second of July, on which day we fell with the Queenes foreland, where wee sawe so much yce, that we thought it vnpossible to get into the Straights: yet at the last we gaue the aduenture, and entred the yce.

Master Kenderslie. Bartholomew Bull.

The Michael. The Iudith. M. Fenton. Charles Iackman.

Being in amongst it, we sawe the Michael, of whome I spake before, accompanied with the Iudith, whose Captaine was Master Fenton, the Master Charles Iackman, bearing into the foresayd yce, farre distant from vs, who in a storme that fell, that present night, (whereof I will at large, God willing, discourse hereafter) were seuered from vs, and being in, wandred vp and downe the Straights, amongst the yce, many dayes, in great perill, till at the last, (by the prouidence of God) they came safely to harbor in their wished Porte, in the Countesse of Warwicks sound, the 20. of July aforesayd, ten dayes before any of the other shippes: who going on shoare found where the people of the Countrey had bene, and had hid their prouision in great heapes of stones, being both of flesh, and fish, which they had killed: whereof we also found great store in other places after our arriuall. They found also diuers engins, as bowes, slings, and darts. They found likewise certaine pieces of the Pinnesse which our Generall left there the yeere before, which Pinnesse he had sonke, minding to haue it againe the next yeere.

The Countesse of Warwicks sound.

Now, seeing I haue entreated so much of the Iudith, and the Michael: I will returne to the rest of the other shippes, and wil speake a little of the storme which fell, with the mishaps that we had, the night that we put into the yce: whereof I made mention before.

Our entrance & passage, &c.

At the first entrie into the yce, in the mouth of the Straights, our passage was very narrowe, and difficill: but being once gotten in, we had a fayre open place without any yce, for the most part: being a league in compasse, the yce being round about vs, and inclosing vs, as it were within the pales of a parke. In which place, (because it was almost night) we minded to take in our saples, and lie a hull all that night. But the storme so increased, and the waues beganne to mount aloft, which brought the yce so neere vs, and comming on so fast vpon vs, that we were faine to beare in and out, where we might espie an open place. Thus the yce comming on vs so fast, we were in great danger, looking euery houre for death. And thus passed we on in that great danger, seeing both our selues, and the rest of our ships so troubled and tossed amongst the yce, that it would make the strongest heart to relent.

Bark Dionyse

At the last, the Barke Dionyse, being but a weake ship, and hoysed afore amongst the yce, being so leake that she no longer could carry aboue ꝑ water, sanke without sauing any of the goods which were within her: which sight so abashed the whole Fleete, that wee thought verily wee should haue tasted of the same sauce. But neuertheless, we seeing them in such danger, manned our boates, and saued all the men, in such wise, that not one perished, (God be thanked.)

Narrow shifts for safetie.

The storme still increased, and the yce inclosed vs, that wee were faine to take downe top and top masts: for the yce had so enuironed vs, that we could see neither land, nor sea, as farre as we could kenne: so that we were faine to cut our cables, to hang ouer boorde for fenders, somewhat what to ease the shippes sides, from the great and dyrie strokes of the yce: some Capstan barres, some fending off with oares, some with plancks of two ynches thicke, which were broken immediatly with the force of the yce, some going out vpon the yce to beare it off with their shoulders from the ships. But the rigorousnesse of the tempest was such, and the force of the yce so great, that not onely they burst and spoyled the foresayd prouision: but likewise so rased the sides of the ships, that it was pitifull to beholde, and caused the hearts of many to faint.

Thus continued we all that dismal and lamentable night, plunged in this perplexitie, looking for instant death: but our God, (who neuer leaueth them destitute which faithfully call vpon him) although hee often punisheth, for amendments sake, in the morning caused the windes to cease: and the fogge, which all that night lay on the face of the water, to cleare: so that wee might perceiue, about a mile from vs, a certaine place cleare from any yce, to the which with an easie breath of winde, which our God sent vs, we bent our selues. And furthermore, hee prouided better for vs then we deserued, or hoped for: for when we were in the foresayd cleare place, hee sent vs a fresh gale at West, or at West Southwest, which set vs cleare without all the yce. And further, he added more: for he sent vs so pleasant a day, as the like we had not of a long time before, as after punishment, consolation. Gods prouidence.

Thus we ioyfull wights, being at libertie, tooke in all our sailes, and lay a hull, praysing God for our deliuerance: and staied to gather together our Fleete: which once being done, wee seeing that none of them had any great hurt, neither any of them wanted, sauing onely they of whom I spake before, and the ship which was lost, then at the last we hoised our sailes, and lay bulting off and on, till such time as it would please God to take away the yce, that wee might get into the Straights.

And as we thus lay off and on, we came by a maruellous huge mountaine of yce, which surpassed all the rest that euer wee sawe: for wee iudged it to be neere foure score fathoms aboue water, and we thought it to be a ground for any thing that wee coulde perceiue, being there nine score fathoms deepe, and of compasse about halfe a mile. A mountaine of yce appearing in sundry figures.

Also the fift of July, there fell a hidious fogge and mist, that continued till the nineteenth of the same: so that one shippe could not see another. Therefore we were faine to beare a small sayle, and to obserue the time: but there ran such a currant of Tide, that it set vs to the Northwest of the Queenes foreland, the backside of all the Straights: where (through the contagious fogge hauing no sight either of Sunne or Starre) we scarse knew where we were. In this fogge the tenth of July, wee lost the companie of the Viceadmirall, the Anne Francis, the Busse of Bridgewater, and the Francis of Foy. A fog of long continuance.

The sixteenth day, one of our small Barks, named the Gabriel, was sent by our Generall to beare in with the land, to descrie it, where being on land, they met with the people of the Countrey, which seemed very humane and ciuill, and offered to traffike with our men, proffering them foules, and skins, for kniues, and other trifles: whose courtesie caused vs to thinke, that they had small conuersation with the other of the Straights. The Gabriel. The people offer to traffike with vs.

Then we bare backe againe, to goe with the Queenes foreland: and the eighteenth day wee came by two Islands, whereon we went on shoare, and found where the people had bene: but we sawe none of them. This day we were againe in the yce, and like to be in as great perill as we were at the first. For through the darkenes and obscuritie of the foggie mist, we were almost runne on rockes and Islands, before we sawe them: But God (euen miraculously) prouided for vs, opening the fogges, that we might see clearely, both where, and in what danger we presently were, and also the way to escape: or els, without faile, wee had ruinously runne vpon the rockes.

When we knewe perfectly our instant case, we cast about, to get againe on Sea boyde, which (God be thanked) by night we obteined, and praised God. The cleare continued scarse an houre, but the fogge fell againe as thicke as euer it was.

Then the Reareadmirall, and the Beare got them selues cleare without danger of yce and rocks, strooke their sayles, and lay a hull, staying to haue the rest of the Fleete come forth: which as yet had not found the right way to cleare themselues from the danger of rockes and yce, vntill the next morning, at what time the Reareadmirall discharged certaine warning pieces to giue notice that she had escaped, and that the rest (by following of her) might set themselues free, which they did that day. Warning pieces of safe passage discharged.

Then hauing gathered our selues together, we proceeded on our purposed voyage, bearing off, and keeping our selues distant from the coast, till the 19. day of July: at which time the fogges brake vp and dispersed, so that wee might plainely and clearely beholde the pleasant ayre, which which so long had bene taken from vs, by the obscuritie of the foggie mistes: and after that time, we were not much encombred therewith, vntill we had left the confines of the countrey.

A faire sound betweene the Queenes foreland & Jackmans sound.

Then we espying a fayre sound, supposed it to go into the Straights, betweene the Queenes foreland, & Jackmans sound, which proued, as we imagined. For our Generall sent forth againe the Gabriel, to discouer it, who passed through with much difficultie: for there ran such an extreme currant of a tide, with so horrible a gulfe, that with a fresh gale of winde they were scarse able to stemme it: yet at the length with great trauaile they passed it, and came to the Straights, where they met with the Thomas Allen, the Thomas of Ipswich, and the Busse of Bridgewater: who all together aduentured to beare into the yce againe, to see if they could obteine their wished Porte. But they were so encombred, that with much difficultie they were able to get out againe, yet at the last they escaping, the Thomas Alline, and the Gabriel bare in with the Westerne shore, where they found harbour, and there moared their shippes, vntill the fourth of August, at which time they came to vs in the Countesse of Warwicks sound. The Thomas of Ipswich caught a great leake, which caused her to call againe to Sea bord, and so was mended.

We sailed along still by the coast, vntil we came to the Queenes foreland, at the point whereof we met with part of the gulfe aforesayd, which place or gulfe (as some of our Masters do credibly report) doeth flowe nine houres, and ebs but three. At that point wee discouered certaine lands Southwarde, which neither time nor opportunitie would serue to search. Then being come to the mouth of the Straights, we met with the Anne Francis, who had laine bulting vp and downe euer since her departure alone, neuer finding any of her companie. We met then also the Francis of Foy, with whome againe we intended to venter and get in: but the yce was yet so thicke, that we were compelled againe to retyre and get vs on Sea borde.

An horrible snowe fell in July.

There fell also the same day, being the 26. of July, such an horrible snowe, that it lay a foote thicke vpon the hatches, which frose as fast as it fell.

We had also at other times, diuers cruell stormes, both of snowe and haile, which manifestly declared the distemperature of the Countrey: yet for all that we were so many times repulsed and put backe from our purpose, knowing that lingering delay was not profitable for vs, but hurtfull to our voyage, we mutualy consented to our valiant Generall once againe, to giue the onset.

The 28. day therefore of the same July we assayed, and with little trouble (God be praysed) we passed the dangers, by day light. Then night falling on the face of the earth, we bulled in the cleare, til the cheare full light of the day had chased away the noysome darkenes of the night: at which time we set forward towards our wished port: by the 30. day we obteined our expected desire, where we found the Iudith, and the Michael: which brought no small ioy vnto the Generall, and great consolation to the heaute hearts of those wearied wights.

The time of our setting forward, &c.

The 30. day of July we brought our ships into the Countesse of Warwicks sound, and moared them, namely these ships, the Admirall, the Reareadmiral, the Francis of Foy, the Beare, Armenel, the Salomon, and the Busse of Bridgwater: which being done, our Generall commaunded vs all to come a shore, vpon the Countesse Iland, where he set his Miners to worke vpon the Mine, giuing charge with expedition to dispatch with their lading.

Our Generall himselfe, accompanied with his Gentlemen, diuers times made rodes into sundry partes of the Countrey, as well to finde new Mines, as also to finde out and see the people of the Countrey. He found out one Mine, vpon an Iland by Beares sound, and named it the Countesse of Sussex Iland. One other was found in Winters Foynace, with diuers others, to which the ships were sent sunderly, to be laden. In the same rodes hee met with diuers of the people of the Countrey, at sundry times, as once at a place called Dauids sound: who shot at our men, and very desperately gaue them the onset, being not aboue three or foure in number, there being of our Countrey men aboue a dosen: but seeing themselues not able to preuaile, they tooke themselues to flight: whom our men pursued, but being not vsed to such craggy cliffes, they soone lost the sight of them, and so in vaine returned.

The policie of the people for safetie of themselues.

We also saw of them at Beares sound, both by Sea and land, in great companies: but they would at all times keepe the water betwene them and vs. And if any of our ships chanced to be in the sound, (as they came diuers times) because the harbor was not very good, the ship laded, & departed againe: then so long as any ships were in sight, the people would not be seene. But when as they perceiued the ships to be gone, they would not only shew themselues standing vpon high cliffes, and call vs to come ouer vnto them: but also would come in their botes, very neere to vs, as it were to brag at vs: whereof our Generall hauing aduertisement, sent for the Captaine and Gentlemen of the shippes, to accompanie and attende vpon him, with the Captaine also of the Anne Francis, who was but the night before come vnto vs. For they, and the fleebote hauing loſt vs the 26. day, in the great ſnowe, put into an harbour in the Queenes forelande, where they found good oare, wherewith they laded themſelues, and came to ſeeke the Generall: ſo that nowe we had all our ſhippes, ſauing one Barke, which was loſt, and the Thomas of Ipſewiche, (who compelled by what furie I know not,) forſooke our companie, and returned home without lading.

Their ſperdie flight at our Generals arriuall.

Our Generall accompanied, with his Gentlemen, (of whome I ſpake) came altogether to the Counteſſe of Suſſex Iſland, neere to Beares ſound: where he manned out certaine Pinniſſes, and went ouer to the people: who perceiuing his arriuall, fledde away with all ſpeede, and in haſt left certaine dartes and other engines behind them, which we found: but the people wee could not finde.

The next morning our Generall perceiuing certaine of them in bote vpon the Sea, gaue chaſe to them, in a Pinniſſe vnder ſaile, with a freſh gale of winde, but could by no meanes come neere vnto them: for the longer he ſailed, the further off he was from them: which well ſhewed their cunning and actiuitie. Thus time wearing away, and the day of our departure approching, our Generall commanded to lade with all expedition, that wee might be againe on Sea boord with our ſhip: for whileſt we were in the countrie, we were in continual danger of freeſing in: for often ſnow and haile often the water was ſo much froſen and congealed in the night, that in the morning we could ſcarce rowe our boates or Pinniſſes, eſpecially in Diers ſound, which is a calme and ſtill water: which cauſed our Generall to make the more haſte, ſo that by the 30. day of Auguſt we were all laden, and made all things readie to depart.

Gentlemen ſhould haue inhabited the Countrie.

But before I proceede any further herein, to ſhewe what fortune befell at our departure, I will turne my penne a litle to M. Captaine Fenton, and thoſe Gentlemen, which ſhould haue inhabited all the peere in thoſe countries, whoſe valiant mindes were much to bee commended, that neither feare of force, nor the cruel nipping ſtormes of the raging winter, neither the intemperature of ſo vnhealthfull a country, neither the ſauageneſſe of the people, neither the ſight and ſhewe of ſuch and ſo many ſtrange Meteores, neither the deſire to returne to their native ſoile, neither regarde of friendes neither care of poſſeſſions and inheritances: finally, not the loue of life (a thing of all other moſt ſweete) neither the terrour of dreadfull death it ſelfe, might ſeeme to be of ſufficient force, to withdrawe their proneſſe, or to reſtraine from that purpoſe, thereby to haue profited their countrey: but that with moſt willing hearts, venturous minds, ſtout ſtomacks, and ſingular manhood they were content there to haue tarried for the time, among a barbarous and vnciuill people, Infidels and miſcreants to haue made their dwelling, not terrified with the manifold and imminent dangers which they were like to runne into: and ſeeing before their eyes ſo many caſualties, whereto their life was obiect, the leaſt whereof would haue made a milkſop Therſites aſtoniſhed and vtterly diſcomfited: being I ſay thus minded and purpoſed, they deſerue ſpeciall commendation: For doubtleſſe, they had done as they intended, if lucke had not withſtood their willingneſſe, and if that fortune had not ſo frowned vpon their intents.

Deſerued praiſe & commendation.

For the Barke Dionyſe, which was loſt, had in her much of their houſe, which was prepared and ſhould haue ben builded for them, with many other implements. Alſo the Thomas of Ipſewitch, which had moſt of their prouiſion in her, came not into the Streights at al: neither did we ſee her, ſince the day we were ſeparated in the great ſnow, (of which I ſpeake before.) For theſe cauſes, hauing not their houſe, nor yet prouiſion, they were diſapointed of their pretence to tarie, and therefore laded their ſhips, and ſo came away with vs.

An houſe tricked and garniſhed with diuerſe trinkets.

But before we tooke ſhipping, we builded a litle houſe in the Counteſſe of Warwicks Iſland, and garniſhed it with many kinds of trifles, as Pinnes, Points, Laces, Glaſſes, Rombes, Babes on horſebacke and on foote, with innumerable other ſuch fanſies and toyes: thereby to allure and entice the people to ſome familiaritie againſt other yeres.

An outragious tempeſt.

Thus hauing finiſhed all things we departed the countrie, (as I ſaide before:) but becauſe the Buſſe had not lading enough in her, ſhe put into Beares ſound to take in a litle more. In the meane while, the Amirall, and the reſt, without the Sea, ſtaied for her. And that night befell ſuch an outragious tempeſt, beating on our ſhips, with ſuch vehement rigor, that anchor and cable auailed nought: for we were driuen on rockes and Iſlandes of yce, inſomuch that (had not the great goodnes of God bene miraculouſly ſhewed to vs,) we had bene caſt away euery man. This danger was more doubtful and terrible, then any that preceeded or went before: for there was not any one ſhippe, (I thinke) that eſcaped without damage. Some loſt anchor and alſo gables, ſome botes, ſome Pinniſſes: ſome anchor, gables, botes, and Pinniſſes.

This boyſtrous ſtorme ſo ſeuered vs one from another, that one ſhippe knewe not what was become become of another. The Admirall knew not where to finde the Viceadmirall or Reareadmiral, or any other ship of our companie. Our Generall being on land in Beares sound, could not come to his shippe, but was compelled to goe a boorde the Gabriel, where hee continued all the way homeward: for the boysterous blastes continued so extreamely and so long a time, that it sent vs homewarde (which was Gods fauour towardes vs) will we, nill we, in such haste, as not any one of vs were able to keepe in companie of other, but were separated. And if by chaunce any one ship did ouertake other, by swiftnesse of saile, or mette (as they often did:) yet was the rigour of the winde so hidious, that they coulde not continue companie together the space of one whole night.

Our entring the coastes dangerous.

Thus our iourney outwarde was not so pleasaunt, but our comming thither entering the coastes and countrie, by narrow streights, perilous yce, and swift tides, our times of aboade there in snowe, and stormes, and our departure from thence, the 3. of August, with daungerous blustering windes and tempests, which that night arose, was as vncomfortable: separating vs so, as we sailed, that not any of vs met together, vntil the 28. of September, which day we fell on the Englishe coastes, betweene Sylley and the landes ende, and passed the channell, vntill our arriual, in the riuer of Thames.

The report of Thomas Wiars, passenger in the Emanuel, otherwise called the Busse of Bridgewater, wherein Iames Leeche was Master, one of the shippes in the last voyage of Master. Martin Frobisher, 1578. concerning the discouerie of a great Island in their way homeward the 12. of September.

THe Busse of Bridgewater, was left in Bears sounde at Meta incognita, the second day of September behinde the Fleete, in some distresse, though much winde ryding neere the Lee shoare, and forced there to ride it out vpon the hazard of her cables and ankers, which were all aground but two. The thirde of September being fayre weather, and the wind North northwest she set sayle, and departed thence and fell with Frisland, on the 8. day of September, at 6. of the clocke at night, and then they set off from the Southwest poynt of Frisland, the winde being at East, and East southeast, but that night the winde beared Southerly, and shifted oftentimes that night: but on the tenth day in the morning, the wind at west northwest fayre weather, they steered southeast, and by south, and continued that course vntill the 12. day of September, when about 11. a clocke before noone, they descryed a lande, which was from them about fiue leagues, and the Southermost part of it was Southeast by East from them, and the Northermost next, North Northeast, or Northeast. The master accompted that Frisland, the Southeast poynt of it, was from him at that instant, when hee first descryed this newe Island, Northwest by North, 50. leagues. They account this Island to be 25. leagues long, and the longest way of it Southeast, and Northwest. The Southerne part of it is in the latitude of 57. degrees and 1. second part, or thereabout. They continued in sight of it, from the 12. day at 11. of the clocke, till the 13 day three of the clocke in the after noone, when they left it: and the last part they saw of it, bare from them, Northwest by North. There appeared two harboroughs vpon that coast: the greatest of them seuen leagues to the Northwardes of the Southermost poynt, the other but foure leagues. There was verie much yce neere the same lande, and also twentie or thirtie leagues from it, for they were not cleare of yce, till the 15. day of September, after noone. They plied their voyage homewards, and fell with the west part of Ireland about Galway, and had first sight of it on the 25. day of September.

Notes

Notes framed by M. Richard Hakluit of the middle Temple Eſquire, giuen to certaine Gentlemen that went with M. Frobiſher in his Northweſt diſcouerie, for their directions: And not vnfit to be committed to print, conſidering the ſame may ſtirre vp conſiderations of theſe and of ſuch other things, not vnmeete in ſuch newe voyages as may bee attempted hereafter.

That the firſt Seate be choſen on the ſeaſide ſo as (if it may be) you may haue your owne Naule within Bay, riuer or lake, within your ſeate ſafe from the enemie: and ſo as the enemie ſhalbe forced to lie in open rode abroade without, to be diſperſed with all windes and tempeſts that ſhall ariſe. Thus ſeated you ſhall bee leaſt ſubiect to annoy of the enemie, ſo may you by your Naule within, paſſe out to all partes of the world, and ſo may the ſhippes of England haue acceſſe to you to ſupply al wants, ſo may your commodities be caried away alſo. This ſeate is to bee choſen in temperate Climat, in ſweete ayre, where you may poſſeſſe alwayes ſweete water, wood, ſeacoles, or turfe, with fiſh, fleſh, graine, fruites, herbes and rootes, or ſo many of thoſe, as may ſuffice very neceſſitie for the life of ſuch as ſhall plant there. And for the poſſeſſing of mines of golde, of ſiluer, copper, quickſiluer, or of any ſuch precious thing, the wantes of thoſe needeful things may be ſupplied from ſome other place by ſea, &c.

Stone to make Lyme of,
Slate ſtone to tile withall or ſuch clay as maketh tyle,
Stone to wal wall, if Bricke may not bee made,
Timber for buylding eaſely to be conueied to the place,
Reede to couer houſes or ſuch like, if tile or ſlate be not,

} are to be looked for as things without which no Citie may be made nor people in ciuil ſort be kept together.

The people there to plant and to continue are eyther to liue without trafficke, or by trafficke and by trade of marchandiſe. If they ſhall liue without ſea trafficke, at the firſt they become naked by want of linen and woollen, and very miſerable by infinite wants that will otherwiſe enſue, and ſo will they be forced of themſelues to depart, or elſe eaſely they will be conſumed by the Spaniards, by the Frenchmen, or by the naturall inhabitants of the countrey, and ſo the interprice becomes reprochfull to our nation, and a let to many other good purpoſes that may be taken in hande.

And by trade of marchandiſe they can not liue, except the ſea or the lande there may peelde commoditie. And therefore you ought to haue moſt ſpeciall regard of that poynt, and ſo to plant, that the naturall commodities of the place and ſeate, may drawe to you acceſſe of Nauigation for the ſame, or that by your owne Nauigation you may carie the ſame out, and fetch home the ſupply of the wants of the ſeate.

Such nauigation ſo to bee employed, ſhall beſides the ſupply of wants, bee able to encounter with forreyne force.

And for that in the ample vent of ſuch things as are brought to you out of England by ſea, ſtandeth a matter of great conſequence, it behoueth that all humanitie and curteſie and much forbearing of reuenge to the inland people be vſed, ſo ſhall you haue firme amitie with your neyghbours, ſo ſhall you haue their inland commodities to maintaine traffike, and ſo ſhall you ware rich and ſtrong in force. Diuers and ſeuerall commodities of the inland are not in great plenty to be brought to your hands, without the ayde of ſome portable or Nauigable ryuer, or ample lake, and therefore to haue the helpe of ſuch a one is moſt requiſite: And ſo is it of effect for the diſperſing of your owne commodities in exchange into the inlands.

Nothing is more to be indeuoured with the Inland people then familiaritie. For ſo may you beſt diſcouer all the naturall commodities of their countrey, and alſo all their wants, all their ſtrengths, all their weakeneſſe, and with whome they are in warre, and with whome confederate in peace and amitie, &c. which knowen you may worke many great effects of greateſt conſequence.

And

And in your planting the consideration of the climate and of the soyle be matters that are to be respected. For if it bee so that you may let in the salt sea water, not mixed with the fresh into flats, where the sunne is of the heate that it is at Rochel, in the Bay of portingal, or in Spaine, then may you procure a man of skil, and so you haue wonne one noble commodity for the fishing, and for trade of marchandize by making of Salt.

Or if the soyle and clymate bee such as may yeelde you the Grape as good as that at Burdeux, as that in Portingale, or as that about Siuil in spaine, or that in the Ilands of the Canaries, then there resteth but a workman to put in execution to make wines, and to dresse Reisons of the sunne and other, &c.

Or if ye finde a soyle of the temperature of the South part of Spaine or Barbarie in which you finde the Oliue tree to growe: Then you may be assured of a noble marchandize for this realme, considering that our great trade of clothing doth require oyle, and weying howe deere of late it is become by the vent they haue of that commoditie in the West Indies, and if you find the wilde Oliue there it may be grafted.

Or if you can find ỳ berrie of Cochenile with which we colour Stammelles, or any Roote, Berrie, Fruite, wood or earth fitte for dying, you winne a notable thing fitte for our state of clothing. This Cochenile is naturall in the west Indies on that firme.

Or if you haue hides of beasts fit for sole Lether, &c. It wilbe a marchandize right good & the sauages there yet can not tanne Lether after our kind, yet excellently after their own maner.

Or if the soyle shal yeeld Figges, Almonds, Sugar Canes, Quinces, Orenges, Lemonds, potatos, &c. there may arise some trade & trafficke, by figs, almõds, sugar, marmelade, sucket &c.

Or if great woods be found, if they be of Cypres, chests may be made, if they be of some kinde of trees, pitch and tarre may be made, if they bee of some other then they may yeeld Rosin, Turpentine, &c. and all for trade and trafficke, and Caskes for wine and oyle may be made, likewise ships and houses, &c.

And because trafficke is a thing so material, I wish ỳ great obseruation be taken what euery soyle yeeldeth naturally, in what cõmoditie soeuer, & what it may be made to yeeld by indeuour, & to send vs notice home, ỳ therupõ we may deuise what means may be thought of to raise trades.

Now admit that we might not be suffered by the sauages to enioy any whole countrie or any more then the scope of a citie, yet if we might enioy trafficke & be assured of the same, we might be much inriched, our Naule might be increased, and a place of safetie might there bee founde, if change of religion or ciuil wars should happen in this realme, which are things of great benefit. But if we may enioy any large territorie of apt soyle, we might so vse the matter, as we should not depend vpon Spaine for oyles, sacks, resigns, orenges, lemons, spanish skins. &c. Nor vpon Fraunce for woad, bayesalt, and gascoyne wines, nor on Estland for flaxe, pitch, tarre, masts, &c. So we should not so exhaust our treasure, and so exceedingly inrich our doubtful friends, as we do, but should purchase the commodities that we want for halfe the treasure that now we do: but should by our owne industries and the benefits of the soile there cheaply purchase oyles, wines, salt, fruits, pitch, tarre, flaxe, hempe, masts, boords, fish, gold, siluer, copper, tallow hides & many commodities: besides if there be no flatts to make salt on, if you haue plentie of wood you may make it in sufficient quantitie for common vses at home there.

If you can keepe a safe hauen, although you haue not the friendship of the neere neighbours, yet you may haue trafficke by sea vpon one shore or other, vpon that firme in time to come if not present.

If you find great plentie of tymber on the shore side or vpon any portable riuer, you were best to cut downe of the same the first winter, to be seasoned for ships, barks, botes and houses.

And if neere such wood there be any riuer or brooke vpon the which a sawing mil may be placed, it would doe great seruice, and therefore consideration would be had of such place.

And if such port & chosen place of setling were in possession & after fortified by art, although by the land side our Englishmen were kept in, and might not enioy any traffick with the next neighbours, nor any vittuals: yet might they vittel themselues of fishe to serue very necessitie, and enter into amitie with the enemies of their next neighbours, and so haue vent of their marchandize of England & also haue vittel, or by meanes herevpon to be vsed to force the next neighbours to amitie. And keeping a naule at the setling place, they should finde out along the tract of the land to haue trafficke, and at diuers Ilands also. And so this first seat might in time become a stapling place of the commodities of many countreys and territories, and in time this place might become of all the prouinces round about the only gouernour. And if the place first chosen should not so wel please our people, as some other more lately found out: There might be an easie remoue, and that might be raſed, or rather kept for others of our nation to auoid an ill neighbor.

If the ſoiles adioyning to ſuch conuenient hauen and ſetling places be found marſhie and boggie, then men ſkilfull in drayning are to be carryed thither. For arte may worke woonderfull effects therein, and make the ſoile rich for many vſes.

To plant vpon an Iſland in the mouth of ſome notable riuer, or vpon the point of the land entring into the riuer, if no ſuch Iſland be, were to great end. For if ſuch riuer were nauigable or portable farre into the land, then would ariſe great hope of planting in fertill ſoiles, and traffike on the one or on the other ſide of the riuer, or on both, or the linking in amitie with one or other pettie king contending there for dominion.

Such riuers found, both barges & boats may be made for the ſafe paſſage of ſuch as ſhall pierce the ſame. Theſe to be couered with doubles of courſe linnen artificially wrought, to defend the arrow or the dart of the ſauage from the rower.

Since euery ſoile of the world by arte may be made to yeeld thinges to feed and to cloth man, bring in your returne a perfect note of the ſoile without and within, and we ſhall deuiſe if neede require to amend the ſame, and to draw it to more perfection. And if you finde not fruites in your planting place to your liking, we ſhall in fiue dayes furniſh you with ſuch kindes of plants to be carryed thither the winter after your planting, as ſhall the very next ſummer following yeeld you ſome fruit, and the yeere next following, as much as ſhall ſuffice a towne as big as Calice, and that ſhortly after ſhall be able to yeeld you great ſtore of ſtrong durable good ſider to drinke, and theſe trees ſhall be able to increaſe you within leſſe then ſeuen yeeres as many trees preſently to beare, as may ſuffice the people of diuers pariſhes, which at the firſt ſetling may ſtand you in great ſtead, if the ſoile haue not the commoditie of fruites of goodneſſe already. And becauſe you ought greedily to hunt after things that yeeld preſent reliefe, without trouble of carriage thither, therefore I make mention of theſe, thus ſpecially, to the end you may haue it ſpecially in minde.

A letter written to M. Richard Stapers by Iohn Whithall from Braſill, in Santos the 26 of Iune. 1578

WOrſhipfull ſir, and welbeloued friend M. Stapet, I haue me moſt heartely recommended vnto you, wiſhing your health euen as mine owne.

Theſe few words may be to let you vnderſtand, that, whereas I wrote vnto you not many dayes paſt, by the way of Liſbone, how that I determined to be with you very ſhortly, it is in this countrey offered me to marry, and to take my choice of three or foure: ſo that I am about three dayes ago conſorted with an Italian gentleman to marrie with his daughter within theſe foure dayes. This my friend and father in law Signior Ioſſo Dore is borne in the citie of Genua in Italie: his kinded is well knowen amongſt the Italians in London: alſo he hath but onely this childe which is his daughter, which he hath thought better beſtowed vpon me then on any Portingall in all the country, and doth giue with her in marriage to me part of an Ingenio which he hath, that doth make euery yeere a thouſand roues of ſugar. This my marriage will be worth to me two thouſand duckets, little more or leſſe. Alſo Signior Ioſſo Dore my father in law doth intend to put into my handes the whole Ingenio with ſixtie or ſeuentie ſlaues, and thereof to make me factor for vs both. I giue my liuing Lord thanks for placing me in ſuch honor and plentifulneſſe of all things.

Alſo certaine dayes paſt I talked with the prouedor and the captaine, and they haue certified me few dayes paſt, that they haue diſcouered certaine mines of ſiluer and golde, and looke euery day for maiſters to come to open the ſaid mines: which when they be opened will inrich this countrey very much. This place is called Saint Vincent, and is diſtant from you two thouſand leagues, and in twenty foure degrees of latitude on the South ſide of the equinoctiall line, and right vnder the tropike of Capricorne. A countrey it is very healthfull without ſickneſſe. Mines of golde & ſiluer newly diſcouered at S. Vincent.

Moreouer, I haue talked with the captaine and prouedor, and my father in law, who rule all this countrey, for to haue a ſhippe with goods to come from London hither, which haue promiſed me to giue me licence, ſaying that now I am free denizen of this countrey. To cauſe a ſhippe to come hither with ſuch commodities as would ſerue this countrey, would come to great gaines, God ſending in ſafetie the profit and gaines. In ſuch wares and commodities as you may ſhippe hither from London is for euery one commoditie deliuered heere three for one, and then after the ſame ſaced may be imployed in white ſugar at foure hundred reis the roue. The voyage to S. Vincent woorth three for one.

I meane also to haue a friend in London to send me a shippe of 60 or 70 tunnes, little more or lesse, with such commodities as I shall giue aduice for. This voyage is as good as any Peru voyage. If you and maister Osborne will deale here, I will deale with you before any other, because of our olde friendly friendshippe in time past. If you haue any stomacke thereto, in the name of God doe you espie out a fine barke of seuentie or eightie tunnes, and send her hither with a Portingall pilot to this port of saint Vincent in Brasill, bordering vpon the borders of Peru.

Note.

Also I herewith write vnto you in what forme and maner you shall furnish this voyage both in commodities and otherwise.

In what maner a voyage to S. Vincent with a shippe of 70 or 80 tunes to be sent.

First you must lade in the said shippe certaine Hampshire and Deuonshire karsies: for the which you must let her depart from London in October, and to touch in the Canaries, and there to make sale of the said karsies, and with the proceed thereof to lade fiftene tunnes of wines that be perfect and good, and sixe dozen of cordouan skinnes of these colours, to wit, orenge tawnie, yellow, red, and very fine blacke. I thinke you shall not finde such colours there. Therefore you must cause them that shall go vpon this voyage, to take saffron with them, to cause the same skinnes to be put into the said colours. Also I thinke you shall finde oyles there. Three hogsheads of sweet oyle for this voyage is very necessary, or a hundred and fiftie iarres of oyle.

Also in London you may lade in the said shippe these parcels of commodities or wares, as followeth:

In primis, Foure pieces of hollands of middle sort.

Item, One piece of fine holland.

Foure hundred elles of osenbriges very fine.

Foure dozen of sizzors of all sorts.

Sixteene kintals of pitch of the Canaries.

Twentie dozen of great kniues which be made in Sardies, of a lowe price.

Foure dozen of a small sort.

Sixe pieces of bayes of the lowest sort.

One very fine piece of bayes.

Foure hundred elles of Manchester cottons, most blacke, greene, some yellow.

Eight or tenne dozen of hats, the one halfe trimmed with taffeta, the other plaine, with the bands of Cypresse.

Sixe dozen of course shirts.

Three dozen of doublets of canuas.

Three dozen of doublets of stitched canuas.

One piece of fine Millan fustian barred.

Sixe dozen of locks for doores and chests.

Sixe thousand of all maner of fish hookes.

Foure dozen reames of paper.

Two dozen of glasses of diuers sorts.

Two dozen of Uenice glasses, the one halfe great, the other middle sort.

Two dozen of mantles of frize of the lowest price that can be.

Three dozen of frize gownes.

Foure hundred pound of tinne of the vse of Portingall, most small dishes and trenchers.

Foure pound of silke of all colours.

Twentie pound of spices, cloues, cinamom, pepper, and saffron.

Two kintals of white sope.

Three pound of threed, white, blacke, and blew.

Three pound of fine white threed.

Item, halfe a dozen of Northerne karsies of diuers colours.

Foure sorting cloches, blew, red, yellow, and greene.

Sixe Northerne dozens of diuers colours.

One fine blew cloth of eight pound.

One fine stamell of tenne or twelue pound.

One fine sheeps coloured cloth of twelue pound.

One fine blacke karsie.

One fine stamell karsie.

Sixe yards of blacke veluet.

Three barrels of nailes for chests.

Two barrels of nailes for shippes and barks.

Sixe

Sixe kintalles of occom.
Two dozen of veluet girdles without hangers.
Foure yards of taffata red, blacke, and blew, with ſome greene.
Two dozen of leather girdles.
Sixe dozen of axes, hatchets, and ſmall billes to cut wood.
Foure males of gittorne ſtrings.
Foure hundred or fiue hundred elles of ſome linnen cloth that is of a lowe price to make ſhirts and ſheets.
Foure tunne of pron.

Theſe be ſuch ſort of wares as I would you ſhould ſend. If you meane to deale or ſend any ſhip hither, haue you no doubt, but by the helpe of God I ſhall put all things in good order according to your contentment and profit: for my father in law with the captaine and Mouedor doe rule this countrey.

My father in law and I ſhall (God willing) make a good quantity of ſugar euery yeere, which ſuger we intend to ſhippe for London from hencefoorth, if we can get a truſtie and good friend as you to deale with vs in this matter. I pray you preſently after the receit of this my letter to write me anſwere thereof, and ſend your letter to M. Holder to Liſbone, and he will conuey it to me out of hand.

Beſides the premiſſes ſend ſixe yardes of ſkarlet, parchment lace of diuers colours.
Sixe yards of crimoſin veluet.
Sixe yards of crimoſin ſatten.
Twelue yards of fine puke blacke.

Heere in this countrey in ſtead of John Whithall they haue called me John Leitoan: ſo that they haue vſed this name ſo long time, that at this preſent there is no remedie but it muſt remaine ſo. When you write vnto me let the ſuperſcription be vnto John Leitoan.

Thus I commit you with all yours to the Holy ghoſt for euer.

If you ſend this ſhippe, I would haue you giue order that ſhe touch in no part of the coaſt of Guinie nor any other coaſt, but to come directly hither to the port of S. Vincent, and from the Canaries let her be diſpatched in my name, to wit, John Leitoan.

Alſo a dozen of ſhirts for my wearing let be ſent if you ſend the ſhippe.

Item, ſixe or eight pieces of ſayes for mantles for women, which is the moſt neceſſarie thing that can be ſent. Note.

By your aſſured friend
Iohn Whithall.

A copie of the letters of the Aduenturers for Braſill ſent to Iohn VVhithall dwelling in Santos, by the Minion of London.

Anno 1580 the 24 of October in London.

MAiſter Whithall, as vnacquainted we commend vs vnto you, &c. vnderſtanding by your friends, M. John Bird, M. Robert Walkaden, & your brother James Whithall of certaine letters that they haue receiued of yours frõ Santos, which we haue ſeene and read, wherein from time to time you doe require, and deſire them to ſend a good ſhippe to Santos, with ſuch wares and commodities as you did write for, whereby you did not onely promiſe that they ſhould haue good intertainment, but alſo ſhould ſell the ſaid commodities to make three of one outward at the leaſt in euery thing, and that for to relade their ſhippe backe, they ſhould haue of the beſt, fineſt, and whiteſt ſugers 32 pound of our weight for a ducket at the moſt. The premiſes conſidered, with the great credit that they and we do giue to your writing and promiſe, haue cauſed vs, whoſe names be heerunder written, to ioyne our ſelues in company together, and to be at great charges purpoſely to ſend this good ſhippe the Minion of London, not onely with ſuch merchandizes as you wrote for, but alſo with as many other things as we thought might any wayes pleaſure you, or profit the countrey. And we craue of you, that we and our factours may haue ſo much credit of you, as we haue in you and of your letters, which is to beleue vs that we haue taken this voyage vpon vs, with no other minde or purpoſe then to deale faithfully and truely in the trade by ſea and land, ſo as you ſhall not only haue cauſe to reioyce, and deſerue thanks for our comming, but alſo you will procure the magiſtrates there to be bound, as they vſe in Galizia, that we may be preſerued and defended from all repressals and imbargements of princes or subiects for any causes or matters whatsoeuer, wherby we may be incouraged by them, giuing vs this security of good intertainement, to continue the trade peerely hencefoorth: and for our parts we promise vpon our credits and fidelities, to commit no outrage at the sea nor land, nor suffer any to be done in our company that we may let, but rather to defend and protect all other peaceable merchantes as we are with theyr shippes and goodes.

And to the end that you and others shall know that we meane as we say, we haue giuen order to our factours to giue you good hostages for your assurance of our good fidelities: and further we haue sent a testimoniall of our owne true meaning in writing vnder the seales of this honourable citie of London, which we will not discredit by our behauiours for all the treasure that you haue, and so we haue written to your magistrates of your port, and others in Spanish, the copy wherof we send you heerwith closed in English. And if the time should fall out so contrary to our expectations, that there should not be fine white sugar sufficient to lade our said shippe in due time at Santos, then we pray you direct our factours where they may go with the shippe in saferie to supply their want, and helpe them to a good sure pilot for that purpose, and write your letters to your friends where the best sugar is made in theyr fauors, and helpe our factours to haue a testimoniall from Santos, that they and you traded together friendly, and so departed in good and perfect amity, and shew them that the iust cause of our comming is to trade as merchants peaceably, and not as pirats to commit any offence to one or other.

Also we pray you if there be any store of warr, or salt peeter, whereby the price there may yeeld vs as much profit as the white sugars at a ducket the roue, or any other commodity of like profit, then to procure that we may lade it without danger of law, be it eure of golde or siluer or whatsoeuer els.

We haue sent you copper cauldrons for your engenios with iron, and all other necessaries for your purpose, and artificers to set the same: and as we haue at your request beene at great charges in sending these men, so we pray you let vs haue lawfull fauor in like courtesie to fauor all our causes. And if any of our mariners or passengers should in any respect of displeasure against their company, or in hope of preferment of mariage or otherwise, would procure to tary and dwell there, and leaue his charge & office, that then you will be a meane to the iustice that such fugitiues should be sent aboord the shippe as prisoners: for as you know, without our men we can not bring home our shipppe.

We haue giuen order to our factours to vse your counsell and helpe in theyr affayres, and to gratifie you for the same as to your courtesie and faithfull friendshippe shall appertaine to your good liking: and in the meane time for a token of our good willes towards you, we haue sent you a field bed of walnut tree, with the canopy, valens, curtaines, and gilt knops. And if there be any commodity els that may pleasure you or your friends, we haue giuen order that they shall haue the refusing of it before any other, giuing for it as it is worth.

And thus to conclude, promising to performe all the foresayd things on our parts in euery condition, we commit you to God, who euer preserue you with all his blessings.

Your louing friends { Christopher Hodsdon. / Anthonie Garrard. / Thomas Bramlie. / Iohn Bird. / William Elkin.

Certaine notes of the voyage to Brasill with the Minion of London aforesaid, in the yeere 1580, written by Thomas Grigges Purser of the said shippe.

M. Christoph. Hare was captaine in this voyage.

November.

December.

THe third day of November in the yeere abouesaid we departed in the Minion of London from Harwich, from which time no great thing worth the knowledge or regard of others happened vntill the 22 of December the next moneth, which day for our owne learning & vse we obserued the setting of the sunne, which was West south west, we then being vnder the line equinoctiall, where we found the aire very temperate, and the wind for the most part Southeast & East southeast.

The same day we also obserued the rising of the moone, being one day after the full, which rose at East northeast.

The

The first land that we fell with vpon the coast of Brasill was the Island of S. Sebastian, where we arriued the 14 day of January, in the yeere 1581. January.

The 16 day Thomas Babington, and others in our pinnesse, went a shoare to Guaybea, where they met with John Whithall his father and mother in law, who hauing receiued letters from thence to be deliuered at Santos, came aboord, and then we weyed and set saile, and the 28 day we arriued at the Island of Santa Catelina, neere the entrance of Santos.

Our course from S. Sebastians was South west and by West, and betwixt the South west and by West, and West south west.

This Island of Catelina seemeth at the first to be a part of the Island of Girybia. We ankered at nine fathome blacke ose ground.

Vpon the Island there growe many Palmito trees, but no fresh water is there to be found.

The third day of Februarie we arriued before the towne of Santos, and were there well receiued and intertained of the captaine, the kings officers, and all the people. February.

The fourth day we tooke into our shippe a liefe aliue, which serued for the victualling of the shippe, and the refreshing of our men, and to make vs the merrier at Shroouetide.

The eight day we deliuered to M. John Whithall a bedsted with the appurtenances, which were sent to him from our merchants of London.

The 18 day the captaine of Santos came aboord our ship, by whom we had knowledge of foure great French shippes of warre, that had bene at the riuer Genero, which there tooke three canoas, but were driuen from thence by theyr castles & forts, and were looked for heere at Santos. Whereupon the captaine requested vs to lend them some armor and artillery, and we lent them twenty caliuers, and two barrels of powder.

The 19 day our skiffe which we had sent to Alkatrarses, and had beene away sixe dayes, came againe, and brought good store of great and good fish, and tolde vs that there was good store of fish to be taken there by the hooke, and as much wood as we would haue of the Palmito tree.

The 20 day at night, Nicholas Gale, one of our company, fell ouer our shippes sides, and was drowned in the port of Santos before the towne, where our shippe rode at anker.

The 22 day two of the canoas which the Frenchmen tooke in the riuer of Genero, returned to Santos, and reported that the foure French shippes were past to the Southwards as they thought by the straights of Magellan, and so into the South sea.

The 23 day the aforesaid Nicholas Gale, who fell ouerboord two dayes before, was founde againe, and taken vp three miles from our shippe, & our company went to his buriall in the church at Santos.

This day the captaine and iustices of Santos wished vs to tarry in theyr road till the last of Aprill, for they had sent a barke of Santos to Bayea at the kings charges, to know whether we should haue trade there or no, and this barke could not returne before that time.

About this time there arriued at Fernanbucke a shippe from Portingall, which brought newes that the Islands, Indies, & Portingall it selfe was molested and troubled by the Spanyards, and that the Portingalles had both English & Frenchmen to Lisbone to defend them against Spaine.

The 25 day we sent two of our men, namely Thomas Michaell & Simon Thorne to Bayea in a barke that went thither from Santos.

The 22 day of Aprill our maister and Thomas Babington hauing some talke and conference with the Padrez of Santos, they (our men being ready to go to the riuer Genero) tolde them that they were sorry for our banishment from the church, which was by the Ministrador written from Rio Genero, that forasmuch as this 20 yeres or more the English nation had denied the church of Rome and her proceedings, therefore the Ministrador commanded that none of vs should come to theyr church: the Padrez willed vs herein to haue patience, and to take it in good part, and promised to stand our friends in theyr word & writing, both to the Ministrador and to the bishop at Bayea, and further requested all our English company to haue no ill opinion of them. Aprill.

The 28 of Aprill we laded sugars into our shippe.

The 21 of May we tooke in fresh victualles from Santos. May.

The 10 day of June we gratified one Iohn Thorne, dwelling in Santos, with some of our English victualles, and intertained him in good sort in our shippe, and this day we were promised to haue a pilot at Santos to carry vs to Bayea. June.

The 11 day we went to fish, to make prouision for our shippe & men, and from that time till the eighteenth day we set water, and cut wood for our fire, and trimmed our shippe of the barnes and leakes which the wormes had made in her while we ridde at the Island of S. Sebastians, and in the meane time wee departed from before the towne of Santos. Our Maister sent his Leake in the Pinnes made by wormes.

skiffe from the barre of Santos, thinking to haue brought Thomas Babington and William Euet, with the pilot, which we had tarryed for three dayes, and as the skiffe was going William Euet being by the riuers side, called to our pinnesse, & sent a letter to our maister, which Thomas Babington had written, wherein was no newes, but that the Ministrador was arriued at Santos from the riuer Genero, and would speake with our maister, but he willed that whatsoeuer Thomas Babington did write, no credit should be giuen to it. And further wished vs presently to depart for S. Sebastians, and there to dispatch our businesse, and then to send backe for Babington and himselfe to Guaybea, where he (if he were well) would giue his attendance & come aboord.

§ Whose name was Christopher Hare.

As we rid two leagues a sea boord the barre of Santos, we broke a cable in the open sea, which hapned the 15 day of this moneth.

We arriued at S. Sebastians the 15 day, and there shifted our balast, and had in stones, and halled our shippe a ground to stoppe our leaks, and carryed our caske a shoare to be hooped for water, which in deed might better haue beene done in Santos, before the Ministrador came thither: yet we finished all things pertaining to our shippe, by the 22 of this moneth, at S. Sebastians.

Julie. The first day of July Thomas Babington came aboord with William Euet, in our pinnesse, and the rest of our men that went for them: but there was no pilot brought according to promise, to carry vs to Bayea.

The things that we obserued and noted in the time of our being at Santos, were these.

All such wares and merchandizes as owe no custome in Brasill, they vse is, to set a price vpon the same, how it shalbe solde: which is done by the magistrates of the towne, according to the ordinances of their king.

But for all such merchandizes as do owe custome there, the merchants are to sell them according as they may, to the greatest profit and aduantage that they can.

Concerning the prouince of Peru, we learned that one part of it by land and water is but twelue dayes iourney from the towne of Santos, and from thence it may be about foure or fiue dayes iourney by water to the maine riuer of Plate.

From the head of the riuer of Plate, and from their chiefe townes there, they do trade & traffike by land into Peru by waggons, and horses or mules.

The said riuer of Plate is so full of sands and dangers, and the freth so fierce sometimes, that no shipping dares to deale with it, small barks to their knowledge may go vp it, and not els.

The Portingalles heere can not be suffered to vse their mines of treasure in these parts, vpon paine of death, the contrary being commanded by the king, and the Viceroy, who is as their king in place of authority.

About 20 leagues from Santos, there is a certaine kinde of wilde Sauages, lying in the mountaines, which are in friendshippe with the Portingalles, and they haue continuall warres with certaine other Sauages that dwell about the borders of Peru, which is distant from Santos about 40 or 50 leagues. Those Sauages of Peru haue store of golde and siluer, but they know not the vse of it.

Looke what Sauages of their enemies they take, they sell them to the Portingals for knines, combes, axes or hatchets, and other trifles: they will sell one for a penny knife to a Portingall, and after two yeeres they are worth twenty or thirty duckets to a Portingall.

This people haue also continuall warres with the Spanyards: and this was tolde vs by one of those Sauages, which hath dwelt among the Portingalles these seuen yeeres, with his maister called Senior Manoel Veloso. And this fellow we would willingly haue come with vs for England.

There are certaine rocks that lie off betwene Alcatrarses and S. Sebastians, about two leagues, which are to be taken heed of, which a farre off in fayre weather shew like the sailes of shippes.

There are other rocks that lie off S. Catelina also fiue leagues to the East and by South into the sea off the Island.

At our comming vp to Santos we found foure fathome & a halfe water in the shallowest place, and the like we found within a league after we were departed from S. Catelina, little more or lesse, but after you haue runne in the depth of foure fathome & a halfe, about a mile or lesse, then you shall haue it deeper againe more and more.

Before the towne of Santos we rode in eight and tenne fathome water.

Instructions

The famous voyage of Sir Francis Drake into the South Sea, and there hence about the whole Globe of the Earth, begun in the yeere of our Lord, 1577.

THe 15. day of November, in the yeere of our Lord, 1577. M. Francis Drake, with a fleete of fiue ships and barkes, and to the number of 164. men, Gentlemen and Sailers, departed Plimmouth, giuing out his pretended voyage for Alexandria: but the winde falling contrary, he was forced the next morning to put into Falmouth hauen in Cornewall, where such and so terrible a tempest tooke vs, as few men haue seene the like, and was in deed so vehement, that all our ships were like to haue gone to wracke, but it pleased God to preserue vs from that extremitie and to afflict vs only for that present with these two particulars: The masse of our Admiral which was the Pellican, was cut ouer boord for the safegard of the ship, and the Marygold was driuen a shore, & some what bruised, for the repairing of which damages we returned againe to Plimmouth, and hauing recouered those harmes, and brought the ships againe to good state, we set forth the second time from Plimmouth, and set saile the 13. day of December following.

The 25. day of the same moneth we fell with the Cape Cantine, vpon the coast of Barbarie, and coasting along, the 27. day we found an Iland called Magador, lying one mile distant from the maine, betweene which Iland and the maine, we found a very good and safe harbour for our ships to ride in, as also very good entrance, and void of any danger. The Isle of Magador on the coast of Barbarie.

On this Iland our Generall erected a pinnase, whereof he brought out of England with him foure already framed. While these things were in doing, there came to the waters side some of the inhabitaunts of the countrey, shewing foorth their flags of truce, which being seene of our Generall, he sent his ships boate to the shore, to know what they would: they being willing to come aboord, our men left there one man of our companie for a pledge, and brought two of theirs aboord our shippe, which by signes shewed our Generall, that the next day they would bring some prouision, as Sheepe, Capons and Hennes and such like, whereupon our Generall bestowed amongst them some linnen cloth and shoes, and a taueling, which they very ioyfully receiued, and departed for that time.

The next morning they failed not to come againe to the waters side, and our Generall againe setting out our boate, one of our men leaping ouer rashly a shore, and offering friendly to imbrace them, they set violent hands on him, offering a dagger to his throte if hee had made any resistance, and so laying him on a horse, caried him away, so that a man cannot bee too circumspect and warie of himselfe among such miscreants.

Our pinnase being finished, we departed from this place the thirtieth and last day of December, and coasting along the shore, we did descrie, not contrary to our expectation, certaine Canters which were Spanish fishermen, to whom we gaue chase and tooke 3. of them, and proceeding further we met with 3. Caruels and tooke them also.

The 17. day of January we arriued at Cape Blanko, where we found a ship riding at anker, within the Cape, and but two simple Mariners in her, which ship we tooke and caried her further into the harbour where we remained 4. dayes, and in that space our Generall mustered, and trayned his men on land in warlike maner, to make them fit for all occasions. Januarie.

In this place we tooke of the Fishermen such necessaries as wee wanted, and they could yeld vs, and leauing here one of our litle barkes called the Benedict, wee tooke with vs one of theirs which they called Canters, being of the burden of 40. tunnes or thereabouts.

All these things being finished, we departed this harbour the 22. of Januarie, carying along with vs one of the Portingall Caruels which was bound to the Ilands of Cape de Verde for sale, whereof good store is made in one of those Ilands.

The master or Pilot of that Caruell, did aduertise our Generall that vpon one of those Ilands called Mayo, there was great store of dried Cabaritas, which a few inhabitaunts there dwelling, did priuely make readie for such of the kings ships as did there touch, being bound for his countrey of Brasile or elsewhere. We fell with this Iland the seuen and twentieth of Januarie, but the inhabitants would in no case traffique with vs, being thereof forbidden by the kings Edict: yet the next day our Generall sent to view the Iland, and the likelihoods that might be there of prouision of victuals, about three score & two men vnder the conduct & gouernment of M. Winter and master Doughtie, and marching towards the chiefe place of habitation in this Iland (as by the Portingall wee were informed) hauing trauelled to the mountains the space of three miles, and arriuing there somewhat before the day breake, wee arrested our selues to see day The Isle of Mayo.

before vs, which appearing, we found the inhabitaunts to bee fled: but the place by reason that it was manured, we found to bee more fruitfull then the other part, especially the valleys among the hils.

Ripe grapes in Winter.

Here we gaue our selues a little refreshing, as by very ripe and sweete grapes, which the fruitfulnesse of the earth at that season of the yeere yelded vs: and that season being with vs the depth of Winter, it may seeme straunge that those fruites were then there growing: but the reason thereof is this, because they being betweene the Tropike and the Equinoctiall, the Sunne passeth twise in the yeere through their Zenith ouer their heads, by meanes whereof they haue two Sunnes, and being so neere the heate of the line, they neuer lose the heate of the Sunne so much, but the fruites haue their increase and continuance in the midst of Winter. The Iland is wonderfully stored with goates and wilde hennes, and it hath salt also without labour, saue onely that the people gather it into heapes, which continually in great quantitie is increased vpon the sands by the flowing of the sea, and the receiuing heate of the Sunne kerning the same, so that of the increase thereof they keepe a continuall traffique with their neighbours.

The description of the tree that beareth Cocos.

Amongst other things we found here a kind of fruit called Cocos, which because it is not commonly knowen with vs in England, I thought good to make some description of it.

The tree beareth no leaues nor branches, but at the very top the fruit groweth in clusters, hard at the top of the stemme of the tree, as big euery seuerall fruite as a mans head: but hauing taken off the vttermost barke, which you shall find to bee very full of strings or sinowes, as I may terme them, you shall come to a hard shell which may hold of quantitie in liquor a pint commonly, or some a quart, and some lesse: within that shell of the thicknesse of halfe an inch good, you shall haue a kind of hard substance and very white, no lesse good and sweete then almonds: within that againe a certaine cleere liquor, which being drunke, you shall not onely find it very delicate and sweete, but most comfortable and cordiall.

*Or goates.

After wee had satisfied our selues with some of these fruites, wee marched further into the Iland, and sawe great store of * Cabaritas aliue, which were so chased by the inhabitaunts, that we could doe no good towards our prouision, but they had laied out as it were to stop our mouths withall certayne old dried Cabaritas, which being but fil, and small and few, wee made no account of.

The Isle of S. Iago.

Being returned to our ships, our Generall departed hence the 31. of this moneth, and sayled by the Iland of S. Iago, but farre inough from the danger of the inhabitaunts, who shot and discharged at vs three pieces, but they all fell short of vs and did vs no harme. The Iland is fayre and large, and as it seemeth rich and fruitfull, and inhabited by the Portingals, but the mountains and high places of the Iland, are sayd to be possessed by the Moores, who hauing bene slaues to the Portingals, to ease themselues, made escape to the desart places of the Iland, where they abide with great strength.

Being before this Iland, we espied two ships vnder sayle, to the one of which we gaue chase, and in the end boorded her with a ship boate without resistance, which we found to be a good prize, and yelded vnto vs good store of wine, which prize our Generall committed to the custodie of M. Doughtie, and retayning the Pilot, sent the rest away with his pinnase, giuing them a Butt of wine and some victuals, and their wearing clothes, and so they departed.

A prize, and a Portingall Pilot taken.

The Isle of Fogo.

The same night we came with the Iland called by the Portingals, Ila del fogo, that is, the burning Iland: in the Northside whereof is a consuming fire, the matter is sayd to bee of Sulphure, but notwithstanding it is like to bee a commodious Iland, because the Portingals haue built, and doe inhabite there.

Vpon the Southside thereof lieth a most pleasaunt and sweete Iland, the trees whereof are alwayes greene and faire to looke vpon, in respect whereof they call it Ila del Braua, that is, the braue Iland. From the banks thereof into the sea doth run in many places reasonable streames of fresh waters easie to be come by, but there was no conuenient road for our ships: for such was the depth, that no ground could be had for ankering, and it is reported, that ground was neuer found in that place, so that the tops of Fogo burne not so high in the ayre, but the roots of Braua are quenched as low in the sea.

Being departed from these Ilands, we drew towards the line, where wee were becalmed the space of 3. weekes, but yet subiect to diuers great stormes, terrible lightenings and much thunder: but with this miserie we had the commoditie of great store of fish, as Dolphin, Bonitas, and flying fishes, whereof some fell into our shippes, where hence they could not rise againe for want of moisture, for when their wings are drie, they cannot flie.

From the first day of our departure from the Ilands of Cape Verde, wee sayled 54. dayes with-without sight of land, and the first land that we fell with was the coast of Brasil, which we sawe the 17. of Aprill in the height of 33. degrees towards the pole Antarctike, and being discouered at sea by the inhabitaunts of the countrey, they made vpon the coast great fires for a sacrifice (as we learned) to the deuils, about which they vse conjurations, making heapes of sands and other ceremonies, that when any ship shall goe about to stay vpon their coast, not onely sands may bee gathered together in shoales in euery place, but also that stormes and tempests may arise, to the casting away of ships and men, whereof (as it is reported) there haue bene diuers experiments. Aprill. 33. degrees.

The seuenth day in a mightie great storme both of lightening, rayne and thunder, wee lost the Canter which wee called the Christopher: but the eleuenth day after, by our Generals great care in dispersing his ships, we found her agayne, and the place where we met our Generall called the Cape of Ioie, where euery ship tooke in some water. Here wee found a good temperature and sweete aire, a very faire and pleasaunt countrey with an exceeding fruitfull soile, where were great store of large and mightie Deere, but we came not to the sight of any people: but trauelling further into the countrey, we perceiued the footing of people in the clay ground, shewing that they were men of great stature. Being returned to our shippes we wayed anker, and came somewhat further and harboured our selues betweene a rocke and the maine, where by meanes of the rocke that brake the force of the sea, we rid very safe, and vpon this rocke wee killed for our prouision certaine sea wolues, commonly called with vs Seales. The Cape of Ioy.

From hence we went our course to six and thirtie degrees, and entered the great riuer of Plate, and ranne into 54. and 53. fadomes and a halfe of fresh water, where we filled our water by the ships side: but our Generall finding here no good harborough as he thought her should, bare out againe to sea the 27. of Aprill, and in bearing out we lost sight of our Flie boate wherein master Doughtie was, but wee sayling along, found a fayre and reasonable good Baie wherein were many and the same profitable Islands, one whereof had so many Seales as would at the least haue laden all our ships, and the rest of the Islands are as it were ladē with fowles which is wonderfull to see, and they of diuers sortes. It is a place very plentifull of victuals, and hath in it no want of fresh water. Their entrance into the riuer of Plate. Abundance of Seales.

Our Generall after certaine dayes of his abode in this place, being on shore in an Island, the people of the countrey shewed themselues vnto him, leaping and dauncing, and entered into traffique with him, but they would not receiue any thing at any mans hands, but the same must bee cast vpon the ground. They are of cleane, comely, and strong bodies, swift on foote, and seeme to be very active.

The eighteenth day of May our Generall thought it needfull to haue a care of such shippes as were absent, and therefore indeuouring to seeke the Flie boate wherein master Doughtie was, he shifted her againe the next day: and whereas certaine of our ships were sent to discouer the coast and to search an harbour, the Marygold and the Canter being imployed in that businesse, came into vs and gaue vs vnderstanding of a safe harbour that they had found, wherewith all our ships here and entred it, where we watered and made new prouision of victuals, as by seales, whereof we slew to the number of 200. in the space of an hower. May.

Here our Generall in the Admirall rid close aboord the Flie boate, and tooke out of her all the prouision of victuals and what els was in her, and hauing her to the land, set fire to her, and burnt her to saue the iron worke, which being a doing, there came downe of the countrey certayne of the people naked, sauing onely about their waste the skinne of some beast with the furre side on, and something also wreathed on their heads: their faces were painted with diuers colours, and some of them had on their heads the similitude of hornes, euery man his bowe which was an ell in length, and a couple of arrowes. They were very agill people and quicke to deliuer, and seemed not to be ignorant in the feates of warres, as by their order of ranging a few men might appeare. These people would not of a long time receiue any thing at our hands, yet at length our Generall being a shore and they dauncing after their accustomed maner about him, and hee once turning his backe towards them, one leapt suddenly to him, and tooke his cap with his gold band off his head, and ran a little distance from him and shared it with his fellow, the cap to the one, and the band to the other. The Flie boat cast off and burnt. The people of the countrey.

Hauing dispatched all our businesse in this place, wee departed and set sayle, and immediately vpon our setting foorth we lost our Canter which was absent three or foure dayes, but when our Generall had her agayne, he tooke out the necessaries, and so gaue her ouer neere to the Cape of Good hope. Cape Good hope.

The next day after being the twentieth of June, wee harboured our selues agayne in a very June.

Port S. Iulian. good harborough, called by Magellan Port S. Iulian, where wee found a gibbet standing vpon the maine, which we supposed to be the place where Magellan did execution vpon some of his disobedient and rebellious company.

The two and twentieth day our Generall went a shore to the maine, and in his company, Iohn Thomas and Robert Winterhie, Oliuer the master gunner, Iohn Brewer, Thomas Hood, and Thomas Drake, and entring on land, they presently met with two or three of the country people, and Robert Winterhie hauing in his hands a bow and arrowes, went about to make a shoot of pleasure, and in his draught his bow string brake, which the rude Sauages taking as a token of warre, began to bend the force of their bowes against our company, and driue them to their shifts very narowly.

In this port our Generall began to enquire diligently of the actions of M. Thomas Doughtie, and found them not to be such as he looked for, but tending rather to contention or mutinie, or some other disorder, whereby (without redresse) the successe of the voyage might greatly haue bene hazarded: whereupon the companie was called together and made acquainted with the particulars of the cause, which were found partly by master Doughties owne confession, and partly by the euidence of the fact to be true: which when our Generall saw, although his priuate affection to M. Doughtie (as hee then in the presence of vs all sacredly protested) was great, yet the care hee had of the state of the voyage, of the expectation of her maiestie, and of the honour of his country did more touch him, (as in deed it ought) then the priuate respect of one man, so that the cause being throughly heard, and all things done in good order as neere as might be to the course of our lawes in England, it was concluded that M. Doughtie should receiue punishment according to the qualitie of the offence: and he seeing no remedie but patience for himselfe, desired before his death to receiue the communion, which hee did at the hands of M. Fletcher our Minister, and our Generall himselfe accompanied him in that holy action: which being done, and the place of execution made readie, he hauing embraced our Generall and taken his leaue of all the companie, with prayer for the Queens maiestie and our realme, in quiet sort laied his head to the blocke, where he ended his life. This being done, our Generall made diuers speaches to the whole company perswading vs to vnitie, obedience, loue, and regard of our voyage, and for the better confirmation thereof, willed euery man the next Sunday following to prepare himselfe to receiue the communion as Christian brethren and friends ought to do, which was done in very reuerent sort, and so with good contentment euery man went about his busines.

M. Thomas Doughtie executed.

August. The 17. day of August we departed the port of S. Iulian, & the 20. day we fell with the streight or freat of Magellan going into the Southsea, at the Cape or headland whereof, we found the bodie of a dead man, whose flesh was cleane consumed.

The streight of Magellan.

The 21. day we entred the streights which we found to haue many turnings, and as it were shuttings vp, as if there were no passage at all, by meanes whereof we had the wind often against vs, so that some of the fleete recouering a Cape or point of land, others should be forced to turne backe againe, and to come to an anker where they could.

In this streight there be many faire harbors, with store of fresh water, but yet they lacke their best commoditie: for the water is there of such depth, that no man shall find ground to anker in, except it be in some narow riuer or corner, or between some rocks, so that if any extreme blasts or contrary winds doe come (whereunto the place is much subiect) it casteth with it no small danger.

The land on both sides is very huge and mountanous, the lower mountains whereof although they be monstrous and wonderfull to looke vpon for their height, yet there are others which in height exceed them in a strange manner reaching themselues aboue their fellowes so high, that betweene them did appeare three regions of cloudes.

These mountaines are couered with snow: at both the Southerly and Easterly parts of the streight there are Islands, among which the sea hath his intraught into the streights, euen as it hath in the maine entrance of the freat.

This streight is extreme cold, with frost and snow continually, the trees seeme to stoope with the burden of the weather, and yet are greene continually, and many good and sweete herbes doe very fruitfully grow and increase vnder them.

The breadth of the streight is in some place a league, in some other places 2. leagues, and three leagues, and in some other 4. leagues, but the narowest place hath a league ouer.

Abundance of foule in the streight. The 24. of August we arriued at an Island in the streights, where we found great store of foule which could not flie, of the bignesse of geese, whereof we killed in lesse then one day 3000. and victualled our selues throughly therewith.

September. The 6. day of September we entred the South sea at the Cape or head shore.

The

The seuenth day wee were driuen by a great storme from entering into the South sea two hundred leagues and odde in longitude, and one degree to the Southward of the streight, in which height and so many leagues to the Westward, the fifteenth day of September fell out the Eclipse of the Moone at the houre of six of the clocke at night, but neither did the Ecliptical conflict of the Moone impaire our state, nor her clearing againe amend vs a whit, but the accustomed Eclipse of the seas continued in his force, wee being darkened more then the Moone seuen fold.

From the Baie (which we called the Baie of seuering of friends) wee were driuen backe to the Southward of the streights in 55. degrees and a terce: in which height wee came to an anker among the Islands, hauing there fresh and very good water, with herbes of singuler vertue. Not farre from hence we entred another Baie, where we found people both men and women in their Canoas, naked, and ranging from one Island to another to seeke their meate, who entred traffike with vs for such things as they had. 572. leagues. 55. degrees and a terce of Southerly latitude

Wee returning hence Northward againe, found the 3. of October three Islands, in one of which was such plentie of birdes as is scant credible in report. Wee had by proofe in this place, as also at the furthermost Islands, that the sunne being at the least 8. degrees from the Tropike of Capricorne, the night was but two howers long, and scant that, so that we perceiued that when the sunne should be in the Tropike, there would be no night at all. October.

The 8. day of October we lost sight of one of our Consorts wherein M. Winter was, who as then we supposed was put by a storme into the streights againe, which at our returne home wee found to be true, and he not perished as some of our company feared. M. Winter separated and returned.

Thus being come into the height of the streights againe, we ran, supposing the coast of Peru to lie as the generall Maps haue described it, namely Northwest, which we found to lie and trend to the Northeast and Eastwards, whereby it appeareth that this part of Peru hath not bene truly hitherto discouered, or at the least not truly reported for the space of 12. degrees at the least, be it wone either of purpose to deceiue, or of ignorant coniecture.

We continuing our course, fell the 29. of Nouember, with an Island called la Moucha, where we cast anker, and our Generall hoysing out our boate, went with ten of our company to shore, where wee found people, whom the cruell and extreme dealings of the Spaniards haue forced by their owne safetie and libertie to flee from the maine, and to fortifie themselues in this Island. We being on land, the people came downe to vs to the water side with shew of great curtesie, bringing to vs potatoes, rootes, and two very fat sheepe, which our Generall receiued and gaue them other things for them, and had promise to haue water there: but the next day repayring againe to the shore, and sending two men a land with barrels to fill water, the people taking them by Spaniards (to whom they vse to shew no fauour if they take them) laied violent handes on them, and as we thinke slew them. November. The Isle la Moucha in 38 deg. of latitude

Our Generall seeing this, staied here no longer, but waied anker, and set saile towards the coast of Chile, and drawing towards it we met neere to the shore an Indian in a Canoa, who thinking vs to haue bene Spaniards, came to vs and told vs, that at a place called S. Iago, there was a great Spanish ship laden from the kingdome of Peru, for which good newes our Generall gaue him diuers trifles, whereof he was glad, and went along with vs and brought vs to the place which is called the port of Valparizo. S. Iago. The port of Valparizo.

When we came thither, we found in deed the ship riding at anker, hauing in her eight Spaniards and three Negroes, who thinking vs to haue bene Spaniards and their friends, welcommed vs with a drumme, and made ready a Buttizo of wine of Chile to drinke to vs: but as soone as we were entered, one of our company called Thomas Moone began to lay about him, and strake one of the Spaniards, and sayd vnto him, Abaxo Perro, that is in English, goe downe dog. One of these Spaniards seeing persons of that qualitie in those seas, all to crossed, and blessed himselfe: but to be short we stowed them vnder hatches all saue one Spaniard, who suddenly and desperately lept ouer boord into the sea, and swamme a shore to the towne of S. Iago, to giue them warning of our arriuall. Wine of Chile

They of the towne being not aboue 9. housholds, presently fled away and abandoned the towne. Our Generall manned his boate, and the Spanish ships boate, and went to the Towne, and being come to it, we rifled it, and came to a small chappell which we entered, and found therein a siluer chalice, two cruets, and one altar cloth, the spoyle whereof our Generall gaue to M. Fletcher his minister.

We found also in this towne a warehouse stored with wine of Chile, & many boords of Cedar wood, all which wine we brought away with vs, and certaine of the boords to burne for fire wood:

and so being come aboord, we departed the hauen, hauing first set all the Spaniards on land, sauing one Iohn Grego a Greeke borne, whom our General caried with him for his Pilot to bring him into the hauen of Lima.

John Grego a Pilot taken.

When we were at sea, our Generall rifled the ship, and found in her good store of the wine of Chile, and 25000. pezoes of very pure and fine gold of Baldiuia, amounting in value to 37000. duckets of Spanish money and aboue. So going on our course, we arriued next at a place called Coquimbo, where our Generall sent 14. of his men on land to fetch water: but they were espied by the Spaniards who came with 300. horsemen and 200. footemen, and slew one of our men with a piece, the rest came aboord in safetie, and the Spaniards departed: wee went on shore againe, and buried our man, and the Spaniards came downe againe with a flag of truce, but we set sayle and would not trust them.

Coquimbo.

Tarapaza.

From hence we went to a certaine port called Tarapaza, where being landed, wee found by the sea side a Spaniard lying a sleepe, and had lying by him 13. barres of siluer, which waighed 4000. duckets Spanish, we tooke the siluer and left the man.

Arica.

Here hence we sailed to a place called Arica, and being entred the porte, we found there three small barkes which we rifled, and found in one of them 57. wedges of siluer, each of them waighing about 20. pound waight, and euery of these wedges were of the fashion and bignesse of a brickbat. In all these 3. barkes we found not one person: for they mistrusting no strangers, were all gone a land to the Towne, which consisteth of about twentie houses, which wee would haue ransacked if our company had bene better and more in number. But our Generall contented with the spoile of the ships, left the Towne and put off againe to sea and set sayle for Lima, and by the way met with a small barke, which he boorded, and found in her good store of linnen cloth, whereof taking some quantitie, he let her goe.

Februarp. Lima.

To Lima, we came the 13. day of Februarp, and being entred the hauen, we found there about twelue sayle of ships lying fast moored at an anker, hauing all their sayles caried on shore, for the masters and merchaunts were here most secure, hauing neuer bene assaulted by enemies, and at this time feared the approch of none such as wee were. Our Generall rifled these shippes, and found in one of them a chest full of roials of plate, and good store of silkes & linnen cloth, and tooke the chest into his owne ship, and good store of the silkes and linnen. In which ship hee had newes of another ship called the Cacafuego which was gone towards Paita, and that the same ship was laden with treasure, whereupon we staied no longer here, but cutting all the cables of the ships in the hauen we let them driue whither they would, either to sea or to the shore, and with all speed we followed the Cacafuego toward Paita, thinking there to haue found her, but before wee arriued there, she was gone from thence towards Panama, whom our Generall still pursued, and by the way met with a barke laden with ropes and tackle for ships, which he boorded and searched, and found in her 80. li. waight of gold, and a crucifixe of gold with goodly great Emeraudes set in it which he tooke, and some of the corbage also for his owne ship.

From hence we departed still following the Cacafuego, and our Generall promised our company that whosoeuer could first descrie her, should haue his chaine of gold for his good newes. It fortuned that Iohn Drake going vp into the top, descried her about three of the clocke, and about fiue of the clocke we came to her and boorded her, and shotte at her three peeces of ordinaunce, and strake downe her Millen, and being entered, we found in her great riches, as iewels and pretious stones, thirteene chestes full of roials of plate, foure score pound waight of gold, and fiue and twentie tunne of siluer. The place where we tooke this prize, was called Cape Francisco, about 150. leagues from Panama.

The rich ship called the Cacafuego taken.

Cape Francisco.

The Pilots name of this ship was Don Francesco, and amongst other plate that our Generall found in this ship, he found two very faire guilt boules of siluer, which were the Pilots: to whom our Generall sayd: Segnior Pilot, you haue here two siluer cups, but I must needes haue one of them, which the Pilot because he could not otherwise chuse, yelded vnto and gaue the other to the steward of our Generals ships.

When this Pilot departed from vs, his boy sayd thus vnto our Generall, Captaine, our ship shall bee called no more the Cacafuego, but the Cacaplata, and your shippe shall bee called the Cacafuego, which pretie speach of the Pilots boy minstred matter of laughter to vs, both then and long after.

When our Generall had done what hee would with this Cacafuego, he cast her off, and wee went on our course still towards the West, and not long after met with a ship laden with linnen cloth and fine China dishes of white earth, and great store of China silks, of all which things wee tooke as we listed.

China silks.

The

The owner himſelfe of this ſhippe was in her, who was a Spaniſh Gentleman, from whome our Generall tooke a Fawlcon of golde, with a great emraude in the breaſt thereof, and the Pilot of the ſhippe he tooke alſo with him, and ſo caſt the ſhippe off.

This Pilot brought vs to the hauen of Guatulca, the towne whereof as he told vs, had but 17. Spaniards in it. Aſſoone as we were entred this hauen wee landed, and went preſently to the towne, and to the Towne houſe, where we found a Iudge ſitting in iudgement, he being aſſociate with three other officers, vpon three Negroes that had conſpired the burning of the Towne: both which Iudges, and priſoners we tooke, and brought them a ſhipboord, and cauſed the chiefe Iudge to write his letter to the Towne, to command all the Townelmen to auoid, that we might ſafely water there. Which being done, and they departed, we ranſaked the Towne, and in one houſe we found a pot of the quantitie of a buſhell, full of royals of plate, which we brought to our ſhippe. Guatulca.

And here one Thomas Moone one of our companie, tooke a Spaniſh Gentleman as he was flying out of the towne, and ſearching him, he found a chaine of golde about him, and other iewels, which he tooke, and ſo let him goe.

At this place our Generall among other Spaniards, ſet a ſhoare his Portingall Pilot, which he tooke at the Iſlands of Cape Verde, out of a ſhippe of S. Marie porte of Portingal, and hauing ſet them a ſhoare, we departed hence, and ſailed to the Iſland of " Canon, where our General landed, and brought to ſhoare his owne ſhip, and diſcharged her, mended, and graued her, and furniſhed our ſhippe with water and wood ſufficiently. The Portingall Pilot ſet on land. " The Iſland of Cockles.

And whiles we were here, we eſpied a ſhippe, and ſet ſaile after her, and tooke her, and founde in her two Pilots, and a Spaniſh Gouernour, going for the Iſlands of the Philippinas: we ſearched the ſhippe, and tooke ſome of her marchandizes, and ſo let her goe. Our Generall at this place, and time, thinking himſelfe both in reſpect of his priuate iniuries receiued from the Spaniards, as alſo of their contempts and indignities offered to our countrey and Prince in generall, ſufficiently ſatiſfied, and reuenged: and ſuppoſing that her Maieſtie at his returne would reſt contented with this ſeruice, purpoſed to continue no longer vpon the Spaniſh coaſts, but began to conſider and to conſult of the beſt way for his Countrey. A ſhip with a gouernour for the Iſlands of Philippinas. A purpoſe in Sir Francis to returne by the Northweſt paſſage.

He thought it not good to returne by the Streights, for two ſpeciall cauſes: the one, leaſt the Spaniards ſhould there waite, and attend for him in great number and ſtrength, whoſe hands he being left but one ſhippe, could not poſſibly eſcape. The other cauſe was the dangerous ſituation of the mouth of the Streights in the ſouth ſide, where continuall ſtormes raining and bluſtering, as he found by experience, beſides the ſhoales, and ſands vpon the coaſt, he thought it not a good courſe to aduenture that way: he reſolued therefore to auoide theſe hazards, to goe forward to the Iſlands of the Moluccaes, and therehence to ſaile the courſe of the Portingals by the Cape of Bona Speranza.

Vpon this reſolution, he began to thinke of his beſt way to the Moluccaes, and finding himſelfe where he nowe was becalmed, he ſawe, that of neceſſitie he muſt be forced to take a Spaniſh courſe, namely to ſaile ſomewhat Northerly to get a winde. Wherefore ſet ſaile, and ſailed in longitude 600. leagues at the leaſt for a good winde, and thus much we ſailed from the 16. of April, till the 3. of June.

The 5. day of June, being in 42. degrees towards the pole Arctike, we found the aire ſo colde, that our men being greeuouſly pinched with the ſame, complained of the extremitie thereof, and the further we went, the more the colde increaſed vpon vs. Whereupon we thought it beſt for that time to ſeeke the land, and did ſo, finding it not mountanous, but lowe plaine land, & clad, and couered ouer with ſnowe, ſo that we dyed we backe againe without landing, till we came within 38. degrees towards the line. In which height it pleaſed God to ſend vs into a faire and good Baye, with a good winde to enter the ſame. June. Sir Francis Drake ſailed on the backe ſide of America to 42 deg. of Northerly latitude. 38. degrees.

In this Baye we ankered, and the people of the Countrey, hauing their houſes cloſe by the waters ſide, ſhewed themſelues vnto vs, and ſent a preſent to our Generall.

When they came vnto vs, they greatly wondred at the things that we brought, but our Generall (according to his naturall and accuſtomed humanitie) curteouſly intreated them, and liberally beſtowed on them neceſſarie things to couer their nakednes, whereupon they ſuppoſed vs to be gods, and would not be perſwaded to the contrarie: the preſents which they ſent to our Generall, were feathers, and cals of network. A deſcription of the people and Countrey of Noua Albion.

Their houſes are digged round about with earth, and haue from the vtermoſt brimmes of the circle, clifts of wood ſet vpon them, ioyning cloſe together at the toppe like a ſpire ſteeple, which by reaſon of that cloſenes are very warme.

Their beds in the ground with rushes ſtrowed on it, and lying about the houſe, haue the fire in the the middest. The men goe naked, the women take bulrushes, and kembe them after the manner of hempe, and thereof make their loose garments, which being knit about their middles, hang downe about their hippes, hauing also about their shoulders a skinne of Deere, with the haire vpon it. These women are very obedient and seruiceable to their husbands.

After they were departed from vs, they came and visited vs the second time, and brought with them feathers and bags of Tabacco for presents: And when they came to the top of the hill (at the bottome whereof we had pitched our tents) they staied themselues: where one appointed for speaker, wearied himselfe with making a long oration, which done, they left their bowes vpon the hill, and came downe with their presents.

A long oration

In the meane time, the women remaining on the hill, tormented themselues lamentably, tearing their flesh from their cheekes, whereby we perceiued that they were about a sacrifice. In the meane time, our Generall, with his companie, went to prayer, and to reading of the Scriptures, at which exercise they were attentiue, & seemed greatly to be affected with it: but when they were come vnto vs, they restored againe vnto vs those things which before we bestowed vpon them.

The newes of our being there, being spread through the Countrey, the people that inhabited round about came downe, and amongst them the King himselfe, a man of a goodly stature, & comely personage, with many other tall, and warlike men: before whose comming were sent two Ambassadors to our Generall, to signifie that their King was comming, in doing of which message, their speech was continued about halfe an howre. This ended, they by signes requested our Generall to send some thing by their hand to their King, as a token that his comming might be in peace: wherein our Generall hauing satisfied them, they returned with glad tidings to their King, who marched to vs with a princely maiestie, the people crying continually after their manner, and as they drewe neere vnto vs, so did they striue to behaue themselues in their actions with comelines.

In the fore front was a man of a goodly personage, who bare the scepter, or mace before the King, whereupon hanged two crownes, a lesse and a bigger, with three chaines of a marueilous length: the crownes were made of knit worke wrought artificially with fethers of diuers colours: the chaines were made of a bonie substance, and few be the persons among them that are admitted to weare them: and of that number also the persons are limited, as some ten, some 12. &c. Next vnto him which bare the scepter, was the King himselfe, with his Garde about his person, clad with Conie skins, & other skins: after them followed the naked cõmon sort of people, euery one hauing his face painted, some with white, some with blacke, and other colours, & hauing in their handes one thing or another for a present, not so much as their children, but they also brought their presents.

In the meane time, our Generall gathered his men together, and marched within his fenced place, making against their approching, a very warlike shewe. They being trooped together in their order, and a generall salutation being made, there was presently a generall silence. Then he that bare the scepter before the King, being informed by another, whome they assigned to that office, with a manly and lustie voice, proclaimed that which the other spake to him in secret, continuing halfe an howre: which ended, and a generall Amen as it were giuen, the King with the whole number of men, and women (the children excepted) came downe without any weapon, who descending to the foote of the hill, set themselues in order.

In comming towards our bulwarks and tents, the scepter bearer began a song, obseruing his measures in a daunce, and that with a stately countenance, whom the King with his Garde, and euery degree of persons following, did in like manner sing and daunce, sauing onely the women which daunced, & kept silence. The Generall permitted them to enter within our bulwarke, where they continued their song and daunce a reasonable time. When they had satisfied themselues, they made signes to our General to sit downe, to whom the King, and diuers others made seuerall orations, or rather supplications, that he would take their prouince & kingdome into his hand, and become their King, making signes that they would resigne vnto him their right and title of the whole land, and become his subiects. In which, to perswade vs the better, the King and the rest, with one consent, and with great reuerence, ioyfully singing a song, did set the crowne vpon his head, inriched his necke with all their chaines, and offred vnto him many other things, honouring him by the name of Hioh, adding thereunto as it seemed, a signe of triumph: which thing our Generall thought not meete to reiect, because he knewe not what honour and profite it might be to our Countrey. Wherefore in the name, and to the vse of her Maiestie, he tooke the scepter, crowne, and dignitie of the said Countrey into his hands, wishing that the riches & treasure thereof might so conueniently be transported to the inriching of her kingdome at home, as it aboundeth in ỹ same.

The King resignes his crowne and kingdome to Sir Francis Drake.

The common sorte of people leauing the King, and his Garde with our Generall, scattered themselues together with their sacrifices among our people, taking a diligent viewe of euery

perfon: and ſuch as pleaſed their fancie, (which were the yongeſt) they incloſing them about offred their ſacrifices vnto them with lamentable weeping, ſcratching, and tearing the fleſh from their faces with their nailes, whereof iſſued abundance of bloode. But wee vſed ſignes to them of miſliking this, and ſtaied their hands from force, and directed them vpwards to the liuing God, whome onely they ought to worſhippe. They ſhewed vnto vs their wounds, and craued helpe of them at our hands, whereupon wee gaue them lotions, plaiſters, and ointments agreeing to the ſtate of their griefes, beſeeching God to cure their diſeaſes. Euery thirde day they brought their ſacrifices vnto vs, vntill they vnderſtoode our meaning, that we had no pleaſure in them: yet they could not be long abſent from vs, but daily frequented our companie to the houre of our departure, which departure ſeemed ſo greeuous vnto them, that their ioy was turned into ſorrow. They intreated vs, that being abſent we would remember them, and by ſtelth prouided a ſacrifice, which we miſliked.

Our neceſſarie buſines being ended, our Generall with his companie trauailed vp into the Countrey to their villages, where wee found heardes of Deere by 1000. in a companie, being moſt large, and fat of bodie. Great heards of Deere.

We found the whole Countrey to be a warren of a ſtrange kinde of Connies, their bodies in bignes as be the Barbarie Connies, their heads as the heads of ours, the feete of a Want, and the taile of a Rat being of great length: vnder her chinne on either ſide a bagge, into the which ſhe gathereth her meate, when ſhe hath filled her bellie abroad. The people eate their bodies, and make great accompt of their ſkinnes for their Kings coate was made of them. Abundance of ſtrange conies

Our Generall called this Countrey, Noua Albion, and that for two cauſes: the one in reſpect of the white bankes and cliffes, which lie towards the ſea: and the other, becauſe it might haue ſome affinitie with our Countrey in name, which ſometime was ſo called. Noua Albion.

There is no part of earth here to be taken vp, wherein there is not a reaſonable quantitie of golde or ſiluer. Gold and ſiluer in the earth of Noua Albion.

At our departure hence our Generall ſet vp a monument of our being there, as alſo of her Maieſties right and title to the ſame, namely a plate, nailed vpon a faire great poſte, whereupon was ingrauen her Maieſties name, the day and yeere of our arriuall there, with the free giuing vp of the prouince and people into her Maieſties hands, together with her highnes picture and armes, in a peece of fiue pence of currant Engliſh money vnder the plate, where vnder was alſo written the name of our Generall.

It ſeemeth that the Spaniards hitherto had neuer bene in this part of the Countrey, neither did euer diſcouer the lande by many degrees, to the South wards of this place.

After we had ſet ſaile from hence, we continued without ſight of land till the 13. day of October following, which day in the morning we fell with certaine Iſlands 8. degrees to the North-ward of the line, from which Iſlands came a great number of Canoas, hauing in ſome of them 4. in ſome 6. and in ſome alſo 14. men, bringing with them coquos, and other fruites. Their Canoas were hollowe within, and cut with great arte, and cunning, being very ſmooth within and without, and bearing a glaſſe as if it were a home daintily burniſhed, hauing a prowe, and a ſterne of one ſorte, yeelding in ward circle wiſe, being of a great heigth, and full of certaine white ſhels for a bauerie, and on each ſide of them lie out two peeces of timber about a yard and a halfe long, more or leſſe, according to the ſmalnes, or bignes of the boate. October. Certaine Iſlands in 8. degrees. Strange Canoas.

This people haue the nether part of their eares cut into a round circle, hanging downe very low vpon their cheekes, whereon they hang things of a reaſonable weight. The nailes of their hands are an inche long, their teeth are as blacke as pitch, and they renew them often, by eating of an herbe with a kinde of powder, which they alwaies carrie about them in a cane for the ſame purpoſe.

We leauing this Iſland the night after we fell with it, the 18. of October, we light vpon diuers others, ſome whereof made a great ſhewe of Inhabitants. Iſlands.

We continued our courſe by the Iſlands of Tagulada, Zelon, and Zewarra, being ſubiect to the Portingals, the firſt whereof hath growing in it great ſtore of Sinnamon.

The 14. of November we fell with the Iſlands of Molucca, which day at night (hauing diuerted our courſe to runne with Tydore) in coaſting along the Iſland of Mutyr, belonging to the King of Ternate, his Deputie or Viceking ſeeing vs at ſea, came with his Canoa to vs without all feare, and came aboord, and after ſome conference with our Generall, willed him in any wiſe to runne in with Ternate, and not with Tydore, aſſuring him that the King would be glad of his comming, and would be ready to doe what he would require, for which purpoſe he himſelfe would that night be with the King, and tell him the newes, with whome if he once deale, he ſhould finde November. The Iſle of Ternate.

finde that as he was a King, so his word should stand: adding further, that if he went to Tydore before he came to Ternate, the King would haue nothing to doe with vs, because he held the Portingall as his enemie: whereupon our Generall resolued to runne with Ternate, where the next morning early we came to anker, at which time our Generall sent a messenger to the king with a veluet cloke for a present, and token of his comming to be in peace, and that he required nothing but traffike, and exchange of merchandize, whereof he had good store in such things as he wanted.

In the meane time, the Vicking had beene with the King according to his promise, signifying vnto him what good things he might receiue from vs by traffike: whereby the King was moued with great liking towards vs, and sent to our Generall with speciall message, that he should haue what things he needed, and would require, with peace, and friendship, and moreouer that he would yeelde himselfe, and the right of his Iland to be at the pleasure and commandement of so famous a Prince as we serued. In token whereof he sent to our Generall a signet, and within short time after came in his owne person, with boates, and Canoas to our ship, to bring her into a better and safer roade then she was in at that present.

The king of Ternate offereth him selfe and his kingdome to the seruice of the Queene of England.

In the meane time, our Generals messenger being come to the Court, was met by certaine noble personages with great solemnitie, and brought to the King, at whose handes he was most friendly and graciously intertained.

The King purposing to come to our shippe, sent before 4. great and large Canoas, in euery one whereof were certaine of his greatest states that were about him, attired in white lawne of cloth of Calicut, hauing ouer their heads from the one ende of the Canoa to the other, a couering of thinne perfumed mats, borne vp with a frame made of reedes for the same vse, vnder which euery one did sit in his order according to his dignitie, to keepe him from the heate of the Sunne, diuers of whome being of good age, and grauitie, did make an ancient and fatherly shewe. There were also diuers yong and comely men attired in white, as were the others: the rest were souldiers, which stoode in comely order round about on both sides, without whome sate the rowers in certaine galleries, which being three on a side all along the Canoas, did lie off from the side thereof 3. or 4. yardes, one being orderly builded lower then another, in euery of which galleries, were the number of 4. score rowers.

The great and strange Canoas of the King of Ternate.

These Canoas were furnished with warlike munition, euery man for the most part hauing his sworde, and target, with his dagger, beside other weapons, as launces, caleuers, darts, bowes, and arrowes: also euery Canoa had a small cast base mounted at the least one full yarde vpon a sticke set vpright.

Thus comming neere our shippe, in order they rowed about vs, one after another, and passing by, did their homage with great solemnitie, the great personages beginning with great grauitie & fatherly countenances, signifying that ỳ king had sent them to conduct our ship into a better road.

The king of Ternate came to visite Sir Franc. Drake.

Soone after, the King himselfe repaired, accompanied with 6. graue and ancient persons, who did their obeisance with maruelous humilitie. The King was a man of tall stature, and seemed to be much delighted with the sound of our musicke, to whome as also to his nobilitie, our Generall gaue presents, where with they were passing well contented.

At length the King craued leaue of our Generall to depart, promising the next day to come aboord, and in the meane time to send vs such victuals, as were necessarie for our prouision: for the same night we receiued of them meale, which they call Sago, made of the tops of certaine trees, tasting in the mouth like sowre curds, but melteth like sugar, whereof they make certaine cakes, which may be kept the space of ten yeeres, and yet then good to be eaten. Wee had of them store of rice, hennes, vnperfect and liquid sugar, sugar canes, and a fruite which they call Figo, with store of cloues.

Sago a kind of meale.

The King hauing promised to come aboord, brake his promise, but sent his brother to make his excuse, and to intreate our Generall to come on shoare, offring himselfe pawne aboord for his safe returne. Whereunto our Generall consented not, vpon mislike conceiued of the breach of his promise, the whole companie also vtterly refusing it. But to satisfie him, our General sent certaine of his Gentlemen to the Court, to accompanie the Kings brother, reseruing the Vicking for their safe returne. They were receiued of another brother of the kings, and other states, and were conducted with great honour to the Castle. The place that they were brought vnto, was a large and faire house, where were at the least 1000. persons assembled.

A castle in Ternate.

The King being yet absent, there sate in their places 60. graue personages, all which were said to be of the kings Counsell. There were besides 4. graue persons, apparelled all in red, downe to the ground, and attired on their heads like the Turkes, and these were said to be Romanes, and Ligiers there to keepe continual traffike with the people of Ternate. There were also two Turkes

Romans and Turks Ligiers in Ternate.

Ligiers

Ligiers in this place, and one Italian. The king at last came in garded with 12. launces couered ouer with a rich canopie, with embossed golde. Our men accompanied with one of their Captaines called Moro, rising to meete him, he gratiously did welcome, and intertaine them. He was attired after the manner of the Countrey, but more sumptuously then the rest. From his waste downe to the ground, was all cloth of golde, and the same very riche: his legs were bare, but on his feete were a paire of shoes, made of Cordouan skinne. In the attire of his head were finely wreathed looped rings of golde, and about his necke he had a chaine of perfect golde, the linkes whereof were great, and one folde double. On his fingers hee had sixe very faire iewels, and sitting in his chaire of estate, at his right hand stoode a page with a fanne in his hand, breathing and gathering the aire to the King. The fanne was in length two foote, and in breadth one foote, set with 8. saphyres, richly imbrodered, and knit to a staffe 3. foote in length, by the which the Page did hold, and moue it. Our Gentlemen hauing deliuered their message, and receiued order accordingly, were licensed to depart, being safely conducted backe againe by one of the Kings Councell. The maiestie of the King.

This Island is the chiefest of all the Islands of Molucca, and the King hereof is king of 70. Islands besides. The king with his people are Moores in religion, obseruing certaine newe Moones, with fastings: during which fasts, they neither eate nor drinke in the day, but in the night.

After that our Gentlemen were returned, and that we had here by the fauour of the king receiued all necessarie things that the place could yeelde vs: our General considering the great distance, and how farre he was yet off from his Countrey, thought it not best here to linger the time any longer, but waying his ankers, set out of the Island, and sailed to a certaine litle Island to the Southwards of Selebes, where we graued our ships, and continued there in that and other businesse, 26. daies. This Island is throwly grown with wood of a large and high growth, very streight and without boughes, saue onely in the head or top, whose leaues are not much differing from our broome in England. Amongst these trees night by night, through the whole land, did shew themselues an infinite swarme of fierie wormes flying in the aire, whose bodies being no bigger then our common English flies, make such a shew, and light, as if euery twig or tree had bene a burning candle. In this place breedeth also wonderfull store of Bats, as bigge as large hennes: of Crayfishes also here wanted no plentie, and they of exceeding bignes, one whereof was sufficient for 4. hungrie stomacks at a dinner, being also very good, and restoring meate, whereof we had experience: and they digge themselues holes in the earth like Conies. A litle Island to the Southward of Selebes. Fiery wormes Bats. Crayfishes.

When we had ended our busines here, we waied, and set saile to runne for the Moluccaes: but hauing at that time a bad winde, and being amongst the Islands, with much difficultie we recouered to the Northward of the Island of Selebes, where by reason of contrarie windes not able to continue our course to runne Westwards, we were inforced to alter the same to the Southward againe, finding that course also to be very hard and dangerous for vs, by reason of infinite shoales which lie off, and among the Islands: whereof we had too much triall to the hazard and danger of our shippe and liues. For of all other daies vpon the 9. of Januarie, in the yeere 1579. wee came suddenly vpon a rocke, where we stucke fast from 8. of the clocke at night, til 4. of the clocke in the afternoone the next day, being in deede out of all hope to escape the danger: but our Generall as he had alwaies hitherto shewed himselfe couragious, and of a good confidence in the mercie and protection of God: so now he continued in the same, and lest he should seeme to perish wilfully, both he, and we did our best indeuour to saue our selues, which it pleased God so to blesse, that in the ende we cleared our selues most happily of the danger. Januarie 9. anno 1579. Their danger vpon a rocke.

We lightned our shippe vpon the rockes, of 3. tunne of cloues, 8. peeces of ordinance, & certaine meale and beanes: and then the winde (as it were in a moment by the speciall grace of God,) changing from the starre boord to the larboord of the shippe, wee hoised our sailes, and the happie gale droue our shippe off the rocke into the sea againe, to the no litle comfort of all our hartes, for which we gaue God such praise and thanks, as so great a benefite required. Cloues. The helpe of a current in the deliuerie.

The 8. day of Februarie following, we fell with the fruitful Island of Baratene, hauing in the meane time suffered many dangers by windes and shoalds. The people of this Island are comely in body, and stature, and of a ciuill behauiour, iust in dealing, and curteous to strangers, whereof we had the experience sundry waies, they being most glad of our presence, and very readie to relieue our wants in those things which their Countrey did yeelde. The men goe naked, sauing their heads and priuities, euery man hauing some thing or other hanging at their eares. Their women are couered from the middle downe to the foote, wearing a great number of bracelets vpon their armes, for some had 8. vpon each arme, being made some of bone, some of horne, and some of shalle, the lightest whereof by our estimation waied two ounces apeece. Februarie. Baratene Island.

With this people linnen cloth is good marchandize, and of good request, whereof they make rols rols for their heads, and girdles to weare about them.

Their Iland is both riche and fruitfull: riche in golde, siluer, copper, and sulphur, wherin they seeme skilfull and expert, not onely to trie the same, but in working it also artificially into any forme and fashion that pleaseth them.

Their fruites be diuers, and plentiful, as nutmegs, ginger, long pepper, lemmons, cucumbers, coquos, figu, sagu, with diuers other sortes: and among all the rest, we had one fruite, in bignes, forme, and huske, like a baye berrie, hard of substance, and pleasant of taste, which being sodden, becommeth soft, and is a most good and wholsome victuall, whereof we tooke reasonable store, as we did also of the other fruites and spices: so that to confesse a trueth, since the time that we first set out of our owne Countrey of England, we happened vpon no place, (Ternate onely excepted) wherin we found more comfortes and better meanes of refreshing.

Commendation of the Iland of Barateue.

Iana maior.

At our departure from Barateue, we set our course for Iaua maior, where arriuing, wee founde great courtesie, and honorable entertainment. This Iland is gouerned by 5. Kings, whom they call Raiah: as Raiah Donaw, and Raiah Mang Bange, and Raiah Cabuccapollo, which liue as hauing one spirite, and one minde.

Of these fiue we had foure a shipboord at once, and two or three often. They are wonderfully delighted in coloured clothes, as red and greene: their vpper parts of their bodies are naked, saue their heads, whereupon they weare a Turkish roll, as doe the Moluccians: from the middle downward, they weare a pintado of silke, trailing vpon the ground, in colour as they best like.

The manners of the people of Iaua.

The Moluccians hate that their women should be seene of strangers: but these offer them of high curtesie, yea the kings themselues.

The people are of goodly stature, and warlike, well prouided of swordes and targets, with daggers, all being of their owne worke, and most artificially done, both in tempering their mettall, as also in the forme, whereof we bought reasonable store.

They haue an house in euery village for their common assemblie: euery day they meete twise, men, women, and children, bringing with them such victuals as they thinke good, some fruites, some rice boiled, some hennes roasted, some sagu, hauing a table made 3. foote from the ground, whereon they set their meate, that euery person sitting at the table may eate, one reioycing in the companie of another.

A strange fashion of boiling rice.

They boile their rice in an earthen pot, made in forme of a sugar loafe, being full of holes, as our pots which we water our gardens withall, and it is open at the great ende, wherein they put their rice drie, without any moisture. In the meane time they haue readie another great earthen pot, set fast in a fornace, boiling full of water, whereinto they put their pot with rice, by such measure, that they swelling become soft at the first, and by their swelling stopping the holes of the pot, admit no more water to enter, but the more they are boiled, the harder and more firme substance they become, so that in the ende they are a firme and good bread, of the which with oile, butter, sugar, and other spices, they make diuers sortes of meates very pleasant of taste, and nourishing to nature.

The French pocks.

The French pocks is here very common to all, and they helpe themselues, sitting naked from ten to two in the Sunne, whereby the venemous humour is drawne out. Not long before our departure, they told vs, that not farre off there were such great ships as ours, wishing vs to beware: vpon this our Captaine would stay no longer.

From Iaua Maior we sailed for the Cape of Good Hope, which was the first land we fel with all: neither did we touch with it, or any other land, vntill we came to Sierra Leona, vpon the coast of Guinea: not withstanding we ranne hard aboord the Cape, finding the report of the Portingals to be most false, who affirme, that it is the most dangerous Cape of the world, neuer without intollerable stormes and present danger to trauailers, which come neere the same.

The Cape of Bona Speranza not so dangerous as the Portingals haue giuen out.

This Cape is a most stately thing, and the fairest Cape we sawe in the whole circumference of the earth, and we passed by it the 18. of June.

Sierra Leona. Diuers trees.

From thence we continued our course to Sierra Leona, on the coast of Guinea, where we arriued the 22. of July, and found necessarie prouisions, great store of Elephants, Diuers vpon trees of one kinde, spawning and increasing infinitely, the Diuer suffering no budde to growe. We departed thence the 24. day.

We arriued in England the third of Nouember 1580. being the third yeere of our departure.

Instructions

Inſtructions giuen by the honourable, the Lordes of the Counſell, to Edward Fenton Eſquire, for the order to be obſerued in the voyage recommended to him for the Eaſt Indies and Cathay. Aprill 9. 1582.

FIrſt you ſhall enter as captaine Generall, into the charge and gouernement of theſe ſhippes, viz. the Beare Gallion, the Edward Bonauenture, the Barke Francis, and the ſmall Frigate or Pinneſſe.

2 Item you ſhall appoint for the furniſhing of the veſſels in the whole, to the number of 200. able perſons, accompting in that number the Gentlemen and their men, the Miniſters, Chirurgians, Factors, &c. which ſaid number is no way to be exceeded, whereof as many as may be, to be ſea men, and ſhal diſtribute them into euery veſſell, as by aduiſe here before your going ſhall be thought meete: Prouided that you ſhall not receiue vnder your charge & gouernement, any diſordered or mutinous perſon, but that vpon knowledge had, you ſhall remoue him before your departure hence, or by ẏ way as ſoone as you can conueniently auoide him, and receiue better in their places.

3 Item, for the more and better circumſpect execution, and determination in any waighty cauſes incident in this voyage, we will that you ſhall take vnto you for aſſiſtances, captaine Hawkins, captaine Ward, M. Nicholas Parker, M. Maddox, M. Walker, Euans, Randolph, Shaw, Barbew Talboys, with whom you ſhall conſult and conferre in all cauſes, matters, and actions of importance, not prouided for in theſe inſtructions touching this ſeruice now in hand. And in all ſuch matters ſo handled, argued, and debated, we thinke it conuenient that alwayes to be executed, which you ſhall thinke meeteſt with the aſſent alſo of any 4. of them, the matter hauing bene debated, and ſo aſſented vnto, in the preſence of your ſaid Aſſiſtants. And in caſe that if ſuch conference and debating the opinions of the aforeſaide Aſſiſtants be founde in effect any way to differ, then it is thought meete, that all ſuch matters ſo argued vpon, ſhall reſt to be put in execution in ſuch ſort, as you ſhall thinke moſt meeteſt, hauing the aſſent of any 4. of them as aforeſaide. And if any of theſe Aſſiſtants ſhall die, then the number of the one halfe of the Suruiuours to ioyne with the General Captaine for conſent in all things aforeſaid.

4 Of all which your aſſemblies and conſultations, for the matters aforeſaid, we thinke it very conuenient, that a particular and true note ſhould be kept, for which cauſe we appoint maſter Maddox miniſter, and if he ſhould deceaſe, then the Generall with halfe the Aſſiſtants Suruiuours, to name one to keepe a booke of all ſuch matters as ſhall be brought in conſultation, and of all ſuch reaſons as ſhall be propounded by any perſon, either on the one ſide, or on the other: what was reſolued on, and by whoſe conſent, who diſſented therefrom, and for what cauſes. In which booke he ſhall in the beginning of the note of euery ſuch aſſemblie, ſet downe particularly the day, and the place, if it may be, the names of the perſons then preſent, and vpon what occaſion the ſaid conſultation was appointed or holden, and ſhall haue to euery acte, the hands of the Generall, and of all, or ſo many of the ſaid Aſſiſtants as will ſubſcribe: which booke the ſaid maſter Maddox, or the other vpon his deceaſe appointed in his place ſhall keepe ſecrete, and in good order to be exhibited vnto vs, at your returne home.

5 Item, if there happen any perſon or perſons imployed in this ſeruice, of what calling or condition he or they ſhall be, ſhould conſpire, or attempt priuately or publikely, any treaſon, mutinie, or other diſcord, either touching the taking away of your owne life, or any other of authoritie vnder you, whereby her Maieſties ſeruice in this voiage might thereby be ouerthrowne, or impugned: we will therefore, that vpon iuſt proofe made of any ſuch treaſon, mutenie, or any other diſcord attempted as aforeſaid, the ſame ſhall be puniſhed by you, or your Liuetenant, according to the qualitie and enormitie of the facte. Prouided alwayes, and it ſhall not be lawfull neither for you, nor for your Liuetenant to exceede the puniſhment of any perſon, by loſſe of life or limme, vnleſſe the partie ſhall be iudged to haue deſerued it by the reſt of your Aſſiſtants, as is before expreſſed, or at the leaſt by foure of them. And that which ſhall concerne life to be by the verdict of twelue men, of the companie employed in this voyage, to be impanelled for that purpoſe, with the obſeruation of the forme of our Countrie lawes in that behalfe, as neere as you may. Prouided, if it ſhall not appeare, that the forbearing of the execution by death, ſhall miniſter cauſe to increaſe the facte of the offendour, then it were better to conuince the partie of his facte, by the othes of 12. indifferent perſons, and to commit him to hard impriſonment, vntil the returne. And aſwell of the factes committed by any, as alſo of the proofe thereof, and of the opinions of you, and your Aſſiſtants, and the maner of the puniſhment, the Regiſter ſhall make a particuler and true note, in the booke of your conſultation, as is before appointed.

M. Carlile vpon occasion went not in the voyage.

6 Item, you shall not remoue captaine William Hawkins your lieutenant, master captaine Luke Ward your Viceadmirall, or captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, nor captaine Carlile from his charge by land, whō we will not to refuse any such seruice as shall be appointed to him by the Generall and the councell, nor any captaine of other vessels from their charges, but vpon iust cause dulie prooued, and by consent of your Assistants, or 4. of them at the least.

7 Item, for the succession of the Generall gouernour of this whole voyage, if it should please God to take him away, it is thought meete that there should bee the names of such Gentlemen seuerally set downe to succeed in his place one after the other, which are seuerally written in parchment, included in bals of Waxe, sealed with her Maiesties signet, put into two coffers locked with three seuerall locks, whereof one key is to be in the custodie of captaine Luke Ward, the other of William Hawkins, the third of master Maddox the minister, and the same two coffers to bee put into two seuerall shippes, videlicet, the one coffer in the Gallion, in the custodie of the Generall, the other in the Edward Bonauenture in the custodie of the Viceadmirall, the same two coffers vpon any such casualtie of the Generals death by consent of the Assistants which shall ouerliue, to be opened, and the partie therein named to succeed in the place, who shall thereupon take vpon him the charge in the said voiage according to these instructions, in such sort as if they had bene specially directed vnto him, and the rest of the companie so to take and repute him in euery respect, as they will answer to the contrarie. But if it shall so fall out, (as we hope it will) that there shall bee no such need, but that the Generall doe continue still, then shall you at your returne deliuer backe the sayd coffers and bals of waxe sealed in such sort as they be, without opening them, vnlesse it be in the case aforesayd.

8 You shall make a iust and true inuentorie in euery ship and vessell appointed for this voyage of all the tackle, munition, and furniture belonging to them at their setting foorth hence, and of all the prouisions whatsoeuer, and one copie therof vnder your hand, & vnder the hands of your Viceadmirall and lieutenant, to be deliuered to the Erle of Leicester, and the other to the Gouernour of the companie for them before your departure hence, and the like to be done at your returne home of all things then remaining in the said shippes and vessels, with a true certificate how and by what means any parcell of the same shall haue bene spent or lost.

9 Item, you shal vse all diligence possible to depart from Southhampton with your said ships and vessels, before the last of this present moneth of Aprill, and so goe on your course by Cape de bona Sperança, not passing by the streight of Magellan, either going or returning, except vpon great occasion incident, that shall be thought otherwise good to you, by the aduise and consent of your said Assistants, or 4. of them at the least.

10 Item, you shall not passe to the Northeastward the fortie degree of latitude at the most, but shall take your right course to the Isles of Moluccaes, for the better discouerie of the Northwest passage, if without hinderance of your trade, and within the same degree you can get any knowledge touching that passage, whereof you shal do well to bee inquisitiue as occasion in this sort may serue.

11 Itē, you shall haue speciall regard after your departure from the coast of England, so to order your course as that your shippes and vessels loose not one another, but keepe company together both outward and homeward. And least they happen to seuer the one from the other by tempest or otherwise, it shal not be amisse that you appoint to the captains and masters, certain places wherein you will stay certaine daies. And euery ship passing aforehand, and not knowing what is become of the other ships to leaue vpon euery Promontorie or Cape, a token to stand in sight with a writing lapped in lead to declare the day of their passage. And if any wilfulnesse or negligence in this behalfe shall appeare in any person or persons that shall haue charge of any of the ships or vessels aforesayd, or if they or any of them shall doe otherwise then to them appertaineth, you shall punish such offenders sharply to the example of others.

12 Item, we do straightly enioine you, and consequently all the rest imployed in this voiage in any wise, and as you and they will answere the contrary at your comming home by the lawes of this realme, that neither going, tarying abroad, nor returning, you doe spoile or take any thing frō any of the Queens Maiesties friends or allies, or any christians, without paying iustly for ꝑ same, nor that you vse any maner of violence or force against any such, except in your owne defence, if you shall be set vpon, or otherwise be forced for your owne safegard to do it.

13 Itē, we will that you deale altogether in this voiage like good and honest merchants, trafficquing & exchanging ware for ware, with all curtesie to ꝑ nations you shall deale with, as wel Ethniks as others, & for that cause you shal instruct al those ꝑ shal go with you, that whensoeuer you or any of you shal happen to come in any place to conference wᵗ the people of those parts, ꝑ in all your doings doings and theirs, you and they so behaue your selues towards the said people, as may rather procure their friendship & good liking toward you by courteousnesse, then to moue them to offence, or mislyking, & especially you shal haue great care of ỹ performance of your word, & promise to them.

14 Item we will, that by the aduise of your Assistants, in places where you and they shall thinke most fitte, you settle if you can, a beginning of a further trade to be had hereafter: and from such places doe bring ouer with you some fewe men, and women, if you may, and doe also leaue same one or two, or more, as to you, and your Assistants shall seeme conuenient of our nation with them for pledges, and to learne the tongue, and secrets of the Countries, hauing diligent care, that in deliuering, and taking of hostages, you deliuer not personages of more value then you receiue, but rather deliuer meane persons vnder colour of men of value, as the Infidels doe for the most part vse. Prouided that you stay not longer to make continuance of further trade, then shalbe expedient in good exchange of the wares presently caried with you. Strange people to be brought home.

15 Item you shall haue care, and giue generall warning, that no person of what calling soeuer he be, shall take vp, or keepe to himselfe and his priuate vse, any stone, pearle, golde, siluer, or other matter of commoditie to be had or found in places where you shall come, but he the said person so stayed of such stone, pearle, golde, siluer, or other matter of commoditie, shall with all speede, or so soone as he can detect the same, and make deliuerie thereof to your selfe, or your Viceadmirall, or Lieuetenant, and the Factor appointed for this voyage, vpon paine of forfaiture of all the recompense he is to haue for his seruice in this voyage by share, or otherwise: and further to receiue such punishmẽt, as to you, & your Assistants, or the more part of them shal seeme good, & otherwise to be punished here at his returne, if according to the qualitie of his offence, it shal be thought needfull.

16 Item, if the Captaines, Marchants, or any other, shall haue any apparell, iewels, chaines, armour, or any other thing whatsoeuer, which may be desired in Countries where they shall traffique, that it shal not be lawful for them, or any of them to traffique, or sell any thing thereof for their priuate accompt: but the same shall be praysed by the most of those that shalbe in commission in the places where the same may be so required, rated at such value, as it may bee reasonably worth in England, and then solde to the profite of the whole voyage, and to goe as in aduenture for those to whom it doeth appertaine.

17 Item you your selfe shall in the Gallion keepe one booke, and the Factors appointed for the same ship another, wherein shalbe a iust accompt kept, as well of the marchandize caried hence, as of those you shall bring home. And as well at your setting forth, as frõ time to time, as exchange shalbe made, you shall set your hand to their booke, and they theirs to yours, and the like order shall you see that the Captaine, and the Factors in the Edward Bonauenture, shall vse in their shippe, and the other Captaines and Factors in eache other vessell.

18 Item you shall giue straight order to restraine, that none shal make any Cartes, or descriptions of the said voyage, but such as shalbe deputed by you the Generall, which said Carts and descriptions, we thinke meete that you the Generall shall take into your hands, at your returne to this our coast of England, leauing with them no coppie, & to present them vnto vs at your returne: the like to be done if they finde any Cartes, or Mappes in those Countries.

19 Item you shall at your returne so direct your course, that all the shippes vnder your gouernment may come home together, and arriue here in the riuer of Thames, if it may conueniently be. And whersoeuer in this Realme you, or any of the shippes shall arriue, you shall giue special and straighe order, that no person of what condition so euer he be, shall vnlade, or bring on lande, or forth of the vessels in which it came, any part or parcell of marchandize, or matter of commoditie bought in any of the said vessels, vntill we being certified of your, or their arriuall, shall giue further order and direction therein, vnder the penalties and forfaitures expressed in the 15. article, against such as shall retayne any thing to their priuate vse, as in the saide article is further expressed.

20 Item to the intent that all such persons, as shall goe with you in this voyage may better vnderstand, what they ought to doe, and what to auoyde, we thinke it requisite, that aswell out of these, as otherwise with the aduise of your Assistants, and masters of the ships, you shall cause some conuenient order to be set downe in writing for their better gouernment both at Sea, and land, if they shall happen to goe on land any where. And the same to be openly read, and made knowen vnto them, to the intent they may vnderstand how to behaue themselues, and vpon any fault committed, not to haue any excuse to pretend ignorance, and so to auoide such punishment, as it is requisite to haue ministred, for the keeping of them in good order.

21 And to the end God may blesse this voyage with happy and prosperous successe, you shall haue an especiall care to see that reuerence and respect be had to the ministers appointed to accompanie you in this voyage, as appertaineth to their place and calling, and to see such good orders as by them shalbe set downe for reformation of life and maners, onely obeyed and performed, by causing the transgressours and contemners of the same to be seuerely punished, and the ministers to remoue sometime from one vessell to another.

22 Prouided alwayes, that the whole direction and gouernment of the people, life and limme excepted, as in the fifth article, and the course of this voyage shalbe wholy at your disposition, except in the course by the Streight of Magellan, either outward or homeward, and in your passage by the Northward of 40. degrees in latitude, wherein you shall followe direction set downe in the 9. and 10. articles, as also in the displacing of the Captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, & other captaines, wherein you shal followe the order appointed in the 6. article: Prouided that we meane not by this article to derogate any thing to the authoritie of your Assistants established in the third article, or in any other article of these instructions.

23 Item, in all occasions and enterprises that may fall out to be vpon the land, wee will that captaine Carlile shall haue the generall and chiefe charge thereof.

24 And finally wee require you and euery of you to haue a due regard to the obseruation and accomplishment of these our instructions, and of all such other things, as may any kind of way tend to the furtherance and benefite of this seruice committed to your charge.

The voyage intended towards China, wherein M. Edward Fenton was appointed Generall, written by master Luke Ward his Vice-admirall, and Captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, begun Anno Dom. 1582.

THe second of Aprill I departed with the Edward Bonauenture from Blackewall, and the 19. of the same arriued in Nettle rode at Hampton, where I found riding the Gallion Leicester, and so remaining there till the first of May, wee set saile thence in the forenoone, being of vs in the whole Fleete 4. saile.

1 The Gallion Leicester of 400. tunnes Admirall, whereof was Generall, captaine Edward Fenton and William Hawkins the ponger lieutenant Generall in her, and Christopher Hall, master.

2 The Edward Bonauenture of 300. tunnes Viceadmirall, whereof was Captaine Luke Ward, and Thomas Perrie master.

3 The Francis of 40. tunnes, whereof was captaine John Drake, and William Parkam master.

4 The Elizabeth of 50. tunnes, whereof was Captaine Thomas Skeuington and Rafe Crane master.

We spent by meanes partly of businesse, and partly of contrary winds, the moneth of May vpon the coast, and then leauing the land we put off to sea, and proceeded on our voiage intended by the grace of God for China: vntill the moneth of August following, nothing fell out much worthy the knowledge of the world, which is not common to all Nauigants, but about the beginning of August aforesayd, being somewhat neere the coast of Guinie, vpon the shooting off of a peece & the putting out of a flag in the Admiral, I went on boord, & M. Walker, M. Shaw, M. Geffries, our master & pilot with me, where the generall counsel was assembled to consider of two points, viz.

The first, whether it were necessarie to water presently or not, which was thought very needfull of all men, and so concluded.

The 2. where the best and aptest place was to water in, which was thought of the greater number to be at Sierraleona, on the coast of Guinie, which was also concluded, and by the Master, and Pilotes agreed to goe hence Southeast, which determined, we returned aboord, and left Nicholas Allen, my master Carpenter aboord the Gallion, and his boye to take physike.

The 2. day of August, we went all day, and all night Southeast: the forenoone in staying our foremast with a send of the Sea hauing the top saile, and all abrode, we cracked the same within 3. yardes vnder the toppe, since which time we were in great feare of it.

The 3. day at noone master Hall, and Edward Silman, with others came aboord, and brought our master Carpenter, and one of their Carpenters with him, to mend our maste which we meaned not with hall: and after some conference they went aboord againe. We went al this day Southeast and East Southeast, till 6. a clocke at night, that we saw the lande of Guinie, which bare Northeast of vs about 12. leagues off, which seene, we sounded, and had no ground: then went I, and our Master and Pilote aboord the Admirall, & after many debatements, concluded to runne in Northeast by East, and at 11. at night we came aboord againe, and went all night Northeast by East.

The 4 at 8. in ꝑ forenoone, we were within 2. leagues of ꝑ land which bare of vs northeast, which

roſe like a high hill full of woodes, and of each ſide lowe land, we being perſwaded by our Pilots that it was the entrance into Sierraleona, went in Northeaſt vntil we were within an halfe league of the ſhore, and had brought the South point Southeaſt by Eaſt of vs. At 11. a clocke we finding it a baie, and not Sierraleona, brought our tacks aboord and ſtood along Weſt by North and Weſt larboord tacked.

In this time our Admirals pinnace rowed in, and went on land vpon the South ſide of the baie, and the Elizabeths boate with her. They found houſes of boughes, and in one of the houſes the tongue of a beaſt, and a bullocks tongue freſh killed. Alſo a lake with plentie of freſh water, and freſh water fiſh in it hard by the ſea ſide: they found vpie pomegranates, and peaſe like nuts, with other vnknowen fruites vnder the trees. The Elizabeth ranne in, and brought the South point South by Weſt of her, and ankred within Faulcon ſhot of the ſhore in 7. fadome oze, where they take fiſh with hookes, while he ſtaied for the boates.

The 4. all the afternoone we ran along the coaſt (which lieth Northweſt by North, and Southeaſt by South) Weſt, and within a point one way or the other, ſeeing the land vnder our Lee, 3. or 4. leagues off, and all night likewiſe.

The 5. day at 6. in the morning wee went Weſt northweſt, and Northweſt by Weſt with a ſtanke gale, the Northermoſt land bearing Northweſt off vs, 12. leagues, & the Northeaſt land vnder our Lee within 3. leagues. So we ran along till 12. at noone: then the wind ſhifted vpon vs to the North northweſt, till 3. afternoone, all which time it blew litle but rained much. I went off with our ſkiffe, and ankred in 18. fadome with a grapnell, and found the currant to ſet to the Eaſtwards. At 3. the wind came againe to South a franke gale, ſo we went along within 3. leagues of the ſhore Weſt by South larboord tacked. At 6. at night wee ſhaped our courſe off as neere as we could lie Weſt next hand, and ſo went all night.

The 6. day at 6. a clocke in the fooreneone, being 5. leagues off the ſhore, we went in Northweſt, and ſo the ſhips ſtood along. At 7. a clocke I went aboord the Elizabeth, and ran into the ſhore Northweſt and by North, till we were within a league and a halfe of the land, and ſaw a breach of hallow water vnder our Lee, then we tacked of Weſt being in 7. fadome ſand at 9. a clocke: and ſo running along, we ſaw as we thinke two Iſlands, but durſt not put in with them, leaſt the ſhips ſhould follow vs and be on the Lee ſhore. About 11. a clocke we brought ꝑ Weſtermoſt land North of vs, and ſo we edged off after our ſhips, and at one afternoone I got aboord the Edward againe, and ſtood hence larboord tacked, Weſt & Weſt northweſt, till 8. a clocke at night, that we came to anker in 10. fadome lacke a fourth part, grey ſand, and there rid all night. During which time, we found a tide to run very ſtrong, which runneth in the floud North northeaſt, and the ebbe ſetteth out South southweſt.

The 7. of Auguſt about 7. afternoone, M. Hawkins came aboord vs, with whom my ſelfe, our maſter & pilot had ſome conference what was beſt for vs to do, and how to ſeeke a harbour being on a ſhallow vnknowen to vs all. In the end we thought good at 9. a clocke to weie, & ſend the Francis afore, and to get into deeper water if we could, & when it were cleare to ſeeke the harbour. At 10. a clocke the ebbe was come, & although it were thicke and rainie weather, we weied, and ran North northweſt, and Northweſt til noone, and then ſeeing the miſerable weather of raine & fog, we ankred in 9. and a half fadome, hauing gone before betweene 12. fadome, to 4. fadome, 3. parts ſand without ſight of land. At 4. in the afternoone it cleared vp, and we had ſight of the Elizabeth, and of a ſmall Iſland very high, like the pike of Tenerif, 6. leagues off vs, Northeaſt, then waxing thicke and rainie againe. The 8. after 9. a clocke afore noone, wee weied, and went hence Northweſt, vntill 12. at noone, and from noone till 6. at night we went North next hand to ſeeke the ſhore which we had ſight of at 5. in the afternoone, and bare northeaſt of vs being high land. The round Iſle and two ſmall Iſlands which we ſaw by it, bare Eaſt. and to the Southwards at 5. at night. After 6. at night the Elizabeth came vp and told vs, ſhe loſt an anker and a cable, and was put to Leewards into 17. foote water by truſting to an old cable.

Then the Gallion came roome, and we all ankred at 7. a clocke in 14. fadome ſand: Our ſhip taped vpon the floud Weſt ſouthweſt.

The 9. at 3. in the morning our Admirall ſhot off a peece, and at 4. wee weied and went hence Northeaſt. At 5. in the morning we ſaw the land along, and the Iſland which wee ſaw the night before and diuers other Iſlands about it, and ſo ran in Northeaſt vntill we had brought our ſelues thwart of the riuer, and then ran in Eaſt about 6. at night, being a league within the riuer. Our Admirall ſhot off a piece, and there we ankred in eight fadome ſand. Being at anker, I manned our boat and would haue gone aboord the Admirall, but could not the floud was bent ſo ſtrong, and ſhe rid halfe a mile beneath vs in the tide, but we had no tide.

The

The 10. in the morning at 5. a clocke I sent our skiffe with our pilot in her to find the rode, and watring place: in the meane time at 6. a clocke, we set saile with our ship, and being calme wee towed with our boat vntill 10. and then ankered a mile short of the watering place. After dinner I went a land with my skiffe to finde timber to fish our masse, and searching along the shore wee found a good watring place: and further seeking in the wood, which all the countrey is ful of, and of diuers sortes, we found Limmon trees ful of fruits: also trees growing by the water side with the stalkes hung full of oisters and great periwinckles and crabbes among st them: wee found dyie pomegranates with many other fruits vnknowen to vs. In the meane time our Admirall and the Edward, with the barkes, hauing a gale at West, set saile, and ran vp and ankred in the rode before the accustomed watring place.

About 5. afternoone I came aboord, & brought 6. barricoes of water with me: after, I went and supped aboord with the Generall, where we conferred, and about 8. at night I came aboord again and rid quietly all night.

The 11. day our long boat with the master and pilot, went aland & caried all our water caske, which they washed and filled to season, & our Cooper repaired part of the same. In the meane time I with our carpenters & others went in our skiffe, and found a tree to fish our foremast, which we felled, but not able to carie it away because it would not swim, we left it till a better meane were made to boie it. After I with my companie went vp into a prettie riuer of fresh water, a mile into the countrey, which was full of oisters growing vpon trees, and very fresh water, which done, we gathered some Limmons and came aboord. The 12. being Sunday, we had a generall communion in both the ships. After dinner I went aboord to the generall, and spent the afternoone with him in conference, and supped aboord, and diuers strangers with me.

The 13. of August, we were assembled aboord the Admirall, for the desciding of controuersies, betweene the Captaine, Master, and companie of the Elizabeth: by proofe it appeared vnto vs, that the Master Ralfe Crane, had in speech deserued some punishment, so that we by generall consent agreed, that he should be put into the Bilbowes, which was done: but within halfe an howre, at mine, and others request, he was vpon his submission released. Which done, we dined al with the General, and after dinner, with my boate and skiffe, we went and brought the tree for fishes for our masse into a sandie Baye, by our watring place, to haue it squared, which done with our washers, at night we returned aboord.

The 14. in the forenoone, we washed our ship, and scraped off the Barnackles, the Generall came aboord, and dined with me, and Captaine Drake, Master Hall, and others. After dinner wee went to the old watring place. From thence I went aboord the Elizabeth, and brought diuers things away: then we carried part of our water caske to the other watring place, & there I met with M. Hawkins, M. Maddox, M. Walker, M. Lewes, and diuers others, which al supped aland there with sodden Oysters, & a fresh Mullet, and Rice potage, and came late aboord of all hands.

The 15. day we romaged, and got vp our strong beere out of the foremost roome, and placed it by the maine masse.

The 16. day in the forenoone, we stricke downe most of our Ordinance, and bestowed most of our things abaft masse in hold: and in the afternoone, we tooke in 4. tunnes of water, and certain things, which I fetched out of the Elizabeth of ours.

The 17. wee romaged, and tooke in water, and I kept my cabbin, being sicke: the Generall came aboord, and supped with me.

The 18. day we tooke in water, & romaged our ship all the forenoone. About noone there came downe the riuer a canow with 3. Portingals in it, with whom I had conference aboord ẏ Admiral.

The 19. of August being Sunday, it rained all the night before, and all the day, till 2. a clocke after noone: then I manned our long boat and skiffe, and went a land into the oister baie, where I met captaine Hawkins, captaine Parker, captaine Drake, with all our boats, and 130. men which came all to gather oisters, wherewith we laded our boats, and sent them aboord with the greatest number of our men: and we with the rest went ouer land through the Limmon garden, and gathered many which we caried aboord with vs, and so parted to our charges. The 20. day our company stowed our pinnace, and fetched certaine things from aboord the Elizabeth: the carpenters set vp one sith of our foremast, our Cooper repaired some of ẏ caske which the spring tide had broken.

The master, pilot and I in our skiffe went along the riuer to the vttermost baie, at the comming in at the West end, where we found a flat baie, yet a crooked chanell in it: and we went a league vp a fresh riuer, which at the vpper end was so thicke of oister trees, that wee could not get to the head of it, so we returned backe againe to the West point, and there I obserued the sunne: which done, we felled two Palmito trees and came to the bathing place, where we washed, and refreshed our ſelues, and came aboorde, where wee had prayer, and ſupped, and ſo went to bedde: but before morning we had much winde and raine.

The 21. day in the morning I went aboord the Admirall to viſite him, and found him gone vp the riuer in his pinneſſe, then I brake my faſte with Captaine Hawkins and the reſt: which done, with our newe made nettes we went a fiſhing into the Oyſter bay, where wee pitched our nettes, meaning to haue made a draught: and as wee waded with our nettes, wee ſawe in the water among vs a Crocodile or Alligato, which we aſſaulted, and within 3. houres after many wounds with fiſgigs, pikes, and ſhot, we ſlew him, and brought him aboorde the Admirall, where hee was opened, and flayed, in whoſe body we found many ſmall ſtones, and of Palmito nuts. An Alligato killed.

This day alſo we went a hunting, and being wearie we brought ſome oyſters aboorde the Admirall, and there M. Walker, M. Lewis and I ſupped: which done we came aboord.

The 22. day the Portingals which had bene with vs before, came downe and brought ſome other Portingals and Negroes with them in a ſhippe boate, wherein they brought vs 80. mewes of rice, 500. and odde waight of Oliphants teeth, and a boy Negro, which boy they gaue the Generall, and the rice and teeth for the Elizabeth which wee ſolde them, with all her tackle, and ſailes, hauing neede of the rice, becauſe our meale which we brought out of England, was decayed and naught, whereof we had into the Edward 30. buſhels, which is a mew and a halfe: the Francis had 5. buſhels, and the Gallion had the reſt. And wee had 200. waight of Oliphants teeth, and the Gallion 300. and a halfe, and 6. li. During this time wee ſent our ſkiffe with the Admirals pinneſſe vp the riuer to meete with a Gondall, which the Portingals had ſent for freſh victuals for vs: who not finding her, returned at night: All this day I with M. Walker remained aboorde with the Admirall, and after their dinner and ſupper we ended our buſineſſe, and returned aboord, hauing had many good ſpeaches with the Portingals. Their traffique here with the Portingals.

The 23. day I remained romaging aboorde, in which time the Maſter with the Carpenters, and others went on lande and felled more wood for fiſhes for our maſte, and cut a boates lading of firewood, and brought it aboord.

The 24. day in the forenoone our Generall and Captaine Parker came aboorde, where wee paſſed the forenoone in talke, and after Seruice I ſent for M. Hall, and M. Maddox to dine with them. After dinner Captaine Parker and I, our boates full of men went on lande, and gathered limmons for the companie, which done, wee returned aboorde our ſhippes: in the meane time our boate was brought full of wood aboord, and the Carpenter squared timber.

The 25. day of Auguſt I was ſent for to the Generall about furniſhing vp of the Elizabeth, which was fully accompliſhed and deliuered to the Portingals. Out of her our boate brought peaſe, wood, hoopes, and many other ſuch neceſſaries. The Portingals dined with mee: after dinner I rooted my iarre, placed him, and filled him with water: and this day Iohn Iohnſon brought of the ſettles in my cabbin.

The 26. day being Sunday, Captaine Hawkins, M. Maddox, M. Hall, M. Banniſter, Captaine Drake, M. Euans, M. Hoode, and others came aboorde and heard the Sermon, and dined with me: after dinner we went on ſhoare to the lower point where wee followed the footing of an Oliphant, but ſawe him not, and ſo ſpent the time to and fro till ſupper time, & then came aboorde, and ſupped together, which done, eche man departed to his abode.

This night I was very ſicke, (and ſo were all they that were on ſhoare with mee,) with eating of a fruite of the Countrey, which wee founde on trees like nuttes: Whereof ſome did eate foure, ſome fiue, ſome ſixe, and more, but wee vometted and ſcoured vpon it without reaſon. Sickenes by eating ſome fruite in Guinea.

The 27. day in the afternoone, the olde Greeke Franciſco, came aboorde to mee, with requeſt that hee might haue the Francis boate to goe vp for his owne boate, which was not come downe, with whome I talked of this Countrey and Countrey people, vntill fiue of the clocke at night, that the flood was come, and then I went aboorde to the Admirall, and got his conſent, and ſent themſelues in her: viz. Ferdinando the Portingall Maſter, and his Negro: In the meane time I ſent 4. of my men to watch in the Elizabeth all night.

The 28. day in the morning at 4. a clocke, I ſent my ſkiffe with the Admirals pinneſſe downe to the Weſt point to fiſh, who came aboorde againe at one in the afternoone, and brought as much fiſh as all our companies could eate.

During the time that our boates were a fiſhing, came downe the riuer a Canow & the Portingals former boate, with hennes, orenges, plantans, which they preſented the Generall and mee with: and alſo the reſt of the rice due to vs for the paiment of the Elizabeth. For the partitions whereof I went aboord the Admirall, where I dined. After dinner, M. Euans beganne to barter away The Portingals preſents. M. Euans one of our Marchants.

away certaine of the ships commodities with the Negroes, without acquainting the Generall or any other vntil he had done, whereof grew more words then profit, as by the bookes of Marchandise appeareth. Which done I came aboord, and had 2. of the Portingals to supper with me. About 2. a clocke in the morning we had a Tornado, and much raine.

They search the Countrey.

The 29. about 4. in the morning, I in my skiffe, and Captaine Parker in his pinnesse, went downe to the West point, and there wee landed with 11. men in all well furnished, and searched the woods, plaines and plashes, after an Oliphant, finding the haunt, footing and soyle of many newly done, yet we sawe none of them. We saw hogs, goates, or fawns, and diuers soyts of foules very wilde: and hauing trauailed about two leagues, about noone wee returned to the point, where we landed, and met our boates which had bene at sea, and taken plentie of good fish: there wee refreshed our selues with such victuals as wee had, and came aboorde our seuerall shippes, where I found the Portingals and Negroes, who had dined, and after supped aboorde with me.

After supper I bartred with them certaine linnen cloth, and gaue them 2. redde cappes for 3. Oliphants teeth, as by the notes thereof appeareth.

The 3. day in the morning at three a clocke I sent my pinnesse to sea a fishing, and after our long boate to bee mended and trimmed, which both returned about three in the afternoone: the Generall, Captaine Parker, and Captaine Drake, came aboorde mee at Seruice time, and after examined certaine of the Portingals and Negroes for things by them bought of our companies, and especially for a stolne cloake, which would not be heard of: which done we supped aboorde together, and after they returned to their charges.

The last of August I went on lande, and obserued the sunne, and made proofe of other Instruments, and had the Master, and others with mee: after wee drewe fishe with our nette. In this time Master Shawe, and M. Euans sawe a bullocke and shotte at him: Wee ranged a great deale of grounde, but coulde see none, and so returned aboorde, where supped with mee three of the Portingals. At two of the clocke in the morning, our skiffe went to sea a fishing, and had foule weather.

September.

The first of September about fiue of the clocke in the morning wee set saile, and got downe with little winde at Northeast, to the Westwards two miles: then being calme at 9. a clocke wee ancred.

After Seruice, and dinner, in our long boate, the Master, M. Walker, M. Geffreys and others, went on lande into a bay with our nette, where wee drewe aboue 70. fishes, and cut a palmetter. The General being abroade a fishing with his pinnesse came into me, to whom I gaue part of our fish, and returned aboord where wee found plentie of fish taken in our skiffe, for which wee thanked God, and supped. About 7. at night wee had a sudden flawe of winde, raine, and lightning, till 9. a clocke: after, a faire night.

The 2. we set saile at 6. in the morning, and went out West, betwene 7. and 10. fathome, with a prettie gale at East till 8. then it waxed calme, wee being shotte out of the harbour a league and a halfe. It continued calme this day till one in the afternoone, and then it blew vp at West south west, a good gale, so we stood of North Northwest, and Northwest, til 5. in the afternoone, then we ancred in 12. fathome, being 6. leagues off the point West by North.

This afternoone Captaine Hawkins came aboord to me and brought the samples of cloches, which he desired to haue put into the aduenture, and to haue our Marchants praise them, which to do the better I sent them aboord the Admirall, to conferre with the Generall and the rest. Where they supped, and returned without taking them into the venture, for that they could not agree to Captaine Hawkins liking.

They returne to Sierra leona againe.

The 3. day about 8. a clocke in the forenoone the Generall came aboorde to mee, complayning that his maine crosse trees were broken, and therefore determined to goe into Sierra leona againe when the winde blew: at 12. at noone we set saile, and went in East southeast, and Southeast, and Southsoutheast, being carried to the Northwarde with the floud. And at 7. at night wee ancred in 8. fathome 3. leagues of the entrance, West Northwest.

All this day the General remained aboord with me, dinner supper, and Seruice, til we ancred, which time we discoursed, &c.

The 4. day about 11. at noone we set saile, and stood in Southeast with the ebb vntill we were within a mile of the entrance, and then finding it calme wee ancred in 14. fathome 2. mile of the West point: in comming to ancre, our quarter Masters, let slip an ancre, and ne we cable, ende for ende through negligence: Captaine Drake being a shoare with his boat a fishing, put off thinking to recouer his barke but could not, and with much paine got aboorde me where he supped, and his companie, and stayed all night.

The

The 5. of September in the forenoone about 8. a clocke we ſweeped, & dragged for our ancre, and cable, but found it not: likewiſe at 3. in the afternoone till 4. then wee ſet ſaile, and went into the riuer, and ranne in Southeaſt from 4. fathomes and a halfe, to 14. fathome, and moared by our Admirall thwart of the Oyſter bay in 8. fathome at 5. a clocke at night, hauing left a barrell boy where we ridde, for a marke to finde our ancre. The oyſter bay.

About 6. came the olde Portingall, and 3. more with him, and brought me Orenges, and Plantans, and ſupped with me. After ſupper they went aboord the barke.

The 6. before day, both our boates went downe with the Admirals boates to fiſhe, and dragge for our ancre and cable, and found it not: after our ſkiffe went a fiſhing, and tooke plentie. I being aboord at dinner, the Portingals came and dined with me. After dinner, in the boate I went aboord the Generall, and there left my Carpenter: my ſelfe, with M. Walker, M. Maddox, and others, with our net drew good plentie of fiſh, whereof I carried part aboord the General and ſupped with him. After ſupper M. Walker and I came aboord.

The 7. day in the morning I ended many ordinarie buſineſſes: after dinner I called the General, and went downe with the net into the accuſtomed bay, & there drew 120. fiſh, whereof were ſome great mullets. The Generall went aboorde to ſuppe with Captaine Drake in the Francis: I ſtayed late on ſhoare, and ſupped aboord with our companie, all ſauing M. Walker, who ſupped and remained all night with the Generall aboorde Captaine Drake in the Francis.

The 8. day our companies of all handes went on ſhoare, and ſet vp a Smiths forge, and an ouen to bake bread: I went in to the Cockle bay with our net, and finding no plentie of fiſh there, went to the other bay, and brought aboord plentie of fiſh, and Captaine Drake with mee whome I met there without a boate, and 4. men with him. A Smiths forge and an ouen ſet vp in Sierra leona.

The 9. day being Sunday, M. Walker went aboorde the Francis to miniſter the Communion to that companie, and there he dined: I went aboorde the Admirall, and there heard Seruice, and there dined: after dinner moſt part of our people went on land, with the Generall to plaſh trees, and make place for the Carpenters and Smithes on ſhoare: and I in my ſkiffe went downe and woke fiſh in our nette for ſupper, and returned before night, and ſent the Generall part for his ſupper. Certaine of our men lay on lande to keepe watche with Captaine Parker, to garde the Smiths and Carpenters. Watch on land.

The 10. day at 4. a clocke in the morning I went downe in our ſkiffe, and ſtoode till 11. at noone to kill a Pellicane, but coulde not: in the meane time our long boate went along with the net, and at noone with both the boates we returned aboord well fiſhed, where I founde M. Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, and M. Hall, who eate there, and at night went aboord their ſhippe: after ſupper I ſent 6. men to watch on ſhoare with Captaine Parker.

The 11. day at 6. a clocke in the morning I went downe with my boate, & the Admirals boat, and dragged for our ancre, but found no hope thereof, and returned aboord at 3. in the afternoone: at 5. came M. Walker in our ſkiffe, and brought the Generall, and M. Maddox aboord with him, where we ſupped and were merry together: after ſupper eche returned to his place: about 11. a clocke at night, we had a great ſtorme of winde, and raine at Eaſt Southeaſt.

The 12. day about 8. in the forenoone came downe the riuer a boat with three other Portingals with whome the Generall bargained, to let them haue 3. barrels of ſalt, for 5. barrels of rice, and after that rate to exchange for 40. barrels, which hee acquainted mee with: afterwards I dined among the Portingals with him, after dinner I went on ſhoare to the ouen, and to the Carpenters. After I had bene on ſhoare and ſeene the worke there, I returned aboord, & there ſupped with me the General, M. Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, and 7. Portingals, after ſupper eche returned to his place. Immediatly after it rained and blew much at Northnortheaſt. About one a clocke after midnight we had a tornado, which continued 3. houres at Eaſt next hand. Traffique with 3. other Portingals. viz. 1. Lewis Henriques a dweller here about 20. yeres. 2. Matthew Fernandos Captaine. 3. Pedro Vaz pilot.

The 13. in the afternoone, the Portingals came againe aboord me, and brake their faſt with me: after I ſent by them by the riuer in my ſkiffe 12. barrels of ſalt, and gaue them a bottle of wine for one of the ſauage Queenes. The Carpenters felled a tree, and squared it for planke and board. The M. had our foreſaile on land, and began to binde it, but not hauing time to mende the ſame, brought it aboord, where we ſupped with fiſh, which came from the nette.

The 14. day after drinking our boate went on land with our foreſaile, and men to pit and ſawe the tree, felled & hewed the day before: they came aboord to dinner, & after dinner they went againe and ended the ſaile, and cut a boate full of wood and at night returned aboord.

The 15. after dinner, the Maſter, M. Walker, and I, accompanied, with 12. other trauelled ouer a great deale of ground to finde ſome cattle, but founde none: & comming home thorow the Oyſter bay, I founde of my company and of the Admirals together roſting oyſters: and going from They enter vp to ſearch the Country.

them, Thomas Russell one of my companie sawe a strange fishe named Vtelif, which had fought with a Crocodile, and being hurt came neere the shoare where he waded in, and by the taile drew him a lande, and there slewe him, and sent the Generall the hinder halfe of him: the head part I kept, in whose nose is like a sword a bone of two foote long, with 23. pyckes of a side, sharpe and strange: The body we did eate, and was like a sharke.

A sword fish killed.

The 16. day being Sunday we all kept aboorde till after Seruice, and dinner, then M. Walker and I with others, went aboorde the Admirall, where I had diuers debatements with the Generall about our affaires, and there supped, about 8. a clocke we returned aboord.

The 17. day in the morning I sent Nicholas Allen, and two more of my Carpenters to helpe the Admirall about their maine maste: I sent our Cooper, and men to helpe him to cut hoopes in the wood. After dinner with my long boate, and the Master with me, we went aboord the Admirall, and there tooke in the nette, and Captaine Parker and the Master Hall, and went ouer to the sande to the Northwards, in the riuer a mile aboue the roade. And sounding when we went of the Southside, had 14. fathome, and sholded by litle and litle, to halfe a fathome and a foote water, on the sand, which is bare two mile long at quarter ebb, hard sand: we dyd we there with our nett, but tooke little fish, and so turned aboord.

The 18. day we begame a newe fishing nette for our selues, and remained busie about it all day aboorde: our Cooper cut hoopes, and the Baker baked bread on lande: M. Walker supped aboord the Admirall.

Pellicane bay.

The 19. day before 3. in the morning, I went downe in the Admirals pinnesse, which went with the net to fish. They landed me besides Pellicane bay, and there I tooke vp my standing vntil 3. afternoone: in which time I sawe a crane, a martine, and diuers other foules, but shot at none but one hearne, which I killed: after came aboorde the Edward, where the General, M. Maddox, M. Cotton, and Captaine Parker supped with me.

The 20. day after dinner, I sent my boate with the Master, and companie with him to dragge for our ancre & cable, who could neither finde the same nor see our boop, which wee left riding by a small cagger, for a marke for the other greater ancre, so I accompt all lost. By the way in their going downe the riuer they put me a lande by the Pellicane bay, and there I stood till their returne about 5. at afternoone, and came backe againe with them, and Hooker killed a monkie with a piece. At my returne aboord I found the Portingals caruel come downe the riuer at ancre by our ships.

A Portingal caruel.

The 21. day in the morning the Generall sent for me and M. Walker, who went aboord them, where hee acquainted vs with the faultes founde in his maine maste, perished in the parteners, which to mende I sent him two of my Carpenters, and two ancre stockes to fishe the same: Also hee opened before vs two and M. Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, and Captaine Parker, certaine wordes which happened betweene him and the Master Hall, howe Hall saide vnto him among other speaches, that hee was there appointed Master, as hee was Generall, and that hee would be Master, though hee said nay: the which wordes the Master confessed not to speake in effect, but vnfit speaches passed betweene them. Whereupon hee demaunded our opinions, whether he might displace him or not, which wee graunted hee might vpon so iust a cause, but intreated the Generall rather to accept his submission, which Hall willingly yeelded vnto, which followed presently. At Seruice the Master openly before the whole companie acknowledged to haue ouershotte himselfe in vndecent speaches, and craued pardon of the Generall, who willingly forgaue the offence as though it had not bene committed. After dinner I went on lande, the Master, and M. Walker with me, to ouersee the Baker, the carpenters, the smith, and our ropemakers, al which were at worke on land.

After I had bene on land, comming aboord, and captaine Parker with me, we went aboord the caruel, and there sawe 30. or 40. slaues fettred together, the men: but the women and children went loose. After the view of them, their behauiour & other trifles there seene, I went aboord. At supper came certaine of the Portingals to me & dranke with me, & after vsed long talke, and so departed.

The 22. day in the morning I sent my workmen ashoare, and about 8. a clocke, I and M. Walker, with others went downe in my boat to the Pellicane bay, but got nothing: in the meane time they in the boat went downe to the point, & gathered a good many of great oysters, and so returned aboorde about 6. at night well wet with raine, and stonge with Bees.

Bees in Guinea.

The 23. day being Sunday, while we were at the Sermon came the Portingal Captaine Mathew Fernandos, & brought me a Negro boy of 7. yeeres old, which he gaue me, whose name was Iohn Primero. After he had dined with me, came captaine Hawkins, captaine Drake, M. Hoode, M. Faireweather, M. Taileboyes, and M. Bannister, with many others to visite me: after we had talked talked a while together, I went aboorde the Admirall and M. Walker, where wee agreed that the Portingall Captaine shoulde goe to the riuer for our skiffe, who was contented to goe: after many debatements with the Generall, and supper with him I came aboorde.

The 24. day we rommaged to take vp some of our ordinance, & perusing our water caske, which was filled not 20. dayes before, stowed with greene wood cut in this place found the same to bee eaten with wormes, which caused the greater part of the water to leake out, which troubled vs much. M. Blackoller, & Robert Rose went downe in our boate to dragge for our ancre & cables but found them not: we tooke vp 7. pieces of ordinance, filled some water, and amended some part of our caske. This afternoone the Generall came aboord to me, & conferred about, &c. About 5. a clocke afternoone, among others I went on lande to the buriall of William Marcham M. of the Francis, who died the same afternoone before. Greene wood subiect to wormes. The death of William Marcham.

The 26. we filled water, mended our caske and stowed many things in hold, & ended the corke, and lead, and all things to the net belonging: this afternoone the king Fatama, sent our Generall a monkie, and an Oliphants toothe, by a messenger a Negro of some accompt. Presents sent to our men by K. Fatama.

The 27. day at 3. a clocke in the morning the Master and I, well accompanied went downe in my long boate to the fishing bay, where seeing the footing of many cattle, we drew a rope thwart the necke of the land, & placed men to gard the straight: the rest went into the wood to driue downe the cattle, who came so fast vpō our men that one of them ouerthrew W. Towrson, that he lay dead in a quarter of an houre, and being recouered in 2. houres hee knewe not what he did. Thus we wearied our selues not being able to kill any of them, although we gaue them many stripes, and so returned to our fishing againe, where we tooke more fish then we could eate.

This morning came the same messenger aboorde, to present mee with an Oliphants toothe, which came to the General from king Fatama, but finding me absent, receiued such intertainment as the Marchants and M. Walker gaue him, & so went aboord the Admirall, taking the tooth with him. There he receiued of the General to present the king as much scarlet clothe as would make him a cloake, & certaine camas: and for ỳ Queene a wrought Moscouy smocke, & a looking glasse.

The 28. day in the morning came M. Maddox and other aboord mee: after breakefast we went downe a fishing with our net, & returned aboord to supper, and when we had supped, they went aboord. The 29. day after dinner M. Walker and I went aboord the Admirall, and grew in argument concerning our going roome to the yles of Cape Verde, or whether it were better to proceed forwards with the prouision we now haue. At this conference was the General, Captaine Hawkins, Captaine Parker, M. Maddox, M. Walker and I: after sundry debatements we concluded to proceede, and with this conclusion we supped there together. After supper by the same consent, I went aboord the Elizabeth and the caruel, and brought their sailes aboord the Admirall, fearing they would saile away, and deceiue me of my boate and salt: which done, I imparted to the Master, the pilot, M. Shaw, and M. Geffreis, what had bene determined, and left 6. of my men aboord the Portingals to looke to them.

The 30. and last day of September, the Francis Cooke came aboorde about 7. a clocke in the afternoone from fishing with my net, and brought among other fishe, a sea calfe (as wee called it) with haire and lympits, and barnacles vpon him, being 7. foote long, 4. foote 9. inches about: which to see I sent for the Generall, and such as pleased to come see it out of the Admirall, who came and brought with him M. Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, Captaine Parker, and most part of his companie, who hauing viewed the beast, which was ougly being aliue, it being flayed, opened, and dressed, prooued an excellent, faire, and good meate, broyled, rosted, sodde and baked, and sufficed all our companies for that day. A strange fish taken.

This day during the time that our dinner was dressing, the Generall assembled vs before named in Commission into my cabbin, where he propounded diuers questions and doubts touching our going forwards, all which being answered, it was agreed to proceed for the straights of Magellan: and being in the South sea, to deale as occasion should be giuen. In this conference grew many hotte, and disdainfull speaches and comparisons betweene Captaine Hawkins, and Captaine Parker, and also the Generall, as offended with Captaine Hawkins, vsed speaches to him very displeasant, which with much adoe was all in the ende pacified, and so went to Seruice, and after to dinner: then ashoare, and aboord againe to Seruice, and supper, so that we passed the latter part of this day in much good fellowship, the more, because my skiffe came downe with another great boate laden with rice for our salt, whereof we tooke in part.

The 1. day of October in the morning, we tooke in to make vp our full complement of rice 20. barrels for the 12. barrels of salt, deliuered ỳ Portingal, Lewis Henriques before. About 7. a clocke in the morning ỳ General sent for me & M. Walker, touching certaine speaches, that Miles Euans October.

one of our Marchants vsed at dinner aboorde the Gallion in the absence of the Generall, which was set downe in Articles, and hee charged with them, whereof hee confessed a great part, which seemed so odious, and vnhonest, that M. Walker, M. Maddox, M. Parker, the Lieutenant, and I, concluded with the Generall that he might displace him, which thing Euans earnestly often desired, saying that he would go into England well ynough, as from hence in the Elizabeth with the Portingals, with whom in the afternoone he made freight, and carried his chest, a barrel, & 2. packs aboord, which I, M. Parker, and Lieutenant Hawkins searched by the Generals order.

Miles Euans departed from the company, promising to remaine with the Portingals.

Hauing done these things, wee found that the Portingals had not brought vs rice for so much salt, as they promised the Generall, who sent Captaine Parker and others to searche for the same in the Elizabeth and the caruell, where was found good store which wee tooke part of, and payed them salt according to our bargaine. Further wee found searching for rice a boye Negro bigger then my boy Iohn Primero, which I changed him for: and by the Generals order we tooke foure men Negroes, 2. for the Edward, and 2. for the Admirall, for which wee gaue the owners certaine carsey, and other things, as pease, biket, &c.

The 2. day about sixe in the morning wee set saile hauing little winde: the Captaine with the Master, and other of their companie of the Portingals came aboorde mee complaining that the carsey by them receiued for the foure Negroes of the Generall was not sufficient for their payment, whereupon I gaue them scarlet caps, and other things to their content, who finding themselues well pleased, departed away in the Gondall, and we hauing litle winde, got downe thwart of the fishing bay, and there came to ancre about nine a clocke the same forenoone.

About one a clocke I sent my skiffe with the nette a fishing, which came aboorde, and brought fish for supper plentie.

Their 2. departure from Guinea, where they remained from the 4. of August.

The 3. day about two a clocke in the morning wee set saile, and went hence Southwest by West till two in the afternoone then being litle winde: at 5. we ancred sixe leagues East South east of the Southermost part of the lande in fifteene fathome, and there wee ridde till eight a clocke at night, and then set saile with a stiffe gale at Northeast, which sometime blewe, and sometime was litle winde, and so continued all night. This afternoone Captaine Hawkins, and M. Cotton came to supper with me, and before we could set them aboord came a ternado, so that they taried all night aboord with me.

At 7. at night a great Ternado at Northeast.

The fourth day about eight a clocke in the forenoone wee set Captaine Hawkins, and master Cotton aboord the Admirall, and went Southwest by West till two afternoone, then being litle winde, we made small way, or none at all till the next day: in the afternoone we tooke in our boate and skiffe, and at night shifted our companie because some were dead, and wee had taken in more men out of the Elizabeth.

The 5. day it was calme all day till sixe at night, wee lay to and fro driuing, which I can make no allowance of: at sixe at night wee went South by West with a small gale til one at midnight, then wee mette the winde at South Southwest, and went West by North, till three a clocke following: then came a pretie gale at Northeast, with which we went South Southwest til six in the morning.

The 6. day at 6. in the morning wee had a small gale at West, and went starre boord tacked South a while there being litle winde: we went Southwest by South til 8. a clocke, from 8. we went Southsouthwest, with a small gale all day, and all night.

The 7. day litle winde or none but lay still among great shoales of foules, and sculls of fish all day and night: by our ordinary Compasse in this place the sunne rose at East, and by South, and to the Southwards, and set West by South to the southwards.

The eight day little winde, or none: all day and night wee laye driuing among fishe and foule.

The 9. day we had in the forenoone some raine, and a small gale at Northeast, which continued not long, but was calme till midnight, then we had a Ternado of winde, Northeast and raine: after that a small gale at East and southeast all night.

Winde East Southeast.

The tenth day wee went all the forenoone South Southwest starre-boorde tacked, after the winde shrinking to the Southeast by South, wee went South, till fiue afternoone: this afternoone the Generall in his long boate, accompanied with M. Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, Captaine Parker, M. Cotton, M. Hoode and others came aboorde to see mee: after drinking departed away againe: but when they were in the boate, their shippe not comming roome for them, I was faine to shoote off two minions to make them looke out. After fiue a clocke in the afternoone it continued calme till after midnight, then had wee a Ternado, and after a small gale for 3. houres, at East Northeast, with which we went South southwest.

The

The 11. day it was calme, till 2. of the clocke afternoone, then it began to blowe a ſmall gale. At 6. it blewe more, and ſo it continued all night large.

The 12. day we had raine at noone: all the reſt of the day, and night, we went as the wind did ſuffer vs, ſometime Weſt, ſometime Southweſt, and ſometime South.

The 13. day we had litle wind all day, and all night, but went our courſe South Southweſt, and ſometime South by Weſt.

The 14. day we had litle wind, or none. In the afternoone came Captaine Hawkins, and other from the Gallion, and Captaine Drake, who brought me a peece of a Porpoſe with him, which we eate to ſupper: after ſupper they departed aboord the Francis: all the night following, it was in manner calme. This day was Iohn Roberts, and Iohn Hillarde whipped at the maſte, for fighting at dinner.

The 15. day it was calme all day, and night, except two houres. In the morning it rained, & blew a ſmall gale, at Northeaſt. This forenoone Captaine Drake ſent for Maſter Walker, and me, to dinner, where we met Captaine Hawkins, and others. After dinner we returned aboord againe, and Captaine Hawkins went aboord the Admirall. Wind northweſt.

The 16. day it was calme, till 7. at night, then we had a prettie gale at Southweſt, with which we went Weſt, and ſometime Weſt northweſt, till 2. of the clocke in the morning, then was it calme all the reſt of the night. This day were Robert Parker, Marke Thoughts, Iohn Roberts, and Iohn Collyns, brought to the capſtone, and there whipped naked, for ſtealing certaine victuall out of the Stewards roome, the Sunday night before. Correction.

The 17. day at ten of the clocke, we had a prettie gale, at Eaſt northeaſt, which laſted till 4. afternoone, then had we leſſe wind at Southeaſt, which continued all night: ſo we went ſometime Southſoutheaſt, and ſometime Southweſt by South, and Southweſt.

The 18. day it was a ſmall gale all daye, and all night, ſo that wee went our courſe South ſouthweſt.

The 19. day we went our courſe South ſouthweſt, till midnight, then being in manner calme, we went but litle all night.

The 20. day it was calme, till ten of the clocke afternoone, then we went Southweſt, with a ſmall gale, at Eaſt ſoutheaſt, with which we went South ſouthweſt till midnight, there being calme, we went litle all night.

The 21. it was calme, til ten afternoone, then a gale till 12. at noone, then calme againe, till 3. afternoone, then it blewe a ſmall gale at Southeaſt, with which we went South ſouthweſt, and Southweſt among til midnight, but then it was calme all the reſt of the night.

The 22. it was calme in maner all day, and night, ſauing at 2. of the clocke after midnight, we had an extreme Ternado of wind, raine, thunder, and lightning. The wind laſted not an howre, but the raine and a calme continued till day.

The 23. day we had much raine, calme, and thicke weather, ſo that being ſeparated the night before in a Ternado, from our Admirall we loſt the ſight of him many times: yet when it cleered vp, we ſawe each other, but hauing no winde, could not come neere together by two leagues. All this night we bare a good ſaile, and had a reaſonable gale, with which wee went betweene the South by Weſt, and the Southweſt. In the morning wee ſawe the Admirall to Leewardes, ſo farre as wee might deſcrye her ſayles, with whome the Francis, and wee went roome. Wind Eaſt Southeaſt.

The 24. day in the forenoone, we went roome to our Admirall, Weſt ſouthweſt, and Weſt, till ten of the clocke. After dinner we hailed her, and went from ten in the forenoone, ſouth ſouthweſt next hand, all day and night following, with a franke gale.

The 25. day we went Southweſt next hand, all day, and night, with a franke gale.

The 26. day and night, we went with a prettie gale, betweene the South ſouthweſt, and the Weſt ſouthweſt, but might haue beene nearer the winde, but for going roome with the Admirall.

The 27. day we went Weſt ſouthweſt, and ſouthweſt by Weſt among, with a prettie gale, and ſometime ſouthweſt all day, and night.

The 28. day after dinner, our Admirall laye by the Lee, to ſtoppe a leake in his bowes, and was faine to ſlinge three men ouer boord to doe it: in the meane tyme we came vppe, and hayled them: they tolde vs that if the winde ſcanted one point more, they meant to caſt about, which we thought not beſt, for certaine cauſes. Wherevpon we tooke in our ſprit ſaile, and hayled aft our ſheetes cloſe, ſo that whereas all day before we went Southweſt, and little better, nowe we went next hand South ſouthweſt, but alwaies better then Southweſt by South all night following.

This

This euening I set the Sunne at his going downe, hee set more then halfe a point to the South of West by South.

The next morning, I obserued the Sunnes rising, which was to the Southwards, a little of East by South.

The 29. day after dinner, the Francis boate with her Master, and Master Dore, came aboord of vs, for a hogshead of porke by the Generals order, which was deliuered them. All this day and night we went next hand, southwest by south.

The 30. daye wee went next hande Southsouth West all daye, and all night, with a pretie gale.

The 31. day, and last of October, we went all day, and all night, south southwest, and Southwest by south among, sauing two watches, which were calme in the night, after the raine.

Nouember. The first day of Nouember, in the forenoone, we tooke in our maine saile, to mende it: in the meane time, the Admirall came vp by vs, and desiring me, with my Master, and Master Blackcoller, to come aboord to him, about certaine conference, hee sent his boate for vs, where by him was propounded, whether it were best for vs to stande on with the coast of Brasile, as we did, or els to stande about starboord tacked to the Eastwards: whereupon diuers of their Charts and reckonings were shewed: by some it appeared, we were 115. leagues, by some 150. leagues, by some 140. leagues, and some a great deale further shoot of Brasile, next hand northeast of vs: but all agreed to be within 20. minutes of the line, some in the line, some to the north, some to the south of the line.

After many debatements, it was agreed by most consent to stande on for the coast of Brasile, except the wind changed, and there to doe, as weather should compell vs. In this consultation, we had speeches of courses, and places of meeting, if by misfortune we should be separated, wherein was no full order concluded, but that we should speake euery night with the Admirall, if we conueniently might, and so to appoint our course from time to time, if wee lost companie, to stape 15. daies in Riuer de Plate, and from thence to goe for the Streights, and there to ride, and water, and trimme our shippes (in no certaine place named.)

After dinner, we returned aboord our shippe, Captaine Drake, and his Master, to their barke, and went hence as neere as we could lie south southwest, and southwest by south all night following, with a fresh gale.

The second day and night, we went next hand south by west, and sometime south southwest among, with a franke gale.

The third day, we went south by west next hand, all day and all night.

The fourth day in like manner.

The fift day wee went South by west all daye, and all night wee went South with a franke gale.

The sixt day we went south next hand all day, and night, and south by west among.

The seuenth day we went south, and south by west all day and night, with a franke gale.

The eight day we went south, and south by west all day, and night, with a franke gale.

The ninth day we went south next hand all day, and night, with a franke gale.

The 10. day we went south next hand, and south by west, all day and night, lesse wind.

The 11. day being Sunday, in the forenoone, Captaine Hawkins, and Captaine Drake, came aboord, and dined with me. After dinner came the General, Master Maddox, Master Parker, Master Bannister, Master Cotton, and diuers others, to visite Master Walker, who sickened the Friday before of a Callentura. After they had drunke, and eate some iunkets, they all departed to their charges. We went all day, and all night, south, and south by west among.

M. Walker sicke of a Callentura.

The 12. in the afternoone, Master Maddox, Master Hall, Master Bannister, and other, came aboord to visite Master Walker. After a time of abode with him, they returned to the Gallion all againe, except Master Maddox, who remained with Master Walker here aboord.

This night Master Maddox, and I, beheld many constellations in the firmament, and sixe downe certaine new starres, raised to the southwards. All day and night, we went south, and south by East among.

Obseruation of the south Hemisphere.

The 13. at 6. in the morning, our misen tie brake, and the yard fell downe, many men being neere the same, yet God be thanked, it hurt no man, but it brake in peeces, and was spliced, and vp againe before noone.

This forenoone the General, M. Bannister, Captaine Parker, M. Tailboyes, and others came aboord, & visited M. Walker, and went aboord the Gallion againe, & M. Maddox with them, leauing M. Bannister with vs, til afternoone that ꝑ boate brought M. Maddox againe: then departed

Master

Master Bannister, Captaine Hawkins, and all, except Master Maddox, who still remained with Master Walker, who made his Will, this afternoone. We went all this day and night South by East, with a flawne sheete, and a franke gale. M. Walkers will made.

The 14. day afternoone, Master Walker was let blood againe: afterward, about 9. of the clocke, Master Maddox, and Master Bannister, went aboord the Gallion againe. Also the same afternoone, came the Master, and others of the Francis, to see master Walker, and in the afternoone Master Maddox, and Master Bannister, came againe to visite him. All this day, and night, wee went south by East, with a franke gale. Wind East northeast.

The 15. day afternoone, came Master Maddox, and Master Bannister, aboord, and brought a potion to Master Walker. Afternoone the Generall, Captaine Hawkins, Captaine Parker, Master Maddox, and others, came aboord to visite Master Walker, &c. All this daye, and night, wee went south by East our course, with a flowne sheete, all sailes drawing.

The 16. day we went our course south by East, till noone, and then by the Sunne finding our selues in vpwards of 17. degrees, we shaped our course south, and so went till next morning, with a large and franke gale. This morning the Sunne rose East by south, and to the southwards, and set the same night betweene the southwest by West, and the West southwest, rather to the southwards.

The 17. day afternoone, we shot off three peeces of Ordinance, in honour of our Queenes Natiuitie, whome God preserue, and grant her a long life, and prosperous raigne ouer the Realme of England, and all other of vs her subiects. This day after dinner came Master Maddox, and Captaine Drake, with others, to take their leaue of Master Walker, as I, with all my companie had done before, supposing him past hope of recouerie. At 4. of the clocke, finding our selues in 19. degrees to the southwards of the line, and cleere of the shoales, called by vs Powles, we went hence south southwest all night following. 19. degrees of southerly latitude.

The 18. day, being Sunday, after dinner, the Generall, Master Maddox, Captaine Parker, & many other, came aboord, and visited Master Walker: which done, they thanke, & departed aboord againe. All this day, and night, we went our course southwest by south, with a franke gale.

The 19. day, about noone, the Sunne was our Zenith, being declined to the southwards, 21. degrees, and 33. minuts, where we found the aire fresh, and temperate, as in England in June, when a fresh gale of winde doth blow in the heate of the day, but the euening, the night, and the morning, are more fresh, and colder here, then it is in England, either in June, or Julie. All this day, and night, we went our course southwest by south, with a good gale: the afternoone Master Bannister brought Master Walker a potion, and Captaine Hawkins came with him: there past speeches betwixt Master Bannister, and me. Cold euenings

The 20. day we went all day, and all night, southwest by south our course, with a fresh gale, and coole weather, wind sometime northeast, and sometime East northeast.

The 21. day afternoone, we brought our best maine top saile to the yard, and cut thole for many vses: also we began to make a newe maine coyle and bonnet, and fitted our stancions for our lights, vpon the vpper decks, as afte maste. This day and night, we went our course, with a franke gale, southwest by south.

The 22. day we went our course, southwest by south, till 8. of the clocke at night: then the wind shifted to the south southeast, so that we could lie but southwest by west, till 12. al night, with a good gale: the rest till day, was in a manner calme.

The 23. in the morning, it was raine, and calme, till 8. of the clocke, then we went West, with a small gale, till noone, and from noone, till the next morning, we went southwest by south, & southwest among, our course. Wind northeast.

The 24. day we went our course all day, and night, southwest, with a small gale.

The 25. being Sunday, in the morning, the Generall, and Captaine Parker, with Master Maddox, came aboord to visite Master Walker: which done, we perused our Masters and Pilots plats, and reckonings, and after I went aboord, and dined with the Generall, where after dinner, we also perused the Master, and Pilots charts and reckonings, aboord the Gallion, where by wee founde our selues farre off the lande, and thought good to edge in with the shoare Southwest, least our water should faile vs, and then being becalmed farre of, might be for want distressed. After this determination, I returned aboord againe, and went all day, and night, our course Southwest.

The 26. day we went our course all day, and night, southwest: this euening the Admirall hailed vs, and told vs he would put into the Riuer De Plate.

The 27. day we went our course all day, and night, southwest next hand.

The

The 28. day little wind all the forenoone, at noone the wind shifted to the South, with raine, til 3. of the clocke afternoone: then it blewe at East southeast, till 4. in the morning: at 4. it changed to the East northeast. All this time we went our course southwest, except sometime we had a lache to the westwards, after the Admirall.

The 29. day at noone, wee altered our course to the West southwest, and so haled in with the land all night, being cleere weather, and a faire night, but a stoute gale all night.

Great cold in the latitude of 28. degrees.

The 30. being S. Andrewes day, and the last of Nouember, at 5. of the clocke in the morning, we had much wind at South, and south by West, and very colde weather, which chooke vs into a coarse, and bonnet of each. At 4. of the clocke afternoone, the wind changed to the southwest, and blew very much, and rained, being so cold, that we were glad to put on winter apparell. So wee stood close by northwest, and west northwest all night.

December.

The first of December, about sixe of the clocke in the morning, wee sawe lande on the coast of Brasile, in the height of 28. degrees, or there abouts, which bare northwest, and was 8. leagues from vs very high land. We stoode in with it, being much winde, and comming neere, found diuers Ilands: and seeing the Francis, would not come roome, nor runne a heade vs, we stoode in with the shoare, and sounded in 30. fathome oaze, three leagues off the lande, bearing from the West northwest to the north northwest of vs, and so stoode in till it shoalded orderly into seuen fathome, within a mile of a head lande: then perceauing a breach ouer our bowe, and no hope of a good harbour in that place, we bare vp roome, and our Admirall after vs, whome we haled: then he tolde vs he would seeke harbour to Leewards, requiring me to goe a heade. Then seeing the barke was a sterne, I hoised out my skiffe, and sette her masse and saile, taking her ging, and Tobias, one of my Masters Mates with me, and ranne before the shippe, sounding in 15. fathom faire sand, leauing a ledge of rockes a sea boord of vs: so the shippes, and the barke looked vp vnder a head land, and ankered in eight fathome, halfe a mile off the land, hauing brought the head land, which lieth in 27. degrees, 50. minuts, south southeast of them, and the North land northeast of them.

The latitude of 27. degrees, 50. minuts.

I stoode on with the skiffe, hoping to find a better harbour to Leeward three leagues, but it proued not so: wherefore I returned, and in my way aboord, I met with a rocke in the sea, where we landed, and killed good store of fowle, and after I went aboord the Admirall, where I presented him with fowle, and returned aboord to supper.

In this time our boates had bene aland, and found water, ballaste, and two decaied houses, as they told me, and our men aboord hooked fresh fishe. This night we rid quietly.

The second being Sunday, in the morning, our Generall, Captaine Hawkins, Master Maddox, and others, came aboord to visite Master Walker: during his being here aboord, a sudden quawme came ouer his stomake, which made him scowre vp, and downward: then I sent for Master Parker, and with him came Master Bannister: after he began to be a little better, we all, except the Generall, which remained sicke in my cabbin, went aboord the Gallion to dinner, which was appointed the night before. This forenoone our Masters moared our shippes further into the Baye. We brought the South point southeast of vs, and the northland northeast, and so rid.

A Baye.

Wels made by our men.

After dinner, Captaine Parker, with my boate, and company, went a lande, and there placed pipes, and made three Wels. In the meane time, I accompanied with Master Hawkins, Master Maddox, Master Cotton, and diuers of mine owne people landed farther within the Baye, and found two riuers of fresh water, and a good fishing place. Presently I sent a boord for my net, with which at one draught, we drew 600. great Mullets, and fiue great Balles, the like draught was neuer seene with so small a net: with which we went aboord, giuing to the Admirall 240. to the Francis 80. and the rest our companie spent, and gaue Almightie God thankes for his great goodnes.

An exceeding great draught of fishe.

The woods set on fire by our men.

All this while was captaine Parker, and others, gone into the land, and fired the woods, which burned extremely: at length we all met, and supped aboord the Edward with mee, and after supper departed aboord to their charges. All this night we had faire weather.

The third day in the morning, our Carpenter calked without board, and the Master, and others, tooke vp all the merchandize in the sterne sheetes to the keele, and there put downe a boates loding of stone: and seeing the merchandize well conditioned, stowed the same againe: in the meane time, my selfe, and others in our boates, scraped off the wormes, and washed the ruder, and part of one side of our ship.

After dinner, the Master, Pilot, and I, went a shoare, and obserued the Sunne at noone, which being past, with our net wee drewe plentie of diuers sortes of fishes, and went from that Baye to the watering place: from thence, aboord the Generall, which had taken Phisicke, and gaue them them and the Francis fiſhe for their companies, and ſo went aboord, where our companie had ro-maged a foremaſt, ſo that this afternoone we tooke in two boates more lading of ſtones afore-maſte.

The 4. day in the morning, I ſent 30. men aland, ſome to cut hoopes, ſome to cut fire wood, and ſome to mend our maine ſaile: the reſt aboord emptied our caſke, which was filled with ſalt water, to ſtiffen the ſhippe, and with Ordinance, and all our meanes trimmed her ouer to port, and lightned her ſtemme, that the Carpenter might the better come to the leake. After dinner we ſcra-ped and waſhed all her ſtarboord ſide, and tooke in a boates loding of ſtones.

This afternoone the Generall ſent for me to goe aland with him in his Pinneſſe, with whome I went, and tooke my nette with mee, and there tooke good ſtore of fiſhe, eſpecially fiſhes called Dores: after we went to the watring place, and came aboord the ſooner, becauſe the General found himſelfe ſicke, whome I ſet aboord in my ſkiffe, and went aboord my ſelfe, and ſent for our people from ſhoare, and gaue God thankes, and ſupped late. The neceſſarie vſe of nets.

The 5. day betimes in the morning, we ſent our ſaile menders a ſhoare, and trimmed ouer our ſhippe to ſtarboord, and waſhed the other ſide. In the meane while, our Cooper, and others, trim-med our caſke, and others placed it in holde. Alſo we tooke in 2. boates loding more of ſtones, and ſome water, we ſtocked a ſheate anker, and bent a newe cable, for it was very much winde, which hindred our buſines greatly.

The 6. daye in the morning, before 6. of the clocke, wee ſawe a ſaile which went towards the ſouthwards the Admirall not hauing knowledge thereof: I went aboord, and certified him, who appointed me to goe and bring her in, and to take Captaine Parker, and ſome of the Gallions men into the Frauncis, and the Admirals ſkiffe with vs: ſo wee gaue her chaſe, and tooke her ſixe leagues to the Leewards of the place we rode in. Then not being able to fetch the roade againe, we ankered in the ſea. I, intending to come away in the Pinneſſe, and leaue the Francis, and the prize together, being readie to depart, the winde blewe at South, a ſtoute gale, and raine, ſo that about ſixe of the clocke, we ankered in the roade where our ſhips rode in. A ſaile ſeene and taken.

After we had taken them, and that Captaine Parker, and I, were aboord, we had much talke with them, before they came to the ſhippes, and being ankered there, the chiefe men were carri-ed aboord the Generall, which was a Gentleman, named Don Franciſco de Vera, Nephew to the Gouernour of the Riuer De Plate, named Don Iohn de Torre Vera.

We founde an Engliſhman, named Richard Carter, borne in Limehouſe, who had bene out of England foure and twentie yeeres, and hath bene neere twelue yeeres dwelling in the Riuer of Plate, at a Towne named Aſcenſion, three hundreth leagues vp in the Riuer, whither they were nowe determined to goe, and inhabite, hauing two women, and two yong children, ſeuen Friers, the reſt boyes, and ſaylers, to the number of 21. perſons. Richard Carter an Engliſh man taken in the prize.

The olde Frier was had in great reuerence among the reſt: inſomuch that they called him the holie Father, he was abiding in no place, but as Viſitor, he went viſiting from Monaſterie to Monaſterie. The number of 21. in the prize.

The ſubſtance of all the ſpeeches was, that the Spaniſh Fleete was before at the Streights of Magellan, as they thought, for they were departed ſixe weekes paſt from the Riuer of Ge-nero, where they had bene ſeuen moneths to refreſh and winter. And that theſe were not of that companie, but came out of Spaine, the 26. of Maye, 1582. in a Barke of foure ſcore tunne, and foure ſcore perſons of purpoſe, for the Riuer of Plate: the Friers beeing eighteene in num-ber, could not agree, and their Barke was a ground at Spirito ſanto, like to be loſt: therefore the olde Frier bought this ſmall barke of 46. tunne, at a port, named Spirito ſanto in Braſile, and ſo ruided themſelues, and comming from thence, loſt companie at ſea, but they thought they were before at Riuer de Plate. After his ſpeeches, I went, and appointed (by the Generals order) men to remaine aboord the prize, with Captaine Parker, and brought one of the Portingals ſayles away with me, and came aboord, where I founde that our men had filled water all day.

The 7. day in the morning, the Generall ſent for me, where he ſhewed me, and Maſter Mad-don, certaine articles, which the Friers, and marriners Spaniards were examined of, which ren-der altogether to the knowledge of the Spaniſh fleetes intent, and of the meanes whereby wee might be diſcouered by way of Riuer de Plate, by land to Peru. In this time came the reſt, after whoſe comming was debated, whether it were beſt to take the boate, and people with vs, or not, which was not determined, but referred till further examination.

Then was determined to paſſe by the ſtreights, notwithſtanding the Spaniards were there, but not to ſet vp forge, nor to build pinneſſe, but water, and ſo thorough.

Further

Further, it was determined that Captaine Hawkins, Master Tailboys, Master Geffries, Master Hoode, Master Blackcoller, and two sailers of each shippe, should romage the prize: about the appointment of whome, grewe vnkinde, and hot speeches, betweene the Generall, and Master Parker, against me, concerning authoritie, and gouernment, and also Captaine Hawkins finding himselfe iniuried, was plaine with them both: so that we were beyond the termes of Commissioners, and fell to plaine brawling, and bragging: the circumstances I omit, as too long, and vnfit to be written. Time being thus spent, the Generall called for wine, and ended all contentions, and so we dined there with him.

After dinner they searched the barke, and found in her diuers trifles, which are noted in a paper by themselues. I went a fishing, and came aboord, from whence the Generall fetched me, and went aboord to the old Frier in the barke: after we had talked with him, we came aboord, and there supped in the Edward with me, the Generall, M. Maddox, Captaine Parker, and Master Hall: wee debated of diuers causes before, and after supper, and so departed, with promise to dine with the Generall the next day.

This day also we tooke vp all the rest of our Ordinance, and placed them, and tooke in a boates lading of stones, and filled water all day.

The 8. day afore noone, Master Walker, and I, went aboord the Admiral to dinner, where was determined to discharge the Spanish barke, named our Ladie of pitie, and all the men except Richard Carter, the English man, and Iohn Pynto, a Portingall, which dwelled at Riuer de Plate.

The Spanish barke dismissed.

After dinner, the Generall appointed me, and Captaine Hawkins, to see them all set aboord their ship, and to receaue from them certaine necessaries, which willingly they imparted with vs, and to leaue them satisfied. Which done, I returned aboord, and hauing deuided the necessaries to each ship his part, we entred into consultation, where Master Walker propounded certaine questions to the Generall of vnkindnes, by me conceaued against him, which moued him to some cholerike termes with me, which I answered: and in the ende, all matters almost being agreed betweene vs, then began he to question with Captaine Hawkins, which contention was tedious, and not fully ended before supper, & began againe after supper: so that about 10. of the clocke after supper, we came aboord.

In this morning before my going foorth, we trimmed our shippe ouer to port, and came to our leakes, and not being able to stop the same without boord, we stopped the same within boord, and after our men filled all our water caske, laded, and placed all our Ordinance, and made all things ready to goe hence.

The 9. day being Sunday, in the morning, I sent master Shawe, and master Geffries, aboord the Admirall, to peruse the Spaniards letters wherein they found the estate of the Fleete, which was in the Streights of Magellane, as by this note thereof appeareth.

About ten of the clocke, the Generall, master Maddox, Captaine Hawkins, and Captaine Parker, came aboord of me, the Generall began to reproue my Quarter master, for grudging of victuall for the Francis, which was answered, and he wel satisfied. Then sent I for the old Frier, and Don Francisco, who all dined with me, and after dinner, the Spaniards hauing receaued the Canow which was sunke a land, and stones to ballast them, with my boate carried them, and all other things to their liking, and content, they departed from mee: the Generall also departed, and his companie, who being gone, I deuided the suger, and ginger among my people, which the Spaniards gaue vs, and after spent the day in ordinarie busines.

Spanish presents.

The 10. day in the morning, our skiffe went a fishing, whereof we eate as much to supper, as serued the companie, the rest we salted for store, and to proue if they would take salt or not. In the afternoone our skiffe went againe to fishe, and tooke good store: the rest of our people tooke their ease, some aboord, and some on shoare.

The 11. day, betimes in the morning, our skiffe went againe to fishe, & tooke great plentye. About 7. of the clocke, I went a land, taking with me the M. & others of our best men, to the number of 22. persons, & traueled to ꝑ place, where our people before had found many great iars of earth, & decaied habitations of the Indians, & trees being dead, and withered, of sweete wood. From that place, we saw ouer the tops of a narrow wood, a faire plaine, which at the request of the M. and the rest, I went with them to see. We passed through a thicke & perillous wood, before we came to the supposed plaine: & when we came to it, wee found the lowest part thereof higher then any of our heads, and so mossie vnder foote, that we slipped to the knees many steps, which so wearied vs, that for my part, I was very sicke, and so hasted aboord, leauing the Master with 15. men, which cut a tree of sweete wood, and brought many peeces thereof aboord.

Things found in the Iland.

About 3. afternoone, M. Walker, and many of our men being a shoare, the winde came faire, and and we layd out a warpe to the Northeast, and began to winde a hedd: after we layd out another warpe with a bende, and wound to the platt, and so ridde by it one anker all night.

The 12. day about 5. a clocke in the morning, we set saple, and as we ranne out betweene the ledge of rockes, & the mayne in 8. fadom water, as we were catting our anker, the cattrope, stopper and all brake, so that we were glad to let slip all the cable, and cast off our boate, and skiffe to way the same: after we had stood out a good way, the Admirall was vnder saple, then cast we about, and went roome with the Admiral which weaned vs, who sent in his pinnesse, and the Frenchis to helpe out our boats, so by the helpe of the Admirals pinnesse, with her saple, wee had our boate the sooner, and about 12. a clocke at noone taken in the anker, cable, our long boate, skiffe, and all, and put out all our saples bearing after the Admirall, which went hence South by east. About 6. a clocke at night being thick weather we lost sight of ỹ land, being 4. leagues off or there about, all night it was but litle winde, yet went we our course South by west.

The 13. day about 7. a forenoone the wind blewe at South southeast, & was very fogge, with which gale we stood in larboord tacked west, till 10. a clock the same forenoone: then had we sight of the land a hedd, all along (for it waxed cleere weather) it sheweth a farre off, like white cleeues, but is all sandy hilles, and bayes along the sea side: at one a clocke afternoone we were in 16. fadom water and within halfe a league of the shoare, where we saw seuerall fires made by the Indians to giue warning to the other people within the land as we supposed: then we cast about, and stood off, Southeast by east till midnight, that the wind came large: then went wee our course, South by west til next morning.

The 14 day we went our course South by west hauing sight of the land at 6. a clocke in the morning about 7. leagues off, and so went till 6. at night that we saw lande againe, 7. leagues off west, and the wind shifted to the South: then we cast about and stood off East southeast at 7. at night for a while, then came vp the wind at Northwest and blew a good.

This day at 8. a clocke at night we had a prety gale and went our course with it til 12. after, it was in maner calme all night.

The 15. day in the morning, the Admirall was a hedd, as farre as we could almost see her, by whose default I know not, & being litle wind we could not get to her, till 4. a clocke afternoone, then we hayled her, and stood in betweene the South southwest, and the southwest til 6. at night that the wind was variable, and foule weather: then we cast about, and sounded in 23. fadom soft ooze, and stood off a while Northeast: and presently cast about againe, and went south by east larboord tacked, and south southeast among all night: at 4 in the morning 15. fadom sande.

The 16. day being Sunday we saw the land within 3. leagues of vs at 6. a clocke in the morning, at 8. a clocke we cast about and went Northeast till 11. the same forenoone, then wee stood along south by west til within 3. or 4. leagues of the shoare, and in 12. fadom water, sand about 2. a clocke, the wind larged, so we went south by east: at 6. a clocke we were 6. leagues off the lande which bare west southwest of vs, and was in the 23. fadom, after the wind came vp at Northeast: so we went all night South with our sheats hayled of: a cleere night of starres but cold weather. The Sunne set this night at southwest by west, and to the Northwards a litle, and rose the next morning East by south, and to the Southwards.

The 17. day we went our course South til 11. a clocke afternoone: then the wind scanting we lay betweene the Southeast, and the East southeast, til the next day morning with litle winde.

The 18. day aforenoone, being calme yet a boysting sea, we tooke in all our saples, and mended them, and riued newe mayne tides, and repaired many decayes, as a Ramme head &c. at 7. a clocke at night it began to blowe at southeast, & so we lay by larboord tacked, southwest by south, and South southwest all night with a good gale.

The 19. day we stood in next hand southwest all day and night.

The 20. day about 10. a clocke aforenoone, we went aboord the Admirall: viz. Master Walker the Master, the Pylot, the two Marchants, and my selfe, being directed so to do by the Generall: vpon our comming the Generall was going to dinner where we also dyned with him: hauing dyned, the General called vs his Assistants into his cabben, and there deliuered to vs in writing two demands, to bee by vs considered vpon, and he to haue our opinions therein.

The effect of the demands were these.

1. Whether it was best for vs to aduenture our selues to passe the Streights of Magelan or not, considering the force of the enemy, which we knew to be there before vs: and also that our determination was there to set vp our pinnesse, make vpon hoopes, carrene our ships, and do all our necessary businesses for the full accomplishment of our voyage.

2. Demand was, if that course were not thought best, which way were meetest for vs to take.

To the first we were of opinion, that it were good to heare the opinions of Captaine Hawkins, Captaine Drake, & the 2. pylots, which had passed the streights, and knew the harbors, and likest places to be fortified, & inhabited or not, who were called, and the 3. Masters with them: their opinions were as diuers as their names, & asmuch differed, as before this time they weare wont vsually to do: only they all agreed in this one point, ỳ it was impossible for vs to passe ỳ streights without seeing, and incountring with the ships although the fortification of the lande did not annoy vs, which being long and throughly debated, and their opinions with the 3. Masters demanded, which accorded not scant any one with other, they were dismissed.

Then the General receiued the opinions of vs his Assistants: beginning with the yongest in aucthority first, which when he had harde them all ouer, & being set downe in writing vnder our hands, he tooke deliberation till after supper to giue his determination.

When we had all supped then he sent for vs downe into his cabben and deliuered in writing his determination, which was) to victuall, and furnish our selues on this coast before he proceded any further, and named 2. places Riuer de Plate, or S. Vincent to be chosen.

Richard Carter the English man taken in the pule. caried along with them.

For the better deciphering of Riuer de Plate, and the commoditis therof, was called before vs Richard Carter, which doth dwel there, who could not assure vs of any wine except we could stay 4. moneths for it, but other victuals plenty: the riuer shoale & dangerous, ỳ road 7. leagues from any towne, or place of commoditie: which considered with the treacherie that might from thence be vsed, into the Streights by sea, & into Peru by land, we all concluded to go to S. Vincent, which place is inhabited with Portingals, and where in honest sort we might conueniently haue all our busines done.

They returne in the latitude of 33.

With this resolution we tooke our leaues about 8. a clocke at night, & being come aboord presently bare vp, & went roome, hauing all the day before beate vp the winde larboord tacked East southeast til at night: after it was a litle winde all night, we went North nert hande.

The 21. day after seruice, I declared vnto my company, the intent of our returne to the Port of S. Vincent, where with they were wel satisfied being before doubtfull that we should not proceede, but returne without performance of our voyage. It continued calme all day till 6. at night, then we went Northwest by west, till 8 at night: and then we cast about, and stood off East southeast, and East by South all night with a good gale.

John Drake in the Francis went to the riuer of Plate wherein his ship was cast away, but the men gatt to land, and lined 15. moneths among the Sauages.

The 22. day in the morning, we missed the Francis, which by all presumption went roome in the beginning of the night.

About sixe afternoone we cast about, and stood in Northwest, till sixe a clocke at night: then we went about, and stood of East by South, and East Southeast among all night, till foure a clocke next morning.

The 23. day at foure a clocke in the morning, we cast about, and stood in West northwest, and West by north, till twelue at noone: Then we stoode about larboord tacked a while, and presently the winde came large, so we went North by east, & North northeast all day & night following.

The 24. day we went North northeast, and North by east, til one a clocke after midnight: then we cast about, and stood of East southeast, and Southeast by east, all the rest of the night.

The 25. day being Christmas day, it was little winde in the forenoone till ten a clocke, then it blewe a fresh gale, with which we went our course North northeast: in the afternoone it was lesse winde: yet went we our course North by east, and North northeast and North and North by west till midnight. Then being in shoaled water, wee cast about, and lay South southeast, and Southeast by south an houre, & seeing our Admiral came not after vs, we cast about back againe & presently met him, so we went both together next hand South southeast, al the rest of the night.

Infinite number of fishe.

This afternoone we saw the skimme of fishes so thicke in the sea, that it seemed a water troubled with trampling of horses, which was thicke, and slimy, for we had taken vp some of it.

The 26. day at 7. afternoone we cast about, and stood in North by west, and North northwest: about 11. at noone we saw the Land which lay Northwest of vs 4. leagues, at one a clocke wee cast about, and stood of Southeast with a South gale all night.

The 27. day we stood off into the sea between the Southeast, and the East by North all day and night with a foule gale of wind at North.

The 28. day it was calme all the forenoone till 12. a clocke then we went West northwest: during this calme we tooke in our mayne Sayle and toppe sayles, and mended them: all the day and night following much winde.

The 29. day we went West northwest with a south gale, till 6. a clocke at night: then it thundred, lightned and rained, the winde almost calme and shifting, wherewith we went all night, betweene the East, and the North northeast.

The

The 30. day being Sunday, after Sermon, dinner, and obseruation of the Sunne at noone, we hoysed out our skiffe: the Master, M. Walker, and I went aboord the Admirall where wee had a banket of sweete meates: after that ended, the General and I fell into familiar conference seueral by our selues of the state of our voyage, & debated long of the same in good sort: then being neere 4. of the clocke we tooke our leaues, & came aboord, & tooke in our skiffe, and went North northwest till 8. at night, then we cast about, and went southeast, and southeast by south al night smooth sea, much fogge.

The 21. & last of Decēber at 6. afternoone we cast about, & stood in northeast til 5. afternoone: then seeing the land 3. leagues off vs, we cast about, & stood off east southeast al night w̄ litle wind.

The first day of January, we had litle wind all day and night, but we layd our course withall nere hand North northeast. January.

The 2. day, our foretoppmast being perished, we tooke it downe, & the cap of ỹ Mast, which the Carpēter wrought vpon al day, & night: we wēt our course nere hand, north northeast litle wind.

The 3. day we went our course till 11. a clocke at night North by east, then the wind scanted, & we stood off East southeast till 4. next morning.

The 4. day at 4. a clocke afternoone we went North next hand, till 5. a clocke at night, hauing runne in sight of land all day, then being in 15. fadom water within 2. mile of the shoare, we cast about and stood of South southeast, and Southeast all night, with a reasonable gale.

This afternoone we set vp our foretopmast againe, being wel mended.

The 5. day at 9. a clocke afternoone, we cast about: & whereas all the morning before we went Southeast by east now we went North till 5. afternoone: then being in sight of land, 3. leagues short of the place were we were the day before at that time we cast about, and went Southeast all night with a stout gale of wind. This afternoone our mainetoppsayle split from the boltropes, and was greatly torne wich we got downe, and began to mende.

The 6. day after dinner we gatt vp our mainetoppsaile againe, and went all day and night, betweene the southeast, and the East by south with much winde.

The 7. day we went between the east by south, & the east all the day & night with a stoute gale.

The 8. day we went next hand, East til 5. a clocke afternoone, then we cast about, and stood in Northwest, and betweene that and the West all night.

The 9. day after we had stricken and mended our mainesayle we went north by east, litle wind for a while, but afternoone it blew a stout gale: so we went our course all day, and night next hand North northeast.

The 10. day we went all day and night our course North northeast with a stout gale of wind.

The 11. day we went our course North, and North by east all day, and night with a stout gale of winde.

The 12. day we went betweene the north, and the Northwest till 12. at midnight: then we being neere the land cast about, and stood of East northeast till 4. in the morning.

The 13. day we went about after 4. a clocke in the morning, and stood in west hauing sight of the lande West by north till one a clocke afternoone: then being within 4. leagues of the shoare: where we saw a white pinnacle like a watch towre, which bare West northwest of vs: we cast about and stood off east, till 10. a clocke at night litle winde.

About 3. a clock this afternoone I hoysed out my skyffe and sent her with the Master, & Pylot aboord the Admiral, to conferre with them there, who shewing them that I was not well at ease, caused the General, M. Maddox, and Captaine Parker, to come aboord and visit me, where they supped: & hauing had some coufrence with him about our dealings at S. Vincent &c. he departed and the skiffe brought the Master & Pylot aboord againe who supped aboord the Gallion.

At 10. a clocke the winde came large and we went all night betweene the Northeast by east, and the Northeast to goe cleare of the land we saw ouer night.

The 14. day in the morning it was hayse and thicke weather, so we sawe not the land till 9. a clocke in the forenoone, vntill which time we halled in West northwest: but then seeing lande beare North northwest of vs we stood hence east northeast til 7. a clocke at night: then our Admirall would needs come to anker vpon the bed land, but I thought it not best and lay close by all night, so that at 6. a clocke in the morning we were 4. myles to wyndward of her.

The 15. day we plyed off and on in the entrance of the bay, and got litle or nothing all day and night, but kept sight of our Admiral which rode at anker till 12. at noone: then set sayle, and lay close by the wind as we did.

The 16. day hauing turned to winde wards all night before, we found our selues in the morning a league to leewards of the place, where we were ouernight by the shiftings of the winds to our disaduantage, this forenoone about tenne a clocke we mett a change of waters, which runne out South southeast into the sea which wee supposed to be some freshet which came out of the Bay, and lyeth along the coast North northeast and South southwest with a great difference both of couler and rypling.

This afternoone we stoode in North northeast, into eight fadomes and a halfe on the West side of the Bay, and about 4. a clocke we stood out againe South southeast, in hope to see our Admiral, whose sight we lost the night before, but seeing we went so fast to leewards we ankred at 7. a clocke vnder a small Iland, a myle off West: our ship caped East northeest, & Northeast most part of the night, which we iudge was some streame which came ỳ way, for it was litle wind.

A smal Iland which our men called Faulcon Isle.

The 17. day about 7. a clocke the Master, master Blaccoller, and I went in our skiffe and rowed, and sounded round about the Ile, and found 16. fadomes within a stones cast hard aboorde the shoare, and faire ground: after we landed, and found nothing but woods and bushes, and strange wormes: we saw a faulcon, and one other small birde, and therefore named it Faulcon Ile: it is ample about, with a rocke on the East side, which lyeth close to it, and it is in sight without danger, after we came aboord, and dyned, at two a clocke, we set saile with winde Southeast, & ranne in Northeast a while till the winde skanted: then we went in North northeast, till we were in 7. fadome and a halfe of water, within a league of the shoare: then we cast about, and stood off south southeast all night till 6. a clocke next morning.

Citron Isle.

The 18. day at 6. a clocke a forenoone we cast about and stood in North by east, North northeast, and sometime Northeast, being sometime a gale, sometime calme: about three a clocke afore day we saw our Admirall againe, and kept her company till day.

The 19. day being within a league of the Citron Ile about 8. a clocke a forenoone we went aboorde the Generall viz. M. Walker, the Master, the Pylot, and my selfe reioycing of our good meeting, who tolde me of their euil roade, where they lost an anker, a cable and a hawser: and how the day before their Pynnesse was a shoare on the same Iland and found fowle, and water there, whither now they had sent their boate, and Pinnesse for more water, where I knowe they had small store.

Their arriuall at S. Vincent.

I also taking captaine Parker, the Master, and M. Wilkes with me went a shoare, & trauelled to the top of the Ile, which is wooded, & high gras, but euil water, & litle on it, but pong fowle plenty, & dangerous comming to them. By this time I hauing set the Isles, & bed lands about in sight with a compasse, came a smal gale, at South southeast, then our Admiral shot off a peece for the boats & hence he went, & I dyned aboorde with him: & came after aboorde, and went in North northeast and Northeast til morning, at which time we were within a league of the Isle, entring before S. Vincent, but knew not how much water was vpon the barre to goe ouer.

3. Canowes of Portingals and Indians.

The 20. day in the morning being calme, the Generals pinnesse came into the shoare, with intent to sound the entrance, but seeing 3. Canowes with each at the least 20. men, wherof the greater part were naked Indians which rowed, the rest Portingals, they returned aboorde againe: the Canowes came with a flagge of truce vnto calling of our ship, & we shewed them the like, asking what we weare & of what nation, at length one Portingall went aboorde the Admiral, by whom the General sent a letter to the Gouernor craning a Pylot to bring in our ship of curtesie and to haue traffike. About noone hauing the wind at South we bare in Northwest, & so to the Northeast as the chanel trended: but cõming into 7. fadom water we ankred, vntil our boats had sounded the barre. During which time I wẽt aboord ỳ Admiral to conferre wth him about our proceedings.

A Canow with 10. Indians and 11. christians wherof one was an old Genouese.

After I had staied a while aboord the Admiral the General came aboord with me, where wee published vnto all my company very good rules for their behauior & profit, to their great satisfaction: after he went downe into my cabbin, where with al his assistants he conferred of diuers particulers of our voyage: by which time the boate being returned from sounding, we departed, & set saile following our skiffes, and with our ships got within the barre into 7. fadome, then being becalmed ankred againe before a sandy bay, wherein standes a Castle and houses: wee rode within musket shot of it: and ankred about 4. a clocke afternoone.

Then went I forwards with my skiffe vntill a farther point, sounding along: before my returne, the General had sent for me to supper, & thither I went: but being reddy to sit downe there came out to vs a Canow wherein were 10. Indians and 11. christians, the one an auncient Genoa the other a Portingal, who came aboord, & there receiued a smal banket, declaring their comming was to vnderstand our intents and what we sought, who being satisfied departed with a farewell of three great peeces from each ship.

Then went we to supper, and after I got me aboord being weary, but before I went to bedde came diuers cõplaints vnto me of the euil speeches & practises vsed by Thomas Russell, which I partly partly examined before Maſter Walker, the Maſter, and M. Ieffries, and finding cauſe of correction, I committed him to the bilbowes, vntill further leaſure to examine the cauſe: ſo placing a carefull watch with charge to haue care of the ſande, we paſſed ỹ night very wel, God be prayſed.

The 21. day betimes in the morning, I went aland in the ſkiffe, and tooke good plentie of freſh fiſh on the North ſide: for we prooued on the South ſide and found litle or none. At nine a clocke after ſeruice, I ſent to bury Robert Reſe, one of the Maſters mates, which died this morning: and alſo after dinner died Griffyn who was there buried.

After dinner I conferred with the Maſter and Pilot about the choyſe of another Mate for them, but concluded that father Kyd ſhould be aſſiſtant in the watch, but no Maſters mate more.

Alſo in the preſence of the Maſter, M. Walker, the Pilot, M. Ieffries, M. Shawe, and Tobias the Maſters mate, was Thomas Ruſſell examined, and his accuſers, which examinations were written by M. Walker, and reſt to be further conſidered of hereafter.

About three a clocke after noone, came a Canoa, with the old Genouoys, named Ioſeph Dory, a Fleming named Paul Badeues, and Steuen Repoſe a Portingale, and brought a letter from the Generall, and withall anſwere of feare and doubtes of vs, &c. After many ſpeeches and requeſts a banket was made them, and the Generall in his Pinneſſe with his muſike, and trumpets, and I in my Skiffe with trumpets, drum and fife, and tabor, and pipe, accompanied them a mile vp the riuer: at going off, ſaluted them with a volye of three great peeces out of eche ſhip: and after vs came Captaine Parker with the Admirals long boat, and certaine ſhot in the ſame, to attende on the Generall. So we returned aboorde the Edwarde, and then ſupped together, and made our ſelues merry, and after ſupper they departed. John Whitſalle an Engliſhman which dwelleth at Santos, hath married this Ioſeph Dories daughter.

The 22. day betimes in the morning, I went abooard the Admirall to conferre about the ſending of ſome token and preſent to the Gouernour, which was by all the Aſſiſtants determined to ſend him three yards of fine ſkarlet, and three yards of fine murrie cloth, and to Ioſeph Dory the old Genouoys, Steuen Repoſe the Portingale, & to Paul Badeues the Fleming, eche of them three yards of fine blacke cloth, which our marchants went vp to Santos withall, in the Admirals Skiffe, about nine a clocke afternoone. Santos.

Alſo this afternoone we being minded to goe vp higher with our ſhippes into harbor, I aduiſed them to goe view the place, and ſound the road before we went vp, which we did, where were found the place both vnconuenient, and the road worſe, and ſo we returned and left the firſt determination. This day we tooke downe our maine tops, and top maſte, and all the ſhrowds.

About two a clocke afternoone our marchants returned with their preſents, not hauing bene at the Towne becauſe Steuen Repoſe by the way met them on the Riuer, and aduiſed them to ſtay vntill there had bene worde ſent to the Gouernour, who was vnwilling to ſpeake with them yet, but ſhortly would ſend their anſwere.

The reſt of this afternoone, wee ſpent in communication about the appointing of a Purſer, for the Edward. Alſo we ſigned an aſſent for comming to this place: about which thing grewe foule ſpeeches betweene the Generall, and his Lieutenant after the olde cuſtome. After being at leaſure I reuealed vnto him Ruſſels offences.

Then went we to ſupper, and being at ſupper, certaine Indians came aboorde, and brought the Generall a ſtrange Crowe, and Potatos, and Sugar canes, to whom he gaue looking glaſſes, great pins, and biſket, and ſo we departed being late. Alſo this afternoone I ranne ouer towards Saint Vincent, and ſounded the Bay a league ouer, and found the chanell and flats and returned aboorde againe within two houres, hauing a good gale of winde. The Indians preſents. The chanell of S. Vincent ſounded.

The 23. day our Skiffe went a ſhoare to fiſh, and tooke prettie ſtore: we ſent our mayne top a ſhoare to be mended, and many of our men to waſh their clothes: alſo I went my ſelfe with them aland, to take order, that no man ſhould any wayes offend the Indians. In the meane time the Generall with all the reſt of the chiefeſt Gentlemen, came a ſhoare, and viewed the place, and appointed out the fitteſt roome, to ſet vp our ſmithes forge, and ouens to bake our biſket, & place for our coopers to trim our water caſke.

After the well peruſing of the place, and ſome familiar conference with the Indians, the Generall, M. Parker, M. Walker and I came aboorde, and dyned in the Edward: after dinner wee had ſome priuate conference, and about one a clocke they went aboorde the Gallion: I ſpent the reſt of this day in putting many things in order.

The 24. day at foure a clocke before day, we heard one call for a boate on the North ſhoare, to whome I ſent my Skiffe, who brought aboorde one named Iohn Whitehall an Engliſh man, which is married here in this place, and with him two of his Indians: whom I interteined vntil I ſent worde to the Generall to prepare himſelfe to receiue him, in which time he and I talked of John Whitehall.

many seuerall particulers.

About sixe a clocke I conueyed him aboorde the Admirall: there he discouered vnto vs, what had bene done at the Towne, as fortification, and sending their wiues away, &c. aduising vs to receiue no more delayes, but to come vp presently before the Towne with our shippes.

Good counsell by the forelaid Englishman giuen to our men.

About ten a clocke, came a canoa, and brought downe Ioseph Dory, and Steuen Repose, who tolde vs that on Saturday the Gouernour would meete our Generall, and talke with him, praying vs in the meane time to vse our ordinarie businesse of cooperage, carpenters worke, filling water, fishing, and washing, &c. but not to set vp forge, nor ouen, vntill speech had with our Gouernour. After this answere we dyned together aboorde the Gallion: After dinner we left the Messengers sitting in the cabbin, and went vpon the poop, where the Generall demaunded the aduise of his assistants, whether it were not best to stay these men while we had them or not, or whether it were best to goe vp with our ships to the Towne or no.

Whereunto eche man paused to make answere: wherefore I deliuered my opinion, which was, that we were forbidden to vse violence to any nation for trade.

The Minion of London some time in Brasil for traffike.

Secondly, I considered that diuers of our nation worshipfull marchants, and nowe aduenturers in this voyage, had set out the Minion hither, and begun a trade, which with our forcible dealing might be spoyled, and our nation brought in hatred.

Lastly, that with force we were not like to attaine to so much commoditie, as we were in possibilitie to haue with courtesie.

Hereupon all was concluded, and they suffered to passe away: to whome the Generall gaue the three cloke clothes, to Ioseph Dory, to Paul Baudeuese, and to Steuen Repose, to eche of them one, which were before cut out for them: and so friendly we and they departed about two a clocke afternoone: which done, I went aboorde, and prepared for the entertainement of certaine of the Gallions men, which determined to sup with me.

Three Spanish ships discouered.

About foure a clocke this afternoone we sawe three sayle of ships come bearing in about the point, which assoone as they sawe vs, ankred vpon the barre, and put themselues in readines, sending from one ship to another with their boats, and blowing off their ordinance, meaning to take vs: and we before night, getting our men and other necessaries from the shoare which were busie aland, armed our ships to defend our selues. Then went I aboord ꝑ Admiral to know what he meant to doe: who determined to set his watch in warlike sort, and so hee did, for after the trumpets and drumme had sounded he shot off a great piece, as they before had done: And presently the Viceadmirall shot at me, whome I answered with another, and so ceased. We then set vp our mayne top, and top maste rigged before 11. clocke the same night: In the meane while they let slip their ankers and cables, and came driuing and towing with their boats in vpon vs meaning to haue boarded vs: and being neere our Admirall he hailed them, who refused to tell of whence they were, thinking by spending of time to get aboorde of him, to whome I called still to beware, and to shoote at them in time. At length he let flee at them, yet was glad to let an anker and cable slip to anoyde them: then came they all driuing downe thwart my hawse, so that I was faine to let slip an anker and cable to shun the Gallion: all this while the ordinance & small shot plyed of all parts, and I was faine to send the Gallion my Skiffe with a hawser to ride by, for she was loose, and with the flood draue vp within me. Then was the Viceadmirall on my broad side who was well payde before, yet I left not gawling of him, till I thought our pouder spent in vaine to shoote at him, he was so torne and broken downe by vs. About foure a clocke it rayned so fast, that we could scant discerne one the other the Moone being gone downe, yet ryd the Admirall, and the Reareadmirall, but a little ahead of vs: during which time we pused, and made ready all our munition.

The fight betwixt the English & Spanish ships at S. Vincent.

The Spanish Viceadmirall sunke by the English.

The 25. day, by day light, we sawe the Viceadmiral sunke hard by vs, so that his yards which were hoysed acrosse, and his tops, and that ouer head was aboue water: most of their men were gotten away in their boats, sauing about fourtie persons which hung in the shrowds, and tops, whom I aduised our Generall to send for away, and had made ready, and well manned our Pinnesses: but being vpon the way going, the General called them backe, and would not suffer them to goe: there were three of their boats also going for them from their shippes, at whome I shot, and made them to retyre and leaue them vpon the shrowds. At length our Generall sent for two of the men away, which his Pinnesse brought to him, the one was heaued ouer boorde because he was sore hurt not like to liue, and he was a Marsillian, the other was a Greeke borne in Zante, boatswaine of the Viceadmirall: the rest of the men, some swamme away vpon rafts, some were drowned, and some remained still hanging on her. By this time it was fayre day light,

This Greeke tolde the Generall, that there were 600. and odde in the three Spanish ships and I called to our Generall to waye, and drive downe to them, who required mee to goe first and anker on their quarter, and hee would followe, and anker on their bowes. I waied, and went downe, & ankred by them, yet not so nere as I meant, for the ebbe put me off to the Northwards. There ryd I alone spending shot at them, and they both at mee foure houres, before our Admirals anker would come vp, during which time I had some spoyle done, but when our Admirall came, she had her part, and eased me very well.

At length our Admiral began to warpe away, and being come without mee set sayle, and began to stand out into the Sea: I went aboarde of him to knowe his pleasure, who determined to get out of shot, but could not because the winde scanted on them: the Edward before she could get vp her ankers endured many more shot, after the Gallion was further off a good way then thee, and sometime the Gallion had two or three: thus we ended about two a clocke afternoone. The rest of this day and part of the night we spent in mending, fitting, and putting our ordinance and furniture in order for the next morning, thinking they would haue bene with vs.

The 26. day in the morning wee could not see them, because they were gone vp the River: wee manned our boats, and Pinnesses, and waped two ankers, and one cable that they let slippe the night before: as our men were waying the third anker, the booyrope brake, and so wee lost that anker. Our Admirall had an anker of twelue hundreth, and a good cable of eleuen inches, and wee had an anker about sixe hundreth, with a piece of a basse cable, and booyrope nothing worth.

After dinner I went aboarde the Admirall, to conferre with him, who determined to goe off to Sea, and thither I carried Senior Pinto, to interprete the Indian language, with an Indian named Peter, which fledde from the Bay where wee ryd in a canoa, and brought with him a Spaniards caliuer, flaske, and touchboxe, to goe with vs, whome our Admirals boate met, and brought him aboarde to the Admirall. Hee tolde vs that the Spaniards had brought many dead men on lande and buryed them, and also landed many hurt men in their Bay, and that there were certaine Spaniards gone ouer thorowe the woods to looke after vs. Then the Generall, Captaine Hawkins, and Master Maddox came aboarde of mee to viewe my hurt men, and harmes of my shippes, both men, shippe, and tackle, and I also went aboarde him to peruse his hurtes, who had but one man a sayler slaine.

The 27. day wee set sayle, and ran South by east, and sometime North by east.

The 28. day in the morning dyed Lancelot Ashe of a hurt, who departed very godly. This day we stoode to the Northwards, and in getting in our ankers and skiffe, wee were put three leagues to leewarde of Fiddle Ile, but the Gallion ryd still.

The 29. day in the morning, seeing my selfe put to sea from the Admiral, I assembled Master Walker, Master Shawe, Master Ieffries, the Master, the Masters mate, and the Pilote, to whome I shewed, that I was desirous to goe backe to seeke our Admirall, whereunto the master Pilot, and Masters mate answered directly, that we could not fetch the Ile where wee left them, and to meete them in going backe it was very vnlikely and to vs dangerous many wayes, aswell for falling into the laps of the Spaniards, as to bee put on a lee shoare: Whereupon all the rest aduised mee to stand off into Sea, whereunto I assented, remembring withall, that time spent consumed victuall, and howe long we had beaten vp and downe in the same Bay before, to get in with calmes and contrary windes. Here the Gallion and the Edward Bonauenture were seuered, and neuer met afterward.

Thus we concluded that Master Walker should set downe each mans opinion, and we set to our hands, and from henceforth he to keepe a Register of all our proceeding, as Master Maddox doth aboord the Admirall.

The 30. day our Carpenters wrought in repairing the sides of our ship, which were somewhat bruised, and torne with shot.

The 31. day the like was done, and we went East southeast.

The first day of February, we went East by south, and East southeast with a stout gale: and went the same course the 3. 4. and 5. dayes following. Februarie.

The 5. day about 10. a clocke in the forenoone Master Walker dyed, who had bene weake and sicke of the bloody flix 6. dayes, wee tooke a view of his things, and prised them, and heaued him ouer boord, and shot a piece for his knell. M. Walker the preacher dieth.

From the 6. day to the 11. day we went Northeast and North northeast.

The 12. day hauing considered the lacke of water, the company were contented to haue the pease boyled, with three iacks of freshe water, and two iacks of salte water, for the prolonging of the same.

The

The 13. day we went North with a sweete gale.

The 14. day I called into my cabbin the two marchants, the Master and the Pilot shewing them our wants of victuals and other necessaries, whereupon they and I concluded, that it was best for vs to returne to our Countrey, with as little losse of time and expense of virtuals as might be, being without hope of relieFe vpon this coast, and yet to keepe the coast of Bazill to friende for feare of extremitie.

The 15. and 16. dayes we went our course Northeast.

The 17. day in the morning hauing much raine, we saued aboue two tunne of water, of which we were very glad.

Variation of the compasse. The 18. day I obserued the variation of the compasse, which varied one point, and a halfe to the Southwards, by our ordinarie compasse of London.

From the 19. day to the 27. we went our course Northeast, and North, as the winde serued.

The 27. day, I allowed a certaine portion of wine to our men, to wit, halfe a canne of wine to euery sixe men euery night at eight of the clocke, at the setting of the watche, to strengthen their weakenesse.

M. Wylks dyeth. The 28. day M. William Wylks hauing bene sick of the flixe a moneth before, grewe impatient and outragious in his disease, but by prayer and good perswasions we recouered him to his former good and quiet minde, and at night after nine a clocke he meekely departed the seruant of God.

March. The 1. of March wee heaued him ouer boorde, and gaue him a piece.

The 2. day the Master, Pilot, and I, agreed to fetch the Ile of Fernando Lorona.

From the 3. day to the 10. day we went West, and by South, and ran in for the shoare.

The 10. day we sawe the land, which was sandy hilles with woods on it.

The 11. day seeking to goe a shoare, we sawe foure men, which weaued to vs with a white shirte, and we weaued to them with a flag of truce: At length one of them swamme to our boats side, and there lay in the sea talking with vs, almost an houre: in the ende, being partly perswaded by Pinto, who talked with them in the Indian tongue, and partly entised with such trifles as I shewed him, he came into our Skiffe, and called to his companions on shoare, who came aboorde swimming: we deliuered them certaine barricos to fetch vs them full of fresh water: after, there came downe 40. Indians, boyes, women, and men, and with them a French boy, but the former Indians deceiued vs of our barrecos. Whereupon Pinto and Russell swamme a shoare to seeke water, but found none.

The same day we sayled to a place where boats might land, and I went a land in my Skiffe, and found the Indians, and Frenchman which were with me the day before, and they brought our three barricos ful of fresh water: for which I rewarded them with some trifles. In ỳ meane time our boate went a shoare, and our men with some of the Indians brought vs twentie barricos more of fresh water, and I my selfe went to shoare and brought 23. hennes of India.

The 12. day betimes in the morning, we manned our boate and Skiffe, & tooke some trifling things to shoare, and barricos: at our first arrinall the rude Indians flocked together, wading to the Skiffe wherein I was, begging, and wondring about vs: First I caused them to fetch 27. barricos of water, whom I rewarded with small belles, &c. In the meane time they brought hens to me, wading to the Skiffe, for I kept my selfe alwayes a float, and for their hens I gaue them a knife, and a small looking glasse. All this while M. Blackcoller our Pilot, Thomas Russell, Marke Thawghts were still on shoare, and would not tarry aboord: In the ende, fearing some treacherie, because all the Indians were slipped on shoare from me, I called our men away, and suddenly they laide hands on our men a shoare, & with their bowes shot thicke at vs in the boats, and waded into the water to vs, laying hands on our Skiffe, yet God of his mercy deliuered vs from their hands, with the losse of fiue men slaine, and others hurt.

Treason of the Indians.

Thus we got aboorde with fourtie Hens, Ducks, Turkies, and Parrats, and three hogsheads of water: and I carried a Frenchman aboorde with me, named Iaques Humfrey, who was by chance in the boate with me when this fray began.

Iaques Humfrey a Frenchman saued.

The 13. day we set sayle, and went Northeast.

The 14. day, the Master shaped our course North northeast, to recouer the coast of Guyny, then the next shoare to vs.

The 15. day we went the same course.

The 16. day it rained, and we saued a butte of water.

The 17. day we tooke three sharks in the morning.

From that day to the first of Aprill, we went our course, sometime with raine, and sometime with with variable winds, and so til the 4. of April, which day wee saw foure byrds with long tailes, which houered about the ship, and in the afternoone we sawe and tooke vp many weedes which graue thicke in the sea, which wee iudged to bee driuen with the East windes from the yles of Cape verde.

From this day till the 11. day wee went our course sometime Northeast, sometime Northwest according to the winds: vpon this 11. day George Cope one of our carpenters, hauing the night before broken vp the hold, and stolen wine, and drunken himselfe drunke, being taken in the roome, lept ouerboord out of the beake heade, and so drowned himselfe: this day and night we went betwixt the North by West, and the North with much winde. A desperate act.

The 12 day wee lipped our foremast to bee perished in the hownes, and durst not beare our foretop saple vpon him but went hence with our saples, next hand, North all day, and night.

From hence to the 20. day wee went Northeast, and by North. This day I obserued the variation of the compasse: and I noted that the south poynt of the compasse caried more then halfe a poynt to the Westwardes. Variation of the compasse.

From this day to the 25. wee went our course North northeast, with a reasonable gale of winde: this 25 day was little winde stirring.

The 26 day it was in a manet calme, till seuen a clock at night, then it began to blowe a good gale at East southeast all night, with which wee went Northeast, and Northeast by east, and at night betweene the Northeast, and the Northeast by east.

The 28 day about 10 a clocke in the forenoone, our mayne yarde brake in sunder in the middest and split our saple with being put to great tresse, which wee got in and all the saple, and tackle, without the hurt of any man God be thanked. After dinner our Carpenters wrought vpon it, who were fayne to take our dowet, and anker stocke, the boats masts, pinnes thawts, capston barres, &c. So we went all day & night following with our foresaple, and misen betweene the Northeast, and the Northeast by east, with a stoute gale.

The 29. day, our carpenter wrought all day, we went with our foresaple, and misen next hand North northeast, lesse winde then before, and rayne.

The 30 day with great labour in the rayne, about 6. a clocke afternoone, wee set our mayne course which was mended, and other of our saples hauing made small way, or none the day before: after we went all night betweene the North northeast, and the Northeast thicke and moyst weather.

The first day of May, it was a great fogge calme, and thicke myste till 4. afternoone, then the winde blewe a stiffe gale at East, and still scanted to the Northwards, that we could lye all night but North, and North by weast, with much winde and fogge. May.

The 2. day it continued very foggie, and much winde, so that at 9. a clocke afternoone wee tooke off our bonnets: at 12. at noone wee cast about, and went larboorde tacked betwene the East Southeast, and the Southeast all day, and night.

The 3. day wee continued in the morning our course with much winde, and went betweene the East Northeast, and the East all day, and night.

The 4. day it was lesse winde, so that betimes in the morning, wee laced on our bonnets, and put abroade all our other saples, and went East Northeast till 8. at night, then hauing the winde large, and a good gale we went all night our course East by North.

The 5. day being Sunday wee had a stout gale till 5. a clocke afternoone, then it was lesse winde but large, with which we went our course all day, and night East by North.

The 6. day it was foggie, and blewe a stiffe gale, with which wee went our course East by North, all day and night.

The 7. day and night we went our course East by North, with a stoute gale.

The 8. day and night, wee went our course East by North with a franke gale, but all the day was foggie, and sometime raine, the winde shifting betweene Southwest, and the West Southwest.

The 9. day it rayned till noone, and blewe a stout gale, at West southwest till 12 a clocke at nighe with which wee went our course East by North, then it shifted to the East, and East Northeast with which wee went the rest of the night, betweene the North, and the North Northeast.

The 10. day it rained, and blewe much aforenoone: about 9. a clocke we cast about, and went East Southeast larboord tacked, at 12. at noone with bearing ouer much saple, wee brake our spritsaple yarde, and with much paine saued the peeces, and the toyne saple: so wee went all day and night following East Northeast, and sometime East by North, and sometime East with our foꝛecoarſe, and the mayne coarſe, and bonnet.

The 11. day it was leſſe winde and dꝛy weather till noone: then it blewe a good gale, and in the night very much winde, and colde weather: all this day wee made ſhyft, and made another ſpꝛitſayle yarde of our Top gallant maſte, our Myſſen topmaſt, our mayne Flagſtaffe, oars, &c. and went our courſe Eaſt by Noꝛth, all day and night.

The 12. being ſunday, it was hayzie afoꝛenoone and much winde, ſo that hauing out our topſayles, and ſpꝛitſayles, wee tooke them in at noone, and went all day and night our courſe Eaſt by Noꝛth with a ſtoute gale.

The 13. day in the moꝛning it was ſomewhat leſſe winde, and we tooke off, and mended our foꝛebonnet, which was toꝛne the night befoꝛe, and at noone bꝛought it to the yarde againe, and after dinner put out our topſayles, being litle winde and rayne, ſo went all day, and night our courſe Eaſt by Noꝛth with a ſmall gale.

The 14. day we went our courſe Eaſt by Noꝛth, till 12. at midnight with a pꝛetty gale, then was it ſtarke calme.

The 15. day it was calme till 9. a clocke afoꝛenoone, then it blewe a ſmal gale, at Eaſt ſoutheaſt, with which we went Noꝛtheaſt till noone, then came vp the winde, at South ſoutheaſt, and at midnight blewe ſo much, that wee meaning to haue ſhaken of our bonnets, tooke in all our ſayles, and ſeeing the winde ſtill increaſed, we lay a hull from midnight till 6. next moꝛning hauing gone beſoꝛe Eaſt noꝛtheaſt, and Eaſt by Noꝛth, and Eaſt amongſt: this afternoone we ſaw a ſayle but ſpake not with them.

The 16 at 6. afoꝛenoone we ſet ſayle with much winde at South ſouthweſt, and went Eaſt our courſe, with a coarſe and bonnet of each, all day and night with very much winde.

The 17. day about 8. at night wee ſounded, and had no ground, in 160 fathome, ſo wee kept our courſe on Eaſt till 12 at midnight, then the winde began to ſcant, ſo we went betweene the Eaſt noꝛtheaſt, and the Eaſt by Noꝛth, all the reſt of the night.

The 18. day at 8 at night we ſounded againe, but had no ground, ſo we went all day & night, betweene the Noꝛtheaſt, and the Noꝛth by Eaſt with a ſkant winde.

The 19. being Sunday at 6. afoꝛenoone, the wind came to the Southeaſt, ſo we went Eaſt Noꝛtheaſt til 8. at night, then it was flat calme, and all night litle winde at Noꝛth, with which wee went next hand Eaſt ſoutheaſt fayꝛe weather.

The 20. day it was little wind all the foꝛenoone at Noꝛth, then it changed to the Noꝛth noꝛtheaſt, and blewe but little: ſo we were all day, and night betweene the Eaſt by South, and the Southeaſt with a ſmall gale fayꝛe weather.

The 21. day was fayꝛe weather and litle winde betweene the Eaſt and the Noꝛtheaſt with which we went all day and night betweene the Southeaſt by South, and the South by Eaſt til ſhifting: this day wee ſaw a Turtle doue.

The 22. day it was a pꝛettie gale, and fayꝛe weather: wee went all day till 8. at night Eaſt ſoutheaſt, then the winde being ſomewhat larger, wee went all night Eaſt.

The 23. day wee went Eaſt by Noꝛth till 8. at night, then hauing ſounding in 66. fathome fine ſande, we ſhaped our courſe Noꝛtheaſt, but would not lye ſo neere, but as we might, went all night betweene the Noꝛtheaſt by Eaſt, and the Eaſt noꝛtheaſt.

The 24. day we went Eaſt noꝛtheaſt, & Eaſt by Noꝛth, till 7. at afternoone, then we ſounded and had 65. fathome gray ſand, hauing ſayled by many weedes, & burton beds all day beſoꝛe: after we went all night as the day beſoꝛe Eaſt noꝛtheaſt, and Eaſt by Noꝛth with litle winde.

The 25. day we went betweene the Eaſt noꝛtheaſt, and the Noꝛtheaſt with a ſmall gale till 5. a clock afternoone: then had we ſight of land, which roſe ragged to the Noꝛthwards like bꝛoken land, we being about 5. leagues off: that Ile, bare Noꝛtheaſt by Noꝛth of vs, and the Noꝛthermoſt part bare Noꝛth by Eaſt of vs, with a rock a ſea booꝛd: we then ſounded, & had 55. fathome grey ſande, and maze great ſtoꝛe in it: ſo we ſtood in Noꝛtheaſt till 8. a clocke, and then beheld it againe being vvin 4. leagues of it, bearing as beſoꝛe, but we could not make it, foꝛ ſome thought it to be the foꝛeland of Fontenay, ſome iudged it the Ile of Vſſant: then wee ſownded againe, in 55. fathome bꝛowne ſand, and little maze in it: at 8. a clocke at night we went about, and ſtoode of South ſouthweſt one watche, then the winde ſhrinked to the Southweſt, that we could lye but South ſouthweſt 6. glaſſes, ſo that at 3. a clock we caſt about, and lay Noꝛthweſt 6. glaſſes, and Noꝛth noꝛthweſt a watche being then 8. a clocke the next day.

The 26. day we lay as nigh as we could betweene the Noꝛth and the Noꝛth noꝛtheaſt, and ſawe the ſame land againe, and made it to be the foꝛelande of Fontenay, and the raggꝛes to bee the Seames, which bare nowe Eaſt Noꝛtheaſt of vs: and wee ſtoode on till 10. a clocke, then being being within two leagues of the rockes and lesse, we cast about and stoode of southwest, because we could not dubble the vttermost rockes: when we were about wee drawe to the Southwardes very faste, for the ebbe set vs West southwest, and being spring tydes, it horled vs a pace to leewardes, for the space of on houre: then with the flood which was come, we drawe againe to windwards: at twelue at noone it was calme, till 6. afternoone, then we stoode about larboord tacked, South southwest one watche, then at midnight wee cast about and stood ouer Northe till foure afternoone.

The 27 day, hauing brought the lande East southeast of vs, wee made it to be Sylly being before deemed, and went hence East by north to dubble Grymsbie, leauing the Bishop, and his clearkes to the Southwestwards, which wee before tooke to be the Seames. The yle of Sylly.

At 7. a clocke afternoone wee sawe the landes ende of England, which bare East by North of vs, and is 7. leagues off from Sylly.

Abaut 9. a clocke, we shewing our flags, and ensigne, and shoting of a peece, there came two boats aboord vs, of whome we bought fish, and some other trifling fresh victuals, with refreshed our men though it were but little.

But hearing newes of them of the health of our Queenes maiestie, and our country in peace, we gaue God thankes, and stoode hence East by South hauing brought the Island of Sylly, West, and West by South 3. leagues off vs. At eight at night wee had brought the lands ende North by West, and the Lyzard bare East of vs 6. leagues, so wee stoode along all night East, being little winde. The Lyzard.

The 28. wee had brought the Lyzzarde West Northwest of vs, a league and a halfe of, wee hoysed out our skiffe at 8. in the morning, and went along Northeast by East: at 12 a clocke at noone wee had brought Helforde, and the Manacles rockes which lye two miles of the mayne North of vs, passing by Falmouth: at 2, a clocke afternoone, wee brought Dudman North of vs 2. leagues of.

Then we had sight of Ramme head, and stoode on Northeast by east, and sometime Northeast, with little winde all day and night following.

This night about 2, a clocke after Midnight dyed Robert Webbe, and Master Skeuington of the Skuruie.

The 29. day at 6. afternoone wee had brought the Ramhead North of vs, and weare within a league of it, and went in Northeast next hande, being thicke and foggie, and little winde: so that at eleuen of clocke wee got in within the Island, and their by mistaking of a sounding, our ship came aground betweene the yle, and the mayne, and there sate till 4. a clocke afternoone that it was halfe flodde. Wee came to Plymmouth.

In the meane time I sent M. Blaccoller, and Johnson a shore to prouide men, and fresh victuall, and necessaries for our present neede.

The Maior, M. Bronkorne, M. Martyn, and many other of the towne, came aboorde to visite me, and dyned with mee about 5. a clocke the ship being mored in 7. fadom water, the castle in the yle being South by East of vs, I went a lande and sawe M. Skeuington, and Robert Webbe buried in the Churchyard, and supped with M. Geffryes, and Master Symberbe, at Master Bronckhornes, and not hauing a boate to come aboorde, I lay a shore all night at that house.

The 30. day about 9. a clocke, with much a doe I furnished away M. Jeffries, M. Symberbe, and William Towreson with letters, after dyned at M. Blaccollers, and made many salutations with diuers gentlemen.

Betimes this morning I sawe a cable bought, tymber for a Dauet, and anker stocke, and dispatched many businesses and at 12. a cloke I came aboord, and set a cooper to worke, and other things were done: a great many of our weake men went a shore, to refresh themselues, and to lye a shoare.

The 31. I wrought aboorde all day, and put our ship, and things in order: Afternoone I hauing pittie of some poore men of Mylbrooke which were robbed the night before by a Pyrat named Purser, which rid in Cawson bay, I consented to go out with the Edward in companie of a small ship, which they had furnished to be their Master, so about 5. afternoone, came 100. tunne of theirs aboord of mee: about 12. a clocke we set sayle, and by 3. afore day wee were gotten to windwards of him, then he set sayle, and went hence to the Eastwards, and outsayled vs, because our consort would not come neere him: after a small chase which we gaue him to no effect we returned into our old roade, and there moared the ship about 9. afternoone, and hence went all the Mylbrooke men againe a shore from mee, and thus I ended a troublesome voyage.

An

An extract out of the diſcourſe of one Lopez a Spaniard before ſpoken of, touching the foreſayd fight of M. Fenton with the Spaniſh ſhips together with a report of the proceeding of M. Iohn Drake after his departing from him.

VPon the relation of Pedro Sarmiento concerning the Streights, and for that the king hard, that there were ſhippes in England preparing for the ſame Streights, hee commanded Diego Flores de Valdes a noble man of Spaine, to paſſe thither with 23. ſhips, and 3500. men to ſtoppe the paſſage of the Engliſh men.

There went in this fleete the gouernour of Chile with 500. olde Souldiers ỳ came out of Flanders: but this fleete was the vnhappieſt ſhips that euer went out of Spayne: for before they came from the coaſt of Spaine a ſtorme tooke them, and caſt away 5. of the fleete, and in them aboue 800. men, and the reſt came into Cales. But the king ſent them worde that they ſhould proceede: and ſo there went out on the voyage 16. of the ſhips, for 2. more of their fleete were much ſpoyled by the ſtorme which they had.

5. Ships of this fleete caſt away on the coaſt of Spaine.

In theſe 16. ſhips, Pedro Sarmiento was ſent to bee gouernour in the ſtreights, & had aſſigned vnto him 500. men to ſtay there with him, and he carried with him all kinde of Artificers to make him forts, and other neceſſaries, with great ſtore of ordinance and other munition.

This Fleete becauſe it was late, did winter on the coaſte of Braſill, in the riuer of Genero: and from thence they went when the winter was paſte, and about the height of 42. degrees they had a ſudden ſtorme, ſo that Diego Flores beat it vp and downe 22. dayes, in which time he loſt one of the beſt ſhips that he had, which had in her 300 men, and 20. women, that went to inhabite the ſtreights: and in this ſhippe alſo was moſt part of the munition which ſhould haue bene left in the ſtreights, ſo in the end the ſtorme grewe to be ſo great, that the ſhips were not able to endure it at any longer, but were put backe vnto an Iſland, called Sancta Catelina: and there hee found a barke wherein were ſome Fryers going for the riuer of Plate: which Fryers tolde him of two great Engliſh ſhippes, and a Pynneſſe, which had taken them, but tooke nothing from them, nor did them any harme, but onely aſked them for the king of Spaynes ſhips.

M. Fenton tooke theſe Fryers.

Hereupon Diego Flores, knowing that theſe Engliſh ſhips would goe for the Streights, determined to goe thither although it was in the moneth of Februarie, and chooſing 10. ſhippes of the 15. that were left, he left two ſhips which were not in caſe to goe to ſea at the Iſland, and the other three ſhips which were old, and ſhaken with the ſtorme he put into them all the women, and ſicke men, in all the fleete, and ſent them to the riuer of Genero, and he with the other 10. returned againe for the Streights.

The 3. ſhips in which the ſicke men and women were, went to Braſill, and there they founde with in the port of S. Vincent the two Engliſh ſhips before mentioned.

A fight betwixt our 2. Engliſh ſhips & three Spaniſh ſhips

They would haue had the Engliſh men to haue gone out of the harbour, and thereupon they fell to fight, and becauſe that theſe 3. ſhips were weake with the ſtorme, and the men that they had were the worſt in all the Fleete, the Engliſh men eaſely put them to the worſte, and ſuncke one of them, and might haue ſunke another, if the Engliſh men would: but they minded not the deſtruction of any man: for that is the greateſt vertue that can be in a man, that when he may do hurt, yet hee will not doe it: ſo the Engliſh men went from this port to Spirito Sancto, where they had victuals for their Marchandiſe, and ſo they went backe for England, without doing of any harme in the country.

The cauſe why theſe Engliſh ſhippes vnder the conduct of Maſter Fenton went not to the ſtreights, I know not: but ſome ſay that they were put backe by foule weather: other ſome ſay that it was for feare of the kings ſhips.

But the pynneſſe of theſe two ſhips went from them, in which was Captaine Iohn Drake: the cauſe why they parted I know not, but the Pinneſſe came into the riuer of Plate, and within 5. leagues of ſcale Iſland, not far from the place where the Earle of Cumberlands ſhips did take in freſh water, ſhe was caſt away vpon a ledge of rocks: but the men were ſaued in their boate, which were in number 18. who went a ſhoare on the Northſide, and went a daies iourney into the land, and met with the Sauages, which are no men eaters, but take all the Chriſtians that they can, and make them ſlaues.

But the Engliſh men fought with them, and the ſauages ſlew 5. of them, and tooke 13 aliue, which were with the Sauages about 15. moneths. But the Maſter of the pynneſſe, whoſe name was Richard Fayreweather being not willing to indure the miſery that hee was in, and hauing knowledge that there was a towne of Chriſtians on the other ſide of the riuer, he in a night called Iohn Drake, and another yong man which was with them, & tooke a very litle Canow, which had but two oares, and ſo paſſed to the other ſide of the riuer, which is about 9. leagues broad, and were 3. dayes before they could get ouer without meate, and comming to land, they hit vpon an high way that went towards the chriſtians: and ſeeing the footing of horſes, they followed it, and at laſt came to an houſe where there was corne ſowed, and there they met with Indians ſeruaunts vnto the Spaniards, which gaue them to eate, and clothes to couer them, for they were all naked, and one of the Indians went to the towne, and told them of the Engliſhmen: ſo the captaine ſent 4. horſemen, and brought them to the towne behind them.

This captain clothed them, and prouided lodging for them, and Iohn Drake dieted at the captains table, and they were all very well intreated, the captaine purpoſing to ſend thē for Spaine. But the Viceroy of Peru hauing newes hereof, ſent for them, and ſo Iohn Drake was ſent to him, but the other two were kept there, becauſe they were maried in the countrey, ſo that I know no more of their affaires.

Iohn Drake ſent to the Viceroy of Peru.

Vpon this comming of the Engliſhmen, there were prepared 50. horſemen to goe ouer the riuer to ſeeke the reſt of the Engliſhmen, and alſo certain Spaniards that were among the ſauage people, but I am not certaine whether they went forward or not.

A letter written to M. Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple, conteining a report of the true ſtate and commodities of New found land, by M. Anthonie Parkhurſt Gentleman, 1578.

MAſter Hakluyt, after moſt heartie commendations, with like thankes for your manifold kindneſſe to me ſhewed, not for any merites that hitherto haue bene mine, but wholy proceeding, I muſt needs confeſſe, of your owne good nature, which is ſo readie preſt to benefit your country and al ſuch poore men as haue any ſparke in them of good deſires, that you do not onely become their friend, but alſo humble your ſelfe as a ſeruant in their affaires: for which I would to God I were once in place where I might cauſe your burning zeale to bee knowen to thoſe that haue authoritie, power, and abilitie to recompence your trauelling mind and pen, wherwith you ceaſe not day nor night to labour and trauell to bring your good and godly deſires to ſome paſſe, though not poſſible to that happy ende that you moſt thirſt for: for ſuch is the malice of wicked men, the diuels inſtruments in this our age, that they cannot ſuffer any thing (or at leaſt few) to proceed and proſper, that tendeth to the ſetting forth of Gods glory, & the amplifying of the chriſtian faith, wherein hitherto princes haue not bene ſo diligent as their calling required. Alas, the labourers as yet are few, the harueſt great, I truſt God hath made you an inſtrument to increaſe the number, and to moue men of power, to redeeme the people of New found land, and thoſe parts from out of the captiuitie of that ſpirituall Pharao, the diuell.

Now to anſwer ſome part of your letter touching the ſundry nauies that come to New found land, or Terra noua, for fiſh: you ſhall vnderſtand that ſome fiſh not neere the other by 200. leagues, and therefore the certaintie is not knowen, & ſome yeeres come many more then other ſome, as I ſee the like among vs: who, ſince my firſt trauell being but 4. yeeres, are increaſed from 30. ſayle to 50. which commeth to paſſe chiefly by the imagination of the Weſterne men, who thinke their neighbors haue had greater gaines then in very deed they haue, for that they ſee me to take ſuch paines yerely to go in proper perſon, they alſo ſuppoſe that I find ſome ſecret commoditie by reaſon that I do ſearch the harbors, creekes and hauens, and alſo the land much more then euer any Engliſhman hath done. Surely I am glad that it ſo increaſeth, whereof ſoeuer it ſpringeth. But to let this paſſe, you ſhall vnderſtand that I am informed that there are aboue 100. ſaile of Spaniards that come to take Cod (who make all wet, and doe dry it when they come home) beſides 20. or 30. more that come frō Biſkaie, to kil Whale for traine. Theſe be better appointed for ſhipping and furniture of munition, then any nation, ſauing the Engliſhmen, who commonly are lodes of the harbors where they fiſh, and do vſe all ſtrangers helpe in fiſhing if need require, according to an old cuſtome of the country, which thing they do willingly, ſo that you take nothing from them more then a boat or twaine of ſalt, in reſpect of your protection of them againſt rouers or other violent intruders, who do often put them from good harbour, &c. As touching their tunnage, I thinke it may be well neere fiue or ſixe thouſand: but of Portingals there are not lightly aboue 50. ſaile, and they make all wet in like ſorte, whoſe tunnage may amount to three thouſand tunnes and vpwarde. Of the French nation and Buttons, are about one hundred and fiftie ſailes, the moſt of their ſhipping is very ſmall, not paſt fortie tunne, among which ſome are great and reaſonably well appointed, better then the Portingals, and not ſo well as the Spaniards, and the burden of them may be some 7000. tunne. Their shipping is from all partes of Fraunce and Britaine, and the Spaniards from most parts of Spaine, the Portingals from Auciro and Viana, and from 2. or 3. portes more. The trade that our nation hath to Island, maketh that the English are not there in such numbers as other nations.

Now to certifie you of the fertilitie and goodnesse of the countrey, you shall vnderstand that I haue in sundry places sowen Wheate, Barlie, Rie, Oates, Beanes, Pease and seedes of herbes, kernels, plumstones, nuts, all which haue prospered as in England. The country yeelderh many good trees of fruite, as Filberds in some places, but in all places Cherie trees, and a kind of peare tree meete to graffe on. As for Roses, they are as common as Brambles here: Strawberies, Dewberies, and Raspis, as common as grasse. The timber is most Firre, yet plentie of Pinapple trees: few of these two kindes meete to maste a ship of three score and ten: but neere the grand baie or Cape Britton big, and sufficient for any ship. There bee also okes and thornes, there is in all the countrey plentie of Birch and Alder, which be the meetest wood for cole, and also Willow which will serue for many other purposes. As touching the kindes of fish beside Cod, there are Herrings, Salmons, Thornebacke, Plase, or rather wee should call them Flounders, Dog fish, and another most excellent of taste, called of vs a Cat, Oisters, & Muskles, in which I haue found pearles aboue 40. in one Muskle, and generally all haue some, great or small. I heard of a Portingall that found one worth 300. duckets: There are also other kinds of Shel fish, as limpets, cockle, wilkes, lobsters, and crabs: also a fish like a *Smelt which commeth on shore, and another that hath the like propertie called a Squid: these be the fishes, which (when I please to bee merie with my old companions) I say, doe come on shore when I commaund them in the name of the 5. ports, and coniure them by such like words: These also bee the fishes which I may sweepe with broomes on a heape, and neuer wet my foote, onely pronouncing two or three wordes whatsoeuer they be appointed by any man, so they heare my voyce: the vertue of the wordes bee small, but the nature of the fish great and strange. For the Squid, whose nature is to come by night as well as by day, I tell them, I set him a candle to see his way, with which he is much deligted, or els commeth to wonder at it, as doe our fresh water fish, the other commeth also in the night, but chiefly in the day, being forced by the Cod that would deuour him, and therefore for feare comming so neere the shore, is driuen drie by the surge of the Sea on the pibble and sands. Of these being as good as the Smelt, you may take vp with a shoue net, as plentifully as you doe Wheate in a shouell, sufficient in three or foure howers for a whole Citie. There bee also other fishes which I tell those that are desirous of strange newes that I take as fast as one would gather vp stones, and them I take with a long pole and hooke. Yea marrie say they, wee beleeue so, and that you catch all the rest you bring home in that sort, from Portingals and Frenchmen. No surely, but thus I doe: with three hookes stretched foorth in the ende of a pole, I make as it were an Eele speare, with which I pricke those Flounders as fast as you would take vp fritters, with a sharpe pointed sticke, and with that toole I may take vp in lesse then halfe a day Lobsters sufficient to finde three hundred men for a dayes meate. This pastime ended, I shew them that for my pleasure I take a great Saltiue I haue, and say no more to him then thus: Goe fetch me this rebellious fish that obeieth not this Gentleman that commeth from Kent and Christendome, bringing them to the high water marke, and when hee doubteth that any of those great Coddes by reason of sheluing ground bee like to tumble into the Sea againe, hee will warily take heede and carrie him vp backe to the heape of his fellowes. This doeth cause my friendes to wonder, and at the first hearing to iudge them notorious lies, but they laugh and are merie when they heare the meanes how each tale is true.

*Called by the Spaniards Anchouas, and by the Portingals Capelinas.

I told you once I doe remember how in my trauell into Affrica and America, I found trees that bare Oisters, which was strange to you, till I told you that their boughes hung in the water, on which both Oisters and Muskles did sticke fast, as their propertie is to stakes and timber.

Now we to let these merie tales passe, and to come to earnest matters againe, you shall vnderstand that New found land is in a temperate Climate, and not so colde as foolish Mariners doe say, who finde it colde sometimes when plentie of Iles of Ice lie neere the shore: but vp in the land they shall finde it hotter then in England in many partes of the countrey toward the South. This colde commeth by an accidentall meanes, as by the Ice that commeth fleeting from the North partes of the worlde, and not by the situation of the countrey, or nature of the Climate. The countrey is full of litle small riuers all the yeere long proceeding from the mountaines, ingendered both of snow and raine: few springs that euer I could finde or heare of, except it bee towards the South: in some places or rather in most places, great lakes with plentie of fish, the countrey trey most couered with woods of firre, yet in many places indifferent good grasse, and plentie of Beares euery where, so that you may kill of them as oft as you list: their flesh is as good as yong beefe, and hardly you may know the one from the other, if it be poudered but two dayes. Of Otters we may take like store. There are Sea Guls, Murres, Duckes, wilde geese, and many other kind of birdes store, too long to write, especially at one Iland named Penguin, where wee may driue them on a planke into our ship as many as shall lade her. These birdes are also called Penguins, and cannot flie, there is more meate in one of these, then in a goose: the Frenchmen that fish neere the grand baie, doe bring small store of flesh with them, but victuall themselues alwayes with these birdes. Now againe, for Venison plentie, especially to the North about the grand baie, and in the South neere Cape Race, and Pleasance: there are many other kind of beasts, as Luzarnes and other mightie beastes like to Camels in greatnesse, and their feete clouen, I did see them farre off not able to discerne them perfectly, but their steps shewed that their feete were clouen, and bigger then the feete of Camels, I suppose them to be a kind of Buffes which I read to bee in the countreys adiacent, and very many in the firme land. There bee also to the Northward, Hares and Foxes in all partes so plentifully, that at noone dayes they take away our flesh before our faces, within lesse then halfe a paire of buts length, where foure and twentie persons were turning of drie fish, and two dogges in sight, yet stoode they not in feare till wee gaue shoot and set the dogges vpon them: the Beares be also as bold, which will not spare at middaie to take your fish before your face, and I beleeue assuredly would not hurt any bodie vnlesse they be forced.

Now to shew you my fansie what places I suppose meetest to inhabite in those partes discouered of late by our nation: There is neere about the mouth of the grand baie, an excellent harbour called of the Frenchmen Chasteau, and one Iland in the very entrie of the streight called Bell Isle, which places if they be peopled and well fortified (as there are stone and things meete for it throughout all New found land) we shall be lordes of the whole fishing in small time, if it doe so please the Queenes maiestie, and from thence send wood and cole with all necessaries to Labrador lately discouered: but I am of opinion, and doe most stedfastly beleeue that we shall finde as rich Mines in more temperate places and Climates, and more profitable for fishing then any yet we haue vsed, where we shall haue not farre from thence plentie of salt made by fire vndoubtedly, and very likely by the heate of the Sunne, by reason I finde salte kerned on the rockes in nine and fortie and better: these places may bee found for salte in three and fortie. I know more touching these two commodities last remembred, then any man of our nation doth: for that I haue some knowledge in such matters, and haue most desired the finding of them by painefull trauell, and most diligent inquirie. Now to be short, for I haue bene ouerlong by master Butlers means, who cried on mee to write at large, and of as many things as I call to minde woorthy of remembraunce: wherefore this one thing more. I could wish the Iland in the mouth of the riuer of Canada, should be inhabited, and the riuer searched, for that there are many things which may rise thereof, as I will shew you hereafter. I could find in my heart to make proofe whether it be true or no that I haue red and heard of Frenchmen and Portingals to bee in that riuer, and about Cape Britton. I had almost forgot to speake of the plentie of wolues, & to shew you that there be Foxes, black, white & gray: other beastes I know none saue those before remembred. I found also certaine Mines of iron and copper in S. Johns, and in the Iland of Iron, which things might turne to our great benefite, if our men had desire to plant thereabout, for proofe whereof I haue brought home some of the oare of both sortes. And thus I ende assuring you on my faith, that if I had not bene deceiued by the vile Portingals, descending of the Iewes and Judas kind, I had not failed to haue searched this riuer, and all the coast of Cape Britton, what might haue bene found to haue benefited our countrey: but they breaking their bands, and falsifying their faith and promise, disappointed me of the salt they should haue brought me in part of recompence of my good seruice in defending them two yeeres against French Rouers that had spoyled them, if I had not defended them.

By meanes whereof they made me loose not onely the searching of the countrey, but also forced me to come home with great losse aboue, 600. li. for recompence whereof I haue sent my man into Portingall, to demaund iustice at the kings hand, if not, I must put vp my supplication to the Queenes maiestie & her honourable counsell, to grant me leaue to stay here so much of their goods as they haue damnified mee, or els that I may take of them in New found land, as much fishe as shall be worth, 600. li. or as much as the salte might haue made. I pray you aduertise mee what way I were best to take, and what hope there may be of a recompence if I follow the suite: many there are that doe comfort mee, and doe bidde mee proceede, for that her Maiestie and the counsell doe tender poore fishermen, who with me haue sustained 300. pound losse in that voyage. And to conclude, if you and your friend shall thinke me a man sufficient and of credite, to seeke the Isle of S. Iohn, or the riuer of Canada, with any part of the firme land of Cape Britton, I shall giue my diligence for the true and perfect discouerie, and leaue some part of mine owne businesse to further the same, and thus I end committing you to God. From Bristow the 13. of November, 1578.

Yours to vse and commaund, Anthonie Parkhurst.

The Letters Patents graunted by her Maiestie to Sir Humfrey Gilbert knight, for the inhabiting and planting of our people in America.

ELIZABETH by the grace of God, Queene of England, &c. To all people to whom these presents shal come, greeting. Know ye that of our especiall grace, certaine science and meere motion, we haue giuen and granted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successours, doe giue and graunt to our trustie and welbeloued seruaunt sir Humfrey Gilbert of Compton in our Countie of Deuonshire knight, and to his heires and assignes for euer, free libertie and licence from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter, to discouer, finde, search out, and view such remote, heathen and barbarous lands, countries and territories not actually possessed of any Christian prince or people, as to him, his heires and assignes, and to euery or any of them, shall seeme good, and the same to haue, hold, occupie and enioy to him, his heires and assignes for euer, with all commodities, iurisdictions and royalties both by sea and land: and the said sir Humfrey and all such as from time to time by licence of vs, our heires and successours, shall goe or trauell thither, to inhabite or remaine there, to build and fortifie at the discretion of the sayd sir Humfrey, and of his heires and assignes, the statutes or actes of parliament made against Fugitiues, or against such as shall depart, remaine or continue out of our Realme of England without licence, or any other acte, statute, lawe, or matter whatsoeuer to the contrary in any wise not withstanding. And we doe likewise by these presents, for vs, our heires and successours, giue full authoritie and power to the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, and euery of them, that he and they, and euery, or any of them, shall and may at all and euery time and times hereafter, haue, take, and lead in the same voyages, to trauel thitherward, or to inhabite there with him, and euery or any of them, such, and so many of our Subiects as shall willingly accompany him and them, and euery or any of them with sufficient shipping, and furniture for their transportations, so that none of the same persons, nor any of them be such as hereafter shall be specially restrained by vs, our heires and successours. And further, that hee the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, and euery or any of them shall haue, hold, occupie and enioy to him, his heires or assignes, and euery of them for euer, all the soile of all such landes, countries and territories so to bee discouered or possessed as aforesayd, and of all Cities, Castles, Townes and villages, and places in the same, with the rites, royalties and iurisdictions, as well marine as other, within the sayde landes or countries of the Seas thereunto adioyning, to be had or vsed with full power to dispose thereof, and of euery part thereof in fee simple or otherwise, according to the order of the lawes of England, as neere as the same conueniently may bee, at his, and their will and pleasure, to any person then beyng, or that shall remaine within the allegiance of vs, our heires & successors, paying vnto vs for all seruices, duties & demands, the fift part of all the oare of gold & siluer, that from time to time, & at all times after such discouerie, subduing and possessing shall be there gotten: all which lands, countries and territories, shall for euer be holde by the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, of vs, our heires and successours by homage, and by the sayd paiment of the sayd fift part before reserued onely for all seruices.

And moreouer, we doe by these presents for vs, our heires and successours, giue and graunt licence to the sayde sir Humfrey Gilbert, his heires or assignes, & to euery of them, that hee and they, and euery or any of them shall, and may from time to time, and all times for euer hereafter, for his and their defence, encounter, expulse, repell, and resist, as well by Sea as by land, and by all other wayes whatsoeuer, all, and euery such person and persons whatsoeuer, as without the speciall licence and liking of the sayd sir Humfrey, and of his heires and assignes, shall attempt to inhabite within the sayd countries, or any of them, or within the space of two hundreth leagues

neere to the place or places within such countries as aforesayd, if they shall not bee before planted or inhabited within the limites aforesaid, with the subiects of any christian prince, being in amitie with her Maiestie, where the said sir Humfrey, his heires or assignes, or any of them, or his or their, or any of their associates or companies, shall within sixe yeeres next ensuing, make their dwellings and abidings, or that shall enterprise or attempt at any time hereafter vnlawfully to annoy either by Sea or land, the said sir Humfrey, his heires or assignes, or any of them, or his or their, or any of their companies: giuing and graunting by these presents, further power and authoritie to the said sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, and euery of them from time to time, & at all times for euer hereafter to take and surprise by all maner of meanes whatsoeuer, all and euery person and persons, with their shippes, vessels, and other goods and furniture, which without the licence of the said sir Humfrey, or his heires or assignes, as aforesayd, shall be found trafficquing into any harborough or harboroughs, creeke or creekes, within the limites aforesayde, (the subiectes of our Realmes and dominions, and all other persons in amitie with vs, being driuen by force of tempest or shipwracke onely excepted) and those persons and euery of them with their ships, vessels, goods, and furniture, to detaine and possesse, as of good and lawfull prize, according to the discretion of him the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, and of euery or any of them. And for vniting in more perfect league and amitie of such countreys, landes and territories so to bee possessed and inhabited as aforesayde, with our Realmes of England and Ireland, and for the better incouragement of men to this enterprise: wee doe by these presents graunt, and declare, that all such countreys so hereafter to bee possessed and inhabited as aforesayd, from thencefoorth shal bee of the allegiance of vs, our heires, and successours. And we doe graunt to the said sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, and to all and euery of them, and to all and euery other person and persons, being of our allegiance, whose names shall be noted or entred in some of our courts of Record within this our Realme of England, and that with the assent of the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires or assignes, shall now in this iourney for discouerie, or in the second iourney for conquest hereafter, trauel to such lands, countries and territories as aforesaid, and to their and euery of their heires, that they and euery or any of them being either borne within our said realmes of England, or Ireland, or within any other place within our allegiance, and which hereafter shall be inhabiting within any the lands, countries and territories, with such licence as aforesaid, shall, and may haue, and enioy all the priuiledges of free denizens and persons natiue of England, and within our allegiance, any law, custome, or vsage to the contrary notwithstanding.

And forasmuch as vpon the finding out, discouering, and inhabiting of such remote lands, countries and territories as aforesayd, it shall be necessarie for the safetie of all men that shall aduenture themselues in those iourneis or voiages, to determine to liue together in Christian peace and ciuill quietnesse each with other, whereby euery one may with more pleasure and profit, enioy that whereunto they shall attaine with great paine and perill: we for vs, our heires and successours are likewise pleased and contented, and by these presents doe giue and graunt to the said sir Humfrey and his heires and assignes for euer, that he and they, and euery or any of them, shal and may from time to time for euer hereafter within the said mentioned remote lands and countreys, and in the way by the Seas thither, and from thence, haue ful and meere power and authoritie to correct, punish, pardon, gouerne and rule by their, and euery or any of their good discretions and pollicies, as well in causes capitall or criminall, as ciuill, both marine, and other, all such our subiects and others, as shall from time to time hereafter aduenture themselues in the said iournies or voiages habitatiue or possessiue, or that shall at any time hereafter inhabite any such lands, countreys or territories as aforesayd, or that shall abide within two hundred leagues of any the said place or places, where the said sir Humfrey or his heires, or assignes, or any of them, or any of his or their associates or companies, shall inhabite within sixe yeeres next ensuing the date hereof, according to such statutes, lawes and ordinances, as shall be by him the said sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, or euery, or any of them deuised or established for the better gouernment of the said people as aforesayd: so alwaies that the said statutes, lawes and ordinances may be, as neere as conueniently may, agreeable to the forme of the lawes, & pollicie of England: and also, so as they be not against the true christian faith or religiõ now professed in the church of England, nor in any wise to withdraw any of the subiects or people of those lands or places from the allegiance of vs, our heires or successors, as their immediate soueraignes vnder God. And further we do by these presents for vs, our heires and successors, giue and graunt ful power and authoritie to our trustie and welbeloued counseller, sir William Cicill knight, lord Burleigh, our high treasurer of England, and to the lord treasurer of England, of vs for the time being, and to the priuie counsell of vs, our heires and successours, or any foure of them for the time being, that hee, they, or any foure of them, shall, and may from time to time and at all times hereafter, vnder his or their handes or seales by vertue of these presents, authorise and licence the sayd sir Humfrey Gilbert, his heires and assignes, and euery or any of them by him and themselues, or by their or any of their sufficient attornies, deputies, officers, ministers, factors and seruants, to imbarke and transport out of our realmes of England and Ireland, all, or any of his or their goods, and all or any the goods of his or their associates and companies, and euery or any of them, with such other necessaries and commodities of any our Realmes, as to the sayd lord Treasurer or foure of the priuie counsell of vs, our heyres or successors for the time being, as aforesaid, shall be from time to time by his or their wisdoms or discretions thought meete and conuenient for the better reliefe and supportation of him the sayde sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, and euery or any of them, and of his and their, and euery or any of their said associates and companies, any acte, statute, law, or other thing to the contrarie in any wise notwithstanding.

Prouided alwayes, and our will and pleasure is, and wee doe hereby declare to all Christian kings, princes and states, that if the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires or assignes, or any of them, or any other by their licence or appointment, shal at any time or times hereafter robbe or spoile by Sea or by land, or doe any acte of vniust and vnlawfull hostilitie to any of the subiects of vs, our heires, or successors, or any of the subiectes of any king, prince, ruler, gouernour or state being then in perfect league and amitie with vs, our heires or successours, and that vpon such iniurie, or vpon iust complaint of any such prince, ruler, gouernour or state, or their subiectes, we, our heyres or successours shall make open proclamation within any the portes of our Realme of England commodious, that the sayd Sir Humfrey, his heires or assignes, or any other to whom these our letters patents may extend, shall within the terme to be limited by such proclamations, make full restitution and satisfaction of all such iniuries done, so as both wee and the sayd princes, or others so complaining, may hold vs and themselues fully contented: And that if the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, shall not make or cause to bee made satisfaction accordingly, within such time so to bee limited: that then it shall be lawfull to vs, our heires & successors, to put the sayd sir Humfrey, his heires and assignes, and adherents, and all the inhabitants of the said places to bee discouered as is aforesaid, or any of them out of our allegiance and protection, and that from and after such time of putting out of protection the sayde sir Humfrey, and his heires, assignes, adherents and others so to be put out, and the sayd places within their habitation, possession and rule, shall bee out of our protection and allegiance, and free for all princes and others, to pursue with hostilitie as being not our subiects, nor by vs any way to bee aduowed, maintained or defended, nor to be holden as any of ours, nor to our protection, dominion or allegiaunce any way belonging, for that expresse mention, &c. In witnesse whereof, &c. Witnesse our selfe at Westminster the 11. day of June, the 20. yeere of our raigne. Per ipsam Reginam, &c.

A report of the voyage and successe thereof, attempted in the yeere of our Lord, 1583. by Sir Humfrey Gilbert knight, with other Gentlemen assisting him in that action, intended to discouer and to plant Christian inhabitants in place conuenient, vpon those large and ample countries extended Northward from the Cape of Florida, lying vnder very temperate Climes, esteemed fertile and rich in Minerals, yet not in the actuall possession of any Christian prince, written by M. Edward Haies Gentleman, and principal actor in the same voyage, who alone continued vnto the end, and by Gods speciall assistance returned home with his retinue safe and entire.

MAny voiages haue bene pretended, yet hitherto neuer any throughly accomplished by our nation, of exact discouerie into the bowels of those maine, ample, and vast countries, extended infinitely into the North from 30. degrees, or rather from 25. deg. of Septentrionall latitude, neither hath a right way bin taken of planting a Christian habitation and regiment vpon the same, as well may appeare both by the litle we yet do actually possesse therein, and by our ignorance of the riches and secrets within those landes, which vnto this day we know chiefly by the trauel & report of other nations, & most of the French, whoalbeit they cannot challege such right and interest vnto the said countries, as we, neither these many yeeres haue had opportunitie nor meanes so great, to discouer & to plant (being vexed with the calamities of intestine warres) as we haue had by the inestimable benefit of our long & happy peace: yet haue they both waies performed more, & had long since attained a sure possession and setled gouernment of many prouinces in those Northerly parts of America, if their many attempts into those forren and remote landes had not bene impeached by their garboils at home.

The

The first discouery of these coasts (neuer heard of before) was well begun by John Cabot the father, and Sebastian his sonne, an Englishman borne, who were the first finders out of all that great tract of land stretching from the cape of Florida vnto those Ilands which we now call the Newfoundland: all which they brought and annexed vnto the crowne of England. Since when, if with like diligence the search of Inland countries had beene followed, as the discouery vpon the coast, and out parts thereof was performed by those two men: no doubt her Maiesties territories and reuenue had beene mightily inlarged and aduanced by this day. And which more is: the seed of Christian religion had beene sowed amongst those pagans, which by this time might haue brought forth a most plentifull haruest and copious congregation of Christians. Which must be the chiefe intent of such as shall make any attempt that way: or els whatsoeuer is builded vpon other foundation shall neuer obtaine happy successe nor continuance.

The coasts frō Florida northward, first discouered by the English natiō.

And although we can not precisely iudge (which onely belongeth to God) what haue beene the hinders of men stirred vp to great attempts of discouering & planting in those remote countries: yet the euents do shew that either Gods cause hath not beene chiefly preferred by them, or els God hath not permitted so abundant grace as the light of his word and knowledge of him to be yet reuealed vnto those Infidels before the appointed time.

But most assuredly, the onely cause of religion hitherto hath kept backe, and will also bring forward at the time assigned by God, an effectuall and complet discouery and possession by Christians both of those ample countries and the riches within them, hitherto concealed: whereof notwithstanding God in his wisedome hath permitted to be reuealed, from time to time, a certaine obscure and milky knowledge, by little and little, to allure the mindes of men that way (which els will be dull enough in the zeale of his cause) and thereby to prepare vs vnto a readinesse for the execution of his will against the due time ordained, of calling those pagans vnto Christianity.

In the meane while, it behoueth euery man of great calling, in whom is any instinct of inclination vnto this attempt, to examine his owne motions: which if the same proceed of ambition or auarice, he may assure himselfe it commeth not of God, and therefore can not haue confidence of Gods protection and assistance against the violence (els irresistable) both of sea, and infinite perils vpon the land: whom God yet may vse an instrument to further his cause and glory some way, but not to build vpon so bad a foundation.

A fit consideration.

Otherwise, if his motiues be deriued from a vertuous & heroycall minde, preferring chiefly the honor of God, compassion of poore Infidels captiued by the deuill, tyrannizing in most woonderfull and dreadfull maner ouer their bodyes and soules: aduancement of his honest and well disposed countreymen, willing to accompany him in such honourable actions: relefe of sundry people within this realme distressed: All these be honorable purposes, imitating the nature of the munificent God, wherewith he is well pleased, who will assist such an actour beyonde expectation of man:

And the same, who feeleth this inclination in himselfe, by all likelyhood, may hope, or rather confidently repose in the predordinance of God, that in this last age of the world (or likely neuer) the time is complet of receiuing also these Gentils into his mercy: And that God will raise him an instrument to effect the same. It seeming probable by euent of precedent attempts made by the Spanyardes and French sundry times: that the countryes lying North of Florida, God hath reserued the same to be reduced vnto Christian ciuilitie by the English nation.

Probable coniectures by these lands north of Florida, are reserued for the English natiō to possesse.

For not long after that Christopher Columbus had discouered the Ilands and continent of the West Indies for Spaine, John and Sebastian Cabot made discouery also of the rest from Florida Northwards, to the behoofe of England.

And whensoeuer afterwards the Spanyards (very prosperous in all their Southerne discoueries) did attempt any thing into Florida and those regions inclining towards the North: they proued most vnhappy, and were at length discouraged vtterly by the hard and lamentable successe of many both religious and valiant in armes, endeuoring to bring those Northerly regions also vnder the Spanish iurisdiction: as if God had prescribed limits vnto the Spanish nation which they might not exceed: as by their owne gests recorded may be aptly gathered.

The Spanyards prosperous in the Southerne discoueries, yet vnhappy in these Northerne.

The French, as they can pretend lesse title vnto these Northerne parts then the Spanyard, by how much the Spanyard made the first discouery of the same continent so farre Northward as vnto Florida, and the French did but renew that before discouered by the English nation, vsurping vpon our right, and imposing names vpon countryes, riuers, bayes, capes, or headlands, as if they had beene the first finders of those coasts, which iniurie we offered not vnto the Spanyards, but left off to discouer when we approched the Spanish limits: euen so God hath not hitherto permitted them to establish a possession permanent vpon an others right, notwithstanding their manifold manifolde attempts, in which the issue hath beene no lesse tragicall then that of the Spanyards, as by their owne reports is extant.

The French are but vsurpers vpon our right.

The French also vnfortunat in those North parts of America.

A good incouragement for the English nation, to proceed in the conquests of the North of America.

Then seeing the English nation onely hath right vnto these countryes of America from the cape of Florida Northward by the priuilege of first discouery, vnto which Cabot was authorised by regall authority, & set forth by the expence of our late famous king Henry the seuenth: Which right also seemeth strongly defended on our behalfe, by the powerfull hand of almighty God, withstanding the enterprises of other nations: It may greatly incourage vs, vpon so iust ground, as is our right, and vpon so sacred an intent, as to plant religion (our right and intent being meet foundations for the same:) to prosecute effectually vnto a full possession of those so ample & pleasant countries appertaining vnto the crowne of England: the same (as is to be coniectured by infallible arguments of the worlds end approching) being now arriued vnto the time by God prescribed of their vocation, if euer their calling vnto the knowledge of God may be expected. Which also is very probable by the reuolution and course of Gods word and religion, which from the beginning hath mooued from the East, towards, and at last vnto the West, where it is like to end, vnlesse the same begin againe where it did in the East, which were to expect a like world againe. But we are assured of the contrary by the prophesie of Christ, whereby we gather, that after his word preached throughout the world, shall be the end. And as the Gospell when it descended Westward beganne in the South, and afterward spred into the North of Europe: euen so, as the same hath begunne in the South countries of America, no lesse hope may be gathered that it will also spred into the North.

The due time approcheth by all likelihood of calling these heathens vnto Christianity.

The word of God mooueth circularly.

These considerations may helpe to suppresse all dreads rising of hard euents in attempts made this way by other nations, as also of the heauie successe and issue in the late enterprise made by a worthy gentleman our country man sir Humfrey Gilbert knight. who was the first that of our nation carried people to erect an habitation and gouernement in those Northerly countries of America. About which, albeit he had consumed much substance, and lost his life at last, his people also perishing for the most part: yet the mystery thereof we must leaue vnto God, and iudge charitably both of the cause (which was iust in all pretence) and of the person, who was very zealous in prosecuting the same, deseruing honourable remembrance for his good minde, and expence of life in so vertuous an enterprise. Whereby neuertheless, least any man should be dismaid by example of other folks calamity, and misdeeme that God doth resist all attempts intended that way: I thought good, so farre as my selfe was an eye witnesse, to deliuer the circumstance and maner of our proceedings in that action: in which the gentleman was so infortunately incombred with wants, and wofully matched with many ill disposed people, that his rare iudgement and regiment premeditated for those affayres, was subiected to tollerate abuses, & in sundry extremities to holde on a course, more to vpholde credit, then likely in his owne conceit, happely to succeed.

The planting of Gods word must be handled with reuerence.

The issue of such actions being alwayes miserable, not guided by God, who abhorreth confusion and disorder, hath left this for admonition (being the first attempt by our nation to plant) vnto such as shall take the same cause in hand hereafter, not to be discouraged from it: but to make men well aduised how they handle his so high and excellent matters, as the carriage is of his word into those very mighty and vaste countryes. An action doubtlesse not to be intermedled with base purposes, as many haue made the same but a colour to shadow actions, otherwise scarse iustifiable: which doth excite Gods heauy iudgements in the end, to the terrifying of weake minds from the cause, without pondering his iust proceedings: and doth also incense forren princes against our attempts how iust soeuer, who can not but deeme the sequele very dangerous vnto their state (if in those parts we should grow to strength) seeing the very beginnings are entred with spoile.

Ill actions coloured by pretence of planting vpon remote lands.

And with this admonition denounced vpon zeale towards Gods cause, also towards such in whom appeareth disposition honorable vnto this action of planting Christian people and religion in those remote and barbarous nations of America (vnto whom I wish all happinesse) I will now proceed to make relation briefly, yet particularly, of our voyage vndertaken with sir Humfry Gilbert, begun, continued, and ended aduersly.

The first and great preparation of sir H. Gilbert.

When first sir Humfry Gilbert vndertooke the Westerne discouery of America, and had procured from her Maiesty a very large commission to inhabit, and possesse at his choise all remote and heathen lands not in the actuall possession of any Christian prince, the same commission exemplified with many priuileges, such as in his discretion he might demand: Very many gentlemen of good estimation drew vnto him, to associate him in so commendable an enterprise, so that the preparation was expected to grow vnto a puissant fleet, able to encounter a kings power by sea: neuertheless, amongst a multitude of voluntary men, their dispositions were diuers, which bred a farre, and made a diuision in the end, to the confusion of that attempt euen before the same was begunne, and when the shipping was in a maner prepared, & men ready vpon the coast to go aboord: at what time some brake consort, and followed courses degenerating from the voyage before pretended. Others failed of their promises contracted, and the greater number were dispersed, leauing the generall with few of his assured friends, with whome he aduentured to sea: where hauing tasted of no lesse misfortune, he was shortly driuen to retyre home with the losse of a tall shippe, and (more to his griefe) of a valiant gentleman Piles Morgan.

and

A constant resolution of sir H. Gilbert.

Hauing buryed onely in a preparation a great masse of substance, wherby his estate was impaired, his minde yet not dismaid, he continued his former designment and purpose to reuiue this enterprise, good occasion seruing. Upon which determination standing long, without meanes to satisfie his desire: at last he granted certaine assignemẽts out of his commission to sundry persons of meane ability, desiring the priuiledge of his grant, to plant and fortifie in the North parts of America about the riuer of Canada, to whom if God gaue good successe in the North parts (where then no matter of moment was expected) the same (he thought) would greatly aduance the hope of the South, and be a furtherance vnto his determination that way. And the worst that might happen in that course, might be excused without preiudice vnto him by the former supposition, that those North regions were of no regard: but chiefly a possession taken in any parcell of those heathen countries by vertue of his grant, did inuest him of territories extending euery way two hundred leagues: which induced sir Humfrey Gilbert to make those assignements, desiring greatly their expedition, because his commission did expyre after sixe yeeres, if in that space he had not gotten actuall possession.

A second preparation of sir H. Gilbert.

Time went away without any thing done by his assignes: insomuch at last he must resolue himselfe to take a voyage in person, for more assurance to keepe his patent in force, which then almost was expired or within two yeeres.

In furtherance of his determination, amongst others, sir George Beckam knight shewed himselfe very zealous to the action, greatly aiding both by his aduise and in the charge. Other gentlemen to their abilitie ioyned vnto him, resolued to aduenture their substance and liues in the same cause. Who beginning their preparation from that time, both of shipping, munition, victuall, men, and things requisite, some of them continued the charge two yeeres complet, without intermission. Such were the difficulties and crosse accidents, opposing these proceedings, which tooke not end in lesse then two yeeres: many of which circumstances I will omit.

The last place of our assembly, before we left the coast of England, was in Causet bay, neere vnto Plymmouth: then resolued to put vnto the sea with shipping and prouision, such as we had, before our store yet remayning, but chiefly the time and season of the yeere were too farre spent. Nevertheless it seemed first very doubtfull, by what way to shape our course, and to beginne our intended discouery, either from the South Northward, or from the North Southward.

Consultation about our course.

The first (that is beginning South) without all controuersy was the likeliest, wherein we were assured to haue commodity of the currant, which from the cape of Florida setteth Northward, and would haue furthered greatly our nauigation, discouering from the foresaid cape along towards cape Britton, and all those lands lying to the North.

Commodities in discouering from South Northward.

Also the yeere being farre spent, and arriued to the moneth of June, we were not to spend time in Northerly courses, where we should be surprised with timely winter: but to couet the South, which we had space enough, then to haue attained: and there might with lesse detriment haue wintred that season, being more milde and short in the South then in the North, where winter is both long and rigorous.

These & other like reasons alleged in fauor of the Southerne course, first to be taken, to the contrary was inferred: that forasmuch as both our victuals, and many other needfull prouisions were diminished and left insufficient for so long a voyage, and for the wintring of so many men, we ought to shape a course most likely to minister supply: and that was to take the Newfound land in our way, which was but seuen hundred leagues from our English coast. Where being vsually at that time of the yeere, and vntill the fine of August, a multitude of shippes repayring thither for fish: we should be relieued abundantly with many necessaries, which after the fishing ended, they might well spare, and freely impart vnto vs.

Cause why we began our discouery frõ the North. Incommodities in beginning North.

Not staying long vpon that New land coast, we might proceed Southward, and follow still the Sunne, vntill we arriued at places more temperate to our content.

By which reasons we were the rather induced to follow this Northerly course, obeying vnto necessitie, which must be supplyed. Other wise, we doubted that sudden approch of winter, bringing with it continuall fogge, and thicke mists, tempest and rage of weather: also contrarietie of

currants descending from the cape of Florida vnto cape Britton and cape Rase, would fall out to be great and irresistable impediments vnto our further proceeding for that yeere, and compell vs to winter in those North and colde regions.

Wherefore suppressing all obiections to the contrary, we resolued to beginne our course Northward, and to follow directly as we might, the trade way vnto Newfound land: from whence after our refreshing and reparation of wants, we intended without delay (by Gods permission) to proceed into the South, not omitting any riuer or bay, which in all that large tract of land appeared to our view worthy of search. Immediatly we agreed vpon the maner of our course and orders to be obserued in our voyage: which were deliuered in writing vnto the captaines and maisters of euery shippe a copie in maner following.

Euery shippe had deliuered two bollets or scrowles, the one sealed vp in ware, the other left open: in both which were included seuerall watchwords: that open, seruing vpon our owne coast or the coast of Ireland: the other sealed, was promised on all hands not to be broken vp vntill we should be cleere of the Irish coast: which from thencefoorth did serue vntill we arriued and met altogether in such harbours of the Newfound land as were agreed for our Rendevous. The said watchwords being requisite to know our consorts, whensoeuer by night, either by fortune of weather, our fleet dispersed should come together againe: or one should hale another: or if by ill watch and stearedge one shippe chance to fall aboord of another in the darke.

The reason of the bollet sealed, was to keepe secret that watchword while we were vpon our owne coast, least any of the company, stealing from the fleete, might bewray the same: which knowen to an enemy, he might boord vs by night without mistrust, hauing our owne watchword.

Orders agreed vpon by the Captaines and Maisters to be obserued by the fleet of sir Humfrey Gilbert.

FIrst the Admirall to carry his flagge by day, and his light by night.

2 Item, if the Admirall shall shorten his saile by night, then to shew two lights vntill he be answered againe by euery shippe shewing one light for a short time.

3 Item, if the Admirall after his shortning of saile, as afore said, shall make more saile againe: then he to shew three lights one aboue another.

4 Item, if the Admirall shall happen to hull in the night: then to make a wauering light ouer his other light, wauering the light vpon a pole.

5 Item, if the fleet should happen to be scattered by weather, or other mishap, then so soone as one shall descry another, to hoise both toppe sailes twise, if the weather will serue, and to strike them twise againe: but if the weather serue not, then to hoise the maine toppe saile twise, and forthwith to strike it twise againe.

6 Item, if it shall happen a great fogge to fall, then presently euery shippe to beare vp with the admirall, if there be winde: but if it be a calme, then euery shippe to hull, and so to lie at hull till it be cleare. And if the fogge do continue long, then the Admirall to shoot off two pieces euery euening, and euery shippe to answere it with one shot: and euery man bearing to the shippe, that is to leeward so neere as he may.

7 Item, euery maister to giue charge vnto the watch to looke out well, for laying aboord one of another in the night, and in fogges.

8 Item, euery euening euery shippe to haile the Admirall, and so to fall astearne him, saying through the Ocean: and being on the coast, euery shippe to haile him both morning and euening.

9 Item, if any shippe be in danger any way, by leake or otherwise, then she to shoot off a piece, and presently to hang out one light, whereupon euery man to beare towards her, answering her with one light, for a short time, and so to put it out againe, thereby to giue knowledge that they haue seene her token.

10 Item, whensoeuer the Admirall shall hang out her ensigne in the maine shrowds, then euery man to come aboord her, as a token of counsell.

11 Item, if there happen any stormе or contrary winde to the fleete after the discouery, whereby they are separated: then euery shippe to repayre vnto their last good port, there to meete againe.

Our

Our courſe agreed vpon.

THe courſe firſt to be taken for the diſcouery is to beare directly to cape Raſe the moſt Southerly cape of Newfound land. And there to harbor our ſelues either in Rogneux or Fermous, being the firſt places appointed for our Rende vous, and the next harbors vnto the Northward of cape Raſe. And therefore euery ſhippe ſeparated from the fleet, to repayre to that place ſo faſt as God ſhall permit, whether you ſhall fall to the Southward, or Northward of it: and there to ſtay for the meeting of the whole fleet the ſpace of tenne dayes, and when you ſhall depart, to leaue marks.

A direction of our courſe vnto the New found land.

BEginning our courſe from Silley, the neereſt is by Weſt ſouthweſt (if the winde ſerue) vntill ſuch time as we haue brought our ſelues in the latitude of 43 or 44 degrees, becauſe the Ocean is ſubiect much to Southerly windes in June and July. Then to take trauerſe from 45 to 47 degrees of latitude, if we be inforced by contrary windes: and not to go to the Northward of the height of 47 degrees of Septentrional latitude by no meanes, if God ſhall not inforce the contrary: but to do your indeuor to keepe in the height of 46 degrees, ſo neere as you can poſſibly, becauſe cape Raſe lyeth about that height.

Notes.

IF by contrary windes we be driuen backe vpon the coaſt of England, then to repayre vnto Silley for a place of our aſſembly and meeting.

If we be driuen backe by contrary windes, that we can not paſſe the coaſt of Ireland: then the place of our aſſembly to be at Beare hauen or Baltimore hauen.

If we ſhall not happen to meet at cape Raſe, then the place of Rende vous to be at cape Britton, or the neereſt harbor vnto the Weſtward of cape Britton.

If by meanes of other ſhipping we may not ſafely ſtay there, then to reſt at the very next ſafe port to the Weſtward, euery ſhippe leauing their marks behinde them for the more certaintie of the after comners to know where to finde them.

The marks that euery man ought to leaue in ſuch a caſe, were of the Generals priuate deuice, written by himſelfe, ſealed alſo cloſe in waxe, and deliuered vnto euery ſhippe one ſcroule, which was not to be opened vntill occaſion required, whereby euery man was certified what to leaue for inſtruction of after comners: and euery of vs comming into any harbour or riuer, might know who had beene there, or whether any were ſtill there vp higher into the riuer, or departed, and which way.

Orders thus determined, and promiſes mutually giuen to be obſerued, euery man withdrew himſelfe vnto his charge, the ankers being already weyed, and our ſhippe vnder ſaile, hauing a ſoft gale of winde, we began our voyage vpon Tueſday the eleuenth day of June, in the yeere of our Lord 1583, hauing in our fleet (at our departure from Cauſet bay) theſe ſhippes, whoſe names and burthens, with the names of the captaines and maiſters of them, I haue alſo inſerted, as followeth: Beginning of the voyage.

1 The delight (aliàs) the George, of burthen 120 tunnes, was Admirall: in which went the Generall, and William Winter captaine in her, and part owner, and Richard Clearke maiſter.

2 The Barke Rawley, ſet foorth by M. Walter Rawley, of the burthen of 200 tunnes, was then Vice admirall: in which went M. Butler captaine, and Robert Dauis of Briſtoll maiſter.

3 The Golden hinde, of burthen 40 tunnes, was then Reare admirall: In which went Edward Hayes captaine and owner, and William Coxe of Limehouſe maiſter.

4 The Swallow, of burthen 40 tunnes: in her was captaine Maurice Browne.

5 The Squirill, of burthen tenne tunnes: in which went captaine William Andrewes, and one Cade maſter.

We were in number in all, about 260 men: among whom we had of euery faculty good choice, as Shipwrights, Maſons, Carpenters, Smithes, and ſuch like, requiſit to ſuch an action: alſo Minerall men and Refiners. Beſides, for ſolace of our people, and allurement of the Sauages, we were prouided of Muſike in good variety: Not omitting the leaſt toyes, as Morris dancers, Hobby horſſe, and Maylike conceits to delight the Sauage people, whom we intended to winne by Our fleet conſiſted of fiue ſailes, in which we had about 260 men. Prouiſions fit for ſuch diſcoueries.

by all fayre meanes possible. And to that end we were indifferently furnished of all petty haberdashrie wares to barter with those simple people.

June 11. In this maner we set forward, departing (as hath beene said) out of Causon bay the eleuenth day of June, being Tuesday, the weather and winde fayre and good all day, but a great storme of thunder and winde fell the same night.

June 13. Thursday following, when we hailed one another in the euening (according to the order before specified) they signified vnto vs out of the Vice admirall, that both the captaine, and very many of the men were fallen sicke. And about midnight the Vice admirall forsooke vs, notwithstanding we had the winde East, fayre and good. But it was after credibly reported, that they were infected with a contagious sickenesse, and arriued greatly distressed at Plymmouth: the reason I could neuer vnderstand. Sure I am, no cost was spared by their owner M. Ralegh, in setting them forth: Therefore I leaue it vnto God.

Obserue.

By this time we were in 48 degrees of latitude, not a little grieued with the losse of the most puissant shippe in our fleet: after whose departure, the Golden hinde succeeded in the place of Vice admirall, and remooued her flagge from the mizon vnto the fore toppe.

June 25. From Saturday the 15 of June vntill the 28, which was vpon a Friday, we neuer had fayre day without fogge or raine, and windes bad, much to the West northwest, whereby we were driuen Southward vnto 41 degrees scarse.

About this time of the yere the windes are commonly West to wards the Newfound land, keeping ordinarily within two points of West to the South or to the North, whereby the course thither falleth out to be long and tedious after June, which in March, Aprill & May, hath beene performed out of England in 22 dayes and lesse. We had winde alwayes so scant from West northwest, and from West southwest againe, that our trauerse was great, running South vnto 41 degrees almost, and afterward North into 51 degrees.

July 20. Great fogges vpon the Ocean sea Northward.

Also we were incumbred with much fogge and mists in maner palpable, in which we could not keepe so well together, but were disseuered, losing the company of the Swallow and the Squirill vpon the 20 day of July, whom we met againe at seuerall places vpon the Newfound land coast the third of August, as shalbe declared in place conuenient.

July 27 Saturday the 27 of July, we might descry not farre from vs, as it were, mountaines of ile driuen vpon the sea, being then in 50 degrees, which were carried Southward to the weather of vs: whereby may be coniectured that some currant doth set that way from the North.

The banke in length vnknowen, stretcheth from North into South, in bredth 10 leagues, in depth of water vpon it 30 fathome.

Before we come to Newfound land about 50 leagues on this side, we passe the banke, which are high grounds rising within the sea, and vnder water, yet deepe enough, and without danger, being commonly not lesse then 25 and 30 fathome water vpon them: the same (as it were some vaine of mountaines within the sea) doe runne along, and from the Newfound land, beginning Northward about 52 or 53 degrees of latitude, & do extend into the South infinitly. The breach of this banke is somewhere more, and somewhere lesse: but we found the same about 10 leagues ouer, hauing sounded both on this side thereof, and the other toward Newfound land, but found no ground, with almost 200 fathome of line, both before and after we had passed the banke. The Portingalles, and French chiefly, haue a notable trade of fishing vpon this banke, where are sometimes an hundred or more sailes of shippes: who commonly begunne the fishing in Aprill, and haue ended by July. That fish is large, alwayes wet, hauing no land neere to drie, and is called Corre fish.

A great fishing vpon ꝑ banke.

During the time of fishing, a man shall know without sounding when he is vpon the banke, by the incredible multitude of sea fowle houering ouer the same, to pray vpon the offalles and garbish of fish throwen out by fisher men, and floting vpon the sea.

Abundance of fowles.

Upon Tuesday the 11 of June, we forsooke the coast of England. So againe Tuesday the 30 of July (seuen weeks after) we got sight of land, being immediatly embayed in the Grand bay, or some other great bay: the certeinty whereof we could not iudge, so great hase and fogge did hang vpon the coast, as neither we might discerne the land well, nor take the Sunnes height. But by our best computation we were then in 51 degrees of latitude.

July 30.

First sight of land.

Forsaking this bay and vncomfortable coast (nothing appearing vnto vs but hideous rocks and mountaines, bare of trees, and void of any greene herbe) we followed the coast to the South, with weather fayre and cleere.

Iland and a fowle named Penguin.

We had sight of an Iland named Penguin, of a fowle there breeding in abundance, almost incredible, which can not flie, their wings not able to carry their body, being very large (not much lesse then a goose) and exceeding fat: which the French men vse to take without difficulty vpon that Iland, and to barrell them vp with salt. But for lingering of time we had made vs there the like prouision.

Trending

Trending this coaſt, we came to the Iſland called Baccaleu, the ſame not paſt 2. leagues from the maine: to the South wherof lieth Cape S. Francis, 5. leagues diſtant from Baccaleu, betwene which goeth in a great bay, by the vulgar ſort called the bay of Conception. Here me met with the Swallow againe, whome we had loſt in the fogge, and all her men altered into other apparell: wherof it ſeemed their ſtore was ſo amended, that for ioy & cõgratulation of our meeting, they ſpared not to caſt vp into the aire and ouerboord, their caps and hats in good plentie. The Captaine albeit himſelfe was very honeſt and religious, yet was he not appointed of men to his humor and deſert: who for the moſt part were ſuch as had bene by vs ſurpriſed vpon the narrow ſeas of England, being pirats, and had taken at that inſtant certaine Frenchmen laden, one barke with wines, and another with ſalt. Both which we reſcued, & tooke the man of warre with all her men, which was the ſame ſhip now called the Swallow, following ſtill their kinde ſo oft, as (being ſeparated from the General) they found opportunitie to robbe and ſpoile. And becauſe Gods iuſtice did follow the ſame companie, euen to deſtruction, and to the ouerthrow alſo of the Captaine (though not conſenting to their miſdemeanor:) I wil not conceale any thing that maketh to the manifeſtation and approbation of his iudgements, for examples of others, perſwaded that God more sharpely woke reuenge vpon them, and hath tollerated longer as great outrage in others: by howe much theſe went vnder protection of his cauſe and religion, which was then pretended.

An Iſland called Baccaleu, of the fiſh taken there.

Therfore vpõ further enquirie it was knowen, how this company met with a barke returning home after the fiſhing with his fraight: and becauſe the men in the Swallow were very neere ſcanted of victual, and chiefly of apparel, doubtful withal where or when to finde and meete with their Admiral, they beſought the captaine they might go aboord this Newlander, only to borow what might be ſpared, the rather becauſe the ſame was bound homeward. Leaue giuen, not without charge to deale fauorably, they came aboord the fiſherman, whom they prifled of tackle, ſailes, cables, traiſles, and the men of their apparel: not ſparing by torture (winding cords about their heads) to draw out elſe what they thought good. This done with expedition (like men ſkilfull in ſuch miſchiefe) as they tooke their cocke boat to goe aboord their owne ſhip, it was ouerwhelmed in the ſea, and certaine of theſe men there drowned: the reſt were preſerued euen by thoſe ſeely ſoules whom they had before ſpoiled, who ſaued and deliuered them aboord the Swallow. What became afterward of the poore Newlander, perhaps deſtitute of ſailes & furniture ſufficient to carry them home (whither they had not leſſe to runne then 750. leagues) God alone knoweth, who tooke vengeance not long after of the reſt that eſcaped at this inſtant, to reuelle the fact, and iuſtifie to the world Gods iudgements inflicted vpon them, as ſhalbe declared in place conuenient.

Miſdemeanor not of them in the Swallow.

Thus after we had met with the Swallow, we held on our courſe Southward, vntil we came againſt the harbor called S. Iohns, about 5. leagues from the former Cape of S. Francis: where before the entrance into the harbor, we found alſo the frigate or Squirril lying at ancre. Whome the Engliſh marchãts (that were & alwayes be Admirals by turnes interchangeably ouer the fleetes of fiſhermen within the ſame harbor) would not permit to enter into the harbor. Glad of ſo happy meeting both of the Swallow and frigate in one day (being Saturday the 3. of Auguſt) we made ready our fights, & prepared to enter the harbor, any reſiſtance to the contrary notwithſtanding, there being within of all nations, to the nomber of 36. ſailes. But firſt the General diſpatched a boate to giue them knowledge of his comming for no ill intent, hauing Commiſſion from her Maieſtie for his voyage he had in hand. And immediatly we folowed with a ſlacke gale, and in the very entrance (which is but narrow, not aboue 2. buts length) the Admiral fell vpon a rocke on the lareboord ſide by great ouerſight, in that the weather was faire, the rocke much aboue water ſalt by the ſhoare, where neither went any ſea gate. But wee found ſuch readineſſe in the Engliſh Marchants to helpe vs in that danger, that without delaye there were brought a nomber of boates, which towed off the ſhip, and cleared her of danger.

Engliſh ſhips are the ſtrongeſt and Admirals of other fleetes, fiſhing vpon the South parts of Newfound land.

Hauing taken place conuenient in the road, we let fall ancres, the Captaines & maſters repairing aboord our Admiral: whither alſo came immediatly the Maſters and owners of the fiſhing fleete of Engliſhmen, to vnderſtand the Generals intent & cauſe of our arriual there. They were all ſatisfied when the general had ſhewed his cõmiſſion, & purpoſe to take poſſeſſion of thoſe lands to the behalfe of ỳ crowne of England, & the aduancement of Chriſtian religion in thoſe paganiſh regions, requiring but their lawful ayd for repairing of his fleete, & ſupply of ſome neceſſaries, ſo farre as conueniently might be afoarded him, both out of that & other harbors adioyning. In lieu wherof, he made offer to gratifie them with any fauor & priuiledge, which vpon their better aduiſe they ſhould demaund, ỳ like being not to be obteined hereafter for greater price. So craning expedition of his demaund, minding to proceed further ſouth wbout long detention in thoſe parts, he diſmiſſed them, after promiſe giuẽ of their beſt indeuour to ſatiſfie ſpeedily his ſo reaſonable requeſt.

The marchants with their Maſters departed, they cauſed forthwith to be diſcharged all the great Ordinance of their fleete in token of our welcome.

Good ordr: taken by Engliſh marchats for our ſupply in New found land.

It was further determined, that euery ſhip of our fleete ſhould deliuer vnto the marchants and Maſters of that harbour, a note of all their wants: which done, the ſhips aſwell Engliſh as ſtrangers, were tared at an eaſie rate to make ſupply. And beſides, Commiſſioners were appointed, part of our owne company, and part of theirs, to goe into other harbours adioyning, (for our Engliſh marchants commaund all there) to leauie our prouiſion: whereunto the Portingals (aboue other nations) did moſt willingly and liberally contribute. Inſomuch as we were preſented (aboue our allowance) with wines, marmalads, moſt fine ruſke or biſket, ſweet oyles, and ſundry delicacies. Alſo we wanted not of freſh ſalmons, troutes, lobſters, and other freſh fiſh brought daply vnto vs. Moreouer, as the maner is in their fiſhing, euery weeke to chooſe their Admirall a new, or rather they ſucceed in orderly courſe, and haue weekely their Admirals feaſt ſolemnized: euen ſo the General, Captaines and maſters of our fleete, were continually inuited and feaſted. To growe ſhort, in our abundance at home, the intertainment had bene delightful, but after our wants and tedious paſſage through the Ocean, it ſeemed more acceptable and of greater contentation, by how much the ſame was vnexpected in that deſolate corner of the worlde: where at other times of the yeere, wilde beaſtes and birds haue onely the fruition of all thoſe Countreis, which now ſeemed a place very populous and much frequented.

Good entertainment in New found land.

No Sauages in the South part of Newe found land.

August 4.

The next morning being Sunday & ỳ 4. of Auguſt, the General & his company were brought on lande by Engliſh marchants, who ſhewed vnto vs their accuſtomed walkes vnto a place they cal the Garden. But nothing appeared more then Nature it ſelfe without art: who confuſedly hath brought foorth roſes abundantly, wilde, but odoriferous, and to ſenſe very comfortable. Alſo the like plentie of raſpis berries, which do grow in euery place.

August 5.

Munday following, the General had his tent ſet vp, who being accompanied with his owne followers, ſummoned the marchants, and maſters, both Engliſh and ſtrangers to be preſent at his taking poſſeſſion of thoſe Countreis. Before whom openly was read & interpreted vnto the ſtrangers, his Commiſſion: by vertue whereof he tooke poſſeſſion in the ſame harbour of S. Iohns, and 200. leagues euery way, inueſted the Queenes Maieſtie with the title and dignitie thereof, had deliuered vnto him (after the cuſtome of England) a rod and a turffe of the ſame ſoile, entring poſſeſſion alſo for him, his heires and aſſignes for euer: And ſignified vnto al men, that from that time forward, they ſhould take the ſame lande as a territorie appertaining to the Queene of England, and himſelfe authorized vnder her Maieſtie to poſſeſſe and enioy it. And to ordeine lawes for the gouernment thereof, agreeable (ſo neere as conueniently might be) vnto the lawes of England: vnder which all people comming thither hereafter, either to inhabite, or by way of traffique, ſhould be ſubiected and gouerned. And eſpecially at the ſame time for a beginning, he poſed and deliuered three lawes to be in force immediatly. That is to ſay: the firſt for Religion, which in publique exerciſe ſhould be according to the Church of England. The 2. for maintenance of her Maieſties right and poſſeſſion of thoſe territories, againſt which if any thing were attempted preiudiciall, the partie or parties offending, ſhould be adiudged and executed as in caſe of high treaſon, according to the lawes of England. The 3. if any perſon ſhould vtter words ſounding to the diſhonour of her Maieſtie, he ſhould looſe his eares, and haue his ſhip and goods confiſcate.

Poſſeſſion taken.

Three Lawes.

Theſe contents publiſhed, obedience was promiſed by general voice & conſent of the multitude aſwel of Engliſhmen as ſtrangers, praying for cõtinuance of this poſſeſſion & gouernment begun. After this, the aſſembly was diſmiſſed. And afterward were erected not farre from that place the Armes of England ingrauen in lead, & infixed vpon a pillar of wood. Yet further & actually to eſtabliſh this poſſeſſion taken in the right of her Maieſtie, & to the behoofe of ſir Humfrey Gilbert knight, his heires and aſſignes for euer: the General graunted in fee farme diuers parcels of land lying by the water ſide, both in this harbor of S. Iohns, & elſwhere, which was to ỳ owners a great commoditie, being therby aſſured (by their proper inheritance) of grounds conuenient to dreſſe and to drie their fiſh, whereof many times before they did faile, being preuented by them that came firſt into the harbor. For which grounds they did couenant to pay a certaine rent and ſeruice vnto ſir Humfrey Gilbert, his heires or aſſignes for euer, and peerely to maintaine poſſeſſion of the ſame, by themſelues or their aſſignes.

Actuall poſſeſſion maintened in Newe found land.

Now remained only to take in prouiſion graunted, according as euery ſhippe was tared which did fiſh vpon the coaſt adioyning. In the meane while, the Generall appointed men vnto their charge: ſome to repaire and trim the ſhips, others to attend in gathering together our ſupply and prouiſions: others, to ſearch the cõmodities and ſingularities of the countrey, to be found by ſea or land, & to make relation vnto the General what either themſelues could knowe by their owne trauaile uaile and experience, or by good intelligence of men Engliſh or ſtrangers, who had longeſt frequented the ſame coaſt. Alſo ſome obſerued the elcuation of the pole, and drewe plattes of the coūtrey exactly graded. And by that I could gather by eche mans ſeuerall relation, I haue drawen a briefe deſcription of the New found land, with the commodities by ſea or lande already made, and ſuch alſo as are in poſſibilitie and great likelyhoode to be made: Neuertheleſſe the Cards and plats that were drawing, with the due gradation of the harbors, bayes, & capes, did periſh with the Admiral: wherefore in the deſcription following, I muſt omit the particulers of ſuch things.

Men appointed to make ſearch.

A briefe relation of the New found land and commodities thereof.

That which we do call the Newfound land, and the Frenchmen Bacalaos, is an Iſland, or rather (after the opinion of ſome) it conſiſteth of ſundry Iſlands & broken lands, ſituate in the North regions of America, vpon the gulfe & entrance of the great riuer called S. Laurence in Canada. Into the which, nauigation may be made both on the South and North ſide of this Iſland. The land lieth South & North, containing in length betwene 3. and 400. miles, accompting from Cape race (which is in 46. deg. 25. min.) vnto the Grand bay in 52. deg. of Septentrional latitude. The Iſland round about hath very many goodly bayes and harbors, ſafe roades for ſhips, the like not to be found in any part of the knowen world. Newfound land is of Iſlands or broken lands. Goodly roads and harbors.

The cōmon opinion that is had of intemperature & extreeme cold that ſhould be in this coūtrey, as of ſome part it may be verified, namely the North, where I grant it is more cold then in countries of Europe, which are vnder the ſame elcuation: euen ſo it cannot ſtand with reaſon & nature of the clime, that the South parts ſhould be ſo intemperat as the bruit hath gone. For, as they ſame do lie vnder the climats of Britton, Aniou, Poictou in France, betwene 46. & 49. deg. ſo can they not ſo much differ from the temperature of thoſe countreis: vnleſſe vpon the outcoaſts lying open vnto the Ocean & ſharpe winds, it muſt in deede be ſubiect to more colde, then further within the land, Where the mountaines are interpoſed, as walles and bulwarkes, to defende and to reſiſt the aſperitie and rigor of the ſea and weather. Some holde opinion, that the Newfound land might be the more ſubiect to cold, by how much it lieth high and neere vnto the middle region. I graunt, that not in Newfound land alone, but in Germany, Italy & Affricke, euen vnder the Equinoctial line, the mountaines are extreeme cold, and ſeldome vncouered of ſnow, in their culme & higheſt tops, which commeth to paſſe by the ſame reaſon that they are extended towards the middle region: yet in the countreis lying beneath them, it is found quite contrary. Euen ſo al hilles hauing their diſcents, the valleis alſo and low grounds muſt be likewiſe hot or temperate, as the clime doeth giue in Newfound land: though I am of opinion that the Sunnes reflection is much cooled, and cannot be ſo forcible in the Newfound land, nor generally throughout America, as in Europe or Affricke: by howe much the Sunne in his diurnal courſe from Eaſt to Weſt, palleth ouer (for the moſt part) dry land and ſandie countries, before hee arriueth at the Weſt of Europe or Affricke, whereby his motion increaſeth heate, with litle or no qualification by moyſt vapours. Where, on the contrary, he paſſeth from Europe and Affricke vnto America ouer the Ocean, from whence it draweth and carieth with him abundance of moyſt vapours, which do qualifie and infeeble greatly the Sunnes reuerberation vpon this countrey chiefly of Newfound land, being ſo much to the Northward. Neuertheles (as I ſaid before) the cold cānot be ſo intollerable vnder the latitude of 46. 47. and 48. (eſpecially within land) that it ſhould be vnhabitable, as ſome doe ſuppoſe, ſeeing alſo there are very many people more to the North by a great deale. And in theſe South parts there be certaine beaſts, ounces or leopards, & birds in like maner, which in the Sommer we haue ſeene, not heard of in countreis of extreeme and vehement coldneſſe. Beſides, as in the moneths of June, July, Auguſt & September, the heate is ſomewhat more then in England at thoſe ſeaſons: ſo men remayning vpon the South parts neere vnto Cape Race, vntil after Hollantide, haue not found the cold ſo extreeme, nor much differing from the temperature of Englands. Thoſe which haue arriued there after Nouember & December, haue found the ſnowe exceeding deepe, whereat no marueile, conſidering the ground vpon the coaſt, is rough & vneuen, and the ſnow is driuen into the places moſt declining, as the like is to be ſeene with vs. The like depth of ſnow happily ſhall not be found within lande vpon the plainer countreis, which alſo are defended by the mountaines, breaking off the violence of winds & weather. But admitting extraordinary colde in thoſe South parts, aboue that with vs here: it can not be ſo great as in Sweueland, much leſſe in Moſcouia or Ruſſia: yet are the ſame countreis very populous, and the rigor of colde is diſpenſed with by the commoditie of Stoues, warme clothing, meates and drinkes: all which neede not to be wanting in the Newfound land, if we had intent there to inhabite. Newfound land habitable. Cold by accidental meanes.

Commodities

In the South parts we found no inhabitants, which by all likelyhoode haue abandoned those coastes, the same being so much frequented by Christians: But in the North are sauages altogether harmelesse. Touching the commodities of this Countrey, seruing either for sustentation of inhabitants, or for maintenance of traffique, there are & may be made diuers: that it seemeth Nature hath recompensed that only desert and incommoditie of some sharpe cold, by many benefits:

Fish of sea and fresh water.

viz. With incredible quantitie, and no lesse varietie of kindes of fish in the sea and fresh waters, as trouts, salmons & other fish to vs vnknowen: Also codde, which alone draweth many nations thither, and is become the most famous fishing of the world. Abundance of whales, for which also is a very great trade in ꝑ bayes of Placentia & Grandbay, where is made Trane oyles of the whale: Herring the largest that haue bene heard of, and exceeding the Walstrond herring of Norway: but hitherto was neuer benefit taken of the herring fishing. There are sundry other fish very delicate, namely the Bonito, lobsters, turbut, with others infinite not sought after: Oysters hauing pearle but not orient in colour: I tooke it by reason they were not gathered in season.

Concerning the inland commodities, aswell to be drawen from this land, as from the exceeding large Countries adioyning: there is nothing which our East and Northerly countreis of Europe doe yeeld, but the like also may be made in them as plentifully by time and industrie: Namely, rosen, pitche, tarre, soapeashes, dealboord, mastes for shippes, hides, furres, flaxe, hempe, corne, cables, cordage, linen cloth, mettals and many more. All which the Countries will aboarde, and the soyle is apt to yeelde.

The trees for the most in those South parts, are firretrees, pine and Cypresse, all yeelding gumme and turpentine.

Cherrie trees bearing fruit no bigger then a small pease. Also peare trees but fruitelesse. Other trees of some sortes to vs vnknowen.

The soyle along the coast is not deepe of earth, bringing foorth abundantly pease small, yet good feeding for cattle. Roses passing sweete, like vnto our muske roses in forme, raspases, a berrie we call hurts, good and holesome to eate. The grasse and hearbe doth fat sheepe in very short space, proued by English marchants which haue caried sheepe thither for fresh vitaile, & had them raised exceeding fat in lesse then 3. weekes. Pease which our countreymen haue sowen in the time of May, haue come vp faire, & bene gathered in the beginning of August, of which our Generall had a present acceptable for the rarenesse, being the first fruits comming vp by art and industrie in that desolate and inhabited land.

Lakes or pooles of fresh water, both on the toppes of mountaines and in the valleis. In which are said to be muskels not vnlike to haue pearle, which I had put in triall, if by mischance falling vnto me, I had not bene letted from that and other good experiments I was minded to make.

Foule both of water & land in great plentie and diuersitie. Al kinde of greene foule: Others as bigge as bustards, yet not the same. A great white foule called of some a Gaunt.

Upon the land diuers sorts of haukes, as faulcons, and others by report: Partridges most plentifully larger then ours, gray and white of colour, and rough footed like doues, which our men after one flight did kil with cougels, they were so fat and vnable to flie. Birds some like blackbirds, linnets, canary birds, and others very small. Beasts of sundry kinds, red deare, buttolses or a beast it seemeth by the tract and foote very large in maner of an oxe. Beares, ounces or leopards, some greater & some lesser, wolfes, foxes, which to the Northward a litle further are blacke, whose furre is esteemed in some Countreis of Europe very rich. Otters, beuers, marternes: And in the opinion of most men that saw it, the General had brought vnto him a Sable aliue, which he sent vnto his brother Sir Iohn Gilbert knight of Deuonshire: but it was neuer deliuered, as after I vnderstood. We could not obserue the hundreth part of creatures in those vnhabited landes: but these mentioned may induce vs to glorifie the magnificent God, who hath superabundantly replenished the earth with creatures seruing for the vse of man, though man hath not vsed the fift part of the same, which the more doth aggrauate the fault and foolish slouth in many of our nation, chusing rather to liue indirectly, and very miserably to liue and die within this Realme pestered with inhabitants, then to aduenture as becommeth men, to obteine a habitation in those remote landes, in which Nature very prodigally doth minister vnto mens endeuors, and for art to worke vpon.

New found land doth minister commodities abundantly for art and industrie.

For besides these already recounted and infinite moe, the mountaines generally make shewe of mineral substance: Iron very common, lead, & some where copper. I wil not auere of richer mettals: albeit, by the circumstance following, more then hope may be conceiued thereof.

For amongst other charges giuen to inquire out the singularities of this countrey, the General was most curious in the search of mettals, commanding the mineral man and refiner especially to be diligent. The same was a Saxon borne, honest, and religious, named Daniel. Who after after search brought at first some sorts of oare, seeming rather to be vpon then other mettall. The next time he found oare, which with no small shew of contentment he deliuered vnto the Generall, vsing protestation, that if siluer were the thing which might satisfie the Generall & his followers, there it was, aduising him to seeke no further: the peril whereof hee vndertooke vpon his life (as deare vnto him as the Crowne of England vnto her Maiestie, that I may vse his owne words) if it fell not out accordingly. Siluer oare brought vnto the Generall.

My selfe at this instant liker to die then to liue, by a mischance, could not follow this confident opinion of our refiner to my owne satisfaction: but afterward demanding our Generals opinion therein, and to haue some part of the oare, he replied: Content your selfe, I haue seene enough, and were it but to satisfie my priuate humor, I would proceed no further. The promise vnto my friends, and necessitie, to bring also the South countreis within compasse of my Patent (neere expired) as we haue already done these North parts, do onely perswade me further. And touching the oare, I haue sent it aboorde, whereof I would haue no speach to be made so long as we remaine within harbor: being here both Portingals, Biscayes and Frenchmen not farre off, from whome must be kept any bruite or muttering of such matter. When we are at sea proofe shalbe made if it be to our desire, we may returne the sooner hither againe. Whose answere I iudged reasonable, and contenting me well: wherewith I will conclude this narration and description of the New found-land, and proceede to the rest of our voyage, which ended tragically. Reasons why no further search was made for the siluer mine.

WHile the better sort of vs were seriously occupied in repairing our wants, and contriuing of matters for the commoditie of our voyage: others of an other sort & disposition, were plotting of mischiefe. Some casting to steale away our shipping by night, watching opportunitie by the Generals and captaines lying on the shoare: whose conspiracies discouered, they were preuented. Others drew together in company, and caried away out of the harbors adioyning, a ship laden with fish, setting the poore men on shoare. A great many more of our people stole into the woods to hide themselues, attending time and meanes to returne home by such shipping as daily departed from the coast. Some were sicke of flixes, and many dead: and in briefe, by one meanes or other our company was diminished, and many by the Generall licensed to returne home. Insomuch as after we had reuiewed our people, resolued to see an ende of our voyage, we grewe scant of men to furnish all our shipping: it seemed good therefore vnto the Generall to leaue the Swallowe with such prouision as might be spared for transporting home the sicke people. Misdemeanors in our company.

The Captaine of the Delight or Admirall returned into Englande, in whose steade was appointed Captaine, Maurice Browne, before Captaine of the Swallowe: who also brought with him into the Delight, all his men of the Swallowe, which before haue bene noted of outrage perpetrated and committed vpon fishermen there mette at sea. God brought together these men into the ship, ordained to perish, who before had committed such outrage.

The Generall made choise to goe in his frigate the Squirrell, (whereof the Captaine also was amongst them that returned into England,) the same frigate being most conuenient to discouer vpon the coast, and to searche into euery harbour or creeke, which a great shippe could not doe. Therefore the frigate was prepared with her nettings and sights, and ouer charged with bases and such small Ordinance, more to giue a shewe, then with iudgement to foresee vnto the safetie of her and the men, which afterward was an occasion also of their ouerthrow. Why Sr H. Gilbert went in the frigate.

Nowe hauing made ready our shipping, that is to say, the Delight, the golden Hinde, and the Squirrell, and put aboorde our prouision, which was wines, bread or ruske, fishe wette and drie, sweete oyles: besides many other, as marmalades, figs, lymmons, barrelled and such like: Also wee had other necessary prouisions for trimming our shippes, nettes and lines to fishe withall, boates or pinnesses fit for discouerie. In briefe, wee were supplied of our wants commodiously, as if we had bene in a Countrey or some Citie populous and plentifull of all things. Liberalitie of the Portingals.

We departed from this harbour of S. Iohns vpon Tuesday the twentieth of August, which we found by exact obseruation to be in 47. degrees 40. minutes. And the next day by night we were at Cape Race, 25. leagues from the same harborough. August 20. S. Iohns in 47. deg. 40. min.

This Cape lyeth South South west from S. Iohns: it is a low land, being off from the Cape about halfe a league: within the sea, riseth vp a rocke against the point of the Cape, which thereby is easily knowen: It is in latitude 46. deg. 25. min. Cape Race in 46. deg. 25. min.

Vnder this Cape we were becalmed a small time, during which we layde out hookes and lines to take codde, and drew in lesse then two houres, fishe so large and in such abundance, that many dayes after we fedde vpon no other prouision. Fish large and plentiful.

From hence we shaped our course vnto the Island of Sabla, if conueniently it would so fall out, also directly to Cape Britton.

Cattel in the Iſle of Sabla.

Sabla lieth to the Seaward of Cape Britton about 25. leagues, whither we were determined to goe vpon intelligence wee had of a Portingall, (during our abode in S. Iohns,) who was himſelfe preſent, when the Portingals (about 30. yeeres paſt) did put into the ſame Iſlande both Neat and ſwine to breede, which were ſince exceedingly multiplied. This ſeemed vnto vs very happy tidings, to haue in an Iſlande lying ſo neere vnto the maine, which wee intended to plant vpon, ſuch ſtore of cattel, whereby we might at al times conueniently be relieued of victual, and ſerued of ſtoare for breed.

In this courſe wee trended along the coaſt, which from Cape Race ſtretcheth into the North-weſt, making a baye, which ſome called Trepaſſa. Then goeth out againe towarde the Weſt, and maketh a point, which with Cape Race lie in maner Eaſt and Weſt. But this point inclineth to the North: to the Weſt of which goeth in the bay of Placentia. We ſent men on land to take view of the ſoyle along this coaſt, whereof they made good report, and ſome of them had will to be planted there. They ſawe growing peaſe in great abundance euery where.

The diſtance betweene Cape Race, and Cape Britton is 100. leagues. In which Nauigation we ſpent 8. dayes: hauing many times the wind indifferent good, yet could we neuer attaine ſight of any land all that time, ſeeing we were hindered by the currant. At laſt we fel into ſuch flats and dangers, that hardly any of vs eſcaped: where neuertheleſſe we loſt our Admiral with all the men and prouiſion, not knowing certainly the place. Yet for inducing men of ſkill to make coniecture, by our courſe and way we held from Cape Race thither, And thereby the flats and dangers may be inſerted in ſea Cards, for warning to others that may follow the ſame courſe hereafter: I haue ſet downe the beſt reckonings that were kept by expert men, William Coxe Maſter of the Hind, and Iohn Paul his mate, both of Limehouſe.

Wenſday towards night, the winde came South, and we bare with the lande all that night, 28
Weſt northweſt, contrarie to the minde of Maſter Coxe: neuertheles wee followed the Admirall, depriued of power to auoide a miſchiefe, which by no contradiction could be brought to holde other courſe, alleaging they could not make the ſhippe to worke better, nor to lye otherwaies.

The euening was faire, and pleaſant, yet not without token of ſtorme to enſue, and moſt part of this Wenſday night, like the Swanne that ſingeth before her death, they in the Admirall, or Delight, continued in ſounding of Trumpets, with Drummes, and Fifes: alſo winding the Cornets, Haughtboyes: and in the ende of their iolitie, left with the batell and ringing of dolefull knels. Predictions before the wracke.

Towards the euening alſo, we caught in the Golden Hinde a very mightie Porpoſe, with a harping yron, hauing firſt ſtriken diuers of them, and brought away part of their fleſh, ſticking vpon the yron, but could recouer onely that one. Theſe alſo paſſing through the Ocean, in heardes, did portend ſtorme. I omit to recite friuolous reportes by them in the Frigat, of ſtrange voyces, the ſame night, which ſcarred ſome from the helme.

Thurſday the 29. of Auguſt, the winde roſe, and blewe vehemently at South and by Eaſt, 29 bringing withall raine, and thicke miſte, that wee could not ſee a Cable length before vs. And Loſſe of our Admirall.
betimes in the morning, wee were altogether runne and folded in amongeſt flats and ſandes, amongeſt which, wee found ſhoale and deepe in euery three or foure ſhippes length, after wee beganne to ſownd: but firſt wee were vpon them vnwares, vntill Maſter Coxe looking out, diſcerned (in his iudgement) white cliffs, crying (lande) wythall, though we could not afterward deſcry any land, it being very likely the breaking of the ſea white, which ſeemed to be white cliffes, though the haſe and thicke weather.

Immediatly tokens were giuen vnto the Delight, to cal about to Seaward, which, being the greater ſhippe, and of burden 120. tunnes, was yet foremoſt vpon the breach, keeping ſo ill watch, that they knewe not the danger, before they felt the ſame, too late to recouer it: for preſently the Admirall ſtroke a grounde, and had ſoone after her ſterne and hinder partes beaten in peeces: whereupon the reſt (that is to ſay, the Frigat, in which was the Generall and the Golden Hinde) cal about Eaſt ſoutheaſt, bearing to the South, euen for our liues into the windes eye, becauſe that way carried vs to Seaward. Making out from this danger, we ſownded one while ſeuen fathome, then fiue fathome, then foure fathome and leſſe, againe deeper, immediatly foure fathome, then but three fathome, the ſea going mightily and high. At laſt we recouered (God be thanked) in ſome deſpaire, to ſea roome enough.

In this diſtreſſe, wee had vigilant eie vnto the Admirall, whom we ſawe caſt away, without power to giue the men ſuccour, neither could wee eſpie any of the men that leaped ouer boord to ſaue themſelues, either in the ſame Pinneſſe or Cocke, or vppon rafters, and ſuch like meanes, preſenting themſelues to men in thoſe extremities: for we deſired to ſaue the men by euery poſſible meanes. But all in vaine, ſith God had determined their ruine: yet all that day, and part of the next, we beate vp and downe as neere vnto the wracke as was poſſible for vs, looking out, if by good hap we might eſpie any of them.

This was a heauie and grieuous euent, to loſe at one blowe our chiefe ſhippe fraighted with great prouiſion, gathered together with much trauell, care, long time, and difficultie. But more was the loſſe of our men, which periſhed, to the number almoſt of a hundreth ſoules. Amongeſt whome was drowned a learned man, an Hungarian, borne in the Citie of Buda, called thereof Budæus, who of pietie and zeale to good attemptes, aduentured in this action, minding to record in the Latine tongue, the geſts and things worthy of remembrance, happening in this diſcouerie, to the honour of our nation, the ſame being adorned with the eloquent ſtile of this Orator, and rare Poet of our time. Budæus a Hungarian.

Here alſo periſhed our Saxon Refiner and Diſcouerer of ineſtimable riches, as it was left amongſt ſome of vs in vndoubted hope. Daniel a refiner of metals.

No leſſe heauie was the loſſe of the Captaine Mawrice Browne, a vertuous, honeſt, and diſcreete Gentleman, ouerſeene onely in libertie giuen late before to men that ought to haue bene reſtrained, who ſhewed himſelfe a man reſolued, and neuer vnprepared for death, as by his laſt act of this tragedie appeared, by report of them that escaped this wracke miraculously, as shall be hereafter declared. For when all hope was past of recouering the shippe, and that men began to giue ouer, and to saue themselues, the Captaine was aduised before to shift also for his life, by the Pinnesse at the sterne of the shippe: but refusing that counsell, would not giue example with the first to leaue the shippe, but vsed all meanes to exhort his people not to despaire, nor so to leaue off their labour, chosing rather to die, then to incurre infamie, by forsaking his charge, which then might be thought to haue perished through his default, shewing an ill president vnto his men, by leauing the shippe first himselfe. With this minde he mounted vpon the highest decke, where he attended imminent death, and vnauoidable: how long, I leaue it to God, who withdraweth not his comfort from his seruants at such times.

of

A wonderfull escape and deliuerance.
A great distresse.
A desperate resolution.

In the meane season, certaine, to the number of foureteene persons, leaped into a small Pinnesse (the bignes of a Thames barge, which was made in the New found land) cut off the rope wherewith it was towed, and committed themselues to Gods mercie, amiddest the storme, and rage of sea and windes, destitute of foode, not so much as a droppe of fresh water. The boate seeming ouercharged in foule weather with companie, Edward Headly a valiant souldier, and well reputed of his companie, preferring the greater to the lesser, thought better that some of them perished then all, made this motion to cast lots, and them to be throwen ouer board vpon whom the lots fell, thereby to lighten the boate, which otherwaies seemed impossible to liue, offered himselfe with the first, content to take his aduenture gladly: which neuertheles Richard Clarke, that was Master of the Admirall, and one of this number, refused, aduising to abide Gods pleasure, who was able to saue all, as well as a fewe.

The boate was carried before the winde, continuing sixe daies and nights in the Ocean, and arriued at last with the men (aliue, but weake) vpon the New found land, sauing that the foresaide Headly, (who had bene late sicke) and an other called of vs Brasile, of his trauell into those Countries, died by the way, famished, and lesse able to holde out, then those of better health. For such was these poore mens extremitie, in colde and wette, to haue no better sustenance then their owne vrine, for sixe daies together.

Two men famished.

Thus whome God deliuered from drowning, hee appointed to be famished, who doth giue limits to mans times, and ordaineth the manner and circumstance of dying: whome againe he will preserue, neither Sea, nor famine, can confound. For those that arriued vpon the Newe founde land, were brought into France by certaine French men, then being vpon that coast.

After this heauie chance, we continued in beating the sea vp & downe, expecting when the weather would cleere vp, that wee might yet beare in with the land, which we iudged not farre off, either the continent or some Island. For we many times, and in sundry places, found ground at 50. 45. 40. fathomes, and lesse. The ground comming vpon our lead, beeing sometimes oazie sande, and otherwhile a broad shell, with a little sand about it.

Causes inforcing vs to returne home againe.

Our people lost courage daily after this ill successe, the weather continuing thicke and blustering, with increase of colde, Winter drawing on, which tooke from them all hope of amendment, setling an assurance of worse weather to growe vpon vs euery day. The Leeside of vs laye full of flatts and daungers inevitable, if the winde blewe harde at South. Some againe doubted we were ingulfed in the Baye of S. Laurence, the coast full of dangers, and vnto vs vnknowen. But aboue all, prouision waxed scant, and hope of supply was gone, with losse of our Admirall.

Those in the Frigat were already pinched with spare allowance, and want of clothes chiefly: Whereupon they besought the Generall to returne for England, before they all perished. And to them of the Golden Hinde they made signes of their distresse, pointing to their mouthes, and to their clothes thinne and ragged: then immediatly they also of the Golden Hinde, grewe to be of the same opinion and desire to returne home.

The former reasons hauing also moued the Generall to haue compassion of his poore men, in whome he sawe no want of good will, but of meanes fitte to performe the action they came for, resolued vpon retire: and calling to the Captaine and Master of the Hinde, he peeled them many reasons inforcing this vnexpected returne, withall protesting himselfe greatly satisfied with that he had seene, and knew already.

Reiterating these wordes, Be content, we haue seene enough, and take no care of expence past: I will set you foorth royally the next Spring, if God send vs safe home. Therefore I pray you let vs no longer striue here, where we fight against the elements.

Omitting circumstance, how vnwillingly the Captaine & Master of the Hind condescended to this motion, his owne companie can teſtifie: yet comforted with the Generals promiſes, of a ſpeede returne at Spring, and induced by other apparant reaſons, proouing an impoſſibilitie, to accompliſh the action at that time, it was concluded on all hands to returne.

So vpon Saturday in the afternoone the 31. of Auguſt, we chaunged our courſe and returned backe for England, at which very inſtant, euen in winding about, there paſſed alongſt betweene vs and towards the land we now forſooke, a very lion to our ſeeming, in ſhape, haire and colour, not ſwimming after the maner of a beaſt by mooving of his feete, but rather ſliding vpon the water with his whole body (excepting the legs) in ſight, neither yet diuing vnder, and againe riſing aboue the water, as the maner is, of Whales, Dolphins, Tunie, Porpoſes, and all other fiſh: but confidently ſhewing himſelfe aboue water without hiding: Notwithſtanding, we preſented our ſelues in open view and geſture to amaſe him, as all creatures will be commonly at a ſudden gaze and ſight of men. Thus he paſſed along turning his heade to and fro, pawning and gaping wide, with ougly demonſtration of long teeth, and glaring eies, and to bidde vs a fare well (comming right againſt the Hinde) he ſent forth a horrible voyce, roaring or bellowing as doeth a lion, which ſpectacle we all beheld ſo farre as we were able to diſcerne the ſame, as men prone to wonder at euery ſtrange thing, as this doubtleſſe was, to ſee a lion in the Ocean ſea, or fiſh in ſhape of a lion. What opinion others had thereof, and chiefly the generall himſelfe, I forbeare to deliuer: But he tooke it for Bonum Omen, reioycing that he was to warre againſt ſuch an enemie, if it were the diuell. August. 31. A monſter of the ſea.

The wind was large for England at our returne, but very high, and the ſea rough, inſomuch as the Frigat wherein the Generall went, was almoſt ſwalowed vp.

Sunday in the after noone we paſſed in ſight of Cape Race, hauing made as much way in little more then two dayes and nights back againe, as before we had done in eight dayes from Cape Race, vnto the place where our ſhip periſhed. Which hinderance thitherward, and ſpeed backe againe, is to be imputed vnto the ſwift currant, as well as to the windes, which we had more large in our returne. September 2.

This Sunday the Generall came aboord the Hind, to haue the Surgeon of the Hind to dreſſe his foote, which he hurt by treading vpon a naile: At what time we comforted each other with hope of hard ſucceſſe to be all paſt, and of the good to come. So agreeing to carry out lights alwaies by night, that we might keepe together: he departed into his Frigat, being by no meanes to be entreated to tarry in the Hind, which had bene more for his ſecuritie. Immediatly after, followed a ſharpe ſtorme, which we ouerpaſſed for that time. Praiſed be God.

The weather faire, the Generall came aboord the Hinde againe, to make merrie together with the Captaine, Maſter, and companie, which was the laſt meeting, and continued there from morning vnto night. During which time, there paſſed ſundry diſcourſes, touching affaires paſt, and to come, lamenting greatly the loſſe of his great ſhippe, more of the men, but moſt of all, of his bookes and notes, and what els I know not, for which he was out of meaſure grieued, the ſame doubtles being ſome matter of more importance then his bookes, which I could not drawe from him: yet by circumſtance gathered, the ſame to be the oare which Daniel the Saxon had brought vnto him in the Newe found land. Whatſoeuer it was, the remembrance touched him ſo deepe, as not able to containe himſelfe, he beate his boy in great rage, euen at the ſame time, ſo long after the miſcarrying of the great ſhip, becauſe vpon a faire day, when we were becalmed vpon the coaſt of New found land, neere vnto Cape Race, he ſent his boye aboord the Admirall, to fetch certaine things: amongſt which, this being chiefe, was yet forgotten and left behind. After which time, he could neuer conueniently ſend againe aboord the great ſhip, much leſſe he doubted her ruine ſo neere at hand. Our laſt conference with our Generall. Circumſtances to be well obſerued in our Generall, importing the oare to be of a ſiluer Mine.

Herein my opinion was better confirmed diuerſly, and by ſundry coniectures, which maketh me haue the greater hope of this riche mine. For whereas the Generall had neuer before good conceite of theſe north partes of the world: now his minde was wholly fixed vpon Newe founde land. And as before he refuſed not to grant aſſignements liberally to them that required the ſame into theſe north partes, Now he became contrarily affected, refuſing to make any ſo large grants, eſpecially of S. Iohns, which certaine Engliſh merchants made ſuite for, offering to employ their money and trauell vpon the ſame: yet neither by their owne ſuite, nor of others of his owne companie, whome he ſeemed willing to pleaſure, it could be obtained.

Alſo laying downe his determination in the Spring following, for diſpoſing of his voyage then to be reattempted: he aſſigned the Captaine and Maſter of the Golden Hind, vnto the ſouth diſcouerie and reſerued vnto himſelfe the north, affirming that this voyage had wonne his heart from the ſouth, and that he was now become a northen man altogether.

Laſt

Last, being demanded what meanes he had at his arriuall in England, to compasse the charges of so great preparation, as he intended to make the next Spring: hauing determined vpon two secretes, one for the South, another for the North: Leaue that to me (he replied) I will aske a pennie of no man. I will bring good tidings vnto her Maiestie, who will be so gratious, to lende me 10000. pounds, willing vs therefore to be of good cheere: for he did thanke God (he said) with all his heart, for that he had seene, the same being enough for vs all, and that wee needed not to seeke any further. And these last words he would often repeate, with demonstration of great feruencie of mind, being himselfe very confident, and setled in beliefe of inestimable good by this voyage: which the greater number of his followers neuertheless mistrusted altogether, not being made partakers of those secretes, which the Generall kept vnto himselfe. Yet all of them that are liuing, may be witnesses of his wordes and protestations, which sparingly I haue deliuered.

Wilfulnes in the Generall.

Leauing the issue of this good hope vnto God, who knoweth the trueth only, and can at his good pleasure bring the same to light: I will hasten to the ende of this tragedie, which must be knit vp in the person of our Generall. And as it was Gods ordinance vpon him, euen so the vehement perswasion and intreatie of his friends could nothing anaile, to diuert him from a wilfull resolution of going through in his Frigat, which was ouercharged vpon their deckes, with fightes, nettings, and small artillerie, too cumbersome for so small a boate, that was to passe through the Ocean sea at that season of the yeere, when by course we might expect much stormie and foule weather, whereof in deede we had enough.

A token of a good mind.

But when he was intreated by the Captaine, Master, and other his well willers of the Hinde, not to venter in the Frigat, this was his answere: I will not forsake my little companie going homeward, with whome I haue passed so many stormes, and perils. And in very trueth, hee was vrged to be so ouer hard, by hard reports giuen of him, that he was afraid of the sea, albeit this was rather rashnes, then aduised resolution, to preferre the winde of a vaine report to the weight of his owne life.

Seeing he would not bend to reason, he had prouision out of the Hinde, such as was wanting aboord his Frigat. And so we committed him to Gods protection, and let him aboord his Pinnesse. We being more then 300. leagues onward of our way home.

By that time we had brought the Ilands of Asores South of vs, yet we then keeping much to the North, vntill we had got into the height and eleuation of England: we met with very foule weather, and terrible seas, breaking short and high Pyramid wise. The reason whereof seemed to proceede either of hilly grounds high and lowe within that sea, (as we see hils and dales vpon the land) vpon which the seas doe mount and fall: or else the cause proceedeth of diuersitie of winds, shifting often into sundry points: al which hauing power to moue the great Ocean, which againe is not presently setled, so many seas doe encounter together, as there had bene diuersitie of windes. Howsoeuer it commeth to passe, men which all their life time had occupied the Sea, neuer sawe more outragious Seas. We had also vpon our maine yarde, an apparition of a little fire by night, which Sea men doe call Castor and Pollux. But we had onely one, which they take an euill signe of more tempest: the same is vsuall in stormes.

A resolute and Christianlike saying in a distresse.

Sunday the ninth of September, in the afternoone, the Frigat was neere cast away, oppressed by waues, yet at that tyme recouered: and giuing foorth signes of ioye, the Generall sitting abaft with a booke in his hande, cryed out vnto vs in the Hinde (so oft as wee did approche within hearing:) Wee are as neere to heauen by Sea, as by lande. Reiterating the same speeche, well beseeming a souldier, resolute in Iesus Christ, as I can testifie her was.

Sir Humfrey Gilbert drowned.

The same Sunday night, about twelue of the clocke, or not long after, the Frigat being a heade of vs in the Golden Hinde, suddenly her lights were out, whereof as it were in a moment, wee lost the sight, and withall our watch cryed, the Generall was cast away, which was too true. For in that moment, the Frigat was deuoured and swallowed vppe of the Sea, yet still wee looked out all that night, and euer after, vntill wee arriued vppon the coast of Englande: Omitting no small saile at Sea, vnto which wee gaue not the tokens betweene vs, agreed vppon, to haue perfect knowledge of each other, if wee shoulde at any time bee separated.

Arriuall in England of the Golden Hind.

In great torment of weather, and perill of drowning, it pleased God to send safe home the Golden Hind, which arriued in Falmouth, the 22. day of September, being Sunday, not without as great danger escaped in a flawe, comming from southeast, with such thicke mist, that we could not discerne land, to put in right with the hauen.

From Falmouth we went to Dartmouth, and lay there at anker before the range, while ỹ captaine taine went a land, to inquire if there had bene any newes of the Frigat, which ſailing well, might happily haue bene before vs. Alſo to certifie Sir Iohn Gilbert, brother vnto the Generall, of our hard ſucceſſe, whome the Captaine deſired (while his men were yet aboord him, and were witneſſes of all occurrents in that voyage,) It might pleaſe him to take the examination of euery perſon particularly, in diſcharge of his and their faithfull endeuour. Sir Iohn Gilbert refuſed ſo to doe, holding himſelfe ſatiſfied with report made by the Captaine: and not altogether deſpairing of his brothers ſafetie, offered friendſhippe and curteſie to the Captaine, and his companie, requiring to haue his Barke brought into the harbour: in furtherance whereof, a boate was ſent to helpe to towher in. A fit motion of the Captain vnto ſir Humfrey Gilbert.

Neuertheles, when the Captaine returned aboord his ſhip, he founde his men bent to depart, euery man to his home: and then the winde ſeruing to proceede higher vpon the coaſt: they demanded money to carry them home, ſome to London, others to Harwiche, and elſe where, (if the barke ſhould be carried into Dartmouth, and they diſcharged, ſo farre from home:) or elſe to take benefite of the wind, then ſeruing to drawe neerer home, which ſhould be a leſſe charge vnto the Captaine, and great eaſe vnto the men, hauing els farre to goe.

Reaſon accompanied with neceſſitie perſwaded the Captaine, who ſent his lawfull excuſe and cauſe of his ſudden departure vnto ſir Iohn Gilbert, by the boate of Dartmouth, and from thence the Golden Hind departed, and tooke harbour at Waimouth. All the men tired with the tedioſunes of ſo vnprofitable a voyage to their ſeeming: in which their long expence of time, much toile and labour, hard diet, and continuall hazard of life was vnrecompenſed: their Captaine neuertheles, by his great charges, impaired greatly thereby, yet comforted in the goodnes of God, and his vndoubted prouidence following him in all that voyage, as it doth alwaies thoſe at other times, whoſoeuer haue confidence in him alone. Yet haue we more neere feeling and perſeuerance of his powerfull hand and protection, when God doth bring vs together with others into one ſame peril, in which he leaueth them, and deliuereth vs, making vs thereby the beholders, but not partakers of their ruine. An ill recompenſe.

Euen ſo, amongeſt very many difficulties, diſcontentments, mutinies, conſpiracies, ſickneſſes, mortalitie, ſpoilings, and wracks by ſea, which were afflictions, more then in ſo ſmall a Fleete, or ſo ſhort a time may be ſuppoſed: albeit true in euery particularitie, as partly by the former relation may be collected, and ſome I ſuppreſſed with ſilence, for their ſakes liuing, it pleaſed God to ſupport this companie, (of which onely one man died of a maladie inueterate, and long infeſted:) the reſt kept together in reaſonable contentment and concord, beginning, continuing, and ending the voyage, which none els did accompliſh, either not pleaſed with the action, or impatient of wants, or preuented by death.

Thus haue I deliuered the contents of the enterpriſe and laſt action of ſir Humfrey Gilbert knight, faithfully, for ſo much as I thought meete to be publiſhed: wherein may alwaies appeare, (though he be extinguiſhed) ſome ſparkes of his vertues, he remaining firme and reſolute in a purpoſe by all pretence honeſt and godly, as was this, to diſcouer, poſſeſſe, and to reduce vnto the ſeruice of God, and Chriſtian pietie, thoſe remote and heathen Countries of America, not actually poſſeſſed by Chriſtians, and moſt rightly appertaining vnto the Crowne of England: vnto the which, as his zeale deſerueth high commendation: euen ſo, he may iuſtly be taxed of temeritie and preſumption (rather) in two reſpects. Conſtancie in ſir Humfrey Gilbert.

Firſt, when yet there was onely probabilitie, not a certaine and determinate place of habitation ſelected, neither any demonſtration of commoditie there in eſſe, to induce his followers: neuertheles, he both was too prodigall of his owne patrimonie, and too careles of other mens expences, to imploy both his and their ſubſtance vpon a ground imagined good. The which failing, very like his aſſociats were promiſed, and made it their beſt reckoning to be ſaued ſome other way, which pleaſed not God to proſper in his firſt and great preparation. His temeritie and preſumption.

Secondly, when by his former preparation he was enfeebled of abilitie and credite, to performe his deſignements, as it were impatient to abide in expectation better opportunitie and meanes, which God might raiſe, he thruſt himſelfe againe into the action, for which he was not fitte, preſuming, the cauſe pretended on Gods behalfe, would carry him to the deſired ende. Into which, hauing thus made reentrie, he could not yeeld againe to withdraw, though he ſawe no encouragement to proceede, leaſt his credite foiled in his firſt attempt, in a ſecond ſhould vtterly be diſgraced. Betweene extremities, hee made a right aduenture, putting all to God and good fortune, and worſt, refuſed not to entertaine euery perſon and meanes whatſoeuer, to furniſh out this expedition, the ſucceſſe whereof hath bene declared.

But ſuch is the infinite bountie of God, who from euery euill deriueth good. For beſides that fruite fruite may growe in time of our trauelling into those northwest lands, the crosses, turmoiles, and afflictions, both in the preparation and execution of this voyage, did correct the intemperate humors, which before we noted to be in this Gentleman, and made vnsauorie, and lesse delightfull his other manifold vertues.

Afflictions needefull in the children of God.

Then as he was refined, and made neerer drawing vnto the image of God: so it pleased the diuine will, to resume him vnto himselfe, whither both his, and euery other high and noble minde, haue alwaies aspired.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

To the worſhipfull, Maſter Richard Hakluyt at Oxforde in Chriſts church, Maſter of Art, and Philoſophie, his friend and brother.

I Had not purpoſed to write to you, when the promiſe of your letters came to my mind: You thought in June laſt to haue followed vs your ſelfe, and therefore I had left order that you ſhould be aduertiſed of my ſtate, by Maſter Doctor Humfrey: but ſo you would not be ſatiſfied: I will write therefore to you almoſt in the ſame words, becauſe I haue no leaſure at this time, to meditate new matters, and to vary or multiply words.

The 11. of June we ſet ſaple at length from Englande in good earneſt, and departed, leauing the hauen and lande behinde vs at Plymmouth: our Fleete conſiſted of fiue ſhippes: the greateſt, which the Admirals brother had lent vs, withdrew her ſelfe from vs the third day, wee knowe not vpon what occaſion: with the reſt wee ſayled ſtill together till the three and twentie of July: at which time our viewe of one another beeing intercepted by the great miſtes, ſome of vs ſayled one way, and ſome another: to vs alone the firſt lande appeared, the firſt of Auguſt, about the latitude of fiftye degrees, when as before wee had deſcended beyonde 41. degrees in hope of ſome Southerly windes, which notwithſtanding neuer blewe to vs, at any fitte time.

It is an Ilande which your men call Penguin, becauſe of the multitude of birdes of the ſame name. Yet wee neither ſawe any birdes, nor drewe neere to the lande, the windes ſeruing for our courſe directed to another place, but wee mett all together at that place a little before the Hauen, whereunto by common Counſell wee had determined to come, and that within the ſpace of two houres by the great goodneſſe of God, and to our great ioy. The place is ſituated in Newfound lande, betweene fortie ſeuen and fortie eight degrees, called by the name of Saint Iohns: the Admirall him ſelfe by reaſon of the multitude of the men, and the ſmalneſſe of his ſhippe, had his company ſomewhat ſickly, and had all ready loſt two of the ſame company, which died of the Flixe: of the reſt wee conceiue good hope. Of our company (for I ioyned my ſelfe with Maurice Browne, a very proper Gentleman) two perſons by a miſchance were drowned, the reſt are in ſafetie, and ſtrong, and for myne owne part I was neuer more healthy. Wee arriued at this place the third of Auguſt: and the fift the Admirall tooke poſſeſſion of the Country, for himſelfe and the kingdome of England: hauing made and publiſhed certaine Lawes, concerning religion, and obedience to the Queene of England: at this time our fare is ſomewhat better, and daintier, then it was before: for in good ſooth, the experience of ſo long time hath taught vs what contrary windes wee haue founde, and what great trauell we may endure hereafter: and therefore we will take such order, that wee will want nothing, for we founde in this place, about twenty Portingale, and Spanishe shippes, besides the shippes of the Englishe: which being not able to matche vs, suffer vs not to be hunger starued: the Englishe although they were of them selues stronge ynough, and safe from our force, yet seeing our auctoritie, by the Queenes letters patentes, they shewed vs all manner of dutie and humanitie.

The manner of this Countrey, and people remayne nowe to bee spoken of. But what shall I say, my good Haklupt, when I see nothing but a very wildernesse? of fishe here is incredible abundance, whereby great gayne growes to them, that trauell to these partes: the hooke is no sooner throwne out, but it is eftsoones drawne vp with some goodly fishe: the whole lande is full of hilles and woodes. The trees for the most part are Pynes and of them some are very olde, and some yong: a great part of them beeing fallen by reason of their age, doth so hynder the sighte of the Lande, and stoppe the way of those that seeke to trauell, that they can goe no whither: all the grasse here is long, and tall, and little differeth from ours. It seemeth also that the nature of this soyle is fitt for corne: for I founde certayne blades and eares in a manner bearded, so that it appeareth that by manuring and sowing, they may easelie bee framed for the vse of man: here are in the woodes bushe berries, or rather strawe berries growing vp like trees, of great sweetenesse. Beares also appeare about the fishers stages of the Countrie, and are sometimes killed, but they seeme to be white, as I coniectured by their skinnes, and somewhat lesse then ours. Whether there bee any people in this Countrey I know not, neither haue I seene any to witnesse it. And to say trueth who can, when as it is not possible to passe any whither? In like sort it is vnknowne, whether any mettals lye vnder the hilles: the cause is all one, although the very colour and hue of the hilles seeme to haue some mynes in them: we moued the Admirall to set the woods a fire, that so we might haue space, and entrance to take view of the Countrey, which motion did nothing displease him, were it not for feare of great inconuenience that might thereof insue: for it was reported and confirmed by verie credible persons, that when the like happened by chance in another Port, the fishe neuer came to the place about it, for the space of 7. whole yeres after, by reason of the waters made bytter by the turpentyne, and rosen of the trees, which ranne into the ryuers vpon the firing of them. The weather is so hot this time of the yeere, that except the very fish, which is layd out to be dryed by the sunne, be euery day turned, it cannot possibly be preserued from burning: but how cold it is in the winter, the great heapes, and mountaines of yce, in the middest of the Sea haue taught vs: some of our company report, that in May, they were sometimes kept in, with such huge yce, for 16. whole dayes together, as that the Islands thereof were threescore fathomes thicke, the sides whereof which were towarde the Sunne, when they were melted, the whole masse or heape was so inuerted and turned in manner of balancing, that that part which was before downeward rose vpwarde, to the great perill of those that are neere them, as by reason we may gather. The ayre vpon land is indifferent cleare, but at Sea towardes the East there is nothing els but perpetual mistes, and in the Sea it selfe, about the Banke (for so they call the place where they find ground at fourty leagues distant from the shoare, and where they began to fishe) there is no day without rayne. When we haue serued, and supplyed our necessitie in this place, we purpose by the help of God to passe towards the south, with so much the more hope euery day, by how much greater the thinges are, that are reported of those Countries, which we go to discouer. Thus much touching our estate.

Now I desire to know somewhat concerning you, but I feare in vaine, but specially I desire out of measure to know how my Patrone Master Henry Umpton doth take my absence: my obedience, and dutie shall alwaies be readie towardes him as long as I liue: but in deede I hope, that this iourney of ours shalbe profitable to his intentions. It remayneth that you thinke me to be still yours, and so yours as no mans more. The sonne of God blesse all our labors, so farre, as that you your selfe may be partaker of our blessing. Adieu, my most friendly, most sweete, most vertuous Haklupt: In Newfound lande, at Saint Iohns Port, the sixt of August. 1583.

Steuen Parmenius of Buda, yours.

A relation of Richard Clarke of Weymouth, maſter of the ſhippe called the Delight, going for the diſcouerie of Norumbega with Sir Humfrey Gilbert 1583. Written in excuſe of that fault of caſting away the ſhippe and men imputed to his ouerſight.

DEparting out of Saint Iohns Harborough in the Newfound land the twentith of Auguſt vnto Cape Raz, from thence we directed our courſe vnto the Iſle of Sablon or the Iſle of Sande, which the generall Sir Humfrey Gilbert woulde willingly haue ſeene. But when wee came within twenty leagues of the Iſle of Sablon, wee fell to controuerſie of our courſe. The General came vp in his Frigot and demaunded of me Richard Clarke Maſter of the Admiral what courſe was beſt to keepe: I ſaid that weſt ſouthweſt was beſt: becauſe the wind was at ſouth & night at hand and vnknowen ſands lay off a great way from the land. The General commaunded me to go weſt northweſt. I tolde him agayne that the Iſle of Sablon was Weſt northweſt and but fifteene leagues off, and that he ſhoulde bee vpon the Iſland before day if hee went that courſe. The Generall ſayd my reckoning was vntrue and charged mee in her Maieſties name, and as I would ſhewe my ſelfe in her Countrey to followe him that night. I fearing his threatnings, becauſe hee preſented her Maieſties perſon, did followe his commaundement, and about ſeuen of the clocke in the morning the ſhippe ſtrooke on ground, where ſhee was caſt away. Then the Generall went off to Sea, the courſe that I would haue had them gon before and ſawe the ſhippe caſt away men and all, and was not able to ſaue a man, for there was not water vpon the ſande for eyther of them much leſſe for the Admirall that drewe fourteene foote. Nowe as God woulde the day before it was very calme, and a Souldier of the ſhippe had killed ſome foule with his piece, and ſome of the company deſired me that they might hoyſe out the boate to recouer the foule, which I graunted them: and when they came aboorde they did not hoyſe it in againe that night. And when the ſhippe was caſt away the boate was aſterne being in burthen one tunne and an halfe: there was left in the boate one oare and nothing els. Some of the company could ſwimme and recouered the boate and did hale in out of the water as many men as they could: among the reſt they had a care to watch for the Captaine or the Maſter: They happened on my ſelfe being the maſter, but could neuer ſee the Captaine: Then they halled into the boate as many men as they could in number 16. whoſe names hereafter I will rehearſe. And when the ſixteene were in the boate, ſome had ſmale remembrance, and ſome had none: for they did not make account to liue, but to prolong their liues as long as it pleaſed God, and looked euery moment of an howre when the Sea would eate them vp, the boate being ſo litle and ſo many men in her, and ſo foule weather, that it was not poſſible for a ſhippe to brooke halfe a coarſe of Sayle. Thus while wee remayned two dayes and two nights, and that wee ſawe it pleaſed God our boate liued in the Sea, (although wee ha" "o-thing to helpe vs with all but one oare, which wee kept vp the boate withall vpon the and ſo went euen as the Sea would driue vs) there was in our companie one Maſter [illegible] that put foorth this queſtion to mee the maſter. I do ſee that it doth pleaſe God that our boate lyueth in the Sea, and it may pleaſe God that ſome of vs may come to the lande if our boate were not ouer laden. Let vs make ſixteene lottes, and thoſe foure that haue the foure horeſt lottes wee will caſt ouer boord, preſeruing the Maſter among vs all. I replyed vnto him ſaying, no, wee will liue and dye together. Maſter Hedly aſked mee if my remembrance were good: I aunſwered I gaue God prayſe it was good, and knewe howe farre I was off the lande, and was in hope to come to the lande within two or three dayes, and ſayd they were but threeſcore leagues from the lande, (when they were ſeuentie) all to put them in comfort. Thus wee continued the third and fourth day without any ſuſtenance, ſaue onely the weedes that ſwame in the Sea, and ſalt water to drinke. The fifth day Hedly died and another moreouer: then we deſired all to die: for in all theſe fiue dayes and fiue nights we ſawe the Sunne but once & the ſtarre but one night, it was ſo foule weather. Thus we did remaine the 6. day: then we were very weake and wiſhed all to die ſauing only my ſelfe which did comfort them and promiſed they ſhoulde come ſoone to land by the helpe of God: but the company were verie impor-importunate, and were in doubt they should neuer come to land, but that I promised them the seuenth day they should come to shoare or els they shoulde cast me ouer boord: which did happen true the seuenth day, for at eleuen of the clocke we had sight of the land, and at three of the clocke at afternoone we came on lande. All these seuen dayes and seuen nights the wind kept continually South. If the winde had in the meane time shifted vpon any other point, we had neuer come to land: we were no sooner come to the land, but the winde came cleane contrary at North within halfe an houer after our arriuall. But we were so weake that one could scarcely helpe another of vs out of the boate, yet with much a doo being come all on shoare we kneeled downe vpon our knees and gaue God praise that he had dealt so mercifully with vs. Afterwards those which were strongest holpe their fellowes vnto a fresh brooke, where wee satisfied our selues with water and berries very well. There were of all sortes of berries plentie, and as goodly a countrey as euer I saw: we found a very faire plaine Champion ground that a man might see very farre euery way: by the Sea side was here and there a litle wood with goodly trees as good as euer I saw any in Norway, able to mast any shippe, of pyne trees, spruse trees, firre, and very great birch trees. Where we came on land we made a litle house with boughes, where we rested all that night. In the morning I deuided the company three and three to goe euery way to see what foode they could find to sustayne themselues, and appointed them to meete there all againe at noone with such food as they could get. As we went aboord wee found great store of pease as good as any wee haue in England: a man would thinke they had ben sowed there. We rested there three daies and three nights and liued very well with pease and berries, wee named the place Saint Laurence, because it was a very goodly riuer like the riuer of S. Laurence in Canada, and we found it very full of Salmons. When we had well rested our selues wee rowed our boate along the shoare, thinking to haue gon to the Grande Bay to haue come home with some Spaniards which are yerely there to kill the Whale: And when wee were hungry or a thirst we put our boate on land and gathered pease and berries. Thus we rowed our boate along the shore fiue daies: about which time we came to a very goodly ryuer that ranne farre vp into the countrey and sawe very goodly growen trees of all sortes. There we happened vpon a ship of Saint Iohn de Luz, which ship brought vs into Biskay to an harborough called The Passage. The Master of the Shippe was our great friend or els we had bene put to death if he had not kept our counsayle. For when the visitors came aboorde, as it is the order in Spaine, they demaunding what we were, he sayd we were poore fishermen that had cast away our ship in Newfoundland, and so the visitours inquired no more of the matter at that time. Assoone as night was come he put vs on land and bad vs shift for our selues. Then had wee but tenne or twelue myles into France, which we went that night, and then cared not for the Spanyard. And so shortly after we came into England toward the end of the yeere 1583.

They came on land the 7. day after their ship wracke.

A true Report of the late discoueries, and possession taken in the right of the Crowne of England of the Newfound Lands, By that valiant and worthy Gentleman, Sir Humfrey Gilbert Knight.

Wherein is also briefely set downe, her highnesse lawfull Title thereunto, and the great & manifold commodities, that are likely to grow therby, to the whole Realme in generall, and to the Aduenturers in particular, Together with the easines and shortnes of the Voyage.

Written by Sir George Pecham Knight, the chiefe aduenturer, and furtherer of Sir Humfrey Gilbertes voyage to Newfound Land.

The first Chapter, wherein the Argument of the Booke is contained.

Master Edward Hayes.

IT was my fortune (good Reader) not many dayes past, to meete with a right honest and discreete Gentleman, who accompanied that valiant and worthy Knight Sir Humfrey Gilbert, in this last iourney for the Westerne discoueries, and is owner and Captaine of the onely vessell which is as yet returned from thence.

By

By him I did vnderſtand, that Syr Humfrey departed the coaſt of England the eleuenth of June laſt paſt, with fiue ſayle of ſhippes from Cauſhenbay neere Plymmouth, whereof one of the beſt ioyſooke his companie, the thirteenth day of the ſame moneth, and returned into England.

The other foure (through the aſſiſtance of Almighrie God) did arriue at Saint Johns Hauen, in Newfound land, the third of Auguſt laſt. Vpon whoſe arriuall all the Maſters and chiefe Mariners of the Engliſh Fleete, which were in the ſayd Hauen before, endeuouring to fraught themſelues with fiſh, repaired vnto Sir Humfrey, whom he made acquainted with the effect of his Commiſſion: which being done, he promiſed to intreate them and their goods well and honourably as did become her Maieſties Lieutenant. They did all welcome him in the beſt ſort that they could, and ſhewed him and his, all ſuch courteſies as the place could affoord or yeelde.

Sir Humfrey Gilbert did arriue at Saint Johns Hauen in Newfound land, the 3. of Auguſt. Anno 1583.

Then he went to viewe the Countrey, being well accompanied with moſt of his Captaines and ſouldiers. They found the ſame very temperate, but ſomewhat warmer then Englande at that ſeaſon of the yeere, replenished with Beaſts and great ſtore of Foule of diuers kindes: And Fiſh of ſundry ſortes, both in the ſalt water and in the freſh, in ſo great plentie as might ſuffice to victuall an Armie, and they are very eaſily taken. What ſundry other commodities for this Realme right neceſſarie, the ſame doeth yeelde, you ſhall vnderſtand in this treatiſe hereafter, in place more conuenient.

Among theſe there was found the ract of a beaſt of 7. inches and a halfe ouer.

On Munday being the firſt of Auguſt, the Generall cauſed his tent to be ſet vpon the ſide of an hill, in the viewe of all the Fleete of Engliſh men and ſtrangers, which were in number betweene thirtie and fourtie ſayle: then being accompanied with all his Captaines, Maſters, Gentlemen and other ſouldiers, he cauſed all the Maſters, and principall Officers of the ſhips, aſwel Engliſhmen as Spaniards, Portingales, and of other nations, to repayre vnto his tent: And then and there, in the preſence of them all, he did cauſe his Commiſſion vnder the great Seale of England to be openly and ſolempnely read vnto them, whereby were graunted vnto him, his heires, and aſſignes, by the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, many great and large royalties, liberties, and priuiledges. The effect whereof being ſignified vnto the ſtrangers by an Interpreter, he tooke poſſeſſion of the ſayd land in the right of the Crowne of England by digging of a Turfe and receiuing the ſame with an Haſel wande, deliuered vnto him, after the maner of the Lawe and cuſtome of England.

Sir Humfrey tooke poſſeſſion of the Newfound land in right of the Crowne of England.

Then he ſignified vnto the companie both ſtrangers and others, that from thenceforth, they were to liue in that land, as the Territories apperteining to the Crowne of England, and to be gouerned by ſuch Lawes as by good aduiſe ſhould be ſet downe, which in all pointe (ſo neere as might be) ſhould be agreeable to the Lawes of England: And for to put the ſame in execution, preſently he ordeined and eſtabliſhed three Lawes.

Three lawes eſtabliſhed there by Sir Humfrey.

Firſt, that Religion publiquely exerciſed, ſhould be ſuch, and none other, then is vſed in the Church of England.

The ſecond, that if any perſon ſhould be lawfully conuicted of any practiſe againſt her Maieſtie, her Crowne and dignitie, to be adiudged as traitors according to the Lawes of England.

The third, if any ſhould ſpeake diſhonourably of her Maieſtie, the partie ſo offending, to looſe his eares, his ſhip and goods, to be confiſcate to the vſe of the Generall.

All men did very willingly ſubmit themſelues to theſe Lawes. Then he cauſed the Queenes Maieſties Armes to be ingraued, ſet vp, & erected, with great ſolemnitie. After this, diuers Engliſh men, made ſute vnto Sir Humfrey to haue of him by inheritance, their accuſtomed ſtages, ſtandings & dryying places, in ſundry parts of that land for their fiſh, as a thing that they do make great accompt of, which he graunted vnto them, in fee farme. And by this meanes, he hath poſſeſſion mainteined for him, in many parts of that Countrey. To be briefe, he did let, ſet, giue and diſpoſe of many things, as abſolute Gouernor there, by vertue of her Maieſties letters patents.

Sundry perſons, became Tenants to Sir Humfrey, and doe maintaine poſſeſſion for him in diuers places there.

And after their ſhippes were repaired, whereof one bee was driuen to leaue behinde, both for want of men ſufficient to furniſh her, as alſo to carrie home ſuch ſicke perſons as were not able to proceede any further, He departed from thence the 20. of Auguſt, with the other three, namely, the Delight, wherein was appointed Captaine in M. William Winters place, (that thence returned immediatly for England) M. Maurice Browne: the Golden Hinde, in which was Captaine and owner, M. Edwarde Hay: and the little Frigat where the Generall himſelfe did goe, ſeeming to him moſt fit to diſcouer and approch the ſhoare.

The 21. day they came to Cape Race, toward the South partes whereof, lying a while becalmed, they tooke Cod in largenes and quantitie, exceeding the other parts of Newfoundland, where any of them had bene. And from thence, trending the coaſt Weſt, toward the Bay of Placentia, the Generall ſent certaine men a ſhoare, to viewe the Countrey, which to them as they sayled along, seemed pleasant. Whereof his men at their returne gaue great commendation, liking so well of the place, as they would willingly haue stayed and wintred there. But hauing the winde fayre and good, they proceeded on their course towardes the firme of America, which by reason of continuall fogs, at that time of the yeere especially, they could neuer see, till Cor Walter of the Golden Hinde did discerne land, and presently lost sight thereof againe, at what time they were all vpon a breach in a great & outragious stormе, hauing vnder 3. fathome water. But God deliuered the Frigat & the Golden Hind, from this great danger. And the Delight in the presence of them all was lost, to their vnspeakeable griefe, with all their chiefe victuall, munition, and other necessary prouisions, and other things of value not fit here to be named. Whereupon, by reason also that Winter was come vpon them, & foule weather increased with fogs and mistes that so couered the land, as without danger of perishing they could not approch it: Sir Humfrey Gilbert & M. Hays, were compelled much against their willes to retyre homewards: And being 300. leagues on their way, were afterwards by tempestuous weather, separated the one from the other, the ninth of September last, since which time, M. Hays with his Barke, is safely arriued, but of Sir Humfrey as yet, we heare no certaine newes.

Upon this report (together with my former intent, to write some briefe discourse in the commendation of this so noble and worthy an enterprise) I did call to my remembrance, the Hist. Plutarch. rie of Themystocles the Grecian, who (being a right noble and valiant Captaine) signified vnto his Countrey men the citizens of Athens, that he had inuented a deuise for their common wealth very profitable: but it was of such importance and secrecie, that it ought not to be reuealed, before priuate conference had with some particular prudent person of their choyse.

The Athenians knowing Aristides the Philosopher, to be a man indued with singular wisedome and vertue, made choyse of him to haue conference with Themystocles, and thereupon to yeelde his opinion to the Citizens concerning the sayd deuise: which was, that they might set on fire the Nauie of their enemies, with great facilitie as he had layde the plot: Aristides made relation to the Citizens, that the stratageme (deuised by Themystocles) was a profitable practise for the common wealth but it was dishonest. The Athenians (without further demaund what the same was) did by common consent reiect and condemne it, preferring honest and vpright dealing before profite.

By occasion of this Historie, I drewe my selfe into a more deepe consideration, of this late vndertaken voyage, whether it were as well pleasing to almightie God, as profitable to men: as lawfull, as it seemed honourable: as well gratefull to the Sauages, as gainefull to the Christians. And vpon mature deliberation, I found the action to be honest and profitable, and therefore allowable by the opinion of Aristides if he were nowe aliue, which being by me herein sufficiently prooued, (as by Gods grace I purpose to doe) I doubt not but that all good minds, will endeuour themselues to be assistants to this so commendable an enterprise, by the valiant and worthy Gentlemen our Countrey men already attempted and vntertaken.

Nowe whereas I doe vnderstand that Sir Humfrey Gilbert his adherents, associates and friends doe meane with a conuenient supply (with as much speede as may be) to maintaine, pursue and folow this intended voyage already in part performed, and by the assistance of almightie God) to plant themselues and their people in the continent of the hither part of America, betweene the degrees of 30. and 60. of septentrionall latitude: (Within which degrees by computation Astronomicall and Cosmographicall are doubtlesse to be found, all things that be necessarie, profitable, or delectable for mans life: The climate mylde and temperate, neither too hote nor too colde, so that vnder the cope of heauen there is not any where to be found a more conuenient place to plant and inhabite in: which many notable Gentlemen, both ‖ of our owne nation and strangers, (who haue bene trauailers) can testifie: and that those Countries are at this day inhabited with Sauages (who haue no knowledge of God:) Is it not therefore (I say) to be lamented, that these poore Pagans, so long liuing in ignorance & idolatrie, and in sort thirsting after Christianitie, (as may appeare by the relation of such as haue trauailed in those partes) that our hearts are so hardened, that fewe or none can be found which wil put to their helping hands, and applie themselues to the relieuing of the miserable and wretched estate of these sillie soules.

Whose Countrey doeth (as it were with arme aduanced) aboue the climates both of Spaine and Fraunce, stretch out it selfe towards England only: In maner praying our ayde & helpe, as it is not onely set forth in Mercators generall Mappe, but it is also found to be true by the discouerie of our nation, and other strangers, who haue often times trauailed vpon the same coasts.

Christophe. Columbus of famous memorie, the first instrument to manifest the great glory and mercy of Almighty God in planting the Christian fayth, in those so long vnknowen regions, hauing in purpose to acquaint (as he did) that renoumed Prince, the Queenes Maiesties graundfather, King Henry the seuenth, with his intended voyage for the Westerne discouries, was not onely derided and mocked generally euen here in England, but afterwarde became a laughing stocke to the Spaniards themselues, who at this day (of all other people) are most bounden to laude and prayse God, who first stirred vp the man to that enterprise.

God doeth not alwaies begin his greatest woorkes by the greatest persons.

And while hee was attending there to acquaint the King of Castile (that then was) with his intended purpose, by howe many wayes and meanes was he derided? Some scorned the pildnes of his garments, some tooke occasion to iest at his simple and silly lookes, others asked if this were he, that lowts so lowe, which did take vpon him to bring men into a Countrey that aboundeth with Golde, Pearle, and Precious stones? If he were any such man (sayde they) hee would carry another maner of countenance with him, and looke somewhat loftier. Thus some iudged him by his garments, and others by his looke and countenance, but none entred into the consideration of the inward man.

His custome was to bowe himselfe very lowe in making of courtesie.

In the ende, what successe his voyage had, who list to reade the Decades, the Historie of the West Indies, the conquest of Hernando Cortes about Mexico, and those of Francisco Pizare in Peru about Casamalcha and Cusco, may knowe more particularly. All which their discouries, trauailes, and conquests, are extant to be had in the English tongue. This deuise was then accounted a fantasticall imagination, and a drowsie dreame.

Hernando Cortes. Francisco Pyzarr.

But the sequel thereof, hath since awaked out of dreames thousand of soules to knowe their Creator, being thereof before that time altogether ignorant: And hath since made sufficient proofe, neither to be fantasticke, nor vainely imagined.

Withall, howe mightily hath it inlarged the dominions of the Crowne of Spaine, and greatly enriched the subiects of the same, let all men consider. Besides, it is wel knowne, that sithence the time of Columbus his first discouerie, through their planting, possessing, and inhabiting those partes, there hath bene transported and brought home into Europe, greater store of Golde, Siluer, Pearle, and Precious stones, then heretofore hath bene in all ages, since the creation of the worlde.

I doe therefore hartily wish, that seeing it hath pleased almighty God, of his infinite mercy at the length, to awake some of our worthy Countrey men, out of that drowsie dreame, wherein we all haue so long slumbered:

That wee may nowe not suffer it to quaile for want of maintenance, that by these valiant Gentlemen our Countrey men is so nobly begun and enterprised. For which purpose, I haue taken vpon me to write this simple short treatise, hoping that it shalbe able to perswade such as haue bene, and yet doe continue detractors and hinderers of this iourney, (by reason perhaps that they haue not deliberately and aduisedly entred into the iudgement of the matter) that yet now vpon better consideration they will become fauourable furtherers of the same. And that such as are already well affected thereunto, wil continue their good disposition: And withall, I most humbly pray all such as are no niggards of their purses in buying of costly and rich apparel, and liberall Contributors in setting forth of games, pastimes, feastings and banquets, (whereof the charge being past, there is no hope of publique profite or commoditie) that henceforth they will bestowe and employ their liberalitie (heretofore that way expended) to the furtherance of these so commendable purposed proceedings.

A reasonable request.

And to this ende haue I taken pen in hand, as in conscience thereunto mooued, desiring much rather, that of the great multitude which this Realme doeth nourish, farre better able to handle this matter then I my selfe am, it would haue pleased some one of them to haue vndertaken the same. But seeing they are silent, and that it falleth to my lotte to put pen to the paper, I will endeuour my selfe, and doe stand in good hope (though my skill and knowledge be simple, yet through the assistance of almighty God) to prooue that the voyage, late enterprised for trade, traffike, and planting in America, is an action tending to the lawfull enlargement of her Maiesties Dominions, commodious to the whole Realme in general, profitable to the aduenturers in particular, beneficiall to the Sauages, and a matter to be attained without any great danger or difficultie.

The argument of the booke.

And lastly (which most of all is) A thing likewise tending to the honour and glory of almighty God: And for that the lawfulnesse to plant in those Countries, in some mens iudgements seemeth very doubtfull, I will beginne the proofe of the lawfulnesse of trade, traffike, and planting.

The

The seconde Chapter sheweth that it is lawfull and necessarie to trade and traffike with the Sauages: And to plant in their Countries: And deuideth planting into two sortes.

AND first for traffike, I say that the Christians may lawfully trauell into those Countries and abide there, whom the Sauages may not iustly impugne and forbid in respect of the mutuall societie and felowship betweene man and man prescribed by the Lawe of Nations.

For from the first beginning of the creation of the world and from the renuing of the same after Noes flood, all men haue agreed, that no violence should be offered to Ambassadours: That the Sea with his Hauens should bee common: That such as should fortune to be taken in warre, should be seruants or slaues: And that strangers should not be driuen away from the place or Countrey whereunto they doe come.

If it were so then, I demaund in what age, and by what Lawe is the same forbidden or denied since? For who doubteth but that it is lawfull for Christians to vse trade and traffike with Infidels or Sauages, carrying thither such commodities as they want, & bringing from thence some part of their plentie.

A thing so commonly and generally practised, both in these our dayes, and in times past, beyonde the memorie of man, both by Christians and Infidels, that it needeth no further proofe.

And for as much as the vse of trade and traffike (be it neuer so profitable) ought not to bee preferred before the planting of Christian fayth: I will therefore some what entreate of planting (without which, Christian Religion can take no roote, be the Preachers neuer so careful and diligent) which I meane to deuide in two sortes.

The principal causes why this voyage is vndertaken.

The first, when Christians by the good liking and willing assent of the Sauages, are admitted by them to quiet possession.

The second, when Christians being vniustly repulsed, doe seeke to attaine and mainteine the right for which they doe come.

The first kinde of planting.

And though in regarde of the establishment of Christian Religion, either of both may bee lawfully and iustly exercised: (Whereof many examples may be found, as well in the time of Moyses and Iosua, and other Rulers before the birth of Christ, as of many vertuous Emperours and Kings sithence his incarnation:) yet doe I wish, that before the second be put in practise, a proofe may be made of the first, sauing that for their safetie as well against the Sauages, as all other forraigne enemies, they should first well and strongly fortifie themselues: which being done, then by all fayre speeches, & euery other good meanes of perswasion to seeke to take away all occasions of offence.

As letting them to vnderstand, howe they came not to their hurt, but for their good, and to no other ende, but to dwell peaceably amongst them, and to trade and traffike with them for their owne commoditie, without molesting or grieuing them any way, which must not be done by wordes onely but also by deedes.

For albeit, to maintaine right and repel iniurie, be a iust cause of warre: yet must there hereof be heedefull care had, that whereas the Sauages be fearefull by nature, and fonde otherwise, the Christians should do their best endeuour to take away such feare as may grow vnto them by reason of their straunge apparel, Armour, and weapon, or such like, by quiet and peaceable conuersation, and letting them liue in securitie, and keeping a measure of blamelesse defence, with as little discommoditie to the Sauages as may bee: for this kinde of warre would be onely defensiue and not offensiue.

And questionles there is great hope & likelyhode that by this kind of meanes, we should bring to passe all effects to our desired purposes: Considering that all creatures, by constitution of nature, are rendred more tractable and easier wonne for all assayes, by courtesie and mildnesse, then by crueltie or roughnes: and therefore being a principle taught vs by naturall reason, it is first to be put in vre.

For albeit as yet the Christians are not so throughly furnished with the perfectnesse of their language, either to expresse their mindes to them, or againe to conceiue the Sauages intent: Yet for the present opportunitie, such policie may bee vsed by friendly signes, and courteous tokens towardes them, as the Sauages may easily perceiue, (were their sences neuer so grosse) an assured friendship to bee offered them, and that they are encountered with such a nation, as bringes them benefite, commoditie, peace, tranquillity and safetie. To further this, and to accomplish it in deedes, there must bee presented vnto them gratis, some kindes of our pettie marchandizes chandiſes and trifles: As looking glaſſes, Bels, Beads, Bracelets, Chaines, or collers of Bewgie, Chriſtall, Amber, Iet, or Glaſſe &c. For ſuch be the things, though to vs of ſmall value, yet accounted by them of high price and eſtimation: and ſooneſt will induce their Barbarous natures to a liking and a mutual ſociety with vs.

Moreouer, it ſhal be requiſite, either by ſpeeche, if it be poſſible, either by ſome other certaine meanes, to ſignifie vnto them, that once league of friendſhip with all louing conuerſation, being admitted betweene the Chriſtians and them: that then the Chriſtians from thence forth will alwayes bee ready with force of Armes to aſſiſt & defende them in their iuſt quarrels, from all inuaſions, ſpoyles and oppreſſions, offered them by any Tyrannts, Aduerſaries, or their next borderers: and a benefit is ſo much the more to be eſteemed, by howe much the perſon vpon whome it is beſtowed ſtandeth in neede thereof.

For it appeareth by the relation of a countreman of ours, namely Dauid Ingram, (who trauelled in thoſe countries xi. moneths and more) That the Sauages generally for the moſt part, are at continuall warres with their next adioyning neighbours, and eſpecially the Cannibals, being a cruel kinde of people, whoſe foode is mans fleſh, and haue teeth like dogges, and do purſue them with rauenous mindes to eate their fleſh, and deuoure them.

And it is not to be doubted, but that the Chriſtians may in this caſe iuſtly and lawfully ayde the Sauages againſt the Cannibals. So that it is very likelie, that by this meanes we ſhall not onely mightely ſtirre and inflame their rude mindes gladly to embrace the louing company of the Chriſtians, proffering vnto them both commodities, ſuccour, and kindnes: But alſo by their franke conſents ſhall eaſily enioy ſuch competent quantity of Lande, as euery way ſhall be correſpondent to the Chriſtians expectation, & contentation, conſidering the great aboundance that they haue of Lande, and howe ſmall account they make thereof, taking no other fruites thereby then ſuch as the ground of it ſelfe dooth naturally yeelde. And thus much concerning the firſt ſort of planting, which as I aſſuredly hope, ſo I moſt hartelie pray may take effect and place.

But if after theſe good and fayre meanes vſed, the Sauages neuertheleſſe will not bee herewithall ſatiſfied, but barbarouſly will go about to practiſe violence either in repelling the Chriſtians from their Ports & ſafe landings or in withſtanding them afterwards to enioy the rights for which both painfully and lawfully they haue aduentured themſelues thither: The ſecond kinde of planting.

Then in ſuch a caſe I holde it no breach of equitie for the Chriſtians to defende themſelues, to purſue reuēge with force, and to do whatſoeuer is neceſſarie for the attayning of their ſafety: For it is allowable by al Lawes in ſuch diſtreſſes, to reſiſt violence with violence: And for their more ſecuritie to increaſe their ſtrength by building of fortes, for auoyding the extremitie of iniurious dealing.

Wherein if alſo they ſhal not be ſuffered in reaſonable quietnes to continue, there is no barre (as I iudge) but that in ſtoute aſſemblies, the Chriſtians may iſſue out, and by ſtrong hand purſue their enemies, ſubdue them, take poſſeſſion of their Townes, Cities, or Villages, (and in auoyding murtherous tyrannie) to vſe the Lawe of Armes, as in like caſe among all nations at this day is vſed: and moſt eſpecially to the ende they may with ſecuritie holde their lawfull poſſeſſion, leaſt happily after the departure of the Chriſtians, ſuch Sauages as haue bene conuerted, ſhould afterwards through compulſion and enforcement of their wicked Rulers, returne to their horrible idolatrie (as did the children of Iſrael, after the deceaſe of Ioſhua) and continue their wicked cuſtome of moſt vnnaturall ſacrificing of humane creatures.

And in ſo doing, doubtleſſe the Chriſtians ſhall no whit at all tranſgreſſe the bonds of equitie or ciuilitie, for as much as in former ages, (yea before the incarnation of Chriſt) the like hath bene done by ſundrye Kings and Princes, Gouernours of the children of Iſrael: chiefly in reſpect to begin their planting, for the eſtabliſhment of Gods worde: as alſo ſince the Natiuitie of Chriſt, mightie and puiſſant Emperours and Kings haue performed the like, I ſay to plant, poſſeſſe, and ſubdue. For proofe whereof, I will alleadge you examples of both kindes.

We reade in the olde Teſtament, howe that after Noes flood was ceaſed, reſtoration of mankinde began onely of thoſe fewe of Noes children and familie as were by God preelected to be ſaued in the Arke with him, whoſe ſeede in proceſſe of time, was multiplied to infinite numbers of nations, which in diuers ſortes deuided themſelues to ſundry quarters of the earth. And forasmuch as all their poſteritie being mightily encreaſed followed not the perfect life of Noe their predeceſſour, God choſe out of the multitude, a peculiar people to himſelfe, to whome afterwards being vnder the gouernement of Moſes in Mount Synay, hee made a graunt to inherite the Land of Canaan, called the land of promiſe, with all the other rich and fertile Countries tries next adioyning therunto. Neuertheleſſe, before they came to poſſeſſion therof, hauing bene afflicted with many greeuous punishments and plagues for their ſinnes they fell in diſpayre to enioy the ſame.

But beeing encouraged and comforted by their Rulers, (men of Iud) they proceeded, arming themſelues with all patience, to ſuffer whatſoeuer it ſhould pleaſe God to ſende: and at laſt attaining to the lande, they were encountered with great numbers of ſtrong people and mighty Kings.

Ioſua 4. Notwithſtanding, Ioſua their leader replenished with the ſpirite of God, being aſſured of the iuſtneſſe of his quarrell, gathered the chiefe ſtrength of the children of Iſrael together, to the number of 40000. with whome he ſafely paſſed the huge riuer Iordan, and hauing before ſent

In which reſpite, perceiuing none of the Gentiles diſpoſed to yeld or call for mercie, he then commanded (as God before had appointed) that both the citie Iericho ſhould be burned, yea, and all the inhabitants, as well olde as young, with all their cattell ſhoulde bee deſtroyed onely excepted Rahab, her kindred and familie, becauſe ſhe before had hid ſecretly the meſſengers of Ioſua, that were ſent thither as ſpies. As for all their golde, ſiluer, precious ſtones, or veſſels of braſſe, they were reſerued and conſecrated to the Lords treaſurie.

Ioſua 8. In like maner hee burned the citie Hay, ſlew the inhabitants thereof, and hanged vp their King. But for ſo much as the Gebionites (fearing the like euent) ſent Ambaſſadours vnto Io-

Yet vnderſtanding afterwards they wrought this by a pollicie, he vſed them as drudges to hewe wood & to carie water, and other neceſſaries for his people. Thus began this valiant Captaine his conqueſt, which he

After that Ioſua was deceaſed, Iuda was conſtituted Lord ouer the Armie, who receiuing like charge from God purſued the proceedings of the holie captaine Ioſua, and vtterly vanquiſhed many Gentiles, Idolaters, and aduerſaries to the children of Iſrael, with all ſuch Rulers or

In this God ſhewed his iuſtice to reuenge tyranny. Wee reade likewiſe, that Gedeon a moſt

I could recite diuers other places out of the Scripture, which aptly may be applied hereunto were it not I do endeuour my ſelfe by all meanes to be briefe. Now in like maner will I alledge ſome few of Inductions out of the autenticall writings of the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtoriographers, all tending to the like argument. And firſt to begin with all, we doe reade: That after our Sauiour Jeſus Chriſt had ſuffered his paſſion, the Apoſtles being inſpired with ỹ holy ghoſt, and the knowledge of all ſtraunge languages, did immediatly diſpearſe themſelues to ſundry partes of the world, to the preaching of the Goſpel. Yet not in ſo generall a maner, but that there remained ſome farre remote countries vnuiſited by them, among the which it is reported that India the great, called the vttermoſt India, as yet had receiued no light of the word. But it came to paſſe, that one Metrodorus, a verie learned and wiſe Philoſopher in that age, being deſirous to ſearch out vnknowne landes, did firſt diſcouer the ſame, finding it wonderfull populous and rich, which vpon his returne being publiſhed, and for certaine vnderſtood, there was another graue Philoſopher of Tyrus called Meropius, being a chriſtian, who did reſolue himſelfe (following the example of Metrodorus) to trauaile thither, and in a ſhort time aſſiſted but with a fewe, in a ſmall Veſſel arriued there, hauing in his company two young youthes, Edeſius, and Frumentius, whome (being his ſchollers) hee had thoughly inſtructed, both in liberall Sciences and chriſtian Religion. Nowe after that Meropius ſomewhile ſtaying there, had (as he thought) ſufficient vnderſtanding of the Indians whole eſtate: He determined to depart, and to bring notice thereof vnto the Emperour, whome he meant to exhort to the conqueſt of the ſame.

But

But by misfortune he was preuented, for being in the middest of his course on the Sea homeward, a sore tempest arose, and perforce droue him backe againe, to an vnknowne Port of the saide land: where he by the most cruel barbarous Indians on the suddaine was slaine with all his company, except the two young schollers aforesaid, whome the barbarous Indians, by reason they were of comely stature and beautifull personages, tooke, and forthwith presented them to their King and Queene: which both being very well liked of, the King courteously entreated, and ordeined Edesius to be his Butler, and Frumentius his Secretarie, and in few yeres by reason of their learning and ciuill gouernment, they were had in great fauour, honour, and estimation with the Princes. But the King departing this life, left the Queene his wife with her yong sonne to gouerne, and gaue free scope and lybertie to the two christians, at their best pleasure to passe to their natiue soyles, allowing them all necessaries for the same. Yet the Queene who highly fauoured them was verie sorowfull they should depart, and therefore most earnestlie intreated them to tarie and assist her in the gouernement of her people, till such time as her yeung sonne grewe to ripe yeres, which request they fulfilled.

Meropius slaine.

Edesius and Frumentius preferred by the Indians.

And Frumentius excelling Edesius farre in all wisedome, ruled both the Queene and her subiects at his discretion, whereby hee tooke occasion to put in practise priuily, that the foundation of christian religion might be planted in the hearts of such as with whome hee thought his perswasion might best preuaile, and that soonest woulde giue eare vnto him: which being brought to passe accordingly, he then with his fellowe Edesius, tooke leaue of the Queene to returne to his natiue countrie. And so soone as he was arriued there, he reuealed to the Emperour Constantine, the effect of all those euents: who both commending his deedes and wholie allowing thereof, by the aduise and good liking of Athanasius then Bishop of Alexandria, did arme and set forth a conuenient power for the aide of Frumentius, in this his so godlie a purpose. And by this meanes came the Emperour afterwards by faire promises, and by force of armes together, vnto the possession of all the Indians countrie. The author of this storie Rufinus, receiued the trueth hereof, from the verie mouth of Edesius companion to Frumentius.

Frumentius in great fauour with ỳ Queene of the Indis.

An other great work of God begun by a man of meane birth.

Ruffinus the Author of this storie.

Moreouer Eusebius in his Historie Ecclesiasticall in precise termes, and in diuers places maketh mention how Constantine the great, not onely enlarged his Empire by the subduing of his next neighbours, but also endeuoured by all meanes, to subiect all such remote Barbarous and heathen nations, as then inhabited the foure quarters of the world. For (as it is written) the Emperour throughly aided with a puisant armie of valiaunt souldiers whom he had before perswaded to christian religion, in proper person himselfe, came euen vnto this our country of England, then called the Iland of Brittaines, bending from him full west, which he wholie conquered, made tributarie, and setled therein christian faith, and left behinde him such Rulers thereof, as to his wisedome seemed best. From thence he turned his force towardes the North coast of the world, and there vtterly subdued the rude and cruell Nation of the Scythians, whereof part by friendly perswasions, part by maine strength, he reduced the whole to Christian faith. Afterwardes hee determined with himselfe to search out what strange people inhabited in the vttermost parts of the South. And with great hazard and labour, making his iourney thither, at last became victour ouer them all, euen to the countrey of the Blemmyans, and the remote Ethiopians, that nowe are the people of Presbyter Iohn, who yet till this day, continue and beare the name of christians.

Euſt. in his ecclesiasticall historie testifieth how ỳ Constantine the great did enlarge his dominions by subduing of Infidels and Idolatrous nations.

Eusebius lib. 1. de vita Constant. Cap 4. et cap. 9.

Euseb. eod. lib. cap. 39.

In the East likewise, what Nation soeuer at that time hee coulde haue notice of, hee easily wonne and brought in subiection to the Empire. So that to conclude, there was no region in any part of the world, the inhabitaunts whereof being Gentiles, though vnknowne vnto him, but in time he ouercame and vanquished.

This worthie beginning of Constantine, both his sonnes succeeding his roome, and also diuers other Emperours afterward to their vttermost endeuour followed and continued, which all the bookes of Eusebius more at large sette forth. Theodoretus likewise in his Ecclesiasticall historie maketh mention how Theodosius the vertuous Emperour, employed earnestly all his time, as well in conquering the Gentiles to the knowledge of the holy gospel, vtterly subuerting the prophane Temples and abhominable Idolatry, as also in extinguishing of such vsurping tyraunts, as with Paganisme withstood the planting of christian religion. After whose decease his sonnes, Honorius, and Arcadius, were created Emperours, the one of the East, the other of the West, who with all stout godlinesse, most carefully imitated the foresteps of their Father, eyther in enlarging their territories, or increasing the christian flocke.

Theodoret in eccle. lib. 5. cap. 20.

Theodoretus cap. 26. eodem lib.

Moreouer, it is reported by the said author, that Theodosius Iunior the Emperour, no whit inferiour in vertuous life to any of the aboue named Princes, with great studie & zeale pursued, and prosecuted the Gentiles, subdued their tyrants & countries, and vtterly destroyed all their idolatrie, conuerting their soules to acknowledge their onely Messias and Creator, and their Countries to the enlargement of the Empire. To be briefe, who so lusteth to read Eusebius Pamphilus, Socrates Scholasticus, Theodoritus, Hermia, Sozomen, & Euagrius Scholasticus, which all were most sage Ecclesiasticall writers, shall finde great store of examples of the worthy liues of sundry Emperours, tending all to the confirmation of my former speeches.

and

And for like examples of latter time (yea euen in the memorie of man) I shall not neede to recite any other then the conquest made of the West and East Indies, by the Kings of Spaine and Portingale, whereof there is particular mention made in the last Chapter of this booke. Herein haue I vsed more copy of examples, then otherwise I would haue done, sauing that I haue bene in place where this maner of planting the Christian faith, hath bene thought of some to be scarce lawfull, yea, such as doe take vpon them to be more then meanely learned. To these examples could I ioyne many moe, but whosoeuer is not satisfied with these fewe, may satisfie himselfe in reading at large the Authours last aboue recited. Thus haue I (as I trust) prooued that we may iustly trade and traffike with the Sauages, and lawfully plant and inhabite their Countries.

The third Chapter doeth shewe the lawfull title, which the Queenes most excellent Maiestie hath vnto those Countries, which through the ayde of almightie God are meant to be inhabited.

1170. Owen Gwyneth, was then Prince of Northwales. Nullum tempus occurrit Regi.

AND it is very euident that the planting there shall in time right amply enlarge her Maiesties Territories and Dominions (or I might rather say) restore her to her Highnesse auncient right and interest in those Countries, into the which a noble and worthy personage, lineally descended from the blood royall, borne in Wales, named Madock ap Owen Gwyneth, departing from the coast of England, about the yeere of our Lord God 1170. arriued and there planted himselfe and his Colonies, and afterwarde returned himselfe into England leauing certaine of his people there, as appeareth in an auncient Welsh Chronicle, where hee then gaue to certaine Ilands, beastes, and foules sundry Welsh names, as the Ilands of Pengwin, which yet to this day beareth the same.

This Iland was discouered by Sir Humfrey and his company, in this his last iourney.

There is likewise a Foule in the sayd Countreys, called by the same name at this day, and is as much to say in English, as Whitehead, and in trueth, the sayd foules haue white heads.

There is also in those Countries a fruit called Gwynethes which is likewise a Welsh word. Moreouer, there are diuers other Welsh wordes at this day in vse, as Dauid Ingram aforesayd reporteth in his relations. All which most strongly argueth, the sayd Prince with his people to haue inhabited there. And the same in effect is confirmed by Mutezuma that mighty Emperour of Mexico, who in an Oration vnto his subiects for the better pacifying of them, made in the presence of Hernando Cortes, vsed these speeches following.

Mutezumas his Oration to his subiects in presence of Hernando Cortese. which Oration was made about the yere. 1520.

My kinsmen, friends, and seruants, you doe well knowe that eighteene yeeres I haue bene your King, as my Fathers and Graundfathers were, and alwayes I haue bene vnto you a louing Prince, and you vnto me good and obedient subiects, and so I hope you will remaine vnto me all the dayes of my life. You ought to haue in remembrance, that either you haue heard of your Fathers, or else our Diuines haue instructed you that we are not naturally of this Countrey, nor yet our Kingdome is durable, because our forefathers came from a farre Countrey, and their King and Captaine who brought them hither, returned againe to his naturall Countrey, saying, that he would send such as should rule and gouerne vs, if by chaunce hee himselfe returned not, &c.

These be the very wordes of Mutezuma, set downe in the Spanish Chronicles, the which being throughly considered, because they haue relation to some strange noble person, who long before had possessed those Countries, doe all sufficiently argue, the vndoubted title of her Maiestie: Forasmuch as no other Nation can truely by any Chronicles they can finde, make prescription of time for themselues, before the time of this Prince Madoc. Besides all this, for further proofe of her Highnes title sithence the arriuall of this noble Britton into those parts (that is to say) in the time of the Q. Maiesties graundfather, of worthy memory, King Henry the seuenth, Letters patents were by his Maiestie graunted to Iohn Cabota an Italian, to Lewis, Sebastian, and Sanius, his three sonnes, to discouer remote, Barbarous and Heathen Countries, which discouerie, was afterwards executed to the vse of the Crowne of England, in ỹ said Kings time, by Sebastian and Santius his sonnes, who were borne heere in England: In true testimony wherof, there is a fayre hauen in Newfound land, knowen, and called vntill this day by the name of Santius hauen, which proueth that they first discouered vpon that coast, from the height of 63 vnto the cape of Florida, as appeareth in the Decades. M. Oliuer Dalbonp. M. Edward Krow. M. R. P. M. I. R.

by

And this may stand for another title to her Maiestie: but any of the foresaid titles is as much or more then any other Christian prince can pretend to the Indies, before such time as they had actuall possession thereof, obteined by the discouery of Christopher Columbus, & the conquest of Vasques Nunnes de Balboa, Hernando Cortes, Francisco Pysarro, and others. And therefore I thinke it needlesse to write any more touching the lawfulnesse of her Maiesties title.

The fourth chapter sheweth how that the trade, traffike, and planting in those countryes, is likely to proue very profitable to the whole realme in generall.

NOw to shew how the same is likely to proue very profitable and beneficiall generally to the whole realme: It is very certaine, that the greatest iewell of this realme, and the chiefest strength and force of the same, for defence or offence in martiall matter and maner is the multitude of shippes, maisters & mariners, ready to assist the most stately and royall nauy of her Maiesty, which by reason of this voyage shall haue both increase & maintenance. And it is well knowne, that in sundry places of this realme ships haue beene built and set forth of late dayes, for the trade of fishing only: yet notwithstanding the fish which is taken & brought into England by the English nauie of fishermen, will not suffice for the expence of this realme foure moneths, if there were none els brought of strangers. And the chiefest cause why our English men do not go so far Westerly, as the especiall fishing places do lie, both for plenty & greatnesse of fish, is for that they haue no succor and knowen safe harbor in those parts. But if our nation were once planted there, or nere therabouts: whereas they now fish but for two moneths in the yeere, they might then fish so long as pleased themselues, or rather at their comming finde such plenty of fish readie taken, salted & dried, as might be sufficient to fraught them home without long delay (God granting that salt may be found there) whereof Dauid Ingram (who trauelled in those countryes as aforesaid) saith that there is great plenty: & withall the climate doth giue great hope, that though there were none naturally growing, yet it might aswell be made there by art, as it is both in Rochell & Bayon, or els where. Which being brought to passe, shall increase the number of our ships and mariners, were it but in respect of fishing only: but much more in regard of the sundry merchandizes and commodities which are there found and had in great abundance. For the maister.

Moreouer, it is well knowen that all Sauages, aswell those that dwell in the South, as those that dwell in the North, so soone as they shall beginne but a little to taste of ciuillity, will take marueilous delight in any garment, be it neuer so simple: as a shirt, a blew, yellow, red, or greene cotten cassocke, a cappe or such like, and will take incredible paines for such a trifle.

For I my selfe haue heard this report made sundry times, by diuers of our countreymen, who haue dwelt in the Southerly parts of the West Indies, some twelues yeeres together, and some lesse time: that the people in those parts are easily reduced to ciuility both in maners and garments. Which being so, what vent for our English clothes will thereby ensue, and how great benefit to all such persons & artificers whose names are noted in the margent, I do leaue to the iudgement of such as are discreet. Clothiers. Woolmen. Carders. Spinners. Weauers. Fullers. Sherrmen. Dyers. Drapers. Clothiers. Cappers. Hatters. &c.

And questionlesse heereby it will also come to passe, that all such townes and villages, as both haue beene, and now are vtterly decayed and ruinated (the poore people thereof being not set on worke, by reason of the transportation of raw wooll of late dayes, more excessiuely then in times past) shal by this meanes be restored to their pristinate wealth and estate, all which do likewise tend to the inlargement of our nauie, and maintenance of our nauigation. And many decayed townes repayred.

To what end need I endeuor my selfe by arguments to proue, that by this voyage our nauie and nauigation shalbe inlarged, when as there needeth none other reason then the manifest & late example of the neere neighbors to this realme, the kings of Spaine and Portingall, who since the first discouery of the Indies, haue not onely mightily inlarged their dominions, greatly inriched themselues and their subiects: but haue also by iust account trebled the number of their shippes, maisters and mariners, a matter of no small moment and importance?

Besides this, it will proue a generall benefit vnto our countrey, that though this occasion, not onely a great number of men which do now liue idely at home, and are burthenous, chargeable, & vnprofitable to this realme, shall heereby be set on worke, but also children of twelue or fourteene The idle persons of this realme shall by occasion of this iourney be well employed, and set on worke.

yeres of age, or vnder, may be kept from idlenesse, in making of a thousand kindes of trifling things, which will be good merchandize for that countrey. And moreouer, our idle women (which the realme may well spare) shall also be employed on plucking, dying, and sorting of feathers, in pulling, beating, and working of hempe, and in gathering of cotton, and diuers things right necessary for dying. All which things are to be found in those countryes most plentifully. And the men may imploy themselues in dragging for pearle, working for mines, and in matters of husbandry, and likewise in hunting the Whale for traine, and making casks to put the same in: besides in fishing for cod, salmon, and herring, drying, salting, and barrelling the same, and selling of trees, hewing and sawing of them, and such like worke, meet for those persons as are no men of art or science.

Hempe doth grow neere S. Laurence riuer naturally.

Many other things may be found to the great relieue and good employments of no small number, of the naturall subiects of this realme, which do now liue heere idlely to the common annoy of the whole state. Neither may I heere omit the great hope and likelihood of a passage by the Grand bay, into the South seas, confirmed by sundry authors to be found leading to Cataia, the Moluccaes and Spiceries, whereby may ensue as generall a benefit to the realme, or greater then yet hath beene spoken of, without either such charges, or other inconueniences, as by the tedious tract of time and perill, which the ordinary passage to those parts at this day doth minister.

Read the beginning of the booke intituled, Diuers voyages touching the discouery of America.

And to conclude this argument withall, it is well knowne to all men of sound iudgement, that this voyage is of greater importance, and will be found more beneficiall to our countrey, then all other voyages at this day in vse and trade amongst vs.

The fift chapter sheweth, that the trading and planting in those countryes is likely to proue to the particular profit of all aduenturers.

I Will now according to my promise shew forth some probable reasons, that the aduenturers in this iourney are to take particular profit by the same. It is therefore conuenient that I do diuide the aduenturers into two sorts: the noblemen & gentlemen by themselues, and the merchants by themselues. For as I do heare, it is meant that there shall be one society of the noblemen and gentlemen, and another society of the merchants. And yet not so diuided, but that eche society may freely and frankly trade and traffike one with the other.

And first to bend my speech to the noblemen and gentlemen, who do chiefly seeke a temperate climate, wholesome ayre, fertile soile, and a strong place by nature, whereupon they may fortifie, and there either plant themselues, or such other persons as they shall thinke good to send to be lords of that place and countrey: to them I say that all these things are very easy to be found within the degrees of 30 and 60 aforesaid, either by South or North, both in the Continent, and in Islands thereunto adioyning at their choise: but the degree certaine of the elcuation of the pole, and the very climate where these places of force and fertility are to be found, I omit to make publike, for such regard as the wiser sort can easily coniecture: the rather because I do certainly vnderstand, that some of those which haue the managing of this matter, know it as well or better then I my selfe, and do meane to reueale the same when cause shall require, to such persons whom it shall concerne, and to no other: so that they may seat and settle themselues in such climate as shall best agree with their owne nature, disposition, and good liking: and in the whole tract of that land, by the description of as many as haue beene there, great plenty of minerall matter of all sorts, and in very many places, both stones of price, pearle and christall, and great store of beasts, birds, and fowles both for pleasure and necessary vse of man are to be found.

Beasts for pleasure.

And for such as take delight in hunting, there are Stagges, Wilde boares, Foxes, Hares, Cunnies, Badgers, Otters, and diuers other such like for pleasure. Also for such as haue delight in hauking, there are hauks of sundry kindes, and great store of game, both for land and riuer, as Fezants, Patridges, Cranes, Heronshawes, Ducks, Mallards, and such like. There is also a kinde of beast, much bigger then an Oxe, whose hide is more then eighteene foot long, of which sort a countrey man of ours, one Walker a sea man, who was vpon that coast, did for a truth report in the presence of diuers honourable and worshipfull persons, that he and his company did finde in one cottage aboue two hundred and forty hides, which they brought away and solde in France for forty shillings an hide: and with this agreeth Dauid Ingram, and describeth that beast at large, supposing it to be a certaine kinde of Buffe: there are likewise beasts and fowles of diuers kinds, which I omit for breuities sake, great store of fish both in the salt water and in the fresh, plentie of grapes as bigge as a mans thumbe, and the most delicate wine of the Palme tree, of which wine there be diuers of good credit in this realme haue tasted: and there is also a kinde of graine called Hides solde for forty shillings a piece.

Great grapes. Wine of the Palmetree.

Maize

Maize, Potato roots, and sundry other fruits naturally growing there: so that after such time as they are once setled, they shall need to take no great care for victuall.

And now for the better contentation and satisfaction of such worshipfull, honest minded, and well disposed merchants, as haue a desire to the furtherance of euery good and commendable action, I will first say vnto them, as I haue done before to the noblemen and gentlemen, that within the degrees aboue said, is doubtlesse to be found the most wholesom and best temperature of ayre, fertility of soile, and euery other commodity or merchandize, for the which, with no small perill we do trauell into Barbary, Spaine, Portingall, France, Italie, Moscouie & Danske. All which may be either presently had, or at the least wise in very short time, procured from thence with lesse danger then now we haue them. And yet to the end my argument shall not altogether stand vpon likelihoods and presumptions, I say that such persons as haue discouered and trauelled those parts, do testifie that they haue found in those countreys all these things following, namely:

Of beasts for furres.
Marterns.
Beauers.
Foxes, blacke and white.
Leopards.

Of Wormes.
Silke wormes great & large

Of Birds.
Hawkes.
Bitters.
Curlewes.
Herons.
Partridges.
Cranes.
Mallards.
Wilde geese.
Stocke dooues.
Margaus.
Blacke birds.
Parrots.
Pengwins.

Of Fishes.
Codde.
Salmon.
Seales.
Herrings.

Of Trees.
Palme trees yeelding sweet wines.
Cedars.
Firres.
Sasafras.
Oake.
Elme.
Popler.

And sundry other strange Trees, to vs vnknowen.

Of Fruites.
Grapes very large.
Muskemellons.
Limmons.
Dates great.
Orrenges.
Figges.
Proines.
Raisins great and small.
Pepper.
Almonds.
Citrons.

Of Mettals.
Golde.
Siluer.
Copper.
Lead.
Tinne.

Of Stones.
Turkies.
Rubies.
Pearls great & faire.
Marble, of diuers kindes.
Iasper.
Christall.

Sundry other commodities of all sorts.
Rosen.
Pitch.
Tarre.
Turpentine.
Frankensence.
Honny.
Waxe.
Rubarbe.
Oile Oliue.
Traine oile.
Muske codde.
Salt.
Tallow.
Hides.
Hempe.
Flaxe.
Cochenello & dies of diuers sorts.
Feathers of sundrie sorts, as for pleasure and filling of Featherbeds.

And seeing that for small costs, the truth of these things may be vnderstood (whereof this intended supply will giue vs more certaine assurance) I doe finde no cause to the contrary, but that all well minded persons should be willing to aduenture some conuenient portion for the furtherance of so good an enterprise.

Now for the triall hereof, considering that in the articles of the society of the aduentures in this voyage, there is prouision made, that no aduenturer shall be bound to any further charge then his first aduenture: and yet notwithstanding keepe still to himselfe, his children, his apprentises and seruants, his and their freedome for trade and traffike, which is a priuiledge that aduenturers in other voyages haue not: and in the said articles it is likewise prouided, that none other then such as haue aduentured in the first voyage, or shall become aduenturers in this supply, at any time hereafter are to be admitted in the said society, but as redemptionaries, which will be very chargeable: therefore generally I say vnto all such according to the olde prouerbe, Nothing venture, nothing haue. For if it do so fall out, according to the great hope and expectation had (as by Gods grace it will) the gaine which now they reape by traffike into other far countries, shall by this trade returne with lesse charge, greater gaine, & more safety: Lesse charge I say, by reason of the ample & large deepe riuers at the very banke, wherof there is many, whereby both easily & quietly they may transport frō ỹ innermost parts of the main land, all kinde of merchandize, yea in vessels of great burde, & that three times, or twise in the yere at the least. But let vs omit all presuptions how we behoue to ouer, & dwell vpon ỹ certeinty of such cōmodities as were discouered by sir Humfry Gilbert, & his assistants in Newfould land in August last. For there may be very easily made, Pitch, Tar, Rosen, Commodities found in August last.

Sope ashes, in great plenty, yea, as it is thought, inough to serue the whole realme of euery of these kindes: And of Trane oile such quantity, as if I should set downe the value that they doe esteeme it at, which haue beene there, it would seeme incredible.

It is hereby intended, that these commodities in this abundant maner, are not to be gathered from thence, without planting and setling there. And as for other things of more value, and that of more sorts and kindes then one or two (which were likewise discouered there) I doe holde it for some respects, more meet for a time to be concealed then vttered.

Of the fishing I do speake nothing, because it is generally knowen: and it is not to be forgotten, what trifles they be that the Sauages do require in exchange of these commodities: yea, for pearle, golde, siluer, and precious stones. All which are matters in trade and traffike of great moment. But admit that it should so fall out, that the aboue specified commodities shall not happily be found out within this first yeere: Yet it is very cleere that such and so many may be found out as shall minister iust occasion to thinke all cost & labor well bestowed. For it is very certaine, that there is one seat fit for fortification, of great safety, wherin these commodities following, especially are to be had, that is to say, Grapes for wine, Whales for oyle, Hempe for cordage, and other necessary things, and fish of farre greater size, and plenty, then that of Newfound land, and of all these so great store, as may suffice to serue our whole realme.

Besides all this, if credit may be giuen to the inhabitants of the same soile, a certaine riuer doth thereunto adioyne, which leadeth to a place abounding with rich substance: I do not hereby meane the passage to the Moluccaes, whereof before I made mention.

And it is not to be omitted, how that about two yeres past, certaine merchants of S. Mallowes in France, did hyre a shippe out of the Iland of Jersey, to the end that they would keepe that trade secret from their countreymen, and they would admit no mariner, other then the ship boy belonging to the said shippe, to go with them, which shippe was about 70 tunne. I do know the shippe and the boy very well, and am familiarly acquainted with the owner, which voyage proued very beneficiall.

To conclude, this which is already said, may suffice any man of reasonable disposition, to serue for a taste, vntill such time as it shall please almighty God through our owne industrie, to send vs better tidings. In the meane season, if any man well affected to this iourney, shall stand in doubt of any matter of importance touching the same, he may satisfie himselfe with the iudgement and liking of such of good calling and credit, as are principall dealers herein. For it is not necessary in this treatise, publikely to set forth the whole secrets of the voyage.

The sixt chapter sheweth that the traffike and planting in those countries, shall be vnto the Sauages themselues very beneficiall and gainefull.

NOw to the end it may appeare, that this voyage is not vndertaken altogether for the peculiar commodity of our selues, and our country (as generally other trades and iournies be) it shall fall out in proofe, that the Sauages shall hereby haue iust cause to blesse the houre, when this enterprise was vndertaken.

First and chiefly, in respect of the most happy and gladsome tidings of the most glorious Gospell of our Sauiour Iesus Christ, whereby they may be brought from falshood to trueth, from darkenesse to light, from the bie way of death to the path of life, from superstitious idolatry to sincere Christianity, from the deuill to Christ, from hell to heauen. And if in respect of all the commodities they can yeeld vs (were they many moe) that they should but receiue this only benefit of Christianity, they were more then fully recompenced.

But hereunto it may be obiected, that the Gospell must be be freely preached, for such was the example of the Apostles: vnto whom although the authorities and examples before alleged of Emperours, Kings, and Princes, as well before Christes time as since, might sufficiently satisfie: yet for further answere, we may say with S. Paul: If we haue sowen vnto you heauenly things, 1. Cor. 9. do you thinke it much that we should reape your carnall things? And withall, The workman is woorthie of his hire. These heauenly tidings which those labourers our countreymen (as messengers of Gods great goodnesse and mercy) will voluntarily present vnto them, doe farre exceed their earthly riches. Moreouer, if the other inferior worldly & temporall things, which they shall receiue from vs, be waied in equall ballance, I assure my selfe, that by equall iudgement of any indifferent person, the benefits which they then receiue, shall farre surmount those which they shall depart withall vnto vs. And admit that they had (as they haue not) the knowledge to put their land to some vse: yet being brought from brutish ignorance to ciuility and knowledge, and trade made them to vnderstand how the tenth part of their land may be so manured and employed, as it may yeeld more commodities to the necessary vse of mans life, then the whole now doth: What iust cause of complaint may they haue? And in my priuate opinion, I doe verily thinke that God did create land, to the end that it should by culture and husbandry, yeeld things necessary for mans life.

But this is not all the benefit which they shall receiue by the Christians: for, ouer and beside the knowledge how to till and dresse their grounds, they shall be reduced from vncomely customes to honest maners, from disordered riotous routs and companyes to a well gouerned common wealth, and withall shalbe taught mecanicall occupations, arts, and liberall sciences: and which standeth them most vpon, they shalbe defended from the cruelty of their tyrannicall and bloud sucking neighbors the Canibals, whereby infinite number of their liues shall be preserued. And lastly, by this meanes many of their poore innocent children shalbe preserued from the bloudy knife of the sacrificer, a most horrible and detestable custome in the sight of God and man, now and euer heeretofore vsed amongst them. Many other things could I heere allege to this purpose, were it not that I feare least I haue already more then halfe tired the reader.

This bargen can not be vniust, where both parties are gainers.

The seuenth chapter sheweth that the planting there, is not a matter of such charge or difficultie, as many would make it seeme to be.

NOw therefore for proofe, that the planting in these parts is a thing that may be done without the aide of the princes power and purse, contrary to the allegation of many malicious persons, who will neither be actors in any good action themselues, nor so much as afoord a good word to the setting forward thereof: and that worse is, they will take vpon them to make molehilles seeme mountaines, and flies elephants, to the end they may discourage others, that be very well or indifferently affected to the matter, being like vnto Esops dogge, which neither would eat hay himselfe, nor suffer the poore hungry asse to feed thereon:

I say and affirme that God hath prouided such meanes for the furtherance of this enterprise, as doe stand vs in stead of great treasure: for first by reason that it hath pleased God of his great goodnesse, of long time to holde his mercifull hand ouer this realme, in preseruing the people of the same, both from slaughter by the sword, and great death by plague, pestilence, or otherwise, there are at this day great numbers (God he knoweth) which liue in such penury and want, as they could be contented to hazard their liues, and to serue one yeere for meat, drinke and apparell only, without wages, in hope thereby to amend their estates: which is a matter in such like iournyes, of no small charge to the prince. Moreouer, things in the like iournyes of greatest price and cost, as victuall (whereof there is great plenty to be had in that countrey without money) and powder, great artillery, or corselets, are not needfull in so plentifull and chargeable maner, as the shew of such a iourney may present: for a small quantity of all these to furnish the fort onely, will suffice vntill such time as diuers commodities may be found out in those parts, which may be thought well worthy a greater charge. Also the peculiar benefit of archers which God hath blessed this land withall before all other nations, will stand vs in great stead amongst those naked people.

Another helpe we haue also, which in such like cases is a matter of marueilous cost, and will be in this iourney procured very easily (that is to say) To transport yeerely as well our people, as all other necessaries needfull for them into those parts by the fleet of merchants, that yeerely venture for fish in Newfound land, being not farre distant from the countrey meant to be inhabited, who commonly go with empty vessels in effect, sauing some little fraught with salt. And thus it appeareth that the souldiors wages, and the transportation may be defrayed for farre lesse summes of money then the detractors of this enterprise haue giuen out. Againe, this intended voyage for conquest, hath in like maner many other singular priuileges wherewith God hath, as it were, with his holy hand blessed the same before all others. For after once we are departed the coast of England, we may passe straight way thither, without danger of being driuen into any the countryes of our enemies, or doubtfull friends: for commonly one winde serueth to bring vs thither, which seldome failerh from the middle of Januarie to the middle of May, a benefite which the mariners make great account of, for it is a pleasure that they haue in few or none of other iourneyes. Also the passage is short, for we may goe thither in thirtie or fortie dayes at the most, hauing but an indifferent winde, & returne continually in twenty or foure & twenty dayes at the most. And in the same our iourny, by reason it is in the Ocean, & quite out of the way from the intercourse of other countryes, we may safely trade and traffike without perill of piracy: neither shall our ships, people, or goods there, be subiect to arrest or molestation of any Pagan potentate, Turkish tyrant, yea, or Christian prince, which heeretofore, sometimes vpon slender occasion in other parts, haue stayed our shippes and merchandizes, whereby great numbers of our countrymen haue beene vterly vndone, diuers put to ransome, yea, and some lost their liues: a thing so fresh in memory as it needeth no proofe, and well worthy of consideration.

Besides, in this voyage we do not crosse the burnt line, whereby commonly both beuerage and victuall are corrupted, and mens health very much impayred, neither doe we passe the frozen seas, which yeeld sundry extreme dangers: but haue a temperate climate at all times of the yere, to serue our turnes. And lastly, there need no delayes by the way, for taking in of fresh water and fewell, (a thing vsually done in long iournies) because as I said aboue, the voyage is not long, and the fresh waters taken in there, our men heere in England, at their returne home, haue found so wholesom and sweet, that they haue made choise to drinke it before our beere and ale.

Beholde heere, good countrey men, the manifolde benefits, commodities and pleasures heere-tofore vnknowne, by Gods especiall blessing not onely reuealed vnto vs, but also as it were infused into our bosomes, who though hitherto like dormice haue slumbered in ignorance thereof, being like the cats that are loth for their pray to wet their feet: yet if now therefore, at the last we would awake, and with willing mindes (setting friuolous imaginations aside) become industrious instruments to our selues, questionlesse we should not onely heereby set forth the glory of our heauenly father, but also easily attaine to the end of all good purposes, that may be wished or desired.

And may it not much encourage vs to hope for good successe in the countrey of these Sauages, being a naked kinde of people, voyd of the knowledge of the discipline of warre, seeing that a noble man, being but a subiect in this realme (in the time of our king Henrie the second) by name Strangbowe, then earle of Chepstow in South Wales, by himselfe and his allies and assistants, at their owne proper charges, passed ouer into Ireland, and there made conquest of the now countrey, and then kingdome of Lynester, at which time it was very populous and strong, which history our owne chronicles do witnesse: And why should we be dismayed more then were the Spaniards, who haue beene able within these few yeeres to conquer, possesse and enioy so large a tract of the earth, in the West Indies, as is betweene the two tropikes of Cancer and Capricorne, not onely in the maine firme land of America, which is 47 degrees in latitude from South to North, and doth containe 2820 English miles at the least, that the king of Spaine hath there in actuall possession, besides many goodly and rich Ilands, as Hispaniola, now called S. Domingo, Cuba, Iamaica, and diuers other, which are both beautifull and full of treasure, not speaking any whit at all, how large the said land is from East to West, which in some places is accounted to be 1500 English miles at the least, from East to West, betweene the one sea and the other.

1. Decad. lib. 5. fol. 77. of the West Indies, in English. Canoas is a kinde of boat.

Or why should our noble nation be dismaid, more then was Vasques Nunnes de Valboa, a priuate gentleman of Spaine, who with the number of 70 Spaniards at Tichiri, gaue an ouerthrow vnto that mighty king Chemacchus, hauing an armie of an hundred canoas and 5000 men, and the said Vasques Nunnes not long after, with his small number, did put to flight king Chiapes his whole armie.

3. Decad. lib. 1. fol. 97. About the yere of our Lord 1511.

Likewise Hernando Cortes, being also but a priuate gentleman of Spaine, after his departure from the Ilands of Cuba and Acusamill, and entring into the firme of America, had many most victorious & triumphant conquests, as that at Cyntla, where being accompanyed with lesse then 500 Spanish footmen, thirteene horsemen, and sixe pieces of ordinance onely he ouerthrew 40000 Indians. The same Cortes with his said number of Spaniards, tooke prisoner that mighty Emperour Mutezuma in his most chiefe and famous citie of Mexico, which at that instant had in it aboue the number of 500000 Indians at the least, and in short time after obteined not onely the quiet possession of the said citie, but also of his whole Empire.

Conquest of the West Indies. fol. 433 45 English.

And in like maner in the countrey of Peru, which the king of Spaine hath now in actuall possession, Francisco Pysarro, with the onely ayd of Diego de Almagro, and Hernando Luche, being all three but priuate gentlemen, was the principall person that first attempted discouerie and conquest of the large and rich countrey of Peru, which through the ayde of the almighty, he brought to passe and atchieued in the Tambo of Cassiamalcha, (which is a large place of ground, enclosed with walles) in which place he tooke the great and mightie prince Attabalipa prisoner, amidst the number of 60000 Indians his subiects, which were euer before that day accounted to be a warlike kinde of people, which his great victory it pleased God to grant vnto him in the yere of our Lord God 1533, he not hauing in his company aboue the number of 210 Spaniards, whereof there were not past threescore horsemen in all: after the taking of which prince Attabalipa, he offered vnto Pyzarro for his ransome, to fill a great large hall full of golde and siluer, and such golde and siluer vessels as they then vsed, euen as high as a man might reach with his arme.

A marueilous victory.

And

And the sayd prince caused the same hall to be marked round about at the sayd height, which raunsome Pyzarro granted to accept. And after, whē as this mightie prince had sent to his vassals and subiects to bring in gold and siluer for the filling of the hall, as aforesaid, as namely to the cities or townes of Quito, Paciacama and Cusco, as also to the Caloa of Lima, in which towne as their owne writers doe affirme, they found a large and faire house, all slated and couered with gold: and when as the said hall was not yet a quarter ful, a mutinie arose amongst the Spaniards, in which it was commonly giuen out, that the said prince had politikely offered this great raunsome vnder pretence to raise a much more mightie power, whereby the Spaniards should be taken, slain and ouerthrowen: whereupon they grew to this resolution, to put the sayd prince to death, and to make partition of the golde and siluer alreadie brought in, which they presently put in execution. And comming to make perfect Inuentorie of the same, as well for the emperour then king of Spaine, his fift part, as otherwise, there was found to be alreadie brought in into the sayd hall, the number of 132425. pound weight of siluer and in gold the number of 1828125. pezoes, which was a riches neuer before that nor since seene of any man together, of which there did appertaine to the emperour for his fift part of golde 365625. pezoes, and for his fift part of siluer, 26485. pound waighe, and to euery horseman eight thousand pezoes of gold, and 67. pound waight of siluer. Euery souldiour had 4550. pezoes of gold, and 280. pound waight of siluer. Euery captain had, some 30000. some 20000. pezoes of gold and of siluer, proportionally answerable to their degrees and calling, according to the rate agreed vpon amongst them.

Francis Pizarro as their generall, according to his degree and calling proportionally, had more then any of the rest, ouer and besides the massie table of gold which Attabalipa had in his Litter, which waighed 25000. pezoes of golde: neuer was there before that day souldiours so rich in so small a time, and with so litle daunger. And in this iourney for want of iron, they did shoe their horses, some with golde, and some with siluer. This is to bee seene in the generall historie of the West Indies, where as the doings of Pizarro, & the conquest of Peru is more at large set forth.

To this may I adde the great discoueries and conquests which the princes of Portingall haue made round about the West, the South, and the East partes of Affrica, and also at Calicute, and in the East Indies, and in America, at Brasile and elsewhere in sundry Islands, in fortifying, peopling and planting all along the said coastes and Islands, euer as they discouered, which being rightly weied and considered, doeth minister iust cause of incouragement to our countrymen, not to account it so hard and difficule a thing for the subiects of this noble realme of England, to discouer, people, plant and possesse the like goodly lands and rich countries not farre from vs, but neere adioining and offering it selfe vnto vs (as is aforesaid) which haue neuer yet heretofore, bene in the actuall possession of any other Christian prince, then the princes of this realme. All which (as I thinke) should not a litle animate and encourage vs to looke out and to aduenture abroad, vnderstanding what large countries and Islands the Portingals with their small number haue within these few yeeres discouered, peopled and planted, some part whereof I haue thought it not amisse, briefly in particular to name both the townes, countries and Islands, so neere as I could vpon the sudden call them to remembrance: for the rest I doe referre the Reader to the histories, where more at large the same is to be seene. First, they did winne and conquere from the princes of Barbarie the Island of Geisera and towne of Arzilla, not past 140. mile distant from their Metropolitane & chiefe citie of Fesse: and after that they wonne also from the said princes the townes of Tangier, Seuta, Mazigam, Azamore, and Azaffie, all alongst the Sea coasts. And in the yeere of our Lord, 1455. Alouis de Cadamosta a gentleman Uenetian, was he that first discouered for their vse Cape Verd, with the Islands adioining, of which he then peopled and planted those of Bonauista and San Iago discouering also the riuer Senega, otherwise called Niger and Cape Rouge & Sierra Leone, and in a few yeeres after they did discouer the coast of Guinea, and there peopled and built the castle of Mine: then discouered they further to the countries of Melegettes, Benin, and Manicongo, with the Islands of Principe, Anobon, S. Mathew, and S. Thomas vnder the Equinoctiall line, which they peopled and built in the said Island of S. Thomas, the hauen towne or port of Pauosan. After that, about the yeere of our Lord, 1494. one Bartholomew Dias was sent foorth, who was the first man that discouered and doubled that great and large Cape called Bon Esperance, and passing the currants that run vpon the said coast, on the South-east part of Affrica, betweene the said maine land and the Island of S. Lawrence, otherwise called of the ancients, Madagascar, he discouered to the harbor named the riuer of Infants. After that since the yeere of our Lord God, 1497. and before the ful accomplishment of the yeere of Christ, 1510. through the trauails and discoueries of Vasques de Game, Peter Aluares, Thomas Lopes, Andrew Corsale, Iohn de Empoli, Peter Sinter, Pancho Detoar, and that noble and worthy gentleman man Alonso de Albuquerque, they did discouer people, and plant at Ceffala, being vpon the East side of Affrica, in twentie degrees of latitude of the South pole, and direct West from the Island of S. Laurence (at which port of Ceffala, diuers doe affirme that king Salomon did fetch his gold) as also vpon the said East side of Affrica, they did afterward discouer, people, and plant at Mozambique, Quiloa, Monbaza and Melinde, two degrees of Southerly latitude, and so vp to the streight of Babel-Mandell at the entring of the red sea, all vpon the East coast of Affrica, from whence they put off at the Cape of Garda Fu, and past the great gulfe of Arabia, or Indian Sea East to Sinus Persicus, and the Island of Ormus, and so passing the large and great Riuer Indus, where he hath his fall into the maine Ocean, in 23. degrees and an halfe, vnder the tropike of Cancer, of Septentrionall latitude, they made their course againe directly towards the South, and began to discouer people, and plant vpon the West side of the hither India at Goa, Mangallor, Cananor, Calecute and Cochin, and the Island of Zeilam.

Ceffala accounted to be the place where the noble and wise king Salomon did fetch his gold.

And here I thinke good to remember to you, that after their planting vpon this coast, their forces grew so great that they were able to compell all the Moores, the subiectes of the mightie Emperour of the Turkes to pay tribute vnto them, euer as they passed the gulfe of Arabia, from the port of Mecca in Arabia felix, where Mahomet lieth buried, or any of the other portes of the sayd land, euer as they passed to and from the hauens of Cochin, Calecute and Cananor, and by their martiall maner of discipline practised in those partes, the great and mightie prince the Sophie Emperour of the Persians, and professed enemie to the Turke, came to the knowledge and vse of the Caliuer shot, and to enterlace and ioyne footemen with his horsemen, sithence which time the Persians haue growen to that strength and force, that they haue giuen many mightie and great ouerthrowes to the Turke, to the great quiet of all Christendome.

And from the Island of Zeilam aforesayd, they also discouered more East in passing the gulfe of Bengala, and so passed the notable and famous Riuer of Ganges, where hee hath his fall into the maine Ocean, vnder the tropike of Cancer, and to the Cape of Malaca, and vnto the great and large Islands of Sumatra, Iaua maior, Iaua minor, Mindano, Palobane, Celebes, Gilolo, Tidore, Mathin, Borneio, Machian, Terrenate, and all other the Islands of Molucques and Spiceries, and so East alongst the coasts of Cathaia, to the portes of China, Zaiton and Quinsay, and to the Island of Zipango and Iapan, situate in the East, in 37. degrees of Septentrionall latitude and in 195. of longitude. Their noble and worthy discoueries here also is not to bee forgotten, that in the yeere of our Lord, 1501. that famous & worthy gentleman Americus Vespucius, did discouer, people, and plant to their vse the holds and fortes which they haue in Brasill, of whom (he being but a priuate Gentleman) the whole countrey or firme land of the West Indies, is commonly called and knowen by the name of America.

These are the furthest parts of the world from England.

At these Islands hath sir Francis Drake bene, where the fame of the Queenes most excellent Maiestie was renowmed.

I doe greatly doubt least I seeme ouertedious in the recitall of the particular discoueries and conquests of the East and West Indies, wherein I was the more bold to vrge the patience of the Reader, to the end it might most manifestly and at large appeare, to all such as are not acquainted with the histories, how the king of Portingal, whose countrey for popularitie and number of people, is scarce comparable to some three shires of England, and the king of Spaine likewise, whose naturall countrey doeth not greatly abound with people, both which princes by meanes of their discoueries within lesse then 90. yeeres past, haue as it appeareth both mightily and marueilously enlarged their territories and dominions through their owne industrie by the assistance of the omnipotent, whose aide we shall not need to doubt, seeing the cause and quarell which we take in hand tendeth to his honour and glory, by the enlargement of the Christian faith.

To conclude, since by christian dutie we stand bound chiefly to further all such acts as doe tend to the encreasing the true flocke of Christ by reducing into the right way those lost sheepe which are yet astray: And that we shall therein follow the example of our right vertuous predecessors of renowmed memorie, and leaue vnto our posteritie a deuine memorial of so godly an enterprise: Let vs I say for the considerations alleaged, enter into iudgement with our selues, whether this action may belong to vs or no, the rather for that this voiage through the mightie assistance of the omnipotent God, shall take our desired effect (whereof there is no iust cause of doubt). Then shall her Maiesties dominions be enlarged, her highnesse auncient titles iustly confirmed, all odious idlenes from this our realme vterly banished, diuers decayed townes repaired, and many poore and needie persons relieued, and estates of such as now liue in want shall be embettered, the ignorant and barbarous idolaters taught to know Christ, the innocent defended from their bloodie tyrannicall neighbours, the diabolicall custome of sacrificing humane creatures abolished.

All which (no man doubteth) are things gratefull in the sight of our Sauiour Christ, and tending to the honour and glory of the Trinitie. Bee of good cheere therefore, for hee that cannot erre hath ſayd: That before the ende of the world, his word ſhall be preached to all nations. Which good worke I truſt is reſerued for our nation to accompliſh in theſe partes: Wherefore my deare countreymen, be not diſmaied, for the power of God is nothing diminiſhed, nor the loue that he hath to the preaching and planting of the Goſpell any whit abated. Shall wee then doubt he will be leſſe ready moſt mightily and miraculouſly to aſſiſt our nation in this quarell, which is chiefly and principally vndertaken for the enlargement of the Chriſtian faith abroad, and the baniſhment of idolatrie at home, then he was to Columbus, Vaſques Nunnes, Hernando Cortes, and Francis Pizarro in the Weſt: & Vaſques de Gama, Peter Aluares, and Alonſo de Albuquerque in the Eaſt? Let vs therefore with cheerefull mindes and courageous hearts, giue the attempt, and leaue the ſequell to almightie God: for if he be on our part, what forceth it who be againſt vs? Thus leauing the correction and reformation vnto the gentle Reader, whatſoeuer is in this treatiſe too much or too little, or otherwiſe vnperfect, I take leaue, and ſo end.

A letter written from M. Thomas Aldworth merchant, and then Maior of the citie of Briſtow, to the right hononrable Sir Francis Walſingham principall Secretarie to her Maieſtie, concerning a Weſterne voiage intended for diſcoueries in America.

RIght honourable, vpon the receit of your letters directed vnto mee and deliuered by the bearers hereof M. Richard Hakluyt and M. Stecuenton, bearing date the 11. of March, I preſently conferred with my friends in priuate, whom I know moſt affectionate to this godly enterpriſe, eſpecially with M. William Salterne deputie of our companie of merchants: whereupon my ſelfe being as then ſicke, with as conuenient ſpeed as he could, he cauſed an aſſemblie of the merchants to be gathered, where after dutifull mention of your honourable diſpoſition for the benefite of this citie, he by my appointment cauſed your letters being directed vnto me priuatly, to be read in publike, & after ſome good light giuen by M. Hakluyt vnto thē that were ignorant of the country and enterpriſe, and were deſirous to be reſolued, the motion grew generally ſo well to bee liked, that there was eſtſoones ſet down by mens owne hands then preſent, and apparantly knowen by their owne ſpeach, and very willing offer, the ſumme of 1000. markes and vpward: which ſumme if it ſhould not ſuffice, we doubt not but otherwiſe to furniſh out for this Weſterne diſcouerie, a ſhip of three ſcore, and a barke of 40. tunne, to be left in the countrey vnder the direction and gouernment of your ſonne in law M. Carlile, of whom we haue heard much good, if it ſhal ſtand with your honours good liking and his acceptation. In one of which barks we are alſo willing to haue maſter Stecuenton your honors meſſenger, and one well knowen to vs, as captaine. And here in humble maner, deſiring your honor to vouchſafe vs of your further direction by a general letter to my ſelfe, my brethren, and the reſt of the merchants of this citie, at your honors beſt and moſt conuenient leiſure, becauſe we meane not to deferre the finall proceeding in this voiage, any further then to the end of Aprill next comming, I ceaſe, beſeeching God long to bleſſe and proſper your honourable eſtate. Briſtow. March 27. 1583.

A briefe and ſummarie diſcourſe vpon the intended voyage to the hithermoſt parts of America: written by captaine Carlill in Aprill, 1583. for the better inducement to ſatiſfie ſuch Merchants of the Moſcouian companie and others, as in diſburſing their money towards the furniture of the preſent charge, doe demaund forthwith a preſent returne of gaine, albeit their ſaid particular diſburſements are required but in very ſlender ſummes, the higheſt being 25. li. the ſecond at 12. li. 10. s. and the loweſt at 6. pound fiue ſhillings.

WHen the Goldſmith deſireth to finde the certaine goodneſſe of a peece of gold, which is newly offered vnto him, he preſently bringeth the ſame to the Touchſtone, where, by comparing the ſhew or touch of this new piece with the touch or ſhew of that which he knoweth of old, he ſoonest with is able to iudge what the value is of that, which is newly offered vnto him. After the example whereof I haue thought it good to make ſome briefe repetition of the particular eſtate of many other forren voiages and trades already frequented and knowen vnto vs, whereby you may be the better able to conceiue and iudge what certaine likelyhood of good there is to be expected in the voiage, which is preſently recommended vnto your knowledge and reſolution.

And

Moscouie. And first to lay downe that of Moscouia, whose beginning is yet in the remembrance of many: It is well knowen, that what by the charges of the first discouerie, and by the great gifts bestowed on the Emperour and his Nobilitie, together with the lewd dealing of some of their seruaunts, who thought themselues safe enough from orderly punishment, it cost the companie aboue foure score thousand pounds, before it could bee brought to any profitable reckoning. And now that after so long a patience and so great a burthen of expences, the same began to frame to some good course and commoditie: It falleth to very ticklish termes, and to as slender likelyhood of any further goodnesse as any other trade that may be named.

For first the estate of those countreys and the Emperours dealings, are things more fickle then are by euery body vnderstood.

Dutchmen. Next, the Dutchmē are there so crept in, as they daily augment their trade thither, which may well confirme that vncertaintie of the Emperors disposition to keepe promise with our nation.

Thirdly, the qualitie of the voiage, such as may not be performed but once the yeere.

Fourthly, the charges of all Ambassadours betweene that Prince and her Maiestie, are alwayes borne by the merchants stocke.

Denmarke. And lastly, the danger of the king of Denmarke, who besides that presently he is like to enforce a tribute on vs, hath likewise an aduantage vpon the ships in their voiage, either homewards or outwards whensoeuer he listeth to take the opportunitie.

Easterlings. The badde dealings of the Easterlings are sufficiently knowen to bee such towards our merchaunts of that trade, as they doe not onely offer them manie iniuries ouerlong to bee written, but doe seeke all the meanes they can, to deprriue them wholy of their occupying that way: and to the same purpose haue of late cleane debarred them their accustomed and auncient priuiledges in all their great townes.

Turkie. The traffique into Turkie, besides that by some it is thought a hard point to haue so much familiaritie with the professed and obstinate enemie of Christ: It is likewise a voyage which can not be made but at the deuotion, and as it were in the daunger of many states, who for sundry respects are apt to quarell with vs vpon sudden occasions, and the presents to be giuen away in Turkie this yeere, cost little lesse then two thousand pounds.

Tenant. As for the trades into all the partes of Italie, it may easilie be considered by euery one of iudgement, that the same stande in the like termes touching the passages, as that of Turkie, and that many times our Shippes being taken in the way by the Gallies of Barbarie, our poore Mariners after the losse of their goods and trauell, are set at such excessiue raunsomes before they can bee freed of their slauerie, as for the most part they are no way able to discharge. As for example, at this instant there are some prisoners, poore ordinarie Mariners, for whose releasing there must bee paied two hundred Duckets the man, for some three hundred, yea, foure or fiue hundred Duckets the man for some of them. And how enuiously they doe alreadie oppose themselues against our frequenting into their partes, may appeare by the late customs which they haue imposed as well vpon our English merchandize which we bring them, as also vpon such their merchandize which we fetch from them.

Barbarie. The trade into Barbarie groweth likewise to worse termes then before times, and when it was at the best, our merchants haue bene in danger of all their goods they had there, whensoeuer it happened the king to die. For vntill a new were chosen, the libertie of all disordered persons is such, as they spoile and wrong whom they list, without any redresse at all.

Spaine. Portingall. Touching Spaine and Portingall, with whom we haue very great trade, and much the greater, by means of their venting a good part of our wares into their Indies, as also of the prouision they haue from the same, where with are made many of our returnes from them againe: It falleth out that twise the yeere ordinarily we send our Fleetes into those parts: So that whensoeuer the king of Spaine listeth to take the opportunitie, hee may at these seasons deprriue vs not onely of a great number of our very good ships, but also of our honestest and ablest sort of Mariners that are to bee found in our whole Realme agayne, which is a matter of no small consequence: for it is to be noted, that when hee shall take a quarell in hand, though it bee but his owne particularly, yet hath he the meanes to put in hazard as well those our shippes which are in his owne Countries of Spaine and Portingall, as also all others which shall be bound to any the partes of all Italie or of Turkie either. And further whosoeuer hee bee that is but so meanely affected in Religion, as of necessitie becommeth euery ordinarie man and good Christian to be, cannot but be agrieued in his heart to consider, that his children and seruaunts whom hee desireth to haue well brought vp, are in these trades of Spaine and Portingall, and all Italie, forced to denie their owne profession, and made to acquaint themselues with that which the Parents and Masters doe vtterlie denie and refuse, yea which many of them doe in their owne hearts abhorre as a detestable and most wicked doctrine.

But who shall looke into the qualitie of this voyage, being directed to the latitude of fortie degrees or thereaboutes, of that hithermost part of America, shall find it hath as many points of good moment belonging vnto it, as may almost be wished for.

1 As first it is to be vnderstood, that it is not any long course, for it may be performed too and fro in foure moneths after the first discouerie thereof. Commodities of this voyage in shortnesse.

2 Secondly, that one wind sufficeth to make the passage, where as most of your other voyages of like length, are subiect to 3. or 4. windes.

3 Thirdly, that it is to be performed at all times of the yeere.

4 Fourthly, that the passage is vpon the high sea, whereby you are not bound to the knowledge of dangers, on any other coast, more then of that countrey, and of ours here at home.

5 Fiftly, that those partes of England and Ireland, which lie aptest for the proceeding outward or homeward vpon this voyage, are very well stored of goodly harbors.

6 Sixtly, that it is to be accounted of no danger at all as touching ỳ power of any forren prince or state, when it is compared with any the best of all the other voiages before recited.

7 And to the godly minded, it hath this comfortable commoditie, that in this trade their Factours, bee they their seruauntes or children, shall haue no instruction or confessions of Idolatrous Religion enforced vpon them, but contrarily shall bee at their free libertie of conscience, and shall finde the same Religion exercised, which is most agreeable vnto their Parentes and Masters.

As for the merchaundising, which is the matter especially looked for, albeit, that for the present, wee are not certainely able to promise any such like quantitie, as is now at the best time of the Moscouian trade brought from thence: So likewise is there not demaunded any such proportion of daily expences, as was at the first, and as yet is consumed in that of Moscouia and other. Commodities of the country more then those of Moscouie.

But when this of America shall haue bene haunted and practised thirtie yeeres to an ende, as the other hath bene, I doubt not by Gods grace, that for the tenne shippes that are now commonly employed once the yeere into Moscouia, there shall in this voyage twise tenne be imployed well, twise the yeere at the least. And if for the present time there doe fall out nothing els to bee found then the bare Fishing, yet doubt I not after the first yeeres planting, but by that matter onely to serue halfe a dozen of your best sort of ships, although my supply of people doe not follow me so substantially, as in all reason may be well looked for.

But when it is asked what may bee hoped from thence after some yeeres, it is first to bee considered, that this situation in fourtie degrees, shall bee very apte to gather the commodities either of those partes which stande to the Southward of it, as also of those which are to the Northward. The generall merchandise.

In the Northerlie may bee expected not onely an especiall good Fishing for Salmon, Codde, and Whales, but also any other such commodities, as the Easterne countreys doe yeeld vs nowe: as Pitche, Tarre, Hempe, and thereof Cordage, Maskes, Lolhe hides, riche Furres, and other such like, without beyng in any sort beholding to a king of Denmarke, or other prince or state that shall be in such sort able to commaund our ships at their pleasure, as those doe at this day, by meanes of their straight passages and strong shipping.

As for those partes which lie West and to the Southwardes, it may well bee hoped they will yeeld Wines with a small helpe, since the grapes doe growe there of themselues alreadie very faire and in great aboundaunce. Olives beyng once planted, will yeeld the like Oyle as Spaine, Prouince and Italie. The countrey people beyng made to know, that for Ware and honie, we will giue them such trifling things as they desire of vs, and shewing them once the meanes how to prouide the same, the labour thereof beyng so light, no doubt but in short time they will earnestly care to haue the same in good quantitie for vs. Besides, what great likelyhood there is of good meanes to make Salte, which may serue for the fishing of those partes, may well enough appeare vnto them, who can iudge the qualitie of such places as are required to make the same in. A lake of salt in Vaignes this voyage.

Thus much for the beginning because they may bee had with an easie kind of trauell, but when it may haue pleased God to establish our people there any such time as they may haue planted amongst them in sundrie partes of the Countrey, and that by gentle and familiar entreating them, they bee made to see what is better for them then they doe as yet vnderstand of, and that in so many sortes of occasions as were infinite to bee set downe. It is to bee assuredly hoped, that that they will daily by litle and litle forsake their barbarous and sauage liuing, and growe to such order and ciuilitie with vs, as there may bee well expected from thence no lesse quantitie and diuersitie of merchaundize then is now had out of Dutchland, Italie, Fraunce or Spaine. And as the bordering neighbours are commonly the apteſt to fall out with vs, so these partes being somewhat remote, are the liker to take, or giue lesse occasion of disquiet. But when it is considered that they are our owne kindred, and esteemed our owne countrey nation which haue the gouernment, meaning by those who shall be there planted, who can looke for any other then the dealing of most louing and most assured friends?

There are further to bee considered these two pointes of good importaunce, concerning the matter of trade. The one is, that by the good prospering of this action, there must of necessitie fall out, a very liberall vtteraunce of our English Clothes into a maine Countrey, described to bee bigger then all Europe, the larger part whereof bending to the Northward, shall haue wonderfull great vse of our sayde English Clothes, after they shall once come to knowe the commoditie thereof. The like will be also of many other things, ouermany to bee reckoned, which are made here by our Artificers and labouring people, and of necessitie must bee prouided from hence.

The other is, if there bee any possible meanes to finde a Sea passage or other Fresh water course, which may serue in some reasonable and conuenient sort, to transport our merchandize into the East Indian Sea, though any of these Northerly partes of America, it shall be soonest and most assuredly performed by these who shall inhabite and first growe into familiaritie with the Inland people.

What Minerall matter may fall out to bee found, is a thing left in suspence, vntill some better knowledge, because there bee many men, who hauing long since expected some profites herein, vpon the great promises that haue bene made them, and beyng as yet in no point satisfied, doe thereupon conceiue that they bee but woordes purposely cast out for the inducing of men to bee the more readie and willing to furnish their money towardes the charge of the first discouerie.

But nowe to answere some others who begin with an other obiection, saying: That it is not for the merchaunts purse to continue the charges of transporting and planting: and that since these hundred men which are now to bee planted, will cost foure thousand pound: It is then to bee thought, that the charge of a farre greater number, will bee also a farre greater summe of money.

Wherevnto I answere, that in all attempts vnknowen, especially such a one as is this, wherewith wee are presently in hande, the first charges are commonly aduentured in more desperate kinde, then those that follow vpon some better knowledge: and therewith it falleth out, that whereas one aduentureth in the first enterprise, an hundred for that one will of themselues bee willing and desirous to aduenture in the next, if there bee neuer so litle more apparance, that the entended matter is by some knowledge of our owne, found true in some points of our first presumption.

The ewer of mettall brought by M. Frobisher, caused two seuerall supplies, the two yeeres next following, whereof the latter was of fourteene tall ships.

The examples are many, and may easily be remembred by those who bee merchants, euen in their ordinarie and daily trades, as well as in extraordinarie attempts, which of late yeeres haue fallen into those termes of some likelyhood, as is aboue sayde. So then no doubt, but when certaine reportes shall be brought by them who directly come from thence, that such a Countrey and people they haue themselues seene, as is by vs spoken of, but that then there will come forward a greater number of those, who now neither haue heard any thing of the matter, as also of others, who presently make such friuolous scruple, and will not otherwise be satisfied, then by the report of Saint Thomas. I speake not this by the merchaunts whom for their freedomes of trade I would not haue pressed to any further charge then this first preparation, but rather by such as haue great affection to hazard the changing of their estates, and would be well content to goe in the voyage if they might onely be assured that there is such a countrey, and that their mony should not be wasted to nothing in the preparations.

The right examination of this point must bee the contrary sequell of the common Prouerbe that is vsed, Nothing venture, nothing haue: so on the other side by venturing, many great good profites are found out, to the wonderfull benefite of the Common weale, and to those especiallie in priuate, who take on the hazarde of their life and trauell, or substaunce in the first attempts: and therefore I would wishe that they, who (God bee thanked) are well able to spare that which is required of eache one towardes the vndertakyng of this aduenture, bee well content and willing to employe the same, since the sequell in good and substanciall reason doth promise, not onely a great commoditie in particuler to the marchant, who shall here at home exercise the trade of Marchandise: but also to an infinite nomber of other, who presently liue in poore estate, and may by taking the opportunitie of this discouerie, alter the same to a farre better degree. Wherefore to make some conclusion vpon this point of the Marchants misdoubt, who suspecteth least this first disburssement, without returne of present gaine, should not be all his charge, but that afterwardes hee might yet further be vrged to continue the like againe, as hath happened in the discouerie of the Moscouian trade: It may suffice to consider, that this is not an action, which concerneth onely the Marchants particulerly, but a great deale more the generall sort of people throughout all England: And that when such relation shall bee returned, as that it may be founde a matter worthy the following, the whole generalitie will not refuse to contribute towards the furtherance thereof, rather then it should sticke, for want of any reasonable supply.

But as it is a very little time, since I haue bene throughly resolued, to trie my fortune in the matter, so is it more then time, the preparation were in hande already, and therefore no fitte time nowe, to make any nomber of ignorant men to vnderstande with reason, the circumstance that belongeth to a matter of so great consideration and importance.

To those who haue any forwarde mindes in well doing to the generalitie of mankinde, I say this much more, that Christian charitie doeth as greatly perswade the furtherance of this action, as any other that may bee layed before vs, in as much as thereby, wee shall not onely doe a most excellent worke, in respect of reducing the sauage people to Christianitie and ciuilitie, but also in respect of our poore sort of people, which are very many amongst vs, liuing altogether vnprofitable, and often times to the great disquiet of the better sort. For who knoweth not, howe by the long peace, happie health, and blessed plentifulnesse, wherewith God hath endued this Realme, that the people is so mightily encreased, as a great nomber being brought vp, during their youth in their parents houses, without any instruction howe to get their liuings, after their parents decease, are driuen to some necessitie, whereby very often, for want of better education they fall into sundry disorders, and so the good sort of people, as I sayde before, are by them ordinarily troubled, and themselues leadde on, to one shamefull ende or other, whereas if there might bee founde some such kinde of implopment, as this woulde bee, no doubt but a greater part of them would bee withholde, from falling into such vile deedes: and in steade thereof, proue greatly seruiceable in those affaires, where they might be so imploped.

This I speake of mine owne experience, hauing seene diuers come ouer to the warres of the lowe Countreis, during my residence in the same, who here had bene very euill and idle liuers, and by some litle continuance with vs, haue growen to be very industrious in their faculties, which I can assure you, was a more painefull maner of liuing, then in this action is like to fall out, and withall to a purpose of farre lesse valew, in respect of their particuler recompence, then with an assured kinde of good hope is looked for in this.

Thus you see in euery point, that may bee wished for, in a good action and voyage, there is matter and reason enough to satisfie the well disposed. But nowe to growe somewhat neere the quicke, and to shewe you some greater apparaunce, then hath bene yet spoken of touching the trade which is the onely subiect wherewith I doe meane to entermeddle at this time, because my addresse hereby is chiefly to men of such like faculties: you may vnderstande by that which followeth, the circumstance of a little discourse, which doeth concerne these matters very directly.

In the yeere 1534. Iames Carthier of S. Malo, made his first discouerie of those partes of America, which lye to the Westwardes, and as it were on the backe side of Newfoundland. In which voyage his principall intention was to seeke out the passage, which hee presumed might haue bene founde out, into the East Indian sea, otherwise called the passage to Cathayo, but this yere he went no higher then the Islande of the Assumption in the great bay of S. Laurence, and so returned backe into Fraunce.

The next yeere following hee went with greater prouision into the Grand bay againe, where hee keeping the Northerly shoare, ranne vp the great Riuer that comes downe from Canada and other places, vntill at last with his small pinnasses, (hauing left his great shipping by the way, hee arriued at Hochelaga towne, being three hundreth leagues within the entrance of the Grand bay. In which trauaile hee had spent so much of the yeere, that it was nowe the moneth of October, and therefore thought it conuenient, for the better enfourming himselfe at large in this discouerie, to Winter it out in those partes, which hee did at a place called by himselfe Holy Crosse. This Winter fell out to be a very long and hard winter, as many times the like happeneth with vs in these partes, and the sauage people, who for the most part make but a slender kinde of prouision, euen as it were from hande to mouth fell into some scarcitie of victuals; yet did they not refuse to serue the Frenchmen, with any thing they had all the Winter long, albeit at somewhat higher prices towardes the ende, when the neede was most, as with our selues the like happeneth at such times.

But when the French had had their wantes serued all the yeere, and that as yet they sawe not any apparance of their entended matter, which was the discouerie of the passage, & yet imagining by the signes wherewith the willing people, endeuoured to declare their knowledge in that point, that some good matter might bee had from them, if they might haue bene well vnderstoode, they resolued with themselues, to take some of the sufficientest men of that Countrey home into Fraunce, and there to keepe them so long, as that hauing once atchieued the Frenche tongue, they might declare more substantially their minde, and knowledge in the sayde passage, concluding this to be the meane of least charge, of least trauaile, and of least hazard.

And when they came to bethinke themselues, who might bee meetest for it, they determined to take the King, as the person who might be best enfourmed of such partes, as were somewhat remote from his owne Countrey, as also that for the respect of him, the people would bee alwayes readie, and content to doe them any further seruice, when it should happen them to returne thither againe about the discouerie.

Thus the poore king of the Countrey, with two or three others of his chiefe companions comming aboarde the Frenche shippes, being required thither to a banquet, was traiterously caried away into France, where hee liued foure yeeres, and then died a Christian there, as Theuet the French kings Cosmographer doeth make mention. This outrage and iniurious dealing, did put the whole Countrey people into such dislike with the French, as neuer since they would admit any conuersation, or familiaritie with them, vntill of late yeeres, the olde matter beginning to
The yeere 1581. growe out of minde, and being the rather drawen on by giftes of many trifling thinges, which were of great value with them, they are (as I saide) within these two or three yeeres content againe to admit a trafique, which two yeeres since, was begonne with a small barke of thirtie tunnes, whose returne was founde so profitable, as the next yeere following, being the last yeere, by those Marchants, who meant to haue kept the trade secret vnto themselues, from any others of their owne Countrey men, there was hired a shippe of foure score tunnes out of the Isle of Iersey, but not any one Mariner of that place, sauing a shipboy. This shippe made her returne in such sort, as that this yeere they haue multiplied three shippes, to wit, one of nine score tunnes, an other of an hundreth tunnes, and a thirde of foure score tunnes: which report is giuen by very substantiall and honest men of Plimmouth, who sawe the saide shippes in readinesse to depart on their voyage, and were aboord of some of them.

Here is at this instant in the towne a man of Gernesey, Lewis de Vicke, who reporteth to haue credibly heard, that by this last yeeres voyage the Frenchmen gotte foureteene or fifteene hundreth for euery one hundreth: But howe soeuer it be, it carieth good likelyhoode of some notable profite, in asmuch as they doe so greatly, and thus suddenly encrease the burthen and nomber of their shippes this present yeere.

Nowe, if in so litle as two yeeres times this voyage of the Northerne partes bee growne to such good passe as hath bene declared vnto you: it is worth the thinking on to consider what may be hoped for, from the Southerne part: which in all reason may promise a great deale more. And so as one who was neuer touched with any indirect meaning, I presume to wish and perswade you to some better taking of this matter to heart, as a thing which I doe verely thinke will turne to your greater and more assured commoditie, then you receiue by any other voyage, as yet frequented of so short and safe a course as this hath: dealing herein no otherwise with you for your seuerall small summes, then I doe with my selfe, both for more of mine owne, then is required of any one of you: besides the hazard and trauaile of my person, and the totall imployment of my poore credite, which (I thanke God) hath hitherto passed cleare and vnspotted in matters of greater importance and difficultie, then is like to fall out in this betweene you and me.

Articles

Articles set downe by the Committies appointed in the behalfe of the Companie of Moscouian Marchants, to conferre with Master Carleil, vpon his entended discoueries and attempt into the hithermost partes of America.

The names of the Committies.

Master Alderman Hart.
Master Alderman Spencer.
Master Hoddesden.
Master William Burrough.
Master Slany.

Master Iohn Castelin.
Master Leake.

FIrst, the Committies are well perswaded that the Countrey whereunto this action pretendeth is very fruitfull, inhabited with sauage people of a milde and tractable disposition. And that of all other places which are vnfrequented at this day, it is the only most fitte and most commodious for vs to entermeddle withall.

The conuenientest maner of attempting this enterprise, is thought to bee thus: That there should be one hundreth men conueyed thither to remaine there one whole yere: who with friendly entreatie of the people, may enter into better knowledge of the particular estate of the Countrey, and thereby gather what commoditie may be hereafter, or presently looked for.

The charge to transport these hundreth men, to victuall them, and to furnish them of munition and other needefull things, will not be lesse then foure thousand poundes: whereof hath bene very readily offered by the Citie of Bristoll one thousande poundes, the residewe being three thousande pounds, remaineth to be furnished by this Citie of London: or any others who will aduenture their money in this first preparation.

The Committies thinke it conuenient that a priuiledge should be procured by Master Carleil from her Maiestie, by vertue whereof these conditions and Articles following, may be effectually prouided for.

First, that they who shall disburse their money for the first preparation, shall be named Aduenturers, and shall haue the one halfe of all such landes, territories, townes, mines of golde and siluer, and other mettals whatsoeuer, that shall be found, gotten, obtained, and conquered by this discouerie: yeelding to her Maiestie one fift part of all their part golde and siluer, as shall happen to be had out of any mines that so shall be found.

That those parties which doe employe themselues personally in the present discouerie, shall be named Enterprisers, and shall haue the other halfe of all the landes, territories, townes, mines of Golde and siluer, and other mettalles, yeelding to her Maiestie the fift part of the Golde and siluer, as the Aduenturers doe: The same to bee distributed by the Generall, with the consent of the greatest part of twelue discreete persons to bee chosen out of the whole nomber of Enterprisers.

Also, that all trade of marchandise which shall bee vsed to and from those partes, which by this discouerie shall be found out, shall appertaine onely to the Aduenturers which first shall disburse their money for this discouerie, with prohibition to all other her Maiesties subiects, and other Marchants to deale in the saide partes, without the consent of the first Aduenturers, vpon losse of shippe and goods, and punishment of their persons, that so shall aduenture in trade of marchandise: or otherwise by imprisonment at the Companies pleasure.

That no person shall hereafter aduenture in this discouerie, as Aduenturers for the profites mentioned in the first Articles, but such onely as doe disburse their money in this first preparation: and they shall not aduenture hereafter any greater summe, then ratably according to their proportion of this their first aduenture.

Alſo, the profite which by this diſcouerie ſhall be attained vnto, either by lande which may bee conquered, or otherwiſe gotten: as alſo ſuch profite which by this diſcouerie ſhall bee obtained by mines, or otherwiſe gotten, that eche one ſhall haue his part rate and rate like: according to the proportion of their firſt aduenture, and not otherwiſe.

The aduenturers in this firſt preparation, ſhall at their owne free will and libertie, choole whether they will ſupply hereafter any further charge or not: if there doe fall out any ſuch occaſion to require the ſame. And yet withall ſhall for euer holde to them the freedome of the trade, which ſhall growe in any of theſe partes: Notwithſtanding their ſaide refuſall to beare any further charge.

That in the Patent which is to be obtained, bee granted, that all her Maieſties ſubiects, may tranſport themſelues thither that ſhall be contented to goe. And that the patentee or his aſſignes may ſhippe thither from time to time, ſo many and ſuch perſons, men, women and children, as they ſhall thinke meete. And the ſame perſons to inhabite or remaine there at their pleaſure, any lawe to the contrary notwithſtanding, with expreſſe prohibition as is mentioned in the thirde article, againſt all others, which ſhall goe thither without the licence of the patentee or his aſſignes firſt obtained.

That it ſhall not be lawful for any of her Maieſties ſubiects, or any other to inhabite or trafique within two hundred leagues any way of the place, where the Generall ſhall haue ſettled his cheefeſt being or reſidence.

The letters patents, graunted by the Queenes Maieſtie to M. Walter Ralegh now knight, for the diſcouering and planting of new lands and Countreis, to continue the ſpace and time of 6. yeeres and no more.

ELizabeth by the grace of God of England, Fraunce and Ireland Queene, defender of the faith, &c. To all people to whome theſe preſents ſhall come, greeting. Knowe yee that of our eſpecial grace, certaine ſcience, and meere motion, we haue giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe giue and graunt to our truſtie and welbeloued ſeruant Walter Ralegh Eſquire, and to his heires and aſſignes for euer, free libertie and licence from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter, to diſcouer, ſearch, finde out, and viewe ſuch remote, heathen, and barbarous lands, Countreis, and territories, not actually poſſeſſed of any Chriſtian Prince, nor inhabited by Chriſtian people, as to him, his heires and aſſignes, and to euery or any of them ſhall ſeeme good, and the ſame to haue, holde, occupie and enioy to him, his heires and aſſignes for euer, with all prerogatiues, commodities, iuriſdictions, royalties, priuiledges, franchiſes, and preheminences, thereto or thereabouts both by ſea and land, whatſoeuer we by our letters patents may graunt, and as we or any of our noble progenitors haue heretofore graunted to any perſon or perſons, bodies politique or corporate: and the ſaid Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and all ſuch as from time to time, by licence of vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, ſhall goe or trauaile thither to inhabite or remaine, there to build and fortifie, at the diſcretion of the ſaide Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, the ſtatutes or acte of Parliament made againſt fugitiues, or againſt ſuch as ſhall depart, remaine or continue out of our Realme of England without licence, or any other ſtatute, acte, lawe, or any ordinance whatſoeuer to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

And we do likewiſe by theſe preſents, of our eſpecial grace, meere motion, and certaine knowledge, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, giue and graunt full authoritie, libertie and power to the ſaid Walter Ralegh, his heires and aſſignes, and euery of them, that he and they, and euery or any of them, ſhall and may at all and euery time, and times hereafter, haue, take, and leade in the ſaide voyage, and trauaile thitherward, or to inhabite there with him, or them, and euery or any of them, ſuch, and ſo many of our ſubiects as ſhall willingly accompanie him or them, and euery or any of them: and to whom alſo we doe by theſe preſents, giue full libertie and authoritie in that behalfe, and alſo to haue, take and employ, and vſe ſufficient ſhipping and furniture for the tranſportations, and Nauigations in that behalfe, ſo that none of the ſame perſons or any of them, be ſuch as hereafter ſhall be reſtrained by vs, our heires or ſucceſſors.

And further that the ſaide Walter Ralegh, his heires, and aſſignes, and euery of them, ſhall haue, haue, holde, occupie and enioye to him, his heires and assignes, and euery of them for euer, all the soile of all such landes, territories, and Countreis, so to bee discouered and possessed as aforesaide, and of all such Cities, castles, townes, villages, and places in the same, with the right, royalties, franchises, and iurisdictions, as well marine as other within the saide landes, or Countreis, or the seas thereunto adioyning, to be had, or vsed, with full power to dispose thereof, and of euery part in fee simple or otherwise, according to the order of the lawes of England, as neere as the same conueniently may bee, at his, and their will and pleasure, to any persons then being, or that shall remaine within the allegiance of vs, our heires, and successors: reseruing alwayes to vs, our heires, and successors, for all seruices, duties, and demaundes, the first part of all the oare of golde and siluer, that from time to time, and at all times after such discouerie, subduing and possessing, shalbe there gotten and obtained: All which landes, Countreis, and territories, shall for euer be holden of the said Walter Ralegh, his heires and assignes, of vs, our heires and successors, by homage, and by the said paiment of the said fift part, reserued onely for all seruices.

And moreouer, we doe by these presents, for vs, our heires and successors, giue and graunt licence to the said Walter Ralegh, his heires, and assignes, and euery of them, that he, and they, and euery or any of them, shall & may from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter, for his and their defence, encounter and expulse, repell and resist as well by sea as by lande, and by all other wayes whatsoeuer, all, and euery such person and persons whatsoeuer, as without the especiall liking and licence of the saide Walter Ralegh, and of his heires and assignes, shall attempt to inhabite within the said Countreis, or any of them, or within the space of two hundreth leagues neere to the place or places within such Countreis as aforesaid (if they shall not bee before planted or inhabited within the limits as aforesaide with the subiects of any Christian Prince being in amitie with vs) where the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires, or assignes, or any of them, or his, or their or any of their associats or company, shall within sixe yeeres (next ensuing) make their dwellings or abidings, or that shall enterprise or attempt at any time hereafter vnlawfully to annoy, either by sea or lande, the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires or assignes, or any of them, or his or their, or any of his or their companies: giuing, and graunting by these presents further power and authoritie, to the said Walter Ralegh, his heires and assignes, and euery of them from time to time, and at all times for euer hereafter, to take and surprise by all maner of meanes whatsoeuer, all and euery those person or persons, with their shippes, vessels, and other goods and furniture, which without the licence of the saide Walter Ralegh, or his heires, or assignes, as aforesaide, shalbe founde trafiquing into any harbour, or harbors, creeke, or creekes, within the limits aforesaide, (the subiects of our Realmes and Dominions, and all other persons in amitie with vs, trading to the Newfound lands for fishing as heretofore they haue commonly vsed, or being driuen by force of a tempest, or shipwracke onely excepted:) and those persons, and euery of them, with their shippes, vessels, goods, and furniture to detaine and possesse as of good and lawfull prize, according to the discretion of him the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires, and assignes, and euery, or any of them. And for vniting in more perfect league and amitie, of such Countreis, landes, and territories so to bee possessed and inhabited as aforesaide with our Realmes of Englande, and Ireland, and the better incouragement of men to these enterprises: we do by these presents, graunt and declare that all such Countreis, so hereafter to be possessed and inhabited as is aforesaide, from thencefoorth shall bee of the allegiance of vs, our heires and successours. And wee doe graunt to the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires, and assignes, and to all, and euery of them, and to all, and euery other person, and persons being of our allegiance, whose names shall bee noted or entred in some of our Courtes of recorde within our Realme of Englande, that with the assent of the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires or assignes, shall in his iourneis for discouerie, or in the iourneis for conquest, hereafter trauaile to such lands, countreis and territories, as aforesaide, and to their, and to euery of their heires, that they, and euery or any of them, being either borne within our saide Realmes of Englande, or Ireland, or in any other place within our allegiance, and which hereafter shall be inhabiting within any the lands, Countreis, and territories, with such licence, (as aforesaide) shall and may haue all the priuiledges of free Denizens, and persons natiue of England, and within our allegiance in such like ample maner and fourme, as if they were borne and personally resident within our said Realme of England, any lawe, custome, or vsage to the contrary notwithstanding.

And for asmuch as vpon the finding out, discouering, or inhabiting of such remote lands, countreis, & territories as aforesaid, it shalbe necessary for the safetie of al men, that shal aduenture themselues in those iourneis or voyages, to determine to liue together in Christian peace, & ciuil quietnes ech with other, wherby euery one may with more pleasure & profit enioy that whereunto they shall attaine with great paine and perill, we for vs, our heires and successors, are likewise pleased and contented, and by these presents do giue and graunt to the said Walter Ralegh, his heires and assignes for euer, that hee and they, and euery or any of them, shall and may from time to time for euer hereafter, within the said mentioned remote landes and Countreis in the way by the seas thither, and from thence, haue full and meere power and authoritie to correct, punish, pardon, gouerne, and rule by their and euery or any of their good discretions and pollicies, as well in causes capital, or criminall, as ciuil, both marine and other, all such our subiects as shall from time to time adventure themselues in the said iourneis or voyages, or that shall at any time hereafter inhabite any such landes, countreis, or territories as aforesaide, or that shall abide within 200. leagues of any of the saide place or places, where the saide Walter Raleigh, his heires or assignes, or any of them, or any of his or their associats or companies, shall inhabite within 6. yeeres next ensuing the date hereof, according to such statutes, lawes and ordinances, as shall bee by him the saide Walter Raleigh his heires and assignes, and euery or any of them deuised, or established, for the better gouernement of the said people as aforesaid. So alwayes as the said statutes, lawes, and ordinances may be as neere as conueniently may be, agreeable to the forme of the lawes, statutes, gouernement, or pollicie of England, and also so as they be not against the true Christian faith, now professed in the Church of England, nor in any wise to withdrawe any of the subiects or people of those landes or places from the allegiance of vs, our heires and successours, as their immediate Soueraigne vnder God.

And further, wee doe by these presents for vs, our heires and successors, giue and graunt full power and authoritie to our trustie and welbeloued counsailer sir William Cicill knight, Lorde Burghley, our high Treasourer of England, and to the Lorde Treasourer of England, for vs, our heires and successors for the time being, and to the priuie Counsell, of vs, our heires and successours, or any foure or more of them for the time being, that hee, they, or any foure or more of them, shall and may from time to time, and at all times hereafter, vnder his or their handes or seales by vertue of these presents, authorise and licence the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires and assignes, and euery or any of them by him, and by themselues, or by their, or any of their sufficient Atturneis, deputies, officers, ministers, factors, and seruants, to imbarke and transport out of our Realme of England and Ireland, and the Dominions thereof all, or any of his, or their goods, and all or any the goods of his and their associats and companies, and euery or any of them, with such other necessaries and commodities of any our Realmes, as to the saide Lorde Treasourer, or foure or more of the priuie Counsaile, of vs, our heires and successors for the time being (as aforesaide) shalbe from time to time by his or their wisdomes, or discretions thought meete and conuenient, for the better releefe and supportation of him the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires, and assignes, and euery or any of them, and of his or their or any of their associats and companies, any acte, statute, lawe, or other thing to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

Prouided alwayes, and our will and pleasure is, and wee doe hereby declare to all Christian kings, princes and states, that if the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires or assignes, or any of them, or any other by their licence or appointment, shall at any time or times hereafter, robbe or spoile by sea or by lande, or doe any acte of vniust or vnlawfull hostilitie, to any of the subiects of vs, our heires or successors, or to any of the subiects of any the Kings, Princes, Rulers, Gouernors, or estates, being then in perfect league and amitie with vs, our heires and successors, and that vpon such iniurie, or vpon iust complaint of any such Prince, Ruler, Gouernour or estate, or their subiects, wee, our heires and successours, shall make open proclamation within any the portes of our Realme of England, that the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires and assignes, and adherents, or any to whome these our letters patents may extende, shall within the termes to bee limited, by such proclamation, make full restitution, and satisfaction of all such iniuries done, So as both we and the said Princes, or other so complayning, may holde vs and themselues fully contented. And that if the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires and assignes, shall not make or cause to be made satisfaction accordingly, within such time so to bee limitted, that then it shall bee lawfull to vs, our heires and successors, to put the saide Walter Ralegh, his heires and assignes, and adherents, and all the inhabitants of the saide places to be discouered (as is aforesaide) or any of them out of our allegiance and protection, and that from and after such time of putting out of protection of the said Walter Ralegh, his heires, assignes and adherents, & others so to be put out, & the said places within their habitation, possession and rule, shalbe out of our allegeance and protection, and free for all Princes and others, to pursue with hostilitie, as being not our subiects, nor by vs any way to be auouched, maintained, or defended, nor to be holden as any of ours, nor to our protection, or dominion, or allegiance any way belonging, for that expresse mention of the cleere yeerely value of the certaintie of the premiſſes, or any part thereof, or of any other gift, or grant by vs, or any our progenitors, or predeceſſors to the ſaid Walter Ralegh, before this time made in theſe preſents be not expreſſed, or any other grant, ordinance, prouiſion, proclamation, or reſtraint to the contrarye thereof, before this time, giuen, ordained, or prouided, or any other thing, cauſe, or matter whatſoeuer, in any wiſe notwithſtanding. In witnes whereof, we haue cauſed theſe our letters to be made patents. Witneſſe our ſelues, at Weſtminſter the 25. day of March, in the ſixe and twentieth yeere of our Raigne.

The firſt voyage made to the coaſtes of America, with two barkes, wherein were Captaines Maſter Philip Amadas, and Maſter Arthur Barlowe, who diſcouered part of the Countrey, now called Virginia, Anno 1584: Written by one of the ſaid Captaines, and ſent to ſir Walter Raleigh, knight, at whoſe charge, and direction, the ſaid voyage was ſet foorth.

THe 27. day of Aprill, in the yeere of our redemption, 1584. we departed the weſt of England, with two barkes, well furniſhed with men and victuals, hauing receiued our laſt, and perfect directions by your letters, confirming the former inſtructions, and commandements deliuered by your ſelfe at our leauing the riuer of Thames. And I thinke it a matter both vnneceſſarie, for the manifeſt diſcouerie of the Countrey, as alſo for tediouſnes ſake, to remember vnto you the diurnall of our courſe, ſailing thither, and returning: onely I haue preſumed to preſent vnto you this briefe diſcourſe, by which you may iudge how profitable this land is likely to ſucceede, as well to your ſelfe, (by whoſe direction and charge, and by whoſe ſeruants this our diſcouerie hath beene performed) as alſo to her Highnes, and the Common wealth, in which we hope your wiſdome will be ſatiſfied, conſidering, that as much by vs hath bene brought to light, as by thoſe ſmall meanes, and number of men we had, could any way haue bene expected, or hoped for.

The tenth of May, we arriued at the Canaries, and the tenth of June in this preſent yeere, we were fallen with the Iſlands of the Weſt Indies, keeping a more ſoutheaſterly courſe then was needefull, becauſe we doubted that the current of the Baye of Mexico, diſbagging betweene the Cape of Florida, and the Hauana, had bene of greater force then afterwards we found it to be. At which Iſlands we found the aire very vnwholſome, and our men grewe for the moſt part ill diſpoſed: ſo that hauing refreſhed our ſelues with ſweete water, and freſh victuall, we departed the twelfth daye after our arriuall there. Theſe Iſlands, with the reſt adioyning, are ſo well knowen to your ſelfe, and to many others, as I will not trouble you, with the remembrance of them.

The ſecond of July, we found ſhole water, which ſmelt ſo ſweetely, and was ſo ſtrong a ſmell, as if we had bene in the midſt of ſome delicate garden, abounding with all kinde of odoriferous flowers, by which we were aſſured, that the land could not be farre diſtant: and keeping good watch, and bearing but ſlacke ſaile, the fourth of the ſame moneth, we arriued vpon the coaſt, which we ſuppoſed to be a continent, and firme lande, and wee ſailed along the ſame, a hundred and twentie Engliſh miles, before we could finde any entrance, or riuer, iſſuing into the Sea. The firſt that appeared vnto vs, we entred, though not without ſome difficultie, and caſt anker about three harquebuſhot within the hauens mouth, on the left hande of the ſame: and after thankes giuen to God for our ſafe arriuall thither, we manned our boates, and went to viewe the lande next adioyning, and to "take poſſeſſion of the ſame, in the right of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, as righefull Queene, and Princeſſe of the ſame, and after deliuered the ſame ouer to your vſe, according to her Maieſties grant, and letters patents, vnder her Highnes great Seale. Which being performed, according to the ceremonies vſed in ſuch enterpriſes, wee viewed the lande about vs, being whereas we firſt landed, very ſandie, and lowe towards the water ſide, but ſo full of grapes, as the very beating, and ſurge of the Sea ouerflowed them, of which we founde ſuch plentie, as well there, as in all places elſe, both on the ſande, and on the greene ſoile on the hils, as in the plaines, as well on euery little ſhrubbe, as alſo climing towardes the toppes of the high Cedars, that I thinke in all the world the like aboundance is not to be founde: and my ſelfe hauing ſeene thoſe partes of Europe that moſt abound, finde ſuch difference, as were incredible to be written.

" July. 13. poſſeſſions taken.

We

We passed from the Sea side, towardes the toppes of those hils next adioyning, being but of meane heigth, and from thence wee beheelde the Sea on both sides to the North, and to the South, finding no ende any of both waies. This lande laye stretching it selfe to the West, which after wee founde to be but an Iland of twentie leagues long, and not aboue sixe miles broade. Under the banke or hill, whereon we stoode, we beheelde the vallies replenished with goodly Cedar trees, and hauing discharged our harquebushot, such a flocke of Cranes (the most part white) arose vnder vs, with such a crye redoubled by many Ecchoes, as if an armie of men had shouted all together.

This Iland had many goodly woods, and full of Deere, Conies, Hares, and Fowle, euen in the middest of Summer, in incredible aboundance. The woods are not such as you finde in Bohemia, Moscouia, or Hyrcania, barren, and fruitlesse, but the highest, and reddest Cedars of the world, farre bettering the Cedars of the Açores, of the Indias, or of Lybanus, Pynes, Cypres, Sassaphras, the Lentisk, or the tree that beareth the Mastick, the tree that beareth the rinde of blacke Sinamon, of which Master Winter brought from the Streights of Magellane, and many other of excellent smell, and qualitie. We remained by the side of this Iland two whole daies, before we sawe any people of the Countrey: the third daye we espied one small boats rowing towards vs, hauing in it three persons: this boate came to the landes side, foure harquebushot from our shippes, and there two of the people remaining, the third came along the shoare side towards vs, and we being then all within boord, he walked vp and downe vppon the point of the lande next vnto vs: then the Master, and the Pilot of the Admirall, Simon Ferdinando, and the Captaine Philip Amadas, my selfe, and others, rowed to the lande, whose comming this fellowe attended, neuer making any shewe of feare, or doubt. And after he had spoken of many things not vnderstoode by vs, we brought him with his owne good liking, aboord the shippes, and gaue him a shirt, a hatte, and some other things, and made him taste of our wine, and our meate, which he liked very well: and after hauing viewed both barkes, he departed, and went to his owne boate againe, which hee had left in a little Coue, or Creeke adioyning: assoone as he was two bowe shoote into the water, hee fell to fishing, and in lesse then halfe an howre, hee had laden his boate as deepe, as it could swimme, with which he came againe to the point of the lande, and there he deuided his fishe into two partes, pointing one part to the shippe, and the other to the Pinnesse: which after he had (as much as he might,) requited the former benefits receaued, he departed out of our sight.

The next day there came vnto vs diuers boates, and in one of them the Kings brother, accompanied with foortie or fiftie men, very handsome, and goodly people, and in their behauiour as mannerly, and ciuill, as any of Europe. His name was Granganimeo, and the King is called Wingina, the Countrey Wingandacoa, (and nowe by her Maiestie, Virginia,) the manner of his comming was in this sorte: hee left his boates altogether, as the first man did a little from the shippes by the shoare, and came along to the place ouer against the shippes, followed with foortie men. When hee came to the place, his seruants spread a long matte vppon the grounde, on which he sate downe, and at the other ende of the matte, foure others of his companie did the like: the rest of his men stoode round about him, somewhat a farre off: when wee came to the shoare to him with our weapons, he neuer mooued from his place, nor any of the other foure, nor neuer mistrusted any harme to be offered from vs, but sitting still, he beckoned vs to come, and sitte by him, which wee performed: and beeing sette, hee makes all signes of ioy, and welcome, striking on his head, and his breast, and afterwardes on ours, to shewe we were all one, smiling, and making shewe the best hee could, of all loue, and familiaritie. After hee had made a long speech vnto vs, wee presented him with diuers thinges, which hee receaued very ioyfully, and thankefully. None of his companye durst to speake one worde all the tyme: onely the foure which were at the other ende, spake one in the others eare very softly.

The King is greatly obeyed, and his brothers, and children reuerenced: the King himselfe in person was at our beeing there sore wounded, in a fight which he had with the King of the next Countrey, called Wingina, and was shotte in two places through the bodye, and once cleane thorough the thigh, but yet he recouered: by reason whereof, and for that hee laye at the chiefe Towne of the Countrey, beeing sixe dayes iourneye off, wee sawe him not at all.

After wee had presented this his brother, with such things as we thought he liked, we likewise gaue somewhat to the other that sate with him on the matte: but presently he arose, and tooke all from them, and put it into his owne basket, making signes and tokens, that all all things ought to be deliuered vnto him, and the reſt were but his ſeruants, and followers. A daye or two after this, we fell to trading with them, exchanging ſome thinges that we had for Chammoys, Buffe, and Deere ſkinnes: when we ſhewed him all our packet of merchandize, of all things that he ſaw, a bright tinne diſhe moſt pleaſed him, which he preſently tooke vp, & clapt it before his breaſt, & after made a hole in the brimme thereof, & hung it about his necke, making ſignes, that it would defende him againſt his enemies arrowes: for thoſe people maintaine a deadlie and terrible warre, with the people and King adioyning. We exchanged our tinne diſhe for twentie ſkinnes, worth twentie Crownes, or twentie Nobles: and a copper kettle for fiftie ſkinnes, worth fiftie Crownes. They offered vs very good exchange for our hatchets, and axes, and for knives, and would haue giuen any thing for ſwordes: but we would not depart with any. After two or three daies, the Kings brother came aboord the ſhippes, and dranke wine, and ate of our meate, and of our bread, and liked exceedingly thereof: and after a few daies ouerpaſſed, he brought his wife with him to the ſhippes, his daughter, and two or three little children: his wife was very well fauoured, of meane ſtature, and very bashfull: ſhe had on her backe a long cloke of leather, with the furre ſide next to her bodie, and before her a peece of the ſame: about her forehead, ſhe had a broad bande of white Coxrall, and ſo had her huſband many times: in her eares ſhe had bracelets of pearles, hanging downe to her middle, (whereof we deliuered your Worſhip a little bracelet) and thoſe were of the bignes of good peaſe. The reſt of her women of the better ſorte, had pendants of copper, hanging in euery eare, and ſome of the children of the Kings brother, and other Noble men, haue fiue or ſixe in euery eare: he himſelfe had vpon his head, a broad plate of golde, or copper, for being vnpoliſhed, we knew not what mettall it ſhould be, neither would he by any meanes ſuffer vs to take it off his head, but feeling it, it would bowe very eaſily. His apparell was as his wiues, onely the women weare their haire long on both ſides, and the men but on one. They are of colour yellowiſh, and their haire blacke for the moſt, and yet we ſawe children that had very fine aburne, and cheſtnut colour haire.

After that theſe women had bene there, there came downe from all parts great ſtore of people, bringing with them leather, coxrall, diuers kindes of dies very excellent, and exchanged with vs: but when Granganimeo, the kings brother was preſent, none durſt to trade but himſelfe, except ſuch as weare redde peeces of copper on their heades, like himſelfe: for that is the difference betweene the Noble men, and Gouernours of Countries, and the meaner ſort. And we both noted there, and you haue vnderſtood ſince by theſe men, which we brought home, that no people in the worlde carry more reſpect to their King, Nobilitie, and Gouernours, then theſe doe. The Kings brothers wife, when ſhe came to vs, as ſhe did many times, ſhee was followed with fortie or fiftie women alwaies: and when ſhe came into the ſhippe, ſhe left them all on lande, ſauing her two daughters, her nurce, and one or two more. The Kings brother alwaies kept this order, as many boates as he would come withall to the ſhippes, ſo many fires would he make on the ſhoare a farre off, to the ende wee might vnderſtand with what ſtrength, and companie he approched. Their boates are made of one tree, either of Pine, or of Pitch trees: a wood not commonly knowen to our people, nor found growing in England. They haue no edge tooles to make them withall: if they haue any, they are very fewe, and thoſe it ſeemes they had twentie yeeres ſince, which as thoſe two men declared, was out of a wracke which happened vpon their coaſt of ſome Chriſtian ſhippe, being beaten that way by ſome ſtorme, and outragious weather, whereof none of the people were ſaued, but onely the ſhippe, or ſome part of her, being caſt vpon the lande, out of whoſe ſides they drewe the nailes, and ſpikes, and with thoſe they made their beſt inſtrumentes. Their manner of making their boates, is this: they burne downe ſome great tree, or take ſuch as are winde fallen, and putting myrrhe, and roſen vpon one ſide thereof, they ſette fire into it, and when it hath burnt it hollowe, they cutte out the coale with their ſhels, and euer where they would burne it deeper or wider, they laye on their gummes, which burneth away the timber, and by this meanes they faſhion very fine boates, and ſuch as will tranſport twentie men. Their oares are like ſcoopes, and many times they ſette with long poles, as the depth ſerueth.

The Kings brother had great liking of our armour, a ſworde, and diuers other things, which we had: and offered to laye a great baye of pearle in gage for them: but wee refuſed it for this time, becauſe we would not make them knowe, that wee eſteemed thereof, vntill we had vnderſtoode in what places of the Countrey the pearle grewe: which nowe your Worſhippe doth very well vnderſtand.

He was very iuſt of his promiſe: for many times wee deliuered him merchandize vppon his worde, but euer he came within the daye, and performed his promiſe. Hee ſent vs euery daye a braſe or two of fatte Buckes, Conies, Hares, Fiſhe, the beſt of the worlde. Hee ſent vs diuers kindes of fruites, Melons, Walnuts, Cucumbers, Gourdes, Peale, and diuers rootes, and fruites very excellent good, and of their Countrey corne, which is very white, faire, and well tasted, and groweth three times in fiue moneths: in May they sowe, in July they reape: in June they sowe, in August they reape: in July they sowe, in September they reape: onely they cast the corne into the ground, breaking a little of the soft turfe with a woodden mattocke, or pickeaxe: our selues prooued the soile, and put some of our Peake into the ground, and in tenne daies they were of fourteene ynches high: they haue also Beanes very faire, of diuers colours, and wonderfull plentie: some growing naturally, and some in their gardens, and so haue they both wheat and oates.

The soile is the most plentifull, sweete, fruitfull, and wholsome of all the world: there are aboue fourteene seuerall sweete smelling timber trees, and the most part of their vnderwoods are Bayes, and such like: they haue those Okes that we haue, but farre greater, and better. After they had bene diuers times aboord our shippes, my selfe, with seuen more, went twentie mile into the Riuer, that runneth toward the Citie of Skicoake, which Riuer they call Occam: and the euening following, we came to an Iland, which they call Roanoak, distant from the harbour by which we entred, seuen leagues: and at the North ende thereof, was a village of nine houses, built of Cedar, and fortified round about with sharpe trees, to keepe out their enemies, and the entrance into it made like a turne pike very artificially: when we came towards it, standing neere vnto the waters side, the wife of Grangyno, the Kings brother, came running out to meete vs very cheerefully, and friendly, her husband was not then in the village: some of her people she commanded to drawe our boate on the shoare, for the beating of the billoe: others shee appointed to carry vs on their backes to the dry ground, and others to bring our oares into the house, for feare of stealing. When we were come into the vtter roome, hauing fiue roomes in her house, she caused vs to sitte downe by a great fire, and after tooke off our clothes, and washed them, and dried them againe: some of the women pulled off our stockings, and washed them, some washed our feete in warme water, and shee her selfe tooke great paines to see all thinges ordered in the best manner shee coulde, making great haste to dresse some meate for vs to eate.

After we had thus dried our selues, shee brought vs into the inner roome, where shee set on the boord standing along the house, some wheate like furmentie, sodden Venison, and roasted, fishe sodden, boyled, and roasted, Melons rawe, and sodden, rootes of diuers kindes, and diuers fruites: their drinke is commonly water, but while the grape lasteth, they drinke wine, and for want of caskes to keepe it all the yeere after, they drinke water, but it is sodden with Ginger in it, and blacke Sinamon, and sometimes Sassaphras, and diuers other wholesome, and medicinable hearbes and trees. We were entertained with all loue, and kindnes, and with as much bountie, after their manner, as they could possibly deuise. Wee found the people most gentle, louing, and faithfull, void of all guile, and treason, and such as liued after the manner of the golden age. The earth bringeth foorth all things in aboundance, as in the first creation, without toile or labour. The people onely care to defend them selues from the cold, in their short winter, and to feede themselues with such meate as the soile affoordeth: their meate is very well sodden, and they make broth very sweete, and sauorie: their vessels are earthen pots, very large, white, and sweete: their dishes are woodden platters of sweete timber: within the place where they feede, was their lodging, and within that their Idoll, which they worship, of which they speake vncredible things. While we were at meate, there came in at the gates, two or three men with their bowes, and arrowes, from hunting, whome when we espied, we beganne to looke one towardes another, and offered to reach our weapons: but assoone as she espied our mistrust, she was very much moued, and caused some of her men to runne out, and take away their bowes, and arrowes, and breake them, and withall beate the poore fellowes out of the gate againe. When we departed in the euening, and would not tarry all night, she was very sorie, and gaue vs into our boate our supper halfe dressed, pots, and all, and brought vs to our boates side, in which wee laye all night, remouing the same a prettie distance from the shoare: shee perceiuing our icalousie, was much grieued, and sent diuers men, and thirtie women, to sitte all night on the bankes side by vs, and sent vs into our boates fine mattes to couer vs from the rayne, vsing very many wordes to intreate vs to rest in their houses: but because wee were fewe men, and if wee had miscarried, the voyage had beene in very great daunger, wee durst not aduenture any thing, although there was no cause of doubt: for a more kinde, and louing people, there can not be found in the world, as farre as we haue hitherto had triall.

Beyonde this Iſlande, there is the maine lande, and ouer against this Iſlande falleth into this this spatious water, the great riuer called Occam, by the Inhabitants, on which standeth a Towne called Pemeoke, and sixe daies iourney further vpon the same is situate their greatest citie, called Schycoake, which this people affirme to be very great: but the Sauages were neuer at it, onely they speake of it, by the report of their Fathers, and other men, whome they haue heard affirme it, to be aboue one daies iourney about.

Into this riuer falleth another great riuer, called Cipo, in which there is found great store of the Muscels, in which there are pearles: likewise there descendeth into this Occam, another riuer, called Nomopana, on the one side whereof standeth a great Towne, called Chowanoake, and the Lord of that Towne and Countrey, is called Pooneno: this Pooneno is not subiect to the King of Wingandacoa, but is a free Lorde. Beyonde this Countrey, is there another King, whome they call Menatoan, and these three Kinges are in league with eache other. Towards the Sunne set, foure daies iourney, is situate a Towne called Sequotan, which is the Westermost Towne of Wingandacoa, neere vnto which, sixe and twentie yeeres past, there was a shippe cast away, whereof some of the people were saued, and those were white people, whom the Countrey people preserued.

And after ten daies, remaining in an out Iland vnhabited, called Wococan, they with the helpe of some of the dwellers of Sequotan, fastened two boates of the Countrey together, and made mastes vnto them, and sailes of their shirtes, and hauing taken into them such victuals as the Countrey yeelded, they departed after they had remained in this out Iland three weekes: but shortly after, it seemed they were cast away, for the boates were found vppon the coast, cast aland in another Iland adioyning: other then these, there was neuer any people apparelled, or white of colour, either seene, or heard of amongst these people, and these aforesaide were seene onely of the Inhabitants of Sequotan: which appeared to be very true, for they wondred meruelously when we were amongest them, at the whitenes of our skinnes, euer coueting to touch our breastes, and to view the same: besides they had our shippes in maruelous admiration, and all things els was so strange vnto them, as it appeared that none of them had euer seene the like. When we discharged any peece, were it but a harquebush, they would tremble thereat for very feare, and for the strangenes of the same: for the weapons which themselues vse, are bowes and arrowes: the arrowes are but of small canes, headed with a sharpe shell, or tooth of a fishe sufficient enough to kill a naked man. Their swordes are of wood hardened: likewise they vse woodden breastplates for their defense. They haue besides a kinde of clubbe, in the ende whereof they fasten the sharpe homes of a stagge, or other beast. When they goe to warres, they carry with them their Idoll, of whome they aske counsell, as the Romanes were woont of the Oracle of Apollo. They sing songes as they march towards the battell, in steede of drummes, and trumpets: their warres are very cruell, and bloodie, by reason whereof, and of their ciuill dissentions, which haue happened of late yeeres amongest them, the people are maruelously wasted, and in some places, the Countrey left desolate.

Adioyning vnto this Towne aforesaide, called Sequotan, beginneth a Countrey called Ponouike, belonging to another King, whome they call Piemacum, and this King is in league with the next King, adioyning towardes the setting of the Sunne, and the Countrey Neiosioke, situate vppon the side of a goodly Riuer, called Neus: these Kings haue mortall warre with Wingina, King of Wingandacoa, but about two yeeres past, there was a peace made betweene the King Piemacum, and the Lorde of Sequotan, as these men which we haue brought with vs into England, haue made vs vnderstande: but there remaineth a mortall malice in the Sequotanes, for many iniuries and slaughters done vppon them by this Piemacum. They inuited diuers men, and thirtie women, of the best of his Countrey, to their Towne to a feast: and when they were altogether merrie, and praying before their Idoll, which is nothing else, but a meere illusion of the Deuill: the Captaine or Lorde of the Towne came suddenly vpon them, and slewe them euery one, reseruing the women, and children: and these two haue oftentimes since perswaded vs to surprise Piemacum his Towne, hauing promised, and assured vs, that there will be founde in it great store of commodities. But whether their perswasion be to the ende they may be reuenged of their enemies, or for the loue they beare to vs, we leaue that to the triall hereafter.

Beyond this Iland, called Croonoake, are many Ilands, very plentifull of fruites, and other naturall increases, together with many Townes, and villages, along the side of the continent, some bounding vpon the Ilands, and some stretching vp further into the land.

When we first had sight of this Countrey, some thought the first lande we sawe, to be the continent: but after wee entred into the Hauen, wee sawe before vs another mightie long Sea: for there there lieth along the coast a tracte of Islands, two hundreth miles in length, adioyning to the Ocean sea, and betweene the Islands, two or three entrances: when you are entred betweene them (these Islands being very narrowe, for the most part, as in most places sixe miles broad, in some places lesse, in fewe more,) then there appeareth another great Sea, containing in breath in some places, fortie, and in some fiftie, in some twentie miles ouer, before you come vnto the continent: and in this inclosed Sea, there are about a hundreth Islands of diuers bignesses, whereof one is fifteene miles long, at which we were, finding it to be a most pleasant, and fertile ground, replenished with goodly Cedars, and diuers other sweete woods, full of Currans, of flaxe, and many other notable commodities, which we at that time had no leasure to view. Besides this Island, there are many, as I haue saide, some of two, of three, of foure, of fiue miles, some more, some lesse, most beautifull, and pleasant to behold, replenished with Deere, Conies, Hares, and diuers beastes, and about them the goodliest and best fishe in the world, and in greatest aboundance.

Thus Sir, we haue acquainted you with the particulars of our discouerie, made this present voyage, as farre forth, as the shortnes of the time we there continued, would afford vs to take view of: and so contenting our selues with this seruice at this time, which we hope hereafter to inlarge, as occasion and assistance shall be giuen, we resolued to leaue the Countrey, and to apply our selues to returne for England, which we did accordingly, and arriued safely in the West of England, about the middest of September.

And whereas we haue aboue certified you of the Countrey, taken in possession by vs, to her Maiesties vse, and so to yours, by her Maiesties grant, wee thought good for the better assurance thereof to recorde some of the particular Gentlemen, and men of accompt, who then were present, as witnesses of the same, that thereby all occasion of cauill to the title of the Countrey, in her Maiesties behalfe, may be preuented, which otherwise, such as like not the action may vse, and pretend, whose names are:

The voyage made by Sir Richard Greenuile, for Sir Walter Ralegh, to Virginia, in the yeere, 1585.

THe 19. day of Maye, in the yeere aboue saide, wee departed from Plymmouth, our fleete consisting of the number of seuen sailes, to wit, the Tyger, of the burden of seuen score tunnes: a Flie boate called the Roe Bucke, of the like burden: the Lyon of a hundred tunnes, or thereabouts: the Elizabeth, of fiftie tunnes, and the Dorothie, a small barke, whereunto were also adioyned for speedie seruices, 2. small Pinnesses. The principall Gentlemen of our companie, were, Master Ralfe Lane, Master Thomas Candishe, Master Iohn Arundell, Master Raimund, Master Stukely, Master Bremige, Master Vincent, and Master Iohn Clarke, and diuers others, whereof some were Captaines, and other some Assistants for counsell, and good directions in the voyage.

The 14. day of Aprill, we fell with Lançacota, and Forte Ventura, Isles of the Canaries, and from thence we continued our course for Dominica, one of the Antiles of the West India, wherewith we fell the 7. day of Maye, and the 10. day following, we came to an anker at Cotesa, a little Island situate neere to the Island of S. Iohn, where wee landed, and refreshed our selues all that day.

The 15. day of Maye, we came to an anker, in the Baye of Muskito, in the Island of S. Iohn, within a Fawlcon shot of the shoare: where our Generall Sir Richard Greenuill, and the most part of our companie landed, and began to fortifie, very neere to the sea side: the riuer ranne by the one side of our forte, and the other two sides were enuironed with woods.

The

The 13. day we began to builde a new pinnesse within the Fort, with the timber that we then felled in the countrey, some part whereof we fet three myle vp in the land, and brought it to our Fort vpon trucks, the Spaniards not daring to make or offer resistance.

The 16. day, there appeared vnto vs out of the woods 8. horsemen of the Spaniards, about a quarter of a myle from our Fort, staying about halfe an hower in viewing our forces: but as soone as they saw x. of our shot marching towards them, they presently retyred into the woodes.

The 19. day, Master Candish, who had bene seperated from our fleete in a storme in the Bay of Portingal arriued at Cotesa, within the sight of the Tiger: we thinking him a farre off to haue ben either a Spaniard or French man of warre thought it good to waigh ankers, and to goe roome with him, which the Tyger did, and discerned him at last to be one of our Consorts, for ioy of whose comming, our ships discharged their ordinance, and saluted him, according to the manner of the Seas.

The 22. day, 20. other Spanishe horsemen shewed them selues to vs vpon the other side of the riuer: who being seene, our General dispatched 20. footemen towards them, and two horsemen of ours, mounted vpon Spanish horses, which wee before had taken in the time of our being on the Iland: they shewed to our men a flagge of truce, and made signes to haue a parle with vs: whereupon two of our men went halfe of the way vpon the sands, and two of theirs came and met them: the two Spaniards offred very great salutations to our men, but began according to their Spanish proud humors, to expostulate with them, about their arriual, and fortifying in their countrie, who notwithstanding by our mens discrete answers were so cooled, that whereas they were told, that our principal intention was onely to furnish our selues with water, and victuals, and other necessaries whereof we stood in neede, which we craued might be yelded vs with faire, and friendly means, otherwise our resolution was to practise force, and to releeue our selues by the sworde: the Spaniards in conclusion, seeing our men so resolute, yelded to our requestes with large promises of all curtesie, and great fauor, and so our men and theirs departed.

The 23. day our pinnesse was finished, and lanched, which being done, our Generall with his Captaines, and Gentlemen, marched vp into the Country about the space of 4. myles, where in a plaine marsh, they staied expecting the comming of the Spanyards according to their promise, to furnish vs with victuals: who keeping their old custome for periurie and breache of promise came not, whereupon our General fired the woods thereabout, and so retired to our Fort, which the same day was fired also, and each man came aboord to be ready to set saile the next morning.

The 29. day we set saile from Saint Iohns, being many of vs sloong before vpon shoare with the Muskitoes: but the same night we tooke a Spanish Frigat, which was forsaken by the Spanyards vpon the sight of vs, and the next day in the morning very early, wee tooke another Frigat, with good and rich fraight, and diuers Spaniards of accompt in her, which afterwards we ransomed for good round summes, and landed them in Saint Iohns.

The 26. day our Lieutenant Master Ralfe Lane, went in one of the Frigats which we had taken, to Roxo bay vpon the South west side of Saint Iohns, to fetch salt, being thither conducted by a Spanish Pilot: as soone as he arriued there, he landed with his men, to the number of 20. and intrenched him selfe vpon the sandes immediatly, compassing one of their salt hils within the trench: who being seene of the Spanyards, there came downe towards him two or three troopes of horsemen, and footemen, who gaue him the looking, and gazing on, but durst not come neere him to offer any resistance, so that Master Lane mauger their troopes, caried their salt aboord and laded his Frigat, and so returned againe to our fleete the 29. day, which road at Saint Germans Bay. The same day we all departed, and the next day arriued in the Iland of Hispaniola.

Iune.

THe 1. day of June we ankered at Isabella, in the North side of Hispaniola.

The 3. day of June, the Gouernor of Isabella, and Captaine of the Port de Plata, beeing certified by the reports of sundry Spanyards, who had bene wel intertained aboord our shippes by our General, that in our fleete were many braue, and gallant Gentlemen, who greatly desired to see the Gouernor aforesaid, he thereupon sent gentle commendations to our Generall, promising within few daies to come to him in person, which he performed accordingly.

The 5. day the foresaid gouernor, accompanied with a lusty Frier, & xx. other Spaniards, with their seruants, & Negroes, came downe to the sea side, where our ships road at anker, who being seene, our General manned immediatly the most part of his boats wt the chiefe men of our fleete, euery man appointed, and furnished in the best sort: at the landing of our Generall, the Spanishe Gouernor receiued him very curteously, and the Spanish Gentlemen saluted our English Gentlemen, and their inferiour sort did also salute our Souldiers and Sea men, liking our men, and likewise their qualities, although at the first, they seemed to stand in feare of vs, and of so many of our boats, whereof they desired that all might not land their men, yet in the end, the curtesies that passed on both sides were so great, that all feare and mistrust on the Spanyardes part was abandoned.

In the meane time while our English Generall and the Spanish Gouernor discoursed betwixt them of diuers matters, as of the state of the Country, the multitude of the Townes and people, and the commodities of the Iland, our men prouided two banquetting houses couered with greene boughs, the one for the gentlemen, the other for the seruants, and a sumptuous banquet was brought in serued by vs all in Plate, with the sound of trumpets, and consort of musick wherewith the Spanyards were more then delighted. Which banquet being ended, the Spanyardes in recompense of our curtesie, caused a great heard of white buls, and kyne, to be brought together from the Mounteines, and appointed for euery Gentleman and Captaine that would ride, a horse ready sadled, and then singled out three of the best of them to be hunted by horsemen after their manner, so that the pastime grew very pleasant, for the space of three houres, wherein all three of the beasts were killed, whereof one tooke the sea, and there was slaine with a musket. After this sport, many rare presents and gifts were giuen and bestowed on both partes, and the next day we plaied the Marchants in bargaining with them by way of trucke and exchange for diuers of their commodities, as horses, mares, kyne, buls, goates, swine, sheepe, bul hydes, sugar, ginger, pearle, tabacco, and such like commodities of the Iland.

The 7. day we departed with great good will from the Spanyardes from the Iland of Hispaniola: but the wiser sort do impute this great shew of friendship, and curtesie vsed towardes vs by the Spanyards rather to the force that we were of, and the vigilancie, and watchfulnes that was amongst vs, then to any harty good will, or sure freindly intertainment: for doubtlesse if they had bene stronger then wee, we might haue looked for no better curtesie at their handes, then Master Iohn Hawkins receiued at saint Iohn de Vllua, or Iohn Oxnam neere the streights of Dariene, and diuers others of our Countrymen in other places.

The 8. day we ankred at a small Iland to take Seales which in that place were vnderstood to haue bene in great quantitie, where the Generall and certaine others with him in the pinnesse, were in very great danger to haue bene all cast away, but by the helpe of God they escaped the hazard, and returned aboord the Admirall in safetie.

The 9. day we arriued and landed in the Isle of Caycos, in which Islande we searched for salt pondes, vpon the aduertisment, and information of a Portingall: who in deede abused our Generall and vs, deseruing a halter for his hire, if it had so pleased vs.

The 12. we ankered at Guanema, and landed.

The 15. and 16. we ankered and landed at Sygateo.

The 20. we fell with the mayne of Florida.

The 23. wee were in great danger of a Whacke on a breache called the Cape of Feare.

The 24. we came to anker in a harbor where we caught in one tyde so much fishe as would haue yelded vs 50. pounds in London: this was our first landing in Florida.

The 26. we came to anker at Wocokon.

The 29. wee waighed anker to bring the Tyger into the harbour, where though the vnskilfulnesse of the Master whose name was Fernando, the Admirall strooke on grounde, and sunke.

Iuly.

The 3. we sent word of our arriuing at Wococon, to Wingino at Roanocke.

The 6. M. Iohn Arundell was sent to the mayne, and Manteio with him: and Captayne Aubry, and Captaine Boniten the same day were sent to Croatoan, where they found two of our men left there, with 30. other by Captaine Reymond, some 20. daies before.

The 8. Captaine Aubry, and Captaine Boniten returned with two of our men found by them to vs at Wocokon.

The 11. day the Generall accompanied in his Tilt boate with Master Iohn Arundell, Master Stukelye, and diuers other Gentlemen, Master Lane, Master Candish, Master Harriot, and 20. others in the newe pinnesse, Captaine Amadas, Captaine Clarke, with tenne others in a ship boate, Francis Brooke, and Iohn White in another ship boate passed ouer the water from Ococon to the mayne land victualled for eight dayes, in which voyage we first discouered the townes of Pomioke, Aquascogoc and Secota, and also the great lake called by the Sauages Paquype, with with diuers other places, and so returned with that discouery to our Fleete.

The 12. we came to the Towne of Pomeioke.

The 13. we passed by water to Aquascococke.

The 15. we came to Secotan and were well intertayned there of the Sauages.

The 16. we returned thence, and one of our boates with the Admirall was sent to Aquascocke to demaund a siluer cup which one of the Sauages had stolen from vs, and not receiuing it according to his promise, we burnt, and spoyled their corne, and Towne, all the people being fledde.

The 18. we returned from the discouery of Secotan, and the same day came aboord our fleete ryding at Wocokon.

The 21. our fleete ankering at Wokocon, we wayed anker for Hatoraske.

The 27. our fleete ankered at Hatoraske, and there we rested.

The 29. Grangino, brother to king Wingino, came aboord the Admirall, and Manteo with him.

August.

The 2. The Admirall was sent to Weapemeoke.

The 5. Master Iohn Arundell was sent for England.

The 25. our Generall wayed anker, and set saile for England.

About the 31. he tooke a Spanish ship of 300. tunne richly loaden, boording her with a boate made with boards of chests, which fell a sunder, and sunke at the shippes side, assoone as euer hee and his men were out of it.

September.

The 10. of September, by foule weather the Generall then shipped in the pisse lost sight of the Tyger.

October.

The first the Tyger fell with the landes ende, and the same day came to an anker at Falmouth.

The 18. the Generall came with the pisse to Plymmouth, and was courteously receiued by diuerse of his worshipfull friends.

An account of the particularities of the imployments of the English men left in Virginia by Sir Richard Greeneuill vnder the charge of Master Ralfe Lane Generall of the same, from the 17. of August, 1585. vntill the 18. of Iune 1586. at which time they departed the Countrie: sent, and directed to Sir Walter Ralegh.

2. Parts of this discourse.

That I may proceed with order in this discourse, I thinke it requisite to deuide it into two partes. The first shall declare the particularities of such partes of the Country within the mayne, as our weake number, and supply of things necessary did inable vs to enter into the discouery thereof.

The second part, shall set downe the reasons generally mouing vs to resolue on our departure at the instant with the General Sir Frauncis Drake, and our common request for passage with him, when the barkes, pinnesses, and boates with the Masters and Mariners ment by him to bee left in the Countrie for the supply of such, as for a further time ment to haue stayed there were caried away with tempest, and foule weather: In the beginning whereof shalbe declared the conspiracie of Pemisapan, with the Sauages of the mayne to haue cutt vs off.

The

The firſt part declaring the particularities of the Countrey of Virginia.

FIrſt therefore touching the particularities of the Countrey, you ſhal vnderſtand our diſcouery of the ſame hath bene extended from the Iland of Roanoak, (the ſame hauing bene the place of our ſettlement or inhabitation) into the South, into the North, into the Northweſt, and into the Weſt.

The vttermoſt place to the Southward of any diſcouerie was Secotan, being by eſtimation foure ſcore miles diſtant from Roanoak. The paſſage from thence was thorowe a broad ſound within the mayne, the ſame being without kenning of land, and yet full of flats and ſhoales: we had but one boate with foure oares to paſſe through the ſame, which boat could not carry aboue fifteene men with their furniture, baggage, and victuall for ſeuen dayes at the moſt: and as for our Pinneſſe, beſides that ſhe drewe too deepe water for that ſhalow ſound, ſhe would not ſtirre for an oare: for theſe and other reaſons (winter alſo being at hand) we thought good wholy to leaue the diſcouery of thoſe partes vntill our ſtronger ſupplie.

To the Northwarde our furtheſt diſcouerie was to the Cheſepians, diſtant from Roanoak about 130. miles, the paſſage to it was very ſhalow and moſt dangerous, by reaſon of the breadth of the ſound, and the litle ſuccour that vpon any flawe was there to be had.

But the Territorie and ſoyle of the Cheſepians (being diſtant fifteene miles from the ſhoare) was for pleaſantnes of ſeate, for temperature of Climate, for fertilitie of ſoyle, and for the commoditie of the Sea, beſides multitude of beares (being an excellent good victuall, with great woods of Saſſafras, and Wall nut treees) is not to be excelled by any other whatſoeuer. The excellency of the ſeate of Cheſepiok.

There be ſundry Kings, whom they call Weroances, and Countries of great fertilitie adioyning to the ſame, as the Mandoages, Tripanicks, and Opoſsians, which all came to viſit the Colonie of the Engliſh, which I had for a time appointed to be reſident there.

To the Northweſt the fartheſt place of our diſcouerie was to Choanoke diſtant from Roanoak about 130. miles. Our paſſage thither lyeth through a broad ſound, but all freſh water, and the chanell of great depth, nauigable for good ſhipping, but out of the chanell full of ſhoales.

The Townes about the water ſide ſituated by the way, are theſe following: Pyſhokonnok, The womans Towne, Chipanum, Weopomiok, Muſcamunge, and Matraquen: all theſe being vnder the iuriſdiction of the king of Weopomiok, called Okiſco: from Muſcamunge we enter into the Riuer, and iuriſdiction of Choanoke: There the Riuer beginneth to straighten vntill it come to Choanoke, and then groweth to be as narrowe as the Thames betweene Weſtminſter, and Lambeth.

Betweene Muſcamunge and Choanoke vpon the left hand as we paſſe thither, is a goodly high land, and there is a Towne which we called the blinde Towne, but the Sauages called it Ooanoke, and hath a very goodly corne field belonging vnto it: it is ſubiect to Choanoke.

Choanoke it ſelfe is the greateſt Prouince and Seigniorie lying vpon that Riuer, and the very Towne it ſelfe is able to put 700. fighting men into the fielde, beſides the forces of the Prouince it ſelfe. The Towne of Choanoak able to make 700. men of warre.

The King of the ſayd Prouince is called Menatonon, a man impotent in his lims, but otherwiſe for a Sauage, a very graue and wiſe man, and of very ſingular good diſcourſe in matters concerning the ſtate, not onely of his owne Countrey, and the diſpoſition of his owne men, but alſo of his neighbours round about him as wel farre as neere, and of the commodities that eche Countrey yeeldeth. When I had him priſoner with me, for two dayes that we were together, he gaue me more vnderſtanding and light of the Countrey then I had receiued by all the ſearches and ſaluages that before I or any of my compante had had conference with: it was in March laſt paſt 1586. Amongſt other things he tolde me, that going three dayes iourney in a canoa vp his Riuer of Choanoke, and then deſcending to the land, you are within foure dayes iourney to paſſe ouer land Northeaſt to a certaine Kings countrey, whoſe Prouince lyeth vpon the Sea, but his place of greateſt ſtrength is an Iland ſituate as he deſcribed vnto me in a Bay, the water round about the Iland very deepe. An Iland in a Bay.

Out of this Bay hee ſignified vnto mee, that this King had ſo great quantitie of Pearle, and doeth ſo ordinarily take the ſame, as that not onely his owne ſkins that he weareth, and the better ſort of his gentlemen and followers, are full ſet with the ſayd Pearle, but alſo his beds, and houſes are garniſhed with them, and that hee hath ſuch quantitie of them, that it is a wonder to ſee. Pearles in exceeding quantitie.

He shewed me that the sayd King was with him at Choanoak two yeeres before, and brought him certaine Pearle, but the same of the worst sort, yet was hee faine to buy them of him for copper at a deere rate, as he thought: He gaue me a rope of the same Pearle, but they were blacke, and naught, yet many of them were very great, and a fewe amongst a number very orient and round, all which I lost with other things of mine, comming aboorde Sir Francis Drake his Fleete: yet he tolde me that the sayd King had great store of Pearle that were white, great, and round, and that his blacke Pearle his men did take out of shalowe water, but the white Pearle his men fished for in very deepe water.

It seemed to mee by his speech, that the sayde king had traffike with white men that had clothes as we haue for these white Pearle, and that was the reason that he would not depart with other then with blacke Pearles, to those of the same Countrey.

The king of Choanoak promised to giue me guides to goe ouer land into that kings Countrey whensoeuer I would: but he aduised me to take good store of men with mee, and good store of victuall, for he sayd, that king would be loth to suffer any strangers to enter into his Countrey, and especially to meddle with the fishing for any Pearle there, and that hee was able to make a great many of men into the fielde, which he sayd would fight very well.

Hereupon I resolued with my selfe, that if your supplie had come before the end of April, and that you had sent any store of boats, or men, to haue had them made in any reasonable time, with a sufficient number of men, and victuals to haue found vs vntill the new corne were come in, I woulde haue sent a small Barke with two Pinnesses about by Sea to the Northwarde to haue found out the Bay he spake of, and to haue sounded the barre if there were any, which shoulde haue ridden there in the sayd Bay about that Iland, while I with all the small boats I could make, and with two hundreth men would haue gone vp to the head of the Riuer of Choanoak, with the guides that Menatonon would haue giuen, which I would haue bene assured should haue bene of his best men, (for I had his best beloued sonne prisoner with me) who also should haue kept me companie in an handlocke with the rest foote by foote all the voyage ouer land.

My meaning was further at the head of the Riuer in the place of my descent where I would haue left my boates to haue raysed a sconse with a small trench, and a pallisado vpon the top of it, in the which, and in the garde of my boates I would haue left fiue and twentie, or thirtie men, with the rest would I haue marched with as much victuall as euery man could haue carried, with their furniture, mattocks, spades and axes, two dayes iourney. In the ende of my marche vpon some conuenient plot would I haue raysed another sconse according to the former, where I would haue left 15. or 20. And if it would haue fallen out conueniently, in the way I woulde haue raised my sayd sconse vpon some corne fielde, that my companie might haue liued vpon it.

Whether Master Ralph Lane meant to remoone.

And so I would haue holden this course of insconsing euery two dayes march, vntill I had bene arriued at the Bay or Porte he spake of: which finding to be worth the possession, I would there haue raised a mayne forte, both for the defence of the harborroughs, and our shipping also, and would haue reduced our whole habitation from Roanoak and from the harborough and port there (which by proofe is very naught) vnto this other before mentioned, from whence, in the foure dayes marche before specified could I at all times returne with my companie backe vnto my boats ryding vnder my sconse, very neere whereunto directly from the West runneth a most notable Riuer, and in all those partes most famous, called the Riuer of Morotico. This Riuer openeth into the broad sound of Weopomiok: And whereas the Riuer of Choanoak, and all the other sounds, and Bayes, salt and fresh, shewe no currant in the world in calme weather, but are mooued altogether with the winde: This Riuer of Morotico hath so violent a currant from the West and Southwest, that it made me almost of opinion that with oares it would scarse be nauigable: it passeth with many creeks and turnings, and for the space of thirtie miles rowing, and more, it is as broad as the Thames betwixt Greenwich, and the Ile of dogges, in some place more, and in some lesse: the currant runneth as strong being entred so high into the Riuer, as at London bridge vpon a vale water.

And for that not onely Menatonon, but also the Sauages of Morotico themselues doe report strange things of the head of that Riuer, and that from Morotico it selfe, which is a principall Towne vpon that Riuer, it is thirtie dayes as some of them say, and some say fourtie dayes voyage to the head thereof, which head they say springeth out of a maine rocke in that abundance, that forthwith it maketh a most violent streame: and further, that this huge rocke standeth nere vnto a Sea, that many times in stormes (the winde comming outwardly from the Sea) the waues thereof are beaten into the said fresh streame, so that the fresh water for a certaine space, groweth salt and brackish:

I tooke

I tooke a reſolution with my ſelfe, hauing diſmiſſed Menatonon vpon a ranſome agreed for, and ſent his ſonne into the Pinneſſe to Roanoak, to enter preſently ſo farre into that Riuer with two double wherries, and fourtie perſons one or other, as I could haue victuall to carrie vs, vntill we could meete with more either of the Moratiks, or of the Mangoaks which is another kinde of Sauages, dwelling more to the Weſtwarde of the ſayd Riuer: but the hope of recouering more victuall from the Sauages made me and my company as narowly to eſcape ſtaruing in that diſcouerie before our returne, as euer men did that miſſed the ſame.

For Pemiſapan, who had changed his name of Wingina vpon the death of his brother Granganimo, had giuen both the Choaniſts, & Mangoaks word of my purpoſe touching them, I hauing bin inforced to make him priuie to ỹ ſame, to be ſerued by him of a guide to the Mangoaks, and yet he did neuer reſt to ſolicite continually my going vpon them, certifying me of a generall aſſembly euen at that time made by Menatonon at Choanoak of all his Weroances, & allyes to the number of 3000. bowes preparing to come vpon vs at Roanoak and that the Mangoaks alſo were ioyned in the ſame confederacie, who were able of themſelues to bring as many more to the enterpriſe: And true it was, that at that time the aſſembly was holden at Choanoak about vs, as I found at my comming thither, which being vnlooked for did ſo diſmay them, as it made vs haue the better hand at them. But this confederacie againſt vs of the Choaniſts and Mangoaks was altogether and wholly procured by Pemiſapan himſelfe, as Menatonon confeſſed vnto me, who ſent them continuall worde that our purpoſe was fully bent to deſtroy them: on the other ſide he tolde me that they had the like meaning towards vs. Wingina changeth his name

Wee in like ſort hauing ſent worde to the Mangoaks of mine intention to paſſe vp into their Riuer, and to kill them (as he ſayd) both they and the Moratiks, with whome before we were entred into a league, and they had euer dealt kindely with vs, abandoned their Townes along the Riuer, and retyred themſelues with their ‖ Crenepoes, and their corne within the mayne: inſo- ‖ Their wome much as hauing paſſed three dayes voyage vp the Riuer, we could not meete a man, nor finde a graine of corne in any their Townes: whereupon conſidering with my ſelfe, that wee had but two dayes victuall left, and that wee were then 160. miles from home, beſides caſualtie of contrarie windes or ſtormes, and ſuſpecting treaſon of our owne Sauages in the diſcouerie of our voyage intended, though we had no intention to be hurtfull to any of them, otherwiſe then for our copper to haue had corne of them: I at night vpon the corps of garde, before the putting foorth of centinels, aduertiſed the whole companie of the caſe wee ſtoode in for victuall, and of mine opinion that we were betrayed by our owne Sauages, and of purpoſe drawen foorth by them, vpon vaine hope to be in the ende ſtarued, ſeeing all the Countrey fledde before vs, and therefore while we had thoſe two dayes victuall left, I thought it good for vs to make our returne homewarde, and that it were neceſſarie for vs to get the other ſide of the ſound of Weopomiok in time, where we might be relieued vpon the weares of Chypanum, and the womans Towne, although the people were fled.

Thus much I ſignified vnto them, as the ſafeſt way: neuertheleſſe, I did referre it to the greateſt number of voyces, whether we ſhould aduenture the ſpending of our whole victuall in ſome further viewe of that moſt goodly Riuer in hope to meete with ſome better hap, or otherwiſe to retyre our ſelues backe againe. And for that they might be the better aduiſed, I willed them to deliberate all night vpon the matter, and in the morning at our going aboorde to ſet our courſe according to the deſires of the greateſt part. Their reſolution fully and wholly was (and not three found to be of the contrary opinion) that whiles there was left one halfe pinte of corne for a man, that we ſhould not leaue the ſearch of that Riuer, and that there were in the companie two maſtiues, vpon the pottage of which with ſaſſafras leaues (if the worſt fell out) the companie would make ſhift to liue two dayes, which time would bring them downe the currant to the mouth of the Riuer, and to the entrie of the ſound, and in two dayes more at the fartheſt they hoped to croſſe the ſounde and to bee relieued by the weares, which two dayes they would faſt rather then be drawen backe a foote till they had ſeene the Mangoaks, either as friends or foes. This reſolution of theirs did not a little pleaſe mee, ſince it came of them ſelues, although for miſtruſt of that which afterwards did happen, I pretended to haue bene rather of the contrary opinion.

And that which made me moſt deſirous to haue ſome doings with the Mangoaks either in friendſhip or otherwiſe to haue had one or two of them priſoners, was, for ỹ is it a thing moſt notorious to all ỹ countrey, that there is a Prouince to the which the ſayd Mangoaks haue recourſe and traffike vp that Riuer of Morattico, which hath a maruellous and moſt ſtrange Minerall. This Mine is ſo notorious amongſt them, as not onely to the Sauages dwelling vp the ſayde riuer, A marueilous Mineral in the countrey of Chaunis Temoatan.

riuer, and also to the Sauages of Choanoke, and all them to the westward, but also to all them of the mayne: the countries name is of fame, and is called Chaunis Temoatan.

The mineral they say is Wassador, which is copper, but they call by the name of Wassador euery mettall whatsoeuer: they say it is of the couler of our copper, but our copper is better then theirs: and the reason is for that it is redder and harder, whereas that of Chaunis Temoatan is very soft, and pale: they say that they take the sayd mettall out of a riuer that falleth very swift from hie rocks, and hyls, and they take it in shallowe water: the manner is this. They take a great bowle by their discription as great as one of our targets, and wrap a skinne ouer the hollowe part thereof, leauing one part open to receiue in the mineralI: that done, they watch the comming downe of the currant, and the change of the couler of the water, and then suddenly chop downe the sayd bowle with the skin, and receiue into the same as much oare as will come in, which is euer as much as their bowle wil hold, which presently they cast into a fire, and forthwith it melteth, and doeth yeelde in 5. partes, at the first melting, two parts of metall for three partes of oare. Of this metall the Mangoaks haue so great store, by report of all the sauages adioyning, that they beautifie their houses with great plates of the same: and this to be true, I receiued by report of all the country, and particularly by yong Skiko, the king of Choanokes sonne my prisoner, who also himselfe had bene prisoner with the Mangoaks, and set downe all the particularities to mee before mentioned: but hee had not bene at Chawnis Temoatan himselfe: for he sayd, it was twentie dayes iourney ouerlande from the Mangoaks, to the saide minerall country, and that they passed though certaine other territories betweene them and the Mangoaks, before they came to the said country.

Upon reporte of the premisses, which I was very inquisitiue in all places where I came to take very particular information of, by all the sauages that dwelt towards those parts, and especially of Menatonon himselfe, who in euery thing did very particularly informe mee, and promised mee guides of his owne men, who shoulde passe ouer with mee, euen to the sayde country of Chaunis Temoatan, (for ouer lande from Choanok to the Mangoaks is but one dayes iourney from sunne rysing to sunne setting, whereas by water it is 7. daies with the soonest:) These things I say, made me verie desirous by all meanes possible to recouer the Mangoaks, & to get some of that their copper for an assay, and therefore I willingly yeelded to their resolution: But it fell out very contrarie to all expectation, and likelyhood: for after two dayes trauell, and our whole victual spent, lying on shoare all night, wee could neuer see man, onely fires wee might perceiue made alongst the shoare where we were to passe, and vp into the countrie vntill the very last day. In the euening whereof, about three of the clocke we heard certaine sauages call as we thought, Manteo, who was also at that time with mee in boate, whereof we all being verie glad, hoping of some friendly conference with them, and making him to answere them, they presently began a song, as we thought in token of our welcome to them: but Manteo presently betooke him to his peece, and tolde mee that they ment to fight with vs: which word was not so soone spoken by him, and the light horseman ready to put to shoare, but there lighted a vollie of their arrowes amongst them in the boate, but did no hurt God be thanked to any man. Immediatly, the other boate lying ready with their shot to skoure the place for our hand weapons to land vpon, which was presently done, although the lande was very high and steepe, the Sauages forthwith quitted the shoare, and betooke themselues to flight: we landed, and hauing sayre and easily followed for a smal time after them, who had wooded themselues we know not where: the sunne drawing then towards the setting, and being then assured that the next day, if wee would pursue them, though wee might happen to meete with them, yet we should bee assured to meete with none of their victuall, which we then had good cause to thinke of, therefore choosing for the companie a conuenient grounde in safetie to lodge in for the night, making a strong corps of garde, and putting out good centinels, I determined the next morning before the rising of the sunne to be going backe againe, if possibly wee might recouer the mouth of the riuer into the broade sownde, which at my first motion I found my whole companie ready to assent vnto: for they were nowe come to their dogs porredge, that they had bespoken for themselues, if that befell them which did, and I before did mistrust we should hardly escape. The ende was, we came the next day by night to the riuers mouth within 4. or 5. miles of the same, hauing rowed in one day downe the currant, as much as in 4. dayes we had done against the same: we lodged vpon an Illande, where wee had nothing in the worlde to eate but pottage of sassafras leaues, the like whereof for a meate was neuer vsed before as I thinke. The broad sownde wee had to passe, the next day all fresh and fasting: that day the winde blewe so strongly, and the billowes so great, that there was no possibilitie of passage without sinking of our boates. This was vpon Easter eue, which which was faſted very truly. Upon Eaſter day in the morning the wind comming very calme, wee entred the ſownde, and by 4. of the clocke we were at Chipanum, where all the Sauages that wee had left there were fled, but their weares did yeelde vs ſome fiſh, as God was pleaſed not vtterly to ſuffer vs to be loſt: for ſome of our compaine of the light horſemen were far ſpent. The next morning we arriued at our home Roanoake.

I haue ſet downe this voyage ſomewhat particularly, to the ende it may appeare vnto you, (as true it is) that there wanted no great good will from the moſt to the leaſt amongſt vs, to haue perfited this diſcouerie of the mine: for that the diſcouery of a good mine, by the goodneſſe of God, or a paſſage to the Southſea, or ſomeway to it, and nothing els can bring this country in requeſt to be inhabited by our nation. And with the diſcouery of any of the two aboue ſhewed, it wilbe the moſt ſweete, and healthfulleſt climate, and there withall the moſt fertile ſoyle, being manured in the world: and then will Saſſafras, and many other rootes & gummes there found make good Marchandiſe and lading for ſhipping, which otherwiſe of themſelues will not bee worth the fetching.

Prouided alſo, that there be found out a better harborough then yet there is, which muſt bee to the Northward, if any there be, which was mine intention to haue ſpent this ſummer in the ſearch of, and of the mine of Chawnis Temoatan: the one I would haue done, if the barks that I ſhould haue had of S. Francis Drake, by his honorable curteſie, had not bene driuen away by ſtorme: the other if your ſupply of more men, and ſome other neceſſaries had come to vs in any conuenient ſufficiencie. For this riuer of Moratico promiſeth great things, and by the opinion of M. Harriots the heade of it by the deſcription of the country, either riſeth from the bay of Mexico, or els from very neere vnto the ſame, that openeth out into the South ſea.

And touching the Minerall, thus doth M. Vaughan affirme that though it be but copper, ſeeing the Sauages are able to melt it, it is one of the richeſt Minerals in the worlde.

Wherefore a good harborough founde to the Northward, as before is ſayd, and from thence foure dayes ouerland, to the riuer of Choanoak ſconſes being rayſed, from whence againe ouerlande through the prouince of Choanoak one dayes voyage to the firſt towne of the Mangoaks by the riuer of Moratico by the way, as alſo vpon the ſayd riuer for the defence of our boats like ſconſes being ſet, in this courſe of proceeding you ſhall cleare your ſelfe from all thoſe dangers and broad ſhallowe ſownds before mentioned, and gayne within foure dayes trauell into the heart of the mayne 200. myles at the leaſt, and ſo paſſe your diſcouerie into that moſt notable, and to the likelieſt partes of the mayne, with farre greater felicitie then otherwiſe can bee performed.

Thus ſir, I haue though ſimply, yet truely ſet downe vnto you, what my labour with the reſt of the gentlemen, and poore men of our company, (not without both payne, and perill which the lorde in his mercy many wayes deliuered vs from) could yeelde vnto you, which might haue bene performed in ſome more perfection, if the lorde had bene pleaſed that onely that which you had prouided for vs had at the firſt bene left with vs, or that he had not in his eternall prouidence now at the laſt ſet ſome other courſe in theſe things, then the wiſedome of man could looke into, which truely the carying away, by a moſt ſtrange, & vnlooked for ſtorme all our proviſion, with barks, maſter, Carryners, and ſundrie alſo of mine owne company, all hauing bene ſo curteouſly ſupplyed by the Generall S. Francis Drake, the ſame hauing bene moſt ſufficient to haue performed the greateſt part of the premiſſes, muſt euer make me to thinke, the hand of God only, for ſome his good purpoſe to my ſelfe yet vnknowne, to haue bene in the matter.

The ſecond part touching the conſpiracy of Pemiſapan, the diſcouerie of the ſame, and at the laſt, of our requeſt to depart with S. Francis Drake for England.

ENſenore a ſauage father to Pemiſapan being the only frend to our nation that we had amongſt them, and about the king, vpon the 20. of Aprill, 1586. hee alone, had before oppoſed himſelfe in their conſultations againſt al matters propoſed againſt vs, which both the king, and all the reſt of them after Grangemoes death, were very willing to haue preferred. And he was not onely by the meere prouidence of God during his life, a meane to ſaue vs from hurt, aſpoyſonings and ſuch like, but alſo to doe vs very great good, and ſingularly in this.

The king was aduiſed and of himſelfe diſpoſed, as a ready meane to haue aſſuredly brought vs to runne in the moneth of March, 1586. himselfe also with all his Sauages to haue runne away from vs, and to haue left his ground in the Island vnsowed, which if he had done, there had bene no possibilitie in common reason, (but by the immediate hand of God) that we could haue bene preserued from staruing out of hand. For at that time wee had no weares for fishe, neither could our men skill of the making of them, neither had wee one grayne of corne for seede to put into the ground.

In mine absence on my voyage that I had made against the Chaonists, and Mangoaks, they had raised a bruite among themselues, that I and my company were part slayne, and part starued by the Chaonists, and Mangoaks. One part of this tale was too true, that I and mine were like to be starued, but the other false.

Neuertheless vntill my returne, it tooke such effect in Pemisapans breast, and in those against vs, that they grew not onely into contempt of vs, but also (contrary to their former reuerend opinion in shew, of the almightie God of heauen, and Jesus Christ, whome wee serue and worship, whome before they woulde acknowledge and confesse the onely God:) nowe they began to blaspheme, and flatly to say, that our Lord God was not God, since hee suffered vs to sustaine much hunger, and also to be killed of the Renapoaks, for so they call by that generall name, all the inhabitants of the whole mayne, of what prouince soeuer. Insomuch as olde Ensenore, nether any of his fellowes, coulde for his sake haue no more credite for vs: and it came so farre that the King was resolued to haue presently gone away as is aforesaid.

But euen in the beginning of this bruite I returned, which when hee saw contrarie to his expectation, and the aduertisement that he had receiued: that not only my selfe, and my company were al safe, but also by report of his owne 3. sauages, which had bene with mee besides Manteo in that voyage, that is to say, Tetepano, his sisters husband Eracano, and Cosine, that the Chaonists, and Mangoaks, (whose name, and multitude besides their valour is terrible to al the rest of the prouinces) durst not for the most part of them abide vs, and that those that did abide vs were killed, and that we had taken Menatonon prisoner, and brought his sonne that he best loued to Roanoak with me, it did not a little asswage all deuises against vs: on the other side, it made Ensenors opinions to be receiued againe with greater respects. For hee had often before tolde them, and then renewed those his former speeches, both to the king and the rest, that wee were the seruants of God, and that wee were not subiect to be destroyed by them: but contrariwise, that they amongst them that sought our destruction, should finde their owne, and not be able to worke ours, and that we being dead men were able to doe them more hurt, then now we coulde do being aliue: an opinion very confidently at this day holden by the wisest amongst them, and of their olde men, as also, that they haue bene in the night, beeing 100. myles from any of vs in the ayre shot at, and stroken by some men of ours, that by sicknesse had dyed among them: and many of them holde opinion, that wee be dead men returned into the worlde againe, and that we doe not remayne dead but for a certaine time, and that then we returne againe.

All these speeches then againe grew in ful credite with them, the King and all touching vs, when hee saw the small troupe returned againe, and in that sort from those whose very names were terrible vnto them: but that which made vp the matter on our side for that time, was an accident, yea rather, (as all the rest was) the good prouidence of the Almightie for the sauing of vs, which was this.

Within certaine dayes after my returne from the said iourney, Menatonon sent a messenger to visite his sonne the prisoner with me, and sent me certaine pearle for a present, or rather as Pemisapan told me, for the ransome of his sonne, and therefore I refused them: but the greatest cause of his sending then, was to signifie vnto me, that hee had commaunded Okisko king of Weopomiok, to yelde himselfe seruant, and homager, to the great Weroanza of England, and after her to Sir Walter Raleigh: to performe which commandement receiued from Menatonon, the sayd Okisko ioyntly with this Menatonons messenger, sent foure and twentie of his principallest men to Roanoak to Pemisapan, to signifie that they were readie to performe the same, and so had sent those his men to let me knowe, that from that time forwarde hee, and his successours were to acknowledge her Maiestie their onely Soueraigne, and next vnto her, as is aforesayde.

All which being done, and acknowledged by them all, in the presence of Pemisapan his father, and all his Sauages in counsel then with him, it did for the time, thorowly (as it seemed) change him in disposition toward vs: Insomuch as forthwith Ensenore wan this resolution of him, that out of hand he should goe about, & withall, to cause his men to set vp weares forthwith for vs: both which he, at that present went in hand withal & did so labour the expedition of it, that that in the end of April, he had sowed a good quantitie of ground, so much as had bene sufficient, to haue fed our whole company (God blessing the grouth) and that by the belly for a whole yere: besides that he gaue vs a certaine plot of grounde for our selues to sowe. All which put vs in marueilous comfort, if we could passe from Aprill, vntill the beginning of July, (which was to haue bene the beginning of their harueſt,) that then a newe supplie out of Englande or els our owne store would well inough maintayne vs: All our feare was of the two moneths betwixt, in which meane space, if the Sauages should not helpe vs with Cassada, and Chyna, and that our weares should fayle vs, (as often they did,) wee might very well starue, notwithstanding the growing corne, like the staruing horse in the stable, with the growing grasse as the prouerbe is, which we very hardly had escaped but onely by the hande of God, as it pleased him to try vs. For within few dayes after, as before is sayde Ensenore our friende dyed, who was no sooner dead, but certaine our great enemies about Pemisapan, as Osocan a Weroance, Tanaquiny and Wanchese most principally, were in hand again to put their old practises in vre against vs, which were readily imbraced, & al their former deuises against vs renewed, & new brought in question.

The beginning of their harueſt in Iulie.

But that of staruing vs, by their forbearing to sowe, was broken by Ensenore in his life, by hauing made the king all at one instant to sowe his grounde not onely in the Iſlande but also at Addesmocopeia in the mayne, within two leagues ouer against vs. Neuertheleſſe there wanted no store of mischeuous practises among them, and of all they resolued principally of this following.

The conſpiracie of Pemiſapan.

Firſt that Okisko, king of Weopomiok, with the Mandoages, should bee moued, and with great quantitie of copper intertayned to the number of seuen, or 800 bowes to the enterprise the matter thus to be ordred. They of Weopomiok should be inuited to a certaine kind of moneths minde which they do vse to solemnise in their Sauage maner for any great personage dead, and should haue bene for Ensenore. At this instant also should the Mandoaks, who were a great people with the Chesepians, and their friends to the number of 700. of them to be armed at a day appointed to the mayne of Addesmocopeio, and there lying close at the signe of fyers, which should interchangeably be made on both sides, whē Pemisapan w his troup aboue named should haue executed me, and some of our Weroances (as they called all our principall officers,) the mayne forces of the reſt should haue come ouer into the Iland where they ment to haue dispatched the reſt of the company, whome they did imagine to finde both dismaied and dispersed aboade in the Iſlande seeking of crabs, and fish to liue withall. The manner of their enterprise was this.

Tarraquine and Andacon two principall men about Pemisapan, and very luſtie fellowes with twentie more appointed to them had the charge of my person to see an order taken for the same, which they ment should in this sort haue bene executed. In the dead time of the night they would haue beset my house, and put fire in the reedes, that the same was couered with: meaning (as it was likelye) that my selfe woulde haue come running out of a sudden amazed in my shirt without armes, vpon the instant whereof they woulde haue knocked out my braynes.

The ſufficiencye of our men to deale against the Sauages, 10. to 100.

The same order was giuen to certaine of his fellowes, for M. Herriots: so for all the reſt of our better sort, all our houses at one instant being set on fire as afore is sayde, and that as well for them of the sorte, as for vs at the towne. Now to the end that we might be the fewer in number together, and so be the more eaſilie dealt withall (for in deede ten of vs with our armes prepared, were a terrour to a hundred of the beſt sort of them,) they agreed and did immediatly put it in practise, that they should not for any copper, sell vs any victuals whatsoeuer: besides that in the night they should send to haue our weares robbed, and also to cause them to be broken and once being broken neuer to be repayred againe by them. By this meanes the King stood assured, that I must bee enforced for lacke of sustenance, there to disband my company into sundry places to liue vpon shell fishe, for so the Sauages themselues doe, going to Ottorasko, Crotoan, and other places fishing and hunting, while their grounds be in sowing, and their corne growing, which fayled not his expectation. For the famine grewe so extreeme among vs, our weares fayling vs of fish, that I was enforced to send captaine Stafford with 20. with him to Crotoan my lord Admirals Iſland to serue two turnes in one, that is to say to feede himselfe, and his company, and also to keepe watch, if any shipping came vpon the coaſt to warne vs of the same. I sent master Prior with the Pynneſſe to Otteraſco, and ten with him, with the Prouoſt Marshal to liue there, and also to wayte for shipping: also I sent euery weeke 16. or 20. of the reſt of the companie to the mayne ouer against vs, to liue of Casada, and oysters.

The ſauages liue by fishing and hunting, till harueſt.

In the meane whi'e Pemisapan went of purpose to Addesmocopeio for 3. causes, the one, to see his grounds there broken vp, and sowed for a second croppe: the other to withdrawe himſelfe selfe from my dayly sending to him for supply of victuall for my company, for hee was afrayde to denye me any thing, neither durst he in my presence but by colour, and with excuses, which I was content to accept for the time, meaning in the ende as I had reason, to giue him the iumpe once for all: but in the meane whiles, as I had euer done before, I and mine bare all wrongs, and accepted of all excuses.

My purpose was to haue relyed my selfe with Menatonon, and the Chaonists, who in truth as they are more valiant people and in greater number then the rest, so are they more faithfull in their promises, and since my late being there, had giuen many tokens of earnest desire they had to ioyne in perfect league with vs, and therefore were greatly offended with Pemisapan and Weopomiok for making him beleeue such tales of vs.

The third cause of his going to Addesmacopeio was to dispatch his messengers to Weopomiok, and to the Mandoages, as aforesaid, al which he did with great impresse of copper in hand, making large promises to them of greater spoyle.

The answere within fewe dayes after, came from Weopomiok, which was deuided into two parts. First for the King Okisko, who denyed to be of ꝑ partie for himselfe, or any of his especial followers, and therefore did immediatly retyre himselfe with his force into the mayne: the other was concerning the rest of the sayd prouince who accepted of it: and in like sort the Mandoags receiued the impresse.

The day of their assembly aforesayd at Roanoak, was appointed the 10. of July: all which the premises were discouered by Skyco, the king Menatonon his sonne my prisoner, who hauing once attempted to run away, I laid him in the bylboes, threatning to cut off his head, whome I remitted at Pemisapans request: whereupon he being perswaded that he was our enemie to the death, he did not only feede him with himselfe, but also made him acquainted with all his practises. On the other side, the yong man finding himself as well vsed at my hand, as I had meanes to shew, and that all my companie made much of him, he flatly discouered al vnto me, which also afterwards was reuealed vnto me by one of Pemisapans owne men, ꝑ night before he was slaine.

These mischiefes being al instantly vpon mee, and my companie to be put in execution, stood mee in hand to study how to preuent them, and also to saue all others, which were at that time as aforesaid so farre from me: whereupon I sent to Pemisapan to put suspition out of his heade, that I ment presently to goe to Croatoan, for that I had heard of the arriual of our fleete, (though I in trueth had neither heard nor hoped for so good aduenture,) and that I meant to come by him, to borrow of his men to fish for my company, and to hunt for me at Croatoan, as also to buy some foure dayes prouision to serue for my voyage.

He sent mee word that he would himselfe come ouer to Roanoak, but from day to day hee deferred, only to bring the Weopomioks with him, and the Mandoags, whose time appointed was within 8. dayes after. It was the last of May, 1586. when all his owne sauages began to make their assembly at Roanoak, at his commandement sent abroad vnto them, and I resolued not to stay longer vpon his comming ouer, since he ment to come with so good company, but thought good to go, and visite him with such as I had, which I resolued to do the next day: but that night I ment by the way to giue them in the Iland a Canuisado, and at the instant to seaze vpon all the Canoas about the Iland to keepe him from aduertisements.

But the towne tooke the allarum, before I ment it to them: the occasion was this. I had sent the Master of the light horsemen with a few with him, to gather vp all the Canoas in the setting of the sunne, & to take as many as were going from vs to Adesmocopeio, but to suffer any that came from thence to land: he met with a Canoa, going from the shoare, and ouerthrew the Canoa, and cut off 2. sauages heads: this was not done so secretly but hee was discouered from the shoare, whereupon the cry arose: for in trueth they, priuie to their owne villanous purposes against vs, held as good espial vpon vs, both day and night, as we did vpon them.

The slaughter, and surprise of the Sauages.

The allarum giuen, they tooke themselues to their bowes, and we to our armes: some three or foure of them at the first were slayne with our shot, the rest fled into ꝑ woods: The next morning with the light horseman, & one Canoa, taking 25. with the Colonel of the Chesepians, and the Seriant maior, I went to Adesmocopeio, and being landed sent Pemisapan word by one of his owne sauages that met me at the shore, that I was going to Croatoan, and ment to take him in the way to complaine vnto him of Osocon, who the night past was conueying away my prisoner, whom I had there present tied in an handlocke: hereupon the king did abide my comming to him, and finding my selfe amidst 7. or 8. of his principal Weroances, & followers, (not regarding any of the common sort) I gaue the watchword agreed vpon, (which was Christ our victory,) and immediatly those his chiefe men, and himselfe, had by the mercie of God for our deliuerance, uerance, that which they had purpoſed for vs. The king himſelfe being ſhot thorow by the Colonell with a piſtoll lying on the ground for dead, & I looking as watchfully for the ſauing of Manteos friends, as others were buſie that none of the reſt ſhould eſcape, ſuddenly he ſtarted vp, and ran away as though he had not bene touched, inſomuch as he ouerran all the companie, being by the way ſhot thwart the buttocks by mine Iriſh boy with my Petronell. In the end an Iriſh man ſeruing me, one Nugent and the deputie prouoſt vndertooke him, and following him in the woods ouertooke him, and I in ſome doubt leaſt we had loſt both the king, and my man by our owne negligence to haue bene intercepted by the Sauages, we met him returning out of the woods with Pemiſapans head in his hand. Pemiſapan ſlaine.

This fell out the firſt of June, 1586. and the 8. of the ſame came aduertiſement to me from captaine Stafford, lying at my lord Admirals Iſland, that he had diſcouered a great Fleete of 23. ſailes: but whether they were friends or foes, he could not yet diſcerne, he aduiſed me to ſtand vpon as good gard as I could.

The 9. of the ſaid moneth, he himſelfe came vnto me, hauing that night before, and that ſame day trauelled by land 20. miles, and I muſt truly report of him from the firſt to the laſt, he was the gentleman that neuer ſpared labour or perill either by land or water, faire weather or foule, to performe any ſeruice committed vnto him.

He brought me a letter from the Generall ſir Francis Drake, with a moſt bountifull and honourable offer for the ſupplie of our neceſſities to the performance of the action, we were entered into, and that not onely of victuals, munition and clothing, but alſo of barkes, pinnaces and boates, they alſo by him to be victualled, manned, and furniſhed to my contentation. A letter from ſir Francis Drake.

The 10. day hee arriued in the road of our bad harborough, and comming there to an anker, the 11. day I came to him, whom I found in deeds moſt honourably to performe that which in writing and meſſage he had moſt curteouſly offered, he hauing aforehand propounded the matter to all the captains of his Fleete, and got their liking and conſent thereto.

With ſuch thanks vnto him and his captaines for his care both of vs and of our action, not as the matter deſerued, but as I could both for my companie and my ſelfe, I (being aforehand) prepared what I would deſire, craued at his hands that it would pleaſe him to take with him into England a number of weake, and vnfit men for my good action, which I would deliuer to him, and in place of them to ſupply me of his company, with oare men, artificers, and others. 1

That he would leaue vs ſo much ſhipping and victuall, as about Auguſt then next following, would carry me and all my companie into England, whē we had diſcouered ſomwhat that for lacke of needfull prouiſion in time left with vs as yet remained vndone. 2.

That it would pleaſe him withall to leaue ſome ſufficient maſters not onely to carry vs into England when time ſhould be, but alſo to ſearch the coaſt for ſome better harborow if there were any, and eſpecially to helpe vs to ſome ſmall boats and oare men. 3

Alſo for a ſupplie of calieuers, handweapons, match and lead, tooles, apparell, and ſuch like. 4

He hauing receiued theſe my requeſts according to his vſuall commendable maner of gouernement (as it was told me) calling his captaines to counſell, the reſolution was that I ſhould ſend ſuch of my officers of my companie, as I vſed in ſuch matters, with their notes to goe aboord with him, which were the maſter of the victuals, the keeper of the ſtore, and the Vicetreaſurer, to whom he appointed forthwith for me the Francis, being a very proper barke of 70. tunnes, and tooke preſent order for bringing of victuall aboord her for 100. men for foure moneths withall my other demaunds whatſoeuer, to the vttermoſt.

And further appointed for me two fine pinnaces, and 4. ſmall boats, and that which was to performe all his former liberalitie towards vs, was that he had gotten the full aſſents of two of as ſufficient experimented maſters as were any in his fleete, by iudgement of them that knewe them, with very ſufficient gings to tarie with mee, and to employ themſelues moſt earneſtly in the action, as I ſhould appoynt them, vntill the terme which I promiſed of our returne into England agayne. The names of one of thoſe maſters was Abraham Kendall, the other Griffith Herne.

While theſe things were in hand, the prouiſion aforeſayd being brought, and in bringing aboord, my ſayd maſters being alſo gone aboord, my ſayd barkes hauing accepted of their charge, and mine owne officers with others in like ſort of my company with thē, all which was diſpatched by the ſaid Generall the 12. of the ſaid moneth: the 13. of the ſame there aroſe ſuch an vnwonted ſtorme, and continued foure dayes that had like to haue driuen all on ſhore, if the Lord had not held his holy hand ouer them, and the generall very prouidently foreſeene the worſt himſelfe, then about my diſpatch putting himſelfe aboord: but in the ende hauing driuen ſundry of the Fleete to put to sea the Francis also with all my prouisions, my two masters, and my companie aboord, shee was seene to be free from the same, and to put cleare to sea.

This storme hauing continued from the 13. to the 16. of the moneth, and thus my barke put away as aforesayd, the Generall comming a shore, made a new proffer to me, which was a shippe of 170. tunnes, called the Barke Bonner, with a sufficient master and guide to carie with mee the time appointed, and victualled sufficiently to carie mee and my companie into England with all prouisions as before: but hee tolde mee that hee would not for any thing vndertake to haue her brought into our harbour, and therefore hee was to leaue her in the roade, and to leaue the care of the rest vnto my selfe, and aduised mee to consider with my companie of our case, and to deliuer presently vnto him in writing, what I would require him to doe for vs: which being within his power, hee did assure me as well for his Captaines, as for himselfe should be most willingly performed.

Hereupon calling such Captaines and Gentlemen of my companie as then were at hand, who were all as priuie as my selfe to the Generals offer, their whole request was to mee, that considering the case that we stood in, the weakenesse of our companie, the small number of the same, the carying away of our first appointed barke, with those two especiall masters, with our principall prouisions in the same, by the very hand of God as it seemed, stretched out to take vs from thence: considering also, that his second offer, though most honourable of his part, yet of ours not to be taken, insomuch as there was no possibilitie for her with any safetie to be brought into the harbour: Seeing furthermore our hope for supplie with sir Richard Greenuill so vndoubtedly promised vs before Easter, not yet come, neither then likely to come this yeere considering the doings in England for Flaunders, as also for America, that therefore I would resolue my selfe, with my companie to goe into England in that Fleete, and accordingly to make request to the Generall in all our names, that he would bee pleased to giue vs present passage with him. Which request of ours by my selfe deliuered vnto him, hee most readily assented vnto, and so hee sending immediately his pinnaces vnto our Iland for the fetching away of fewe that there were left with our baggage, the weather was so boysterous, and the pinnaces so often on ground, that the most of all wee had, with all our Cardes, Bookes and writings, were by the Saylers cast ouer boord, the greater number of the Fleete being much agrieued with their long and daungerous abode in that miserable road.

From whence the Generall in the name of the Almightie, waying his ankers (hauing bestowed vs among his Fleete) for the reliefe of whom hee had in that storme sustained more perill of wracke then in all his former most honourable actions against the Spaniards, with praises vnto God for all, set saile the 19. of June, 1586. and arriued in Portesmouth, the of July the same yeere.

The third voyage made by a Ship, sent in the yeere 1586.

to the relief of the Colonie planted in Virginia, at the sole charges of Sir Walter Raleigh.

IN the yeere of our Lord, 1586. sir Walter Raleigh at his owne charge prepared a ship of 100. tunnes, fraighted with all maner of things in most plentiful maner for the supplie and relief of his Colonie then remaining in Virginia: but before they set saile from England, it was after Easter, so that our Colonie halfe dispaired of the comming of any supplie, wherefore euery man prepared for himself, determining resolutely to spend the residue of their life time in that countrey, and for the better performaunce of this their determination, they sowed, planted, and set such things as were necessarie for their relief in so plentifull a maner, as might haue suffised them two yeeres without any further labor: thus trusting to their owne harueft they passed the summer till the tenth of June, at which time their corne which they had sowed was within one fortnight of reaping, but then it happened, that Sir Frauncis Drake in his prosperous returne from the sacking of Saint Domingo, Cartagena, and Saint Augustines determined in his way homeward to visit his countrymen the English Colonie then remayning in Virginia: so passing along the coastes of Florida, he fell with the partes, where our English Colony inhabited, and hauing espyed some of that company, there he ankered, and went alande where he conferred with them of their state and welfare, and howe thinges had past with them: they answered him that they liued all, but hitherto in some scarsitie, and as yet coulde here of no supplye out of England: therefore they requested him that he would leaue with them some two or three shippes, that if in

ſome reaſonable time they heard not out of England, they might then return themſelues: which hee agreed to: whileſt ſome were then writing their letters to ſend into England, and ſome others making repoꝛtes of the accidentes of their trauels each to other, ſome on lande, ſome on booꝛd, a great ſtoꝛme aroſe, and dꝛoue the moſt of their fleete from their ankers to Sea, in which ſhippes, at that inſtant were the chiefeſt of the Engliſh Colony: the reſt on land perceiuing this, haſted to thoſe thꝛee ſayles which were appointed to be left there, and foꝛ feare they ſhould be left behinde, left all thinges ſo confuſedly, as if they had bene chaſed from thence by a mightie armie, and no doubt ſo they were, foꝛ the hande of God came vpon them foꝛ the crueltie, and outrages committed by ſome of them againſt the natiue inhabitantes of that Countrie.

Immediatly after the departing of our Engliſh Colonie out of this paradiſe of the woꝛlde, the ſhippe aboue mentioned ſent, and ſet foꝛth at the charges of Sir VValter Ralegh, and his direction, arriued at Hatoraſk, who after ſome time ſpent in ſeeking our Colony vp in the Countrie, and not finding them, returned with all the afoꝛeſayd pꝛouiſion into England. June.

About fourteene oꝛ fifteene daies after the departure of the afoꝛeſayd ſhippe, Sir Richard Grindfield Generall of Virginia, accompanied with thꝛee ſhippes well appointed foꝛ the ſame voyage arriued there, who not finding the afoꝛeſaid ſhip according to his expectation, noꝛ hearing any newes of our Engliſh Colony, there ſeated, and left by him, Anno 1585. him ſelfe trauailing vp into diuers places of the Countrey, as well to ſee if he could here any newes of the Colony left there by him the yere befoꝛe, vnder the charge of Maſter Lane his deputie, as alſo to diſcouer ſome places of the Countrie: but after ſome time ſpent therein not hearing any newes of them, and finding the place which they inhabited deſolate, yet vnwilling to looſe the poſſeſſion of the Countrie, which Engliſhmen had ſo long holde: after good deliberation he determined to leaue ſome men behinde to retaine poſſeſſion of the Country: whereupon he landed 15. men in the Ile of Roanoake furniſhed plentifully with all maner of pꝛouiſion foꝛ two yeeres, and ſo departed foꝛ England. Sir Richard Grindfield his voyage.

Not long after he fell with the Iſles of Açores, on ſome of which Ilandes he landed, and ſpoyled the Townes of all ſuch thinges as were woꝛth cariage, where alſo he tooke diuers Spanyardes: with theſe, and many other exploytes done by him in this voyage, as well outwarde as homeward, he returned into England.

A briefe and true report of the new found land of Virginia: of the commodities there found and to be raiſed, as well merchantable as others:

Written by Thomas Harriot, ſeruaunt to Sir Walter Raleigh, a member of the Colonie, and there imployed in diſcouering, a full twelue moneth.

Rafe Lane one of her Maieſties Equieres and Gouernour of the Colonie in Virginia aboue mentioned for the time there reſident, To the gentle Reader, wiſheth all happineſſe in the Lord.

ALbeit (gentle Reader) the credite of the reports in this treatiſe contained, can litle be furthered by the teſtimonie of one as my ſelfe, through affection iudged partiall, though without deſert: Neuertheleſſe, foꝛſomuch as I haue bene requeſted by ſome my particular friends, who conceiue more rightly of me, to deliuer freely my knowledge of the ſame, not onely for the ſatisfying of them, but alſo for the true information of any other who ſoeuer, that comes not with a preiudicate minde to the reading thereof: Thus much vpon my credite I am to affirme, that things vniuerſally are ſo truely ſet downe in this treatiſe by the authour thereof, an Actor in the Colonie and a man no leſſe for his honeſtie then learning commendable, as that I dare boldly auouche, it may very well paſſe with the credite of trueth euen amongſt the moſt true relations of this age. Which as for mine owne part I am readie any way with my worde to acknowledge, ſo alſo (of the certaintie thereof aſſured by mine owne experience) with this my publique aſſertion, I doe affirme the ſame. Farewell in the Lord.

To the Aduenturers, Fauourers, and Welwillers of the enterpriſe for the inhabiting and planting in Virginia.

SInce the firſt vndertaking by ſir Walter Ralegh to deale in the action of diſcouering of that Countrey which is now called and knowen by the name of Virginia, many voiages hauing bene thither made at ſundry times to his great charge, as firſt in the yeere 1584. and afterwards in the yeeres 1585, 1586. and now of late this laſt yeere of 1587. There haue bene diuers and variable reportes, with ſome ſlaunderous and ſhamefull ſpeaches bruited abroad by many that returned from thence. Eſpecially of that diſcouerie which was made by the Colonie tranſported by Sir Richard Greenuill in the yeere 1585. being of all the others the moſt principall and as yet of moſt effect, the time of their abode in the countrey being a whole yeere, when as in the other voiage before they ſtaied but ſixe weekes, and the others after were onely for ſupplie and tranſportation, nothing more being diſcouered then had bene before. Which reports haue not done a litle wrong to many that otherwiſe would haue alſo fauoured and aduentured in the action, to the honour and benefite of our nation, beſides the particular profite and credite which would redound to themſelues the dealers therein, as I hope by the ſequell of euents to the ſhame of thoſe that haue auouched the contrary ſhall be manifeſt, if you the aduenturers, fauourers and welwillers doe but either increaſe in number, or in opinion continue, or hauing bene doubtfull, renew your good liking and furtherance to deale therein according to the worthineſſe thereof alreadie found, and as you ſhall vnderſtand hereafter to be requiſite. Touching which worthineſſe through cauſe of the diuerſitie of relations and reports, many of your opinions could not be firme, nor the mindes of ſome that are well diſpoſed, be ſetled in any certaintie.

I haue therefore thought it good beyng one that haue bene in the diſcouerie, and in dealing with the naturall inhabitaunts ſpecially imployed: and hauing therefore ſeene and knowen more then the ordinarie, to impart ſo much vnto you of the fruits of our labours, as that you may know how iniuriouſly the enterpriſe is ſlaundered, and that in publique maner at this preſent, chiefly for two reſpects.

Firſt, that ſome of you which are yet ignorant or doubtfull of the ſtate thereof, may ſee that there is ſufficient cauſe why the chiefe enterpriſer with the fauour of her Maieſtie, notwithſtanding ſuch reportes, hath not onely ſince continued the action by ſending into the countrey againe, and replanting this laſt yeere a new Colonie, but is alſo readie, according as the times and means will afforde, to folow and proſecute the ſame.

Secondly, that you ſeeing and knowing the continuance of the action, by the view hereof you may generally know and learne what the countrey is, and thereupon conſider how your dealing therein if it proceed, may returne you profite and gaine, be it either by inhabiting and planting, or otherwiſe in furthering thereof.

And leaſt that the ſubſtance of my relation ſhould be doubtfull vnto you, as of others by reaſon of their diuerſitie, I will firſt open the cauſe in a few words wherefore they are ſo different, referring my ſelf to your fauourable conſtructions, and to be adiudged of as by good conſideration you ſhall find cauſe.

Of our companie that returned ſome for their miſdemeanour and ill dealing in the countrey, haue bene there worthily puniſhed, who by reaſon of their bad natures, haue maliciouſly not onely ſpoken ill of their Gouernours, but for their ſakes ſlaundered the countrey it ſelfe. The like alſo haue thoſe done which were of their conſort.

Some being ignorant of the ſtate thereof, notwithſtanding ſince their returne amongſt their friends and acquaintance, and alſo others, eſpecially if they were in companie where they might not be gaineſayd, would ſeeme to know ſo much as no men more, and make no men ſo great trauellers as themſelues. They ſtoode ſo much, as it may ſeeme, vpon their credite and reputation, that hauing bene a twelue moneth in the countrey, it would haue bene a great diſgrace vnto them as they thought, if they could not haue ſayd much whether it were true or falſe. Of which ſome haue ſpoken of more then euer they ſawe, or otherwiſe knew to be there: Other ſome haue not bene aſhamed to make abſolute denial of that, which although not by them, yet by others is moſt certainly and there plentifully knowen, and other ſome make difficulties of thoſe things they haue no ſkill of.

The cauſe of their ignorance was, in that they were of that many, that were neuer out of the Iſland where wee were ſeated, or not farre, or at the leaſt wiſe in few places els, during the time of our abode in the countrey, or of that many, that after golde and ſiluer was not ſo ſoone found,

found, as it was by them looked for, had litle or no care of any other thing but to pamper their bellies, or of that many which had litle vnderſtanding, leſſe diſcretion, and more tongue then was needfull or requiſite.

Some alſo were of a nice bringing vp, only in cities or townes, or ſuch as neuer (as I may ſay) had ſeene the world before. Becauſe there were not to be found any Engliſh cities, nor ſuch faire houſes, nor at their owne wiſh any of their old accuſtomed daintie food, nor any ſoft beds of downe or feathers, the countrey was to them miſerable, and their reports thereof according.

Becauſe my purpoſe was but in briefe to open the cauſe of the varietie of ſuch ſpeeches, the particularities of them, and of many enuious, malicious and ſlanderous reports and deuiſes els, by our owne countreymen beſides, as trifles that are not woorthie of wiſe men to bee thought vpon, I meane not to trouble you withal, but wil paſſe to the commodities, the ſubſtance of that which I haue to make relation of vnto you.

The treatiſe whereof for your more readie view and eaſier vnderſtanding, I will diuide into three ſpeciall partes. In the firſt I will make declaration of ſuch commodities there already found or to bee raiſed, which will not onely ſerue the ordinarie turnes of you which are and ſhall be the planters and inhabitaunts, but ſuch an ouerplus ſufficiently to be yeelded, or by men of ſkill to be prouided, as by way of traffique and exchaunge with our owne nation of England, will enrich your ſelues the prouiders: thoſe that ſhall deale with you, the enterpriſers in generall, and greatly profite our owne countrymen, to ſupplie them with moſt things which heretofore they haue bene faine to prouide either of ſtrangers or of our enemies, which commodities for diſtinction ſake, I call Merchantable.

In the ſecond, I will ſet downe all the commodities which we know the countrey by our experience doth yeeld of it ſelfe for victuall and ſuſtenance of mans life, ſuch as is vſually fed vpon by the inhabitants of the countreys, as alſo by vs during the time we were there.

In the laſt part I will make mention generally of ſuch other commodities beſides, as I am able to remember, and as I ſhall thinke behoouefull for thoſe that ſhall inhabite, and plant there to know of, which ſpecially concerne building, as alſo ſome other neceſſarie vſes: with a briefe deſcription of the nature and maners of the people of the countrey.

The firſt part of Marchantable commodities.

Silke of graſſe, or graſſe Silke. There is a kinde of graſſe in the countrey, vpon the blades whereof there groweth very good Silke in forme of a thinne glittering ſkinne to bee ſtript off. It groweth two foote and an halfe high or better: the blades are about two foote in length, and halfe inche broad. The like groweth in Perſia, which is in the ſelfe ſame climate as Virginia, of which very many of the Silke workes that come from thence into Europe are made. Hereof if it be planted and ordered as in Perſia, it cannot in reaſon bee otherwiſe, but that there will riſe in ſhort time great profite to the dealers therein, ſeeing there is ſo great vſe and vent thereof as well in our countrey as elſewhere. And by the meanes of ſowing and planting it in good ground, it will be farre greater, better, and more plentifull then it is. Although notwithſtanding there is great ſtore thereof in many places of the countrey growing naturally and wild, which alſo by proofe here in England, in making a piece of ſilke Grogran, we found to be excellent good.

Worme Silke. In many of our iourneys wee found Silke wormes faire and great, as big as our ordinarie Walnuts. Although it hath not bene our happe to haue found ſuch plentie as elſewhere to be in the countrey wee haue heard of, yet ſeeing that the countrey doeth naturallie breed and nouriſh them, there is no doubt but if Arte be added in planting of Mulberie trees and others fit for them in commodious places, for their feeding and nouriſhing, and ſome of them carefully gathered and husbanded in that ſort, as by men of ſkill is knowen to be neceſſarie: there will riſe as great profit in time to the Virginians, as thereof doeth now to the Perſians, Turkes, Italians and Spaniards.

Flaxe and Hempe. The truth is, that of Hempe and Flaxe there is no great ſtore in any one place together, by reaſon it is not planted but as the ſoyle doeth yeeld of it ſelfe: and how ſo euer the leafe and ſtemme or ſtalke doe differ from ours, the ſtuffe by iudgement of men of ſkill is altogether as good as ours. And if not, as further proofe ſhould finde otherwiſe, we haue that experience of the ſoyle, as that there cannot bee ſhewed any reaſon to the contrary, but that it will growe there excellent well, and by planting will bee yeelded plentifully, ſeeing there is ſo much ground whereof ſome may well bee applied to ſuch purpoſes. What benefite hereof may grow in cordage and linnens who cannot easily vnderstand.

Allum. There is a veine of earth along the sea coast for the space of fortie or fiftie miles, whereof by the iudgement of some that haue made triall here in England, is made good Allum, of that kind which is called Roche Allum. The richnesse of such a commoditie is so well knowen, that I needs not to say any thing thereof. The same earth doeth also yeeld White Copresse, Nitrum, and Alumen plumeum, but nothing so plentifully as the common Allum, which be also of price and profitable.

Wapeih. A kind of earth so called by the naturall inhabitants, very like to Terra sigillata, and hauing bene refined, it hath bene found by some of our Phisitions and Chirurgions, to bee of the same kind of vertue, and more effectuall. The inhabitants vse it very much for the cure of sores and wounds: there is in diuers places great plentie, and in some places of a blew sort.

Pitch, Tarre, Rozen and Turpentine. There are those kindes of trees which yeeld them abundantly and great store. In the very same Iland where we were seated, being fifteene miles of length, and fiue or six miles in breadth, there are few trees els but of the same kind, the whole Iland being full.

Sassafras. Called by the inhabitants Winauk, a kinde of wood of most pleasaunt and sweete smell, and of most rare vertues in phisike for the cure of many diseases. It is found by experience to bee farre better and of more vses then the Wood which is called Guaiacum, or Lignum vitæ. For the description, the maner of vsing, and the manifold vertues thereof, I referre you to the Booke of Monardus, translated and entituled in English, The ioyfull newes from the West Indies.

Cedar. A very sweete wood and fine timber, whereof if nestes of chestes be there made, or timber thereof fitted for sweete and fine bedsteads, tables, deskes, lutes, virginals and many things els, (of which there hath bene proofe made alreadie) to make vp fraight with other principal commodities, will yeeld profite.

Wine. There are two kindes of grapes that the soile doeth yeeld naturally, the one is small and sowre of the ordinarie bignesse as ours in England, the other farre greater and of himselfe lushious sweete. When they are planted and husbanded as they ought, a principall commoditie of wines by them may be raised.

Oile. There are two sortes of Walnuts both holding oyle, but the one farre more plentifull then the other. When there are mils and other deuises for the purpose, a commoditie of them may be raised because there are infinite store. There are also three seuerall kindes of Berries in the fourme of Oke akornes, which also by the experience and vse of the inhabitaunts, wee finde to yeeld very good and sweete oyle. Furthermore, the Beares of the countrey are commonly very fat, and in some places there are many. Their fatnesse because it is so liquid, may well bee termed oyle, and hath many speciall vses.

Furres. All along the Sea coast there are great store of Otters, which being taken by weires and other engines made for the purpose, wil yeeld good profite. We hope also of Marterne furres, and make no doubt by the relation of the people, but that in some places of the country there are store, although there were but two skins that came to our hands. Luzarnes also wee haue vnderstanding of, although for the time we saw none.

Deere skinnes dressed after the maner of Chamoes or vndressed, are to be had of the naturall inhabitants thousands yeerely by way of traffique for trifles, and no more waste or spoile of Deere then is and hath bene ordinarily in time before.

Ciuet cats. In our trauels there was found one to haue bene killed by a saluage or inhabitant, and in another place the smell where one or more had lately bene before, whereby wee gather besides then by the relation of the people, that there are some in the countrey: good profite will rise by them.

Iron. In two places of the countrey specially, one about fourescore, and the other sixe score miles from the Forte or place where wee dwelt, wee founde neere the water side the ground to bee rockie, which by the triall of a Minerall man, was found to holde iron richly. It is found in many places of the countrey els, I know nothing to the contrarie, but that it may bee allowed for a good merchauntable commoditie, considering there the small charge for the labour and feeding of men: the infinite store of wood, the want of wood and deerenesse thereof in England, and the necessitie of ballasting of ships.

Copper. An hundred and fiftie miles into the maine, in two townes we found with the inhabitaunts diuers small plates of Copper, that had bene made as wee vnderstoode by the inhabitaunts that dwell further into the Countrey, where as they say are mountaynes and Riuers that yeeld also white graines of mettall, which is to be deemed siluer. For confirmation whereof, at the time of our first arriuall in the country, I saw with some others with me, two small pieces of siluer grosly beaten, about the weight of of a testrone, hanging in the eares of a Wiroans or Chiefe Lord that dwelt about fourescore miles from vs: of whome through enquiry, by the number of dayes e the way, I learned that it had come to his hands from the same place or neere, where I after vnderstood the copper was made, and the white graines of mettall found. The aforesaid copper we also found by triall to holde siluer.

Pearle: Sometimes in feeding on muscles we found some pearle: but it was our happe to meet with ragges, or of a pide colour: not hauing yet discouered those places where we heard of better and more plenty. One of our company, a man of skill in such matters, had gathered together from among the Sauage people about fiue thousand: of which number he chose so many as made a kayre chaine, which for their likenesse and vniformity in roundnesse, orientnesse, and pidenesse of many excellent colours, with equalitie in greatnesse, were very kayre and rare: and had therefore beene presented to her Maiesty, had we not by casualty, and through extremity of a storme lost them, with many things els in comming away from the country.

Sweet gummes of diuers kindes, and many other Apothecary druggs, of which we will make speciall mention, when we shall receiue it from such men of skill in that kinde, that in taking reasonable paines shall discouer them more particularly then we haue done, and then now I can make relation of, for want of the examples I had prouided and gathered, and are now lost, with other things by casualty before mentioned.

Dies of diuers kindes: There is Shoemake well knowne, and vsed in England for blacke: the seed of an herbe called Wasebur, little small roots called Chappacor, and the barke of the tree called by the inhabitants Tangomockonomindge: which Dies are for diuers sorts of red: their goodnesse for our English clothes remaine yet to be prooued. The inhabitants vse them only for the dying of hayre, and colouring of their faces, and mantles made of Deere skinnes: and also for the dying of rushes to make artificiall works withall in their mats and baskets: hauing no other thing besides that they account of, apt to vse them for. If they will not prooue merchantable, there is no doubt but the planters there shall finde apt vses for them, as also for other colours which we know to be there.

Woad: a thing of so great vent and vses amongst English Diers, which can not be yeelded sufficiently in our owne country for spare of ground, may be planted in Virginia, there being ground enough. The growth thereof neede not to be doubted, when as in the Islands of the Azores it groweth plentifully, which is in the same climate. So likewise of Madder.

We caryed thither Suger canes to plant, which being not so well preserued as was requisite, and besides the time of the yeere being past for their setting when we arriued, we could not make that proofe of them as we desired. Notwithstanding, seeing that they grow in the same climate, in the South part of Spaine, and in Barbary, our hope in reason may yet continue. So likewise for Orenges and Limmons: there may be planted also Quinses. Whereby may grow in reasonable time if the action be diligently prosecuted, no small commodities in Sugers, Suckets, and Marmelades.

Many other commodities by planting may there also be raised, which I leaue to your discreet and gentle considerations: and many also may be there, which yet we haue not discouered. Two more commodities of great value, one of certainty, and the other in hope, not to be planted, but there to be raised, and in short time to be prouided and prepared, I might haue specified. So likewise of those commodities already set downe, I might haue said more: as of the particular places where they are found, and best to be planted and prepared: by what meanes, and in what reasonable space of time they might be raised to profit, and in what proportion: but because others then wellwillers might be therewithall acquainted, not to the good of the action, I haue wittingly omitted them: knowing that to those that are well disposed, I haue vttered according to my promise and purpose, for this part sufficient.

The

The ſecond part of ſuch commodities as Virginia is knowen to yeeld, for victuall and ſuſtenance of mans life, vſually fed vpon by the naturall inhabitants: as alſo by vs, during the time of our aboad. And firſt of ſuch as are ſowed and husbanded.

PAgatowr, a kinde of graine ſo called by the inhabitants: the ſame in the Weſt Indies is called Mayze: Engliſh men call it Guinney wheat, or Turkie wheat, according to the names of the countries from whence the like hath bene brought. The graine is about the bignelle of our ordinary Engliſh peaze, and not much different in forme and ſhape: but of diuers colours: ſome white, ſome red, ſome yellow, and ſome blew. All of them yeeld a very white and ſweete flowre: being vſed according to his kinde, it maketh a very good bread. We made of the ſame in the countrey ſome mault, whereof was brued as good ale as was to be deſired. So likewiſe by the helpe of hops, thereof may be made as good beere. It is a graine of maruellous great increaſe: of a thouſand, fifteene hundred, and ſome two thouſand folde. There are three ſorts, of which two are ripe in eleuen and twelue weeks at the moſt, ſometimes in tenne, after the time they are ſet, and are then of height in ſtalke about ſixe or ſeuen foot. The other ſort is ripe in fourteene, and is about tenne foot high, of the ſtalks, ſome beare foure heads, ſome three, ſome one, and two: euery head conteining fiue, ſixe, or ſeuen hundred graines, within a few more or leſſe. Of theſe graines, beſides bread, the inhabitants make victuall, either by parching them, or ſeething them whole vntill they be broken: or boiling the flowre with water into a pappe.

Okindgier, called by vs Beanes, becauſe in greatneſſe and partly in ſhape they are like to the beanes in England, ſauing that they are flatter, of more diuers colours, and ſome pide. The leafe alſo of the ſtemme is much different. In taſte they are altogether as good as our Engliſh peaze.

Wickonzowr, called by vs Peaze, in reſpect of the beanes for diſtinction ſake, becauſe they are much leſſe, although in forme they little differ: but in goodneſſe of taſte much like, and are farre better then our Engliſh peaze. Both the beanes and peaze are ripe in tenne weeks after they are ſet. They make them victuall either by boiling them all to pieces into a broth, or boiling them whole vntill they be ſoft, and begin to breake, as is vſed in England, either by themſelues, or mixtly together: ſometime they mingle of the wheat with them: ſometime alſo, being whole ſodden, they bruſe or punne them in a morter, and thereof make loaues or lumps of do wiſh bread, which they vſe to eat for variety.

Macocquer, according to their ſeuerall formes, called by vs Pompions, Mellions, and Gourds, becauſe they are of the like formes as thoſe kindes in England. In Virginia ſuch of ſeuerall formes are of one taſte, and very good, and do alſo ſpring from one ſeed. There are of two ſorts: one is ripe in the ſpace of a moneth, and the other in two moneths.

There is an herbe which in Dutch is called Melden. Some of thoſe that I deſcribe it vnto, take it to be a kinde of Orage: it groweth about foure or fiue foot high: of the ſeed thereof they make a thicke broth, and pottage of a very good taſte: of the ſtalke by burning into aſhes they make a kinde of ſalt earth, wherewithall many vſe ſometimes to ſeaſon their broths: other ſalt they know not. We our ſelues vſed the leaues alſo for potherbs.

There is alſo another great herbe, in forme of a Marigolde, about ſixe foot in height, the head with the floure is a ſpanne in breadth. Some take it to be Planta Solis: of the ſeeds hereof they make both a kinde of bread and broth.

All the aforeſaid commodities for victuall are ſet or ſowed, ſometimes in grounds apart and ſeuerally by themſelues, but for the moſt part together in one ground mixtly: the maner therof, with the meſſing and preparing of the ground, becauſe I will note vnto you the fertility of the ſoile, I thinke good briefly to deſcribe.

The ground they neuer fatten with mucke, doong, or any other thing, neither plow nor digge it as we in England, but onely prepare it in ſort as followeth. A few dayes before they ſowe or ſet, the men with woodden inſtruments, made almoſt in forme of mattocks or hoes with long handles: the women with ſhort peckers or parers, becauſe they vſe them ſitting, of a foot long and about fiue inches in breadth, doe onely breake the vpper part of the ground to rayſe vp the weedes, graſſe, and olde ſtubbes of corne ſtalkes with their roots. The which after a day or twoes drying in the Sunne, being ſcrapt vp into many ſmall heaps, to ſaue them labour for carrying them away, they burne into aſhes. (And whereas ſome may thinke that they vſe the aſhes for to better better the groũd: I ſay that then they would either diſperſe the aſhes abroad, which we obſerued they do not, except the heaps be too great: or els would take ſpeciall care to ſet their corne where the aſhes lie, which alſo we finde they are careleſſe of.) And this is all the huſbanding of their ground that they vſe.

Then their ſetting or ſowing is after this maner. Firſt for their corne, beginning in one corner of the plot, with a pecker they make a hole, wherein they put foure graines, with that care they touch not one another (about an inch aſunder) and couer them with the moulde againe: and ſo throughout the whole plot, making ſuch holes, and vſing them after ſuch maner: but with this regard, that they be made in ranks, euery ranke differing from other halfe a fathome or a yard, and the holes alſo in euery ranke, as much. By this meanes there is a yard ſpare ground betweene euery hole: where according to diſcretion heere and there, they ſet as many beanes and peaze: in diuers places alſo among the ſeeds of Macocquer, Melden, and Planta ſolis.

The ground being thus ſet according to the rate, by vs experimented, an Engliſh acre conteining fortie pearches in length, and foure in breedth, doth there yeeld in croppe or encrome of corne, beanes and peaze, at the leaſt two hundreth London buſhels: beſides the Macocquer, Melden, and Planta ſolis: when as in England fortie buſhels of our wheat yeelded out of ſuch an acre, is thought to be much.

I thought alſo good to note this vnto you, that you which ſhall inhabite, and plant there, may know how ſpecially that countrey corne is there to be preferred before ours: Beſides, the manifolde wayes in applying it to victuall, the increaſe is ſo much, that ſmall labor and paines is neceſſary in reſpect that muſt be vſed for ours. For this I can aſſure you, that according to the rate we haue made proofe of, one man may prepare and huſband ſo much ground (hauing once borne corne before) with leſſe then foure and twentie houres labour, as ſhall yeeld him victuall in a large proportion for a twelue moneth, if he haue nothing elſe but that which the ſame ground will yeeld, and of that kinde onely which I haue before ſpoken of: the ſayd ground being alſo but of fiue and twentie yards ſquare. And if need require, but that there is ground enough, there might be raiſed out of one and the ſelfeſame ground two harueſts or encromes: for they ſow or ſet, and may at any time when they thinke good, from the midſt of March vntill the end of June: ſo that they alſo ſet when they haue eaten of their firſt croppe. In ſome places of the countrey notwithſtanding they haue two harueſts, as we haue heard, out of one and the ſame ground.

For Engliſh corne neuertheleſſe, whether to vſe or not to vſe it, you that inhabite may do as you ſhall haue farther cauſe to thinke beſt. Of the growth you need not to doubt: for barly, oats, and peaze, we haue ſeene proofe of, not being purpoſely ſowen but fallen caſually in the worſt ſort of ground, and yet to be as fayre as any we haue euer ſeene heere in England. But of wheat, becauſe it was muſty, and had taken ſalt water, we could make no triall: and of rie we had none. Thus much haue I digreſſed, and I hope not vnneceſſarily: now will I returne againe to my courſe, and intreat of that which yet remaineth appertaining to this chapter.

There is an herbe which is ſowed apart by it ſelfe, and is called by the inhabitants Vppowoc: In the Weſt Indies it hath diuers names, according to the ſeuerall places and countreyes where it groweth, and is vſed: the Spanyards generally call it Tobacco. The leaues thereof being dried and brought into powder: they vſe to take the fume or ſmoke thereof, by ſucking it through pipes made of clay, into their ſtomacke and head: from whence it purgeth ſuperfluous fleame and other groſſe humors, and openeth all the pores and paſſages of the body: by which meanes the vſe thereof not onely preſerueth the body from obſtructions, but alſo (if any be, ſo that they haue not beene of too long continuance) in ſhort time breaketh them: whereby their bodyes are notably preſerued in health, and know not many grieuous diſeaſes, wherewithall we in England are oftentimes afflicted.

This Vppowoc is of ſo precious eſtimation amongſt them, that they thinke their gods are maruellouſly delighted therewith: whereupon ſometime they make hallowed fires, and caſt ſome of the powder therein for a ſacrifice: being in a ſtorme vpon the waters, to pacifie their gods, they caſt ſome vp into the ayre and into the water: ſo a weare for fiſh being newly ſet vp, they caſt ſome therein and into the ayre: alſo after an eſcape of danger, they caſt ſome into the ayre likewiſe: but all done with ſtrange geſtures, ſtamping, ſometime dancing, clapping of hands, holding vp of hands, and ſtaring vp into the heauens, vttering therewithall, and chattering ſtrange words and noiſes.

We our ſelues during the time we were there, vſed to ſucke it after their maner, as alſo ſince our returne, and haue found many rare and wonderfull experiments of the vertues thereof: of which the relation would require a volume by it ſelfe: the vſe of it by ſo many of late, men and women

women of great calling as else, and some learned Physicians also, is sufficient witnesse.

And these are all the commodities for sustenance of life that I know and can remember they vse to husband: all else that follow are found growing naturally or wilde.

Of Roots.

OPenauk are a kinde of roots of round forme, some of the bignesse of walnuts, some farre greater, which are found in moist and marish grounds growing many together one by another in ropes, or as though they were fastened with a string. Being boiled or sodden they are very good meat.

Okeepenauk are also of round shape, found in drie grounds: some are of the bignesse of a mans head. They are to be eaten as they are taken out of the ground, for by reason of their drinesse they will neither roste nor seethe. Their taste is not so good as of the former roots, notwithstanding for want of bread, and sometimes for variety the inhabitants vse to eat them with fish or flesh, and in my iudgement they do as well as the houshold bread made of rie heere in England.

Kaishucpenauk a white kinde of roots about the bignesse of hennes egges, and neere of that forme: their taste was not so good to our seeming as of the other, and therefore their place and maner of growing, not so much cared for by vs: the inhabitants notwithstanding vsed to boyle and eat many.

Tsinaw a kinde of root much like vnto that which in England is called the China root brought from the East Indies. And we know not any thing to the contrary but that it may be of the same kinde. These roots grow many together in great clusters, and do bring foorth a brier stalke, but the leafe in shape farre vnlike: which being supported by the trees it groweth nerest vnto, will reach or climbe to the top of the highest. From these roots while they be new or fresh, being chopt into small peeces, and stampt, is strained with water a iuice that maketh bread, and also being boyled, a very good spoonemeat in maner of a gelly, and is much better in taste if it be tempered with oile. This Tsinaw is not of that sort, which by some was caused to be brought into England for the China root, for it was discouered since, & is in vse as is aforesaid: but that which was brought hither is not yet knowen, neither by vs nor by the inhabitants to serue for any vse or purpose, although the roots in shape are very like.

Coscushaw, some of our company tooke to be that kinde of root which the Spaniards in the West Indies call Cassauy, whereupon also many called it by that name: it groweth in very muddie pooles, and moist grounds. Being vsed according to the countrey maner, it maketh a good bread, and also a good spoonemeat, and is vsed very much by the inhabitants: the iuice of this root is poison, and therefore heed must be taken before any thing be made therewithall: either the roots must be first sliced and dried in the Sunne, or by the fire, and then being punned into floure, will make good bread: or els while they are greene they are to be pared, cut into peeces, and stampt: loaues of the same to be laid neere or ouer the fire vntill it be sowre, and then being well punned againe, bread, or spoonemeat very good in taste and wholesome may be made thereof.

Habascon is a root of hote taste, almost of the forme and bignesse of a parsnip, of it selfe it is no victuall, but onely a helpe being boiled together with other meats.

There are also Leeks, differing little from ours in England, that grow in many places of the countrey, of which, when we came in places where they were, we gathered and eat many, but the naturall inhabitants neuer.

Of Fruites.

CHestnuts, there are in diuers places great store: some they vse to eat raw, some they stampe and boile to make spoonemeat, and with some being sodden, they make such a maner of dow bread as they vse of their beanes before mentioned.

Walnuts: there are two kindes of walnuts, and of them infinite store: in many places where are very great woods for many miles together, the third part of trees are walnut trees. The one kinde is of the same taste and forme, or little differing from ours of England, but that they are harder and thicker shelled: the other is greater, and hath a very ragged and hard shell: but the kernell great, very oily and sweet. Besides their eating of them after our ordinarie maner, they breake them with stones, and punne them in mortars with water, to make a milke which they vse to put into some sorts of their spoonemeat: also among their sod wheat, peaze, beanes and pompions which maketh them haue a farre more pleasant taste.

Medlars,

Medlars a kinde of very good fruit, ſo called by vs chiefly for theſe reſpects: firſt in that they are not good vntill they be rotten: then in that they open at the head as our medlars, and are about the ſame bigneſſe: otherwiſe in taſte and colour they are farre different: for they are as red as cheries, and very ſweet: but whereas the cherie is ſharpe ſweet, they are luſhious ſweet.

Metaqueſunnauk, a kinde of pleaſant fruit almoſt of the ſhape and bigneſſe of Engliſh peares, but that they are of a perfect red colour as well within as without. They grow on a plant whoſe leaues are very thicke, & full of prickles as ſharpe as needles. Some that haue bin in the Indies, where they haue ſeene that kinde of red die of great price, which is called Cochinele, to grow, do deſcribe his plant right like vnto this of Metaqueſunnauk, but whether it be the true Cochenile or a baſtard or wilde kinde, it can not yet be certified: ſeeing that alſo as I heard, Cochenile is not of the fruit, but found on the leaues of the plant: which leaues for ſuch matter we haue not ſo ſpecially obſerued.

Grapes there are of two ſorts, which I mentioned in the merchantable commodities.

Straberies there are as good and as great as thoſe which we haue in our Engliſh gardens.

Mulberies, Applecrabs, Hurts or Hurtleberies, ſuch as we haue in England.

Sacquemummener a kinde of berries almoſt like vnto capers, but ſomewhat greater, which grow together in cluſters vpon a plant or herbe that is ſolid in ſhallow waters: being boiled eight or nine houres according to their kinde are very good meat and wholeſome, otherwiſe if they be eaten they will make a man for the time frantike or extremely ſicke.

There is a kinde of Reed which beareth a ſeed almoſt like vnto our rie or wheat, and being boiled is good meat.

In our trauels in ſome places we found Wilde peaze like vnto ours in England, but that they were leſſe, which are alſo good meat.

Of a kinde of fruit or berry in forme of Acornes.

There is a kinde of berrie or acorne, of which there are fiue ſorts that grow on ſeuerall kindes of trees: the one is called Sagatemener, the ſecond Oſamener, the third Pummuckoner. Theſe kinde of acornes they vſe to dry vpon hurdles made of reeds, with fire vnderneath, almoſt after the maner as we dry malt in England. When they are to be vſed, they firſt water them vntill they be ſoft, and then being ſod, they make a good victuall, either to eat ſo ſimply, or els being alſo pounded to make loaues or lumps of bread. Theſe be alſo the three kindes, of which I ſaid before the inhabitants vſed to make ſweet oile.

Another ſort is called Sapummener, which being boiled or parched, doth eat and taſte like vnto cheſtnuts. They ſometime alſo make bread of this ſort.

The fifth ſort is called Mangummenauk, and is the acorne of the ſixt kinde of Oake, the which being dried after the maner of the firſt ſorts, and afterward watered, they boile them, and their ſeruants, or ſometime the chiefe themſelues, either for variety or for want of bread, do eat them with their fiſh or fleſh.

Of Beaſts.

Deere, in ſome places there are great ſtore: neere vnto the ſea coaſt they are of the ordinarie bigneſſe as ours in England, and ſome leſſe: but further vp into the countrey, where there is better food, they are greater: they differ from ours onely in this, their tailes are longer, and the ſnags of their hornes looke backward.

Conies, Thoſe that we haue ſeene, and all that we can heare of are of a grey colour like vnto hares: in ſome places there are ſuch plenty that all the people of ſome townes make them mantles of the furre or flue of the ſkinnes of thoſe they vſually take.

Saquenuckot and Maquowoc, two kindes of ſmall beaſts, greater then conies, which are very good meat. We neuer tooke any of them our ſelues, but ſometime eat of ſuch as the inhabitants had taken and brought vnto vs.

Squirels which are of a grey colour, we haue taken and eaten.

Beares which are all of blacke colour. The beares of this country are good meat: the inhabitants in time of winter do vſe to take and eat many, ſo alſo ſometime did we. They are taken commonly in this ſort. In ſome Iſlands or places where they are, being hunted for, as ſoone as they haue ſpiall of a man, they preſently runne away, and then being chaſed, they clime and get vp the next tree they can, from whence with arrowes they are ſhot downe ſtarke dead, or with thoſe woods that they may after easily be killed: we sometime shot them downe with our caliuers.

that

I haue the names of eight and twenty seuerall sorts of beasts, which I haue heard of to be here and there dispersed in the countrey, especially in the maine: of which there are onely twelue kindes that we haue yet discouered, and of those that be good meat we know only them before mentioned. The inhabitants sometime kill the Lyon, & eat him: and we sometime as they came to our hands of their Woolues or Wooluish dogges, which I haue not set downe for good meat, least that some would vnderstand my iudgement therein to be more simple then needeth, although I could allege the difference in taste of those kindes from ours, which by some of our company haue beene experimented in both.

Of Foule.

TVrkie cocks and Turkie hennes: Stockdoues: Partridges: Cranes: Hernes: and in winter great store of Swannes and Geese. Of all sorts of foule I haue the names in the country language, of foure score and sixe, of which number, besides those that be named, we haue taken, eaten, and haue the pictures as they were there drawen, with the names of the inhabitants of seuerall strange sorts of water foule eight, and seuentéene kindes more of land foule, although we haue seene and eaten of many more, which for want of leasure there for the purpose, could not be pictured: and after we are better furnished and stored vpon further discouery, with their strange beasts, fish, trees, plants, and herbs, they shall be also published.

There are also Parrots, Faulcons, and Marlin hauks, which although with vs they be not vsed for meat, yet for other causes I thought good to mention.

Of Fish.

FOr foure moneths of the yeere, February, March, Aprill and May, there are plenty of Sturgeons: And also in the same moneths of Herrings, some of the ordinary bignesse as ours in England, but the most part farre greater, of eighteene, twentie inches, and some two foot in length and better: both these kindes of fish in those moneths are most plentifull, and in best season, which we found to be most delicate and pleasant meat.

There are also Trouts: Porpoises: Rayes: Oldwines: Mullets: Plaice: & very many other sorts of excellent good fish, which we haue taken and eaten, whose names I know not but in the countrey language: we haue of twelue sorts more the pictures, as they were drawen in the countrey, with their names.

The inhabitants vse to take them two maner of wayes, the one is by a kinde of weare made of reeds, which in that countrey are very strong. The other way, which is more strange, is with poles made sharpe at one end, by shooting them into the fish after the maner as Irish men cast darts, either as they are rowing in their boats, or els as they are wading in the shallowes for the purpose.

There are also in many places plenty of these kindes which follow:

Sea crabbes, such as we haue in England.

Oisters, some very great, and some small, some round, and some of a long shape: they are found both in salt water and brackish, and those that we had out of salt water are far better then the other as in our countrey.

Also Muscles: Scalops: Periwinkles: and Creuises.

Seekanauk, a kinde of crusty shell fish, which is good meat, about a foot in breadth, hauing a crustie taile, many legges like a crab, and her eyes in her backe. They are found in shallowes of waters, and sometime on the shoare.

There are many Tortoyses both of land and sea kinds, their backs and bellies are shelled very thicke, their head, feet, and taile, which are in appearance, seeme ougly, as though they were members of a serpent or venemous beasts: but notwithstanding they are very good meat, as also their egges. Some haue beene found of a yard in breadth and better.

And thus haue I made relation of all sorts of victuall that we fed vpon for the time we were in Virginia, as also the inhabitants themselues, as farre forth as I know and can remember, or that are specially worthy to be remembred.

The

The third and laſt part of ſuch other things as are behouefull for thoſe which ſhall plant and inhabite to know of, with a de- ſcription of the nature and maners of the people of the Countrey.

Of commodities for building and other neceſſary vſes.

THoſe other things which I am moſt to make rehearſall of, are ſuch as concerne building, and other mechanicall neceſſarie vſes, as diuers ſorts of trees for houſe and ſhippe timber, and other vſes els: Alſo lime, ſtone, and bricke, leaſt that being not mentioned ſome might haue bene doubted of, or by ſome that are malitious reported the contrary.

Okes, there are as faire, ſtraight, tall, and as good timber as any can be, and alſo great ſtore, and in ſome places very great.

Walnut trees, as I haue ſaid before very many, ſome haue bene ſeene excellent faire timber of foure and fiue fathome, and aboue foureſcore foote ſtreight without bough.

Firre trees fit for maſts of ſhips, ſome very tall and great.

Rakiock, a kinde of trees ſo called that are ſweete wood, of which the inhabitants that were nerre vnto vs doe commonly make their boates or Canoes of the forme of crowes, onely with the helpe of fire, hatchets of ſtones, and ſhels: we haue knowen ſome ſo great being made in that ſort of one tree that they haue carried well 20. men at once, beſides much baggage: the timber being great, tall, ſtreight, ſoft, light, and yet tough ynough I thinke (beſides other vſes) to be fit alſo for maſts of ſhips.

Cedar, a ſweete wood good for ſeelings, cheſts, boxes, bedſteads, lutes, virginals, and many things els, as I haue alſo ſaid before. Some of our companie which haue wandered in ſome places where I haue not bene, haue made certaine affirmation of Cyprus which for ſuch and other excellent vſes, is alſo a wood of price and no ſmall eſtimation.

Maple, and alſo Wich-hazle, whereof the inhabitants vſe to make their bowes.

Holly a neceſſary thing for the making of birdlime.

Willowes good for the making of weares and wheles to take fiſhe after the Engliſh maner, although the inhabitants vſe onely reedes, which becauſe they are ſo ſtrong as alſo flexible, do ſerue for that turne very well and ſufficiently.

Beech and Aſhe, good for caſke hoopes: and if neede require, plowe worke, as alſo for many things els.

Elme.

Saſſafras trees.

Aſcopo a kinde of tree very like vnto Lawrel, the barke is hot in taſte and ſpicie, it is very like to that tree which Monardus deſcribeth to be Caſſia Lignea of the Weſt Indies.

There are many other ſtrange trees whoſe names I know not but in ỹ Virginian language, of which I am not notable, neither is it ſo conuenient for the preſent to trouble you with particular relation: ſeeing that for timber and other neceſſary vſes I haue named ſufficient. And of many of the reſt, but that they may be applied to good vſe, I know no cauſe to doubt.

Now for ſtone, bricke and lime, thus it is. Neere vnto the Sea coaſt where wee dwelt, there are no kinde of ſtones to be found (except a fewe ſmall pebbles about foure miles off) but ſuch as haue bene brought from further out of the maine. In ſome of our voyages wee haue ſeene diuers hard raggie ſtones, great pebbles, and a kinde of grey ſtone like vnto marble, of which the inhabitants make their hatchets to cleeue wood. Upon inquirie wee heard that a little further vp into the Countrey were of all ſortes very many, although of quarries they are ignorant, neither haue they vſe of any ſtone whereupon they ſhould haue occaſion to ſeeke any. For if euery houſhold haue one or two to cracke nuts, grinde ſhels, whet copper, and ſometimes other ſtones for hatchets, they haue ynough: neither vſe they any digging, but onely for graues about three foote deepe: and therefore no marueile that they knowe neither quarries, nor lime ſtones, which both may be in places neerer then they wot of.

In the meane time vntil there be diſcouerie of ſufficient ſtore in ſome place or other conuenient, the want of you which are ỹ ſhalbe the planters therin may be as well ſupplied by bricke: for the making whereof in diuers places of the Countrey there is clay both excellent good, and plentie, and also by lime made of oyster shels, and of others burnt, after the maner as they vse in the Iles of Tenet and Shepy, and also in diuers other places of England: Which kinde of lime is well knowen to be as good as any other. And of oyster shels there is plentie ynough: for besides diuers other particuler places where are abundance, there is one shallowe sounde along the coast, where for the space of many miles together in length, & two or three miles in breadth, the ground is nothing els, being but halfe a foote or a foote vnder water for the most part.

Thus much can I say further more of stones, that about 120. miles from our fort neere the water in the side of a hil, was found by a Gentleman of our company, a great veine of hard ragge stones, which I thought good to remember vnto you.

Of the nature and maners of the people.

TResteth I speake a worde or two of the naturall inhabitants, their natures and maners, leauing large discourse thereof vntill time more conuenient hereafter: nowe onely so farre forth, as that you may knowe, howe that they in respect of troubling our inhabiting & planting, are not to be feared, but that they shall haue cause both to feare and loue vs, that shall inhabite with them.

They are a people clothed with loose mantles made of deere skinnes, and aprons of the same round about their middles, all els naked, of such a difference of statures onely as we in England, hauing no edge tooles or weapons of yron or steele to offend vs withal, neither knowe they howe to make any: those weapons that they haue, are onely bowes made of Witchhazle, and arrowes of reedes, flat edged truncheons also of wood about a yard long, neither haue they any thing to defend themselues but targets made of barks, and some armours made of sticks wickered together with thread.

Their townes are but small, and neere the sea coast but fewe, some containing but tenne or twelue houses: some 20. the greatest that wee haue seene, hath bene but of 30. houses: if they bee walled, it is onely done with barkes of trees made fast to stakes, or els with poles onely fixed vpright, and close one by another.

Their houses are made of small poles, made fast at the tops in rounde forme after the maner as is vsed in many arbories in our gardens of England, in most townes couered with barkes, and in some with artificial matts made of long rushes, from the tops of the houses downe to the ground. The length of them is commonly double to the breadth, in some places they are but 12. and 16. yards long, and in other some we haue seene of foure and twentie.

In some places of the Countrey, one onely towne belongeth to the gouernment of a Wiroans or chiefe Lorde, in other some two or three, in some fiue, eight, and more, the greatest Wiroans that yet we had dealing with, had but eighteene townes in his gouernment, & able to make not aboue seuen or eight hundreth fighting men at the most. The language of euery gouernment is different from any other, and the further they are distant, the greater is the difference.

Their maner of warres amongst themselues, is either by sudden surprising one an other most commonly about the dawning of the day, or moone light, or els by ambushes, or some subtile deuises. Set battels are very rare, except it fall out where there are many trees, where either part may haue some hope of defence, after the deliuerie of euery arrowe, in leaping behinde some or other.

If there fall out any warres betweene vs and them, what their fight is likely to bee, wee hauing aduantages against them so many maner of wayes, as by our discipline, our strange weapons and deuises els, especially ordinance great and small, it may easily be imagined, by the experience we haue had in some places, the turning vp of their heeles against vs in running away was their best defence.

In respect of vs they are a people poore, and for want of skill and iudgement in the knowledge and vse of our things, doe esteeme our trifles before thinges of greater value: Notwithstanding, in their proper maner (considering the want of such meanes as wee haue,) they seeme very ingenious. For although they haue no such tooles, nor any such crafts, Sciences and artes as wee, yet in those thinges they doe, they shewe excellencie of wit. And by howe much they vpon due consideration shall finde our maner of knowledges and crafts, to exceede theirs in perfection, and speede for doing or execution, by so much the more is it probable that they should desire our friendships and loue, and haue the greater respect for pleasing and obeying vs. Whereby may be hoped, if meanes of good gouernement be vsed, that they may in short time be brought to ciuilitie, and the imbracing of true religion.

Some religion they haue alreadie, which although it be farre from the trueth, yet being as it is, there is hope it may be the easier and sooner reformed.

They beleeue that there are many Gods, which they call Mantoac, but of different sorts and degrees, one onely chiefe and great God, which hath bene from all eternitie. Who, as they affirme, when hee purposed to make the worlde, made first other gods of a principall order, to bee as meanes and instruments to be vsed in the creation and gouernement to followe, and after the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, as petrie gods, and the instruments of the other order more principall. First (they say) were made waters, out of which by the gods was made all diuersitie of creatures that are visible or inuisible.

For mankinde they say a woman was made first, which by the working of one of the goddes, conceiued and brought forth children: And in such sort they say they had their beginning.

But how many yeeres or ages haue passed since, they say they can make no relation, hauing no letters nor other such meanes as we to keepe recordes of the particularities of times past, but onely tradition from father to sonne.

They thinke that all the gods are of humane shape, and therefore they represent them by images in the formes of men, which they call Kewasowok, one alone is called Kewas: them they place in houses appropriate or temples, which they call Machicomucke, where they worship, pray, sing, and make many times offering vnto them. In some Machicomuck wee haue seene but one Kewas, in some two, and in other some three. The common sort thinke them to bee also gods.

They beleeue also the immortalitie of the soule, that after this life as soone as the soule is departed from the body, according to the workes it hath done, it is either caried to heauen the habitacle of gods, there to enioy perpetuall blisse and happinesse, or els to a great pitte or hole, which they thinke to be in the furthest partes of their part of the world towarde the Sunne set, there to burne continually: the place they call Popogusso.

For the confirmation of this opinion, they tolde mee two stories of two men that had bene lately dead and reuiued againe, the one happened but fewe yeeres before our comming into the Countrey of a wicked man, which hauing bene dead and buried, the next day the earth of the graue being seene to moue, was taken vp againe, who made declaration where his soule had bene, that is to say, very neere entring into Popogusso, had not one of the gods saued him, and gaue him leaue to returne againe, and teache his friendes what they shoulde doe to auoyde that terrible place of torment.

The other happened in the same yeere we were there, but in a towne that was threescore miles from vs, and it was tolde mee for strange newes, that one being dead, buried, and taken vp againe as the first, shewed that although his body had lien dead in the graue, yet his soule was aliue, and had trauailed farre in a long broade way, on both sides whereof grewe most delicate and pleasant trees, bearing more rare and excellent fruites, then euer hee had seene before, or was able to expresse, and at length came to most braue and faire houses, neere which hee metre his father, that had bene dead before, who gaue him great charge to goe backe againe, and shewe his friends what good they were to doe to enioy the pleasures of that place, which when he had done he should after come againe.

What subtilitie soeuer be in the Wiroances and priestes, this opinion worketh so much in many of the common and simple sort of people, that it maketh them haue great respect to their Gouernours, and also great care what they doe, to auoyde torment after death, and to enioy blisse, although notwithstanding there is punishment ordeined for malefactours, as stealers, whoremongers, and other sorts of wicked doers, some punished with death, some with forfeitures, some with beating, according to the greatnesse of the factes.

And this is the summe of their Religion, which I learned by hauing special familiaritie with some of their priestes. Wherein they were not so sure grounded, nor gaue such credite to their traditions and stories, but through conuersing with vs they were brought into great doubes of their owne, and no small admiration of ours, with earnest desire in many, to learne more then wee had meanes for want of perfect vtterance in their language to expresse.

Most things they sawe with vs, as Mathematicall instruments, sea Compasses, the vertue of the lodestone in drawing yron, a perspective glasse whereby was shewed many strange sights, burning glasses, wilde fireworkes, gunnes, bookes, writing and reading, spring clockes that seeme to goe of themselues, and many other things that wee had, were so strange vnto them, and so farre exceeded their capacities to comprehend the reason and meanes how they should be made and done, that they thought they were rather the workes of gods then of men, or at the least wise they had bene giuen and taught vs of the gods. Which made many of them to haue such opinion of vs, as that if they knewe not the trueth of God and religion alreadie, it was rather to bee had from vs, whome God so specially loued then from a people that were so simple, as they found themselues to be in comparison of vs. Whereupon greater credite was giuen vnto that we spake of, concerning such matters.

Many times and in euery towne where I came, according as I was able, I made declaration of the contents of the Bible, that therein was set foorth the true and onely God, and his mightie workes, that therein was conteined the true doctrine of saluation through Christ, with many particularities of Miracles and chiefe pointes of Religion, as I was able then to vtter, and thought fit for the time. And although I tolde them the booke materially and of it selfe was not of any such vertue, as I thought they did conceiue, but onely the doctrine therein conteined: yet would many bee glad to touche it, to embrace it, to kisse it, to holde it to their breastes and heades, and stroke ouer all their body with it, to shewe their hungrie desire of that knowledge which was spoken of.

The Wiroans with whome we dwelt called Wingina, and many of his people would be glad many times to be with vs at our prayers, and many times call vpon vs both in his owne towne, as also in others whither he sometimes accompanied vs, to pray and sing Psalmes, hoping thereby to be partaker of the same effects which we by that meanes also expected.

Twise this Wiroans was so grieuously sicke that hee was like to die, and as he lay languishing, doubting of any helpe by his owne priestes, and thinking he was in such danger for offending vs and thereby our God, sent for some of vs to pray and bee a meanes to our God that it would please him either that hee might liue, or after death dwell with him in blisse, so likewise were the requests of many others in the like case.

On a time also when their corne began to wither by reason of a drought which happened extraordinarily, fearing that it had come to passe by reason that in some thing they had displeased vs, many would come to vs and desire vs to pray to our God of England, that hee would preserue their corne, promising that when it was ripe we also should be partakers of the fruite.

There could at no time happen any strange sickenesse, losses, hurtes, or any other crosse vnto them, but that they would impute to vs the cause or meanes thereof, for offending or not pleasing vs.

One other rare and strange accident, leauing others, will I mention before I ende, which mooued the whole Countrey that either knewe or heard of vs, to haue vs in wonderfull admiration.

There was no towne where we had any subtile deuise practised against vs, we leauing it vnpunished or not reuenged (because we sought by all meanes possible to win them by gentlenesse) but that within a fewe dayes after our departure from euery such towne, the people began to die very fast, and many in short space, in some townes about twentie, in some fourtie, and in one sixe score, which in trueth was very many in respect of their nombers. This happened in no place that we could learne, but where we had bene, where they vsed some practise against vs, and after such time. The disease also so strange, that they neither knew what it was, nor how to cure it, the like by report of the oldest men in the Countrey neuer happened before, time out of minde. A thing specially obserued by vs, as also by the naturall inhabitants themselues.

Insomuch that when some of the inhabitants which were our friends, and especially the Wiroans Wingina, had obserued such effects in foure or fiue townes to followe their wicked practises, they were perswaded that it was the worke of our God through our meanes, & that we by him might kil and slay whom we would without weapons, and not come neere them.

And thereupon when it had happened that they had vnderstanding that any of their enemies had abused vs in our iourneys, hearing that we had wrought no reuenge with our weapons, and fearing vpon some cause the matter should so rest: did come and intreate vs that wee would be a meanes to our God that they as others that had dealt ill with vs might in like sort die, alleadging how much it would be for our credite and profite, as also theirs, and hoping furthermore that we would doe so much at their requests in respect of the friendship we professed them.

Whose entreaties although we shewed that they were vngodly, affirming that our God would not subiect himselfe to any such prayers and requests of men: that in deede all thinges haue bene and were to be done according to his good pleasure as hee had ordained: and that we to shewe our

ſelues his true ſeruants ought rather to make petition for the contrary, that they with them might liue together with vs, be made partakers of his trueth and ſerue him in righteouſneſſe, but notwithſtanding in ſuch ſort, that wee referre that as all other things, to bee done according to his diuine will and pleaſure, and as by his wiſedome he had ordained to be beſt.

Yet becauſe the effect fell out ſo ſuddenly and ſhortly after according to their deſires, they thought neuertheleſſe it came to paſſe by our meanes, and that wee in vſing ſuch ſpeaches vnto them, did but diſſemble the matter, and therefore came vnto vs to giue vs thankes in their maner, that although wee ſatisfied them not in promiſe, yet in deedes and effect wee had fulfilled their deſires.

This marueilous accident in all the Countrey wrought ſo ſtrange opinions of vs, that ſome people could not tel whether to thinke vs gods or men, and the rather becauſe that all the ſpace of their ſickenes, there was no man of ours knowen to die, or that was ſpecially ſicke: they noted alſo that we had no women amongſt vs, neither that we did care for any of theirs.

Some therefore were of opinion that wee were not borne of women, and therefore not mortall, but that wee were men of an olde generation many yeeres paſt, then riſen againe to immortalitie.

Some would likewyſe ſeeme to prophecie, that there were more of our generation yet to come, to kill theirs and take their places, as ſome thought the purpoſe was, by that which was alreadie done.

Thoſe that were immediatly to come after vs they imagined to be in the ayre, yet inuiſible and without bodies, and that they by our intreatie and for the loue of vs, did make the people to die in that ſort as they did, by ſhooting inuiſible bullets into them.

To confirme this opinion, their Phiſitions (to excuſe their ignorance in curing the diſeaſe,) would not bee aſhamed to ſay, but earneſtly make the ſimple people beleeue, that the ſtrings of blood that they ſucked out of the ſicke bodies, were the ſtrings wherewithall the inuiſible bullets were tied and caſt.

Some alſo thought that we ſhotte them our ſelues out of our pieces, from the place where wee dwelt, and killed the people in any ſuch towne that had offended vs as we liſted, how farre diſtant from vs ſoeuer it were.

And other ſome ſaide, that it was the ſpeciall worke of God for our ſakes, as wee our ſelues haue cauſe in ſome ſort to thinke no leſſe, whatſoeuer ſome doe, or may imagine to the contrary, ſpecially ſome Aſtrologers, knowing of the Eclipſe of the Sunne which we ſawe the ſame yeere before in our voyage thitherward, which vnto them appeared very terrible. And alſo of a Comet which beganne to appeare but a fewe dayes before the beginning of the ſaide ſickenes. But to exclude them from being the ſpeciall cauſes of ſo ſpecial an accident, there are further reaſons then I thinke fit at this preſent to be alleadged.

Theſe their opinions I haue ſet downe the more at large, that it may appeare vnto you that there is good hope they may be brought through diſcreete dealing and gouernement to the imbracing of the trueth, and conſequently to honour, obey, feare and loue vs.

And although ſome of our companie towards the ende of the yeere, ſhewed themſelues to fierce, in ſlaying ſome of the people, in ſome townes, vpon cauſes that on our part, might eaſily ynough haue bene borne withall: yet notwithſtanding, becauſe it was on their part iuſtly deſerued, the alteration of their opinions generally and for the moſt part concerning vs is the leſſe to be doubted. And whatſoeuer els they may be, by carefulneſſe of our ſelues neede nothing at all to be feared.

The beſt neuertheleſſe in this, as in all actions beſides is to bee endeuoured and hoped, and of the worſt that may happen notice to bee taken with conſideration, and as much as may bee eſchewed.

The Concluſion.

NOwe I haue (as I hope) made relation not of ſo fewe and ſmall thinges, but that the Countrey (of men that are indifferent and well diſpoſed) may bee ſufficiently liked: If there were no more knowen then I haue mentioned, which doubteleſſe and in great reaſon is nothing to that which remaineth to bee diſcouered, neither the ſoyle, nor commodities. As wee haue reaſon ſo to gather by the difference wee founde in our trauailes, for although all which I haue before ſpoken of, haue bene diſcouered and experimented not farre from the Sea coaſt, where was our abode and moſt of our trauailing: yet ſometimes as wee made our iourneis further into the maine and Countrey, we found the ſoile to be fatter, the trees greater and to growe thinner, the grounde more firme and deeper mould, more and larger champions, finer graſſe, and as good as euer we ſaw any in England; in ſome places rockie and farre more high and hillie ground, more plentie of their fruites, more abundance of beaſtes, the more inhabited with people, and of greater pollicie and larger dominions, with greater townes and houſes.

Why may we not then looke for in good hope from the inner partes of more and greater plentie, as well of other thinges, as of thoſe which wee haue alreadie diſcouered? Unto the Spaniards happened the like in diſcouering the maine of the Weſt Indies. The maine alſo of this Countrey of Virginia, extending ſome wayes ſo many hundreth of leagues, as otherwiſe then by the relation of the inhabitants wee haue moſt certaine knowledge of, where yet no Chriſtian prince hath any poſſeſſion or dealing, cannot but yeelde many kindes of excellent commodities, which we in our diſcouerie haue not yet ſeene.

What hope there is els to bee gathered of the nature of the climate, being anſwerable to the Iſland of Iapan, the land of China, Perſia, Iury, the Iſlands of Cyprus & Candy, the South parts of Greece, Italy, and Spaine, and of many other notable and famous Countreis, becauſe I meane not to be tedious, I leaue to your owne conſideration.

Whereby alſo the excellent temperature of the aire there at all ſeaſons, much warmer then in England, and neuer ſo vehemently hot, as ſometimes is vnder and betweene the Tropikes, or neere them, cannot be knowen vnto you without further relation.

For the holſomneſſe thereof I neede to ſay but thus much: that for all the want of proviſion, as firſt of Engliſh victual, excepting for twentie dayes, we liued onely by drinking water, and by the victual of the Countrey, of which ſome ſortes were very ſtrange vnto vs, and might haue bene thought to haue altered our temperatures in ſuch ſort, as to haue brought vs into ſome grieuous and dangerous diſeaſes: Secondly the want of Engliſh meanes, for the taking of beaſtes, fiſh, and foule, which by the helpe onely of the inhabitants and their meanes, could not be ſo ſuddenly and eaſily prouided for vs, nor in ſo great nomber and quantities, nor of that choiſe as otherwiſe might haue bene to our better ſatisfaction and contentment. Some want alſo wee had of clothes. Furthermore, in all our trauailes which were moſt ſpeciall and often in the time of winter, our lodging was in the open aire vpon the ground. And yet I ſay for all this, there were but foure of our whole companie (being one hundreth and eighte) that died all the yeere and that but at the latter ende thereof and vpon none of the aforeſaide cauſes. For all foure, eſpecially three were feeble & weake, and ſickly perſons before euer they came thither, and thoſe that knewe them, much maruelled that they liued ſo long being in that caſe, or had aduentured to trauaile.

Seeing therefore the ayre there is ſo temperate and holſome, the ſoile ſo fertile, and yeelding ſuch commodities, as I haue before mentioned, the voyage alſo thither to and fro being ſufficiently experimented, to be performed twiſe a yeere with eaſe, and at any ſeaſon thereof: And the dealing of Sir Walter Ralegh ſo liberall in large giuing and graunting lande there, as is alreadie knowen, with many helpes and furtherances elſe: (The leaſt that he hath graunted hath bene fiue hundreth acres to a man only for the aduenture of his perſon) I hope there remaines no cauſe whereby the action ſhould be miſliked.

If that thoſe which ſhall thither trauaile to inhabite and plant, be but reaſonably prouided for the firſt yeere, as thoſe are which were tranſported the laſt, and being there, doe vſe but that diligence and care, as is requiſite, and as they may with eaſe: There is no doubt, but for the time following, they may haue victuals that are excellent good and plentie enough, ſome more Engliſh ſortes of cattell alſo hereafter, as ſome haue bene before, and are there yet remayning, may, and ſhall be (God willing) thither tranſported. So likewiſe, our kinde of fruites, rootes, and hearbes, may be there planted and ſowed, as ſome haue bene alreadie, and prooue well: And in ſhort time alſo they may rayſe of thoſe ſortes of commodities which I haue ſpoken of, as ſhall both enriche themſelues, as alſo others that ſhall deale with them.

And this is all the fruite of our labours, that I haue thought neceſſary to aduertiſe you of at this preſent: What elſe concerneth the nature and maners of the inhabitants of Virginia, the nomber with the particularities of the voyages thither made, and of the actions of ſuch as haue bene by Sir Walter Ralegh therein, and there imployed, many worthy to be remembred, as of the firſt diſcouerers of the Countrey: of our Generall for the time Sir Richard Greinuile, and after his departure of our Gouernour there Maſter Rafe Lane, with diuers other directed and imployed vnder their gouernement: Of the Captaines and Maſters of the voyages made ſince for tranſportation, of the Gouernour and aſſiſtants of thoſe already tranſported, ted, as of many perſons, accidents, and things els, I haue ready in a diſcourſe by it ſelfe, in manner of a Chronicle, according to the courſe of times: and when time ſhall be thought conuenient, ſhall be alſo publiſhed.

Thus referring my relation to your fauourable conſtructions, expecting good ſucceſſe of the action, from him which is to be acknowledged the author and gouernour, not onely of this, but of all things els, I take my leaue of you, this moneth of Februarie, 1588.

The fourth voyage made to Virginia, with three ſhippes, in the yeere, 1587. Wherein was tranſported the ſecond Colonie.

IN the yeere of our Lorde, 1587. Sir Walter Ralegh intending to perſeuere in the planting of his Countrey of Virginia, prepared a newe Colonie of one hundred and fiftie men to be ſent thither, vnder the charge of Iohn White, whom he appointed Gouernour, and alſo appointed vnto him twelue Aſſiſtants, vnto whome he gaue a Charter, and incorporated them by the name of Gouernour, and Aſſiſtants of the Citie of Ralegh in Virginia.

Aprill.

OVr Fleete being in number three ſaile, viz. the Admirall, a ſhippe of one hundred and twentie tunnes: a Flie boate, and a Pinneſſe, departed the fiue and twentieth of Aprill from Porteſmouth, and the ſame day came to an anker at the Cowes, in the Iſle of Wight, where we ſtaied eight daies.

Maye.

THe 5. of Maye, at nine of the clocke at night, we came to Plymmouth, where we remained the ſpace of two daies.

The 8. we waied anker at Plymmouth, and departed thence for Virginia.

The 16. Simon Ferdinando Maſter of our Admirall, lewdly forſooke our Flie boate, leauing her diſtreſſed in the Baye of Portingall.

Iune.

THe 19. we fell with * Dominica, and the ſame euening we ſailed betweene it, and Guadalupe: the 21. the Flie boate alſo fell with Dominica.

* One of the Iſles of the Indias, inhabited with Sauages.

The 22. we came to an anker at an Iſle, called Santa Cruz, where all the planters were ſet on land, ſtaying there till the 25. of the ſame moneth. At our firſt landing on this Iſland, ſome of our women, and men, by eating a ſmall fruite, like greene apples, were fearefully troubled with a ſudden burning in their mouthes, and ſwelling of their tongues ſo bigge, that ſome of them could not ſpeake. Alſo a child by ſucking of one of thoſe womens breaſt, had at that inſtant his mouth ſet on ſuch a burning, that it was ſtrange to ſee how the infant was tormented for the time: but after 24. howres, it ware away of it ſelfe.

Alſo the firſt night of our being on this Iſland, we tooke fiue great Tortoſes, ſome of them of ſuch bignes, that ſixteene of our ſtrongeſt men were tired with carrying of one of them but from the Sea ſide, to our cabbins. In this Iſland we found no watring place, but a ſtanding ponde, the water whereof was ſo euill, that many of our companie fell ſicke with drinking thereof: and as many as did but waſh their faces with that water, in the morning before the Sunne had drawen away the corruption, their faces did ſo burne, and ſwell, that their eies were ſhut vp, and could not ſee in fiue or ſixe daies or longer.

The ſecond day of our abode there, we ſent forth ſome of our men to ſearch the Iſland for freſh water, three one way, and two another way. The Gouernour alſo, with ſixe others, went vp to the toppe of an high hill, to view the Iſland, but could perceaue no ſigne of any men, or beaſtes, nor any goodnes, but Parots, and trees of Guiacum. Returning backe to our Cabbins another way, he found in the deſcent of a hill, certaine potſheards of ſauage making, made of the earth of that Iſland: whereupon it was iudged, that this Iſland was inhabited with Sauages, though Fernando had tolde vs for certaine, the contrarie. The ſame day at night, the reſt of our companie nie very late returned to the Gouernour. The one companie affirmed, that they had seene in a valley, eleuen Sauages, and diuers houses halfe a mile distant from the steepe, or toppe of the hill where they staied. The other companie had found running out of a high rocke, a very faire spring of water, whereof they brought three bottles to the companie: for before that time, wee drunke the stinking water of the pond.

The same second day at night, Captaine Stafford, with the pinnesse, departed from our fleete, riding at Santa Cruz, to an Island, called Beake, lying neere S. Iohns, being so directed by Ferdinando, who assured him he should there finde great plentie of sheepe. The next day at night, our planters left Santa Cruz, and came all aboord, and the next morning after, being the 25. of June, we waied anker, and departed from Santa Cruz.

The seuen and twentieth we came to anker at Cottea, where we found the pinnesse riding, at our comming.

The 28. we waied anker at Cottea, and presently came to anker at S. Iohns in Musketas Bay, where we spent three daies vnprofitably, in taking in fresh water, spending in the meane time more beere, then the quantitie of the water came vnto.

Iulie.

"Musketas Baye, is a harbour vpon the South side of S. Iohns Island, where we take in fresh water.

The first we waied anker at "Muskitoes Baye, where were left behind two Irish men of our companie, Darbie Glauen, and Denice Carrell, bearing along the coast of S. Iohns, till euening, at which time we fell with Rosse Baye. At this place Fernando had promised wee should take in salt, and had caused vs before, to make and prouide as many sackes for that purpose, as we could. The Gouernour also, for that he vnderstoode there was a Towne in the bottome of the Baye, not farre from the salt hils, appointed thirtie shotte, ten pikes, and ten targets, to man the pinnesse, and to goe a land for salt. Fernando perceauing them in a readines, sent to the Gouernour, vsing great perswasions with him, not to take in salt there, saying that he knewe not well, whether that the same were the place or not: also, that if the pinnesse went into the Bay, she could not without great danger come backe, till the next day at night, and that if in the meane time any storme should rise, the Admirall were in danger to be cast away. Whilest he was thus perswading, he caused the lead to be cast, and hauing craftily brought the shippe in three fathome, and a halfe water, he suddenly began to sweare, and teare God in peeces, dissembling great danger, crying to him at the helme, beare vp hard, beare vp hard: so we went off, and were disappointed of our salt, by his meanes.

"A pleasant and fruitfull Countrey, lying on the west ende of S. Johns Island where groweth plentie of Oringes, Lemmons, Plantons, and Pynes.

The next day, sailing along the West ende of S. Iohns, the Gouernour determined to goe a land in S. Germans "Baye, to gather yong plants of Oringes, Pines, Mameas, and Platonos, to set at Virginia, which we knewe might easily be had, for that they growe neere the shoare, and the places where they growe, well knowen to the Gouernour, and some of the planters: but our Simon denied it, saying: he would come to an anker at Hispaniola, and there lande the Gouernour, and some other of the Assistants, with the pinnesse, to see if he could speake with his friend Alanson, of whome he hoped to be furnished both of cattell, and all such thinges as wee woulde haue taken in at S. Iohns: but hee meant nothing lesse, as it plainely did appeare to vs afterwards.

The next day after, being the third of Iulie, wee sawe Hispaniola, and bare with the coast all that day, looking still when the pinnesse should be prepared to goe for the place where Fernando his friend Alanson was: but that day passed, and we sawe no preparation for landing in Hispaniola.

The 4. of Iulie, sailing along the coast of Hispaniola, vntill the next day at noone, and no preparation yet seene for the staying there, we hauing knowledge that we were past the place where Alanson dwelt, and were come with Isabella: hereupon Fernando was asked by the Gouernour, whether he meant to speake with Alanson, for the taking in of cattell, and other things, according to his promise, or not: but he answered, that he was now past the place, and that Sir Walter Ralegh to de him, the French Ambassador certified him, that the king of Spaine had sent for Alanson into Spaine: wherefore he thought him dead, and that it was to no purpose to touch there in any place, at this voyage.

The next day, we left sight of Hispaniola, and haled off for Virginia, about 4. of the clocke in the afternoone.

The first of Iulie, wee came to the Islande Caycos, wherein Fernando saide were two salt pondes, assuring vs if they were drie, wee might finde salt to shift with, vntill the next supplie, ſupplie, but it prooued as true as the finding of ſheepe at Beake. In this Iſland, whileſt Ferdinando ſolaced himſelfe a ſhoare, with one of the company, in part of the Iſland, others ſpent the latter part of that day in other parts of the Iſland, ſome to ſeeke the ſalt ponds, ſome fowling, ſome hunting Swannes, whereof we caught many. The next daye, earely in the morning, we waied anker, leauing Caycos, with good hope, the firſt lande that wee ſawe next, ſhould be Virginia.

About the 16. of July, we fell with the maine of Virginia, which Simon Fernando tooke to be the Iſland of Croatoan, where we came to an anker, and rode there two or three daies: but finding himſelfe deceaued, he waied, and bare along the coaſt, where in the night, had not Captaine Stafforde bene more carefull in looking out, then our Simon Fernando, wee had beene all caſt away vpon the breache, called the Cape of Feare, for wee were come within two cables length vpon it: ſuch was the careleſnes, and ignorance of our Maſter.

The two and twentieth of Julie, we arriued ſafe at Hatoraske, where our ſhippe and pinneſſe ankered: the Gouernour went aboord the pinneſſe, accompanied with foure of his beſt men, intending to paſſe vp to Roanoake foorthwith, hoping there to finde thoſe fifteene Engliſhmen, which Sir Richard Greenuill had left there the yeere before, with whome he meant to haue conference, concerning the ſtate of the Countrey, and Sauages, meaning after he had ſo done, to returne againe to the fleete, and paſſe along the coaſt to the Baye of Cheſepiok, where we intended to make our ſeate and forte, according to the charge giuen vs among other directions in writing, vnder the hande of Sir Walter Ralegh: but alſoone as we were put with our pinneſſe from the ſhippe, a Gentleman by the meanes of Fernando, who was appointed to returne for England, called to the ſailers in the pinneſſe, charging them not to bring any of the planters backe againe, but leaue them in the Iſland, except the Gouernour, and two or three ſuch as he appooued, ſaying that the Summer was farre ſpent, wherefore hee would land all the planters in no other place. Unto this were all the ſailers, both in the pinneſſe, and ſhippe, perſwaded by the Maſter, wherefore it booted not the Gouernour to contend with them, but paſſed to Roanoake, and the ſame night, at Sunne ſet, went aland on the Iſland, in the place where our fifteene men were left, but we found none of them, nor any ſigne, that they had bene there, ſauing onely we found the bones of one of thoſe fifteene, which the Sauages had ſlaine long before.

The 23. of July, the Gouernour, with diuers of his companie, walked to the North ende of the Iſland, where Maſter Ralfe Lane had his forte, with ſundry neceſſarie and decent dwelling houſes, made by his men about it the yeere before, where wee hoped to finde ſome ſignes, or certaine knowledge of our fifteene men. When we came thither, wee found the forte raſed downe, but all the houſes ſtanding vnhurt, ſauing the neather roomes of them, and alſo of the forte, were ouergrowen with Melons of diuers ſortes, and Deere within them, feeding on thoſe Melons: ſo we returned to our companie, without hope of euer ſeeing any of the fifteene men liuing.

The ſame day order was giuen, that euery man ſhould be imployed for the repairing of thoſe houſes, which we found ſtanding, and alſo to make other newe Cottages, for ſuch as ſhoulde neede.

The 25. our Flie boate, and the reſt of our planters arriued all ſafe at Hatoraske, to the great ioye, and comfort of the whole companie: but the Maſter of our Admirall, Fernando grieued greatly at their ſafe comming: for he purpoſely left them in the Baye of Portingall, and ſtole away from them in the night, hoping that the Maſter therof, whoſe name was Edward Spicer, for that he neuer had beene in Virginia, would hardly finde the place, or elſe being left in ſo dangerous a place as that was, by meanes of ſo many men of warre, as at that time were aboord, they ſhould ſurely be taken, or ſlaine: but God diſappointed his wicked pretenſes.

The eight and twentieth, George Howe, one of our twelue Aſſiſtants was ſlaine by diuers Sauages, which were come ouer to Roanoake, either of purpoſe to eſpie our companie, and what number we were, or elſe to hunt Deere, whereof were many in the Iſland. Theſe Sauages beeing ſecretly hidden among high reedes, where oftentimes they finde the Deere aſleepe, and ſo kill them, eſpied our man wading in the water alone, almoſt naked, without any weapon, ſaue onely a ſmall forked ſticke, catching Crabs therewithall, and alſo being ſtraied two miles from his companie, ſhotte at him in the water, where they gaue him fifteene wounds with their arrowes: and after they had ſlaine him with their woodden ſwoordes, beat his head in peeces, and fled ouer the water to the maine.

On the thirtieth of Julie, Maſter Stafford, and twentie of our men, paſſed by water to the Iſland of Croatoan, with Manteo, who had his mother, and many of his kinred, dwelling in that in that Island, of whome we hoped to vnderstande some newes of our fifteene men, but especially to learne the disposition of the people of the Countrey towards vs, and to renew our olde friendshippe with them. At our first landing, they seemed as though they would fight with vs: but perceauing vs begin to marche with our shot towards them, they turned their backes, and fled. Then Manteo their countreyman, called to them in their owne language, whom, assoone as they heard, they returned, and threwe away their bowes, and arrowes, and some of them came vnto vs, embracing and entertaining vs friendly, desiring vs not to gather or spill any of their corne, for that they had but little. We answered them, that neither their corne, nor any other thing of theirs, should be diminished by any of vs, and that our comming was onely to renew the olde loue that was betweene vs, and them, at the first, and to liue with them as brethren, and friendes: which answere seemed to please them well, wherefore they requested vs to walke vp to their Towne, who there feasted vs after their manner, and desired vs earnestly, that there might be some token or badge giuen them of vs, whereby we might know them to be our friendes, when we met them any where out of the Towne or Island. They tolde vs further, that for want of some such badge, diuers of them were hurt the yeere before, being founde out of the Island by Master Lane his companie, whereof they shewed vs one, which at that very instant laye lame, and had lien of that hurt euer since: but they said, they knewe our men mistooke them, and hurt them in steede of Wingmoes men, wherefore they held vs excused.

August.

THe next day, we had conference further with them, concerning the people of Secota, Aquascogoc, & Pomiock, willing them of Croatoan, to certifie the people of those townes, that if they would accept our friendship, we would willingly receaue them againe, and that all vnfriendly dealings past on both partes, should be vtterly forgiuen, and forgotten. To this the chiefe men of Croatoan answered, that they would gladly doe the best they could, and within seuen daies, bring the Weroances, and chiefe Gouernours of those townes with them, to our Gouernour at Roanoak, for their answere. We also vnderstoode of the men of Croatoan, that our man Master Howe, was slaine by the remnant of Wingmoes men, dwelling then at Dasamongueponke, with whome Winchese kept companie: and also we vnderstood by them of Croatoan, how that the 15. Englishmen left at Roanoak the yeere before, by Sir Richard Greenuill, were suddenly set vpon, by 30. of the men of Secota, Aquascogoc, and Dasamongueponke, in manner following. They conueied themselues secretly behind the trees, neere the houses, where our men carelesly liued: and hauing perceaued that of those 15. they could see but 11. onely, two of those Sauages appeared to the 11. Englishmen, calling to them by friendly signes, that but two of their chiefest men should come vnarmed to speake with those two Sauages, who seemed also to be vnarmed. Wherefore two of the chiefest of our Englishmen, went gladly to them: but whilest one of those Sauages traitorously embraced one of our men, the other with his sword of wood, which he had secretly hidden vnder his mantell, stroke him on the head, and slewe him, and presently the other eighe and twentie Sauages shewed themselues: the other Englishman perceauing this, fled to his companie, whome the Sauages pursued with their bowes, and arrowes, so fast, that the Englishmen were forced to take the house, wherein all their victuall, and weapons were: but the Sauages foorthwith set the same on fire, by meanes whereof, our men were forced to take vp such weapons as came first to hand, and without order to runne foorth among the Sauages, with whome they skirmished aboue an howre. In this skirmish, another of our men was shotte into the mouth with an arrowe, whereof he died: and also one of the Sauages was shot into the side by one of our men, with a wild fire arrowe, whereof he died presently. The place where they fought, was of great aduantage to the Sauages, by meanes of the thicke trees, behinde which the Sauages through their nimblenes, defended themselues, and so offended our men with their arrowes, that our men being some of them hurt, retired fighting to the water side, where their boate lay, with which they fled towards Hatorask. By that time they had rowed but a quarter of a mile, they espied their foure fellowes comming from a creeke thereby, where they had bene to fetch Oysters: these foure they receaued into their boate, leauing Roanoake, and landed on a litle Island on the right hand of our entrance into the harbour of Hatorask, where they remained a while, but afterward departed, whither, as yet we knowe not.

Hauing nowe sufficiently dispatched our busines at Croatoan, the same day wee departed friendly, taking our leaue, and came aboord the fleete at Hatoraske.

The

The eight of Auguſt, the Gouernour hauing long expected the comming of the Weroanſes of Pomioake, Aquaſcoquos, Secota, and Daſamongueponke, ſeeing that the ſeuen daies were paſt, within which they promiſed to come in, or to ſend their anſwers by the men of Croatoan, and no tidings of them heard, being certainly alſo informed by thoſe men of Croatoan, that the remnant of Wingino his men, which were left aliue, who dwelt at Daſamongueponke, were they which had ſlaine George Howe, and were alſo at the ſlaying of our eleuen Engliſhmen from Roanoake, he thought to differre the reuenging thereof no longer. Wherefore the ſame night, about midnight, he paſſed ouer the water, accompanied with Captaine Stafford, and 24. men, whereof Manteo was one, whome wee tooke with vs to be our guide to the place where thoſe Sauages dwelt, where he behaued himſelfe toward vs as a moſt faithfull Engliſh man.

The next day, being the ninth of Auguſt, in the morning ſo early, that it was yet darke, wee landed neere the dwelling place of our enemies, and very ſecretly conueyed our ſelues through the woods, to that ſide, where we had their houſes betweene vs and the water: and hauing eſpied their fire, and ſome ſitting about it, we preſently ſette on them: the miſerable ſoules herewith amazed, fledde into a place of thicke reedes, growing faſt by, where our men perceauing them, ſhotte one of them through the bodie with a bullet, and there with wee entred the reedes, among which wee hoped to acquite their euill doing towards vs, but wee were deceaued: for thoſe Sauages were our friendes, and were come from Croatoan, to gather the corne, and fruite of that place, becauſe they vnderſtoode our enemies were fledde immediatly after they had ſlaine George Howe, and for haſte had left all their corne, Tabacco, and Pompions ſtanding in ſuch ſorte, that all had beene deuoured of the birdes, and Deere, if it had not beene gathered in time: but they had like to haue paide deerely for it: for it was ſo darke, that they beeing naked, and their men and women apparelled all ſo like others, we knewe not but that they were all men: and if that one of them, which was a Weroans wife, had not had her childe at her backe, ſhe had beene ſlaine in ſtede of a man, and as happe was, another Sauage knewe Maiſter Stafford, and ranne to him, calling him by his name, whereby he was ſaued. Finding our ſelues thus diſappointed of our purpoſe, wee gathered all the corne, Peaſe, Pumpions, and Tabacco, that we found ripe, leauing the reſt vnſpoiled, and tooke Menatoan his wife, with the yong childe, and the other Sauages with vs ouer the water to Roanoak. Although the miſtaking of theſe Sauages ſomewhat grieued Manteo, yet he imputed their harme to their owne follie, ſaying to them, that if their Weroans had kept their promiſe in comming to the Gouernour, at the day appointed, they had not knowen that miſchance.

The 13. of Auguſt, our Sauage Manteo, by the commandement of Sir Walter Ralegh, was chriſtened in Roanoak, and called Lord therof, and of Daſamongueponke, in reward of his faithfull ſeruice.

The 18. Elenora, daughter to the Gouernour, and wife to Ananias Dare, one of the Aſſiſtants, was deliuered of a daughter in Roanoak, and the ſame was chriſtened there the Sunday following, and becauſe this childe was the firſt Chriſtian borne in Virginia, ſhe was named Virginia. By this time our ſhippes had vnlanded the goods and victuals of the planters, and began to take in wood, and freſh water, and to newe caulke and trimme them for England: the planters alſo prepared their letters, and tokens, to ſend backe into England.

Our two ſhippes, the Lyon, and the Flieboate, almoſt ready to depart, the 21. of Auguſt, there aroſe ſuch a tempeſt at northeaſt, that our Admirall then riding out of the harbour, was forced to cut his cables, and put to Sea, where he laye beating off and on, ſixe dayes before hee coulde come to vs againe, ſo that wee feared hee had beene caſt away, and the rather, for that at the tyme that the ſtorme tooke them, the moſte, and beſt of their Saylers, were left aland.

At this time ſome controuerſies roſe betweene the Gouernour, and Aſſiſtants, about chooſing two out of the twelue Aſſiſtants, which ſhould goe backe as factors for the companie into England: for euery one of them refuſed, ſaue onely one, which all the other thought not ſufficient: but at length, by much perſwading of the Gouernour, Chriſtopher Cooper onely agreed to goe for England: but the next day, though the perſwaſion of diuers of his familiar friendes, he changed his minde, ſo that now the matter ſtoode as at the firſt.

The next day, the 22. of Auguſt, the whole companie, both of the Aſſiſtants, and planters, came to the Gouernour, and with one voice requeſted him to returne himſelfe into England, for the better and ſooner obtaining of ſupplies, and other neceſſaries for them: but he refuſed it, and alleaged many ſufficient cauſes, why he would not: the one was, that he could not ſo ſuddenly returne backe againe, without his great diſcredite, leaning the action, and ſo many, whome he partly had procured through his perswasions, to leaue their native Countrey, and vndertake that voyage, and that some enemies to him, and the action at his returne into England, would not spare to slander falsely both him, and the action, by saying he went to Virginia, but politikely, and to no other ende, but to leade so many into a Countrey, in which he neuer meant to stay himselfe, and there to leaue them behind him. Also he alleaged, that seing they intended to remoue 50. miles further vp into the maine presently, he being then absent, his stuffe, and goods, might be both spoiled, and most of it pilfered away in the carriage, so that at his returne, hee should be either forced to prouide himselfe of all such things againe, or els at his comming againe to Virginia, finde himselfe vtterly vnfurnished, whereof already he had found some proofe, being but once from them but three daies. Wherefore he concluded, that he would not goe himselfe.

The next day, not onely the Assistants, but diuers others, as well women, as men, beganne to renewe their requests to the Gouernour againe, to take vppon him to returne into England for the supplie, and dispatch of all such thinges, as there were to be done, promising to make him their bonde vnder all their handes, and seales, for the safe preseruing of all his goods for him at his returne to Virginia, so that if any part thereof were spoiled, or lost, they would see it restored to him, or his Assignes, whensoeuer the same should be missed, and demanded: which bonde with a testimonie vnder their handes, and seales, they foorthwith made, and deliuered into his hands. The copie of the testimonie, I thought good to set downe.

May it please you, her Maiesties Subiects of England, wee your friendes and Countrey men, the planters in Virginia, doe by these presents let you, and euery of you to vnderstande, that for the present and speedie supplie of certaine our knowen, and apparant lackes, and nedes, most requisite and necessarie for the good and happie planting of vs, or any other in this lande of Virginia, wee all of one minde, and consent, haue most earnestly intreated, and vncessantly requested Iohn White, Gouernour of the planters in Virginia, to passe into England, for the better and more assured helpe, and setting forward of the foresayde supplies: and knowing assuredly that he both can best, and will labour, and take paines in that behalfe for vs all, and her not once, but often refusing it, for our sakes, and for the honour, and maintenance of the action, hath at last, though much against his will, through our importunacie, yeelded to leaue his gouernment, and all his goods among vs, and himselfe in all our behalfes to passe into Englande, of whose knowledge, and fidelitie in handling this matter, as all others, wee doe assure our selues by these presents, and will you to giue all credite thereunto. the fiue and twentieth of August.

The Gouernour beeing at the last, though their extreame intreating, constrayned to returne into England, hauing then but halfe a daies respit to prepare him selfe for the same, departed from Roanoake, the seuen and twentieth of August in the morning: and the same daye about midnight, came aboord the Flie boate, who already had waied anker, and rode without the barre, the Admirall riding by them, who but the same morning was newly come thither againe. The same day, both the shippes waied anker, and sette saile for England: at this waying their ankers, twelue of the men which were in the Flieboate, were throwen from the Capestone, which by meanes of a barre that brake, came so fast about vpon them, that the other two barres thereof stroke and hurt most of them so sore, that some of them neuer recouered it: neuertheless they assaied presently againe to waigh their anker, but being so weakened with the first fling, they were not able to weigh it, but were throwen downe, and hurt the seconde time. Wherefore hauing in all but fifteene men aboord, and most of them by this infortunate beginning so bruised, and hurt, they were forced to cut their Cable, and leese their anker. Neuertheless, they kept companie with the Admirall, vntill the seuenteenth of September, at which time wee fell with Coruo, and Flores.

September.

The eighteenth, perceauing of all our fifteene men in the Flie boate, there remained but fiue, which by meanes of the former mischance, were able to stande to their labour: wherefore vnderstanding that the Admirall meant not to make any haste for England, but linger about the Islande of Tercera for purchase, the Flie boate departed for Englande with letters, where we hoped by the helpe of God to arriue shortly: but by that time wee had continued our course homeward, about twentie dayes, hauing had sometimes scarse, and variable windes, our fresh water also by leaking almost consumed, there arose such a storme at Northeast, which

for

for 6. dayes ceaſed not to blowe ſo exceeding, that we were driuen further in thoſe 6. then wee could recouer in thirteene daies: in which time others of our ſaylers began to fall very ſicke, and two of them dyed, the weather alſo continued ſo cloſe, that our Maſter ſometimes in foure daies together could ſee neither Sunne nor ſtarre, and all the beuerage we could make, with ſtinking water, dregges of beere, and lees of wine which remained, was but 3. gallons, and therefore now we expected nothing but by tampne to periſh at Sea.

October.

The 16. of October we made land, but we knew not what land it was, bearing in with the ſame land at that day: about Sunne ſet we put into a harbour, where we found a Hulke of Dublin, and a pynneſſe of Hampton ryding, but we knew not as yet what place this was, neither had we any boate to goe a ſhoare, vntill the pinneſſe ſent off their boate to vs with 6. or 8. men, of whom we vnderſtood we were in Smewicke in the weſt parts of Ireland: they alſo releeued vs preſently with freſh water, wyne, and other freſh meate.

The 18. the Gouernour, and the Maſter ryd to Dingen Cuſhe, 5. myles diſtant, to take order of the new victualling of our Flye boate for England, and for reliefe of our ſicke and hurt men, but within 4. dayes after the boatſwane, the ſteward, and the boatſwanes mate dyed abooard the flyeboate, and the 28. the Maſters mate and two of our chiefe Saylers were brought ſicke to Dingen.

Nouember.

The firſt the gouernour ſhipped him ſelfe in a ſhip called the Monkie, which at that time was readie to put to Sea from Dingen for England, leauing the Flyeboat and all his company in Ireland, the ſame day we ſet ſayle, and on the third day we fell with the Northſide of the lands end, and were ſhut vp the Seuerne, but the next day we doubled the ſame, for Mouts bay.

The 5. the Gouernour landed in England at Partaſew, neere Saint Michaels mount in Cornewall.

The 8. we arriued at Hampton, where we vnderſtood that our conſort the Admirall was come to Portſmouth, and had beene there three weekes before: and alſo that Fernando the Maſter with all his company were not onely come home without any purchaſe, but alſo in ſuch weakeneſſe by ſickneſs, and death of their cheefeſt men, that they were ſcarſe able to bring their ſhip into the harbour, but were forced to let fall anker wout, which they could not way againe, but might all haue periſhed there, if a ſmall barke by great hap had not come to them to helpe them. The names of the chiefe men that dyed are theſe, Roger Large, Iohn Mathew, Thomas Smith, and ſome other ther saylers, whoſe names I know not at the writing hereof. An. Do. 1587.

The names of all the men, women and Children, which ſafely arriued in Virginia, and remained to inhabite there. 1587.

The first voyage intended for the supply of the Colonie planted in Virginia by Iohn White which being vndertaken in the yeere 1588 by casualtie tooke no effect.

After the Gouernors returne out of Virginia the 20. of November 1587. he deliuered his letters and other aduertisments concerning his last voyage and state of the planters to Sir Walter Raleigh: whereupon he foorthwith appointed a pinnesse to be sent thither with all such necessaries as he vnderstood they stood in neede of: and also wrote his his letters vnto them, wherein among other matters he comforted them with promise, that with all conuenient speede he would prepare a good supply of shipping and men with sufficience of all thinges needefull, which he intended, God willing, should be with them the Sommer following. Which pinnesse and fleete were accordingly prepared in the West countrey at Bidiford vnder the charge of Sir Richard Greeneuil. This fleete being now in a readinesse only staying but for a faire wind to put to Sea, at the same time there was spred throughout all England such report of the wonderfull preparation and inuincible fleetes made by the king of Spaine ioyned with the power of the Pope for the inuading of England, that most of the ships of warre then in a readines in any hauen in England were staied for seruice at home: And sir Richard Greeneuil was personally commanded not to depart out of Cornewall. The voyage for Virginia by these meanes for this yere thus disappointed, the Gouernour notwithstanding labored for the releife of the planters so earnestly, that he obtained two small pinnesses the one of them being of 30. tonnes called the Brave, the other of 25. called the Roe, wherein 15. planters and all their prouision, with certaine releife for those that wintered in the Countrie was to be transported.

Thus the 22. of Aprill 1588. we put ouer the barre at Bidiford in the edge of the Northside of Cornewal, and the same night we came to an anker vnder the Isle of Lundy, where some of our company went on land: After we had roade there about the space of three howers we waied anker againe and all that night we bare along the coast of Cornewall.

The next day being S. Georges day and the 23. of Aprill still bearing along the coast we gaue chase to 4. ships, & boyded them & forced them all to come to anker by vs in a final bay at the lands end, out of these ships we tooke nothing but 3. men, & the same night we weighed & put to Sea.

The 24. day we gaue chase to 2. ships, the one of them being a Scot the other a Breton. These we boyded also & tooke from them whatsoeuer we could find worth the taking, & so let them goe.

The 26. of April we eſcried a ship on sterne of vs, for whom we strooke our toppe saple, and staied for it. By that time he came with vs we saw in his flagge a redd crosse: whereupon we helde him for an Englishman, & gaue ouer our preparation to fight with him. But when he was come neere to vs we perceiued his flagge not to be a right S. George: whereupon we were somewhat amased hauing so farre mistaken, for it was a very tall ship, and excellently well appointed & now readie to clap vs aboord. And it was not now neede to bid euery man to bestirre himselfe, for each one prepared with al speed to fight. In the meane time we hayled them whence they were: They answered of Flushing, bound for Barbarie. And they perceiuing vs to be Englishmen of warre bare from vs and gaue vs a piece, and we gaue them two pieces and so departed.

The 27. day in the morning we were come with the heigth of cape Finister, the winde being still at Northeast.

The 28. day the wind shifted: about foure of the clocke in the afternoone the same day we eſcried a saple to the weather of vs, whom we kept so neere vnto vs as we could all that night.

The 29. in the morning we gaue chase to the same ship being then to the wind of vs almost as farre as we could ken. Assoone as our pinnes, came vp to them, the pinnes fought with the ship, & it was an Hulke of 200. tonnes & more, but after a few great shot bestowed on both sides, the pinnesse perceiuing her consort not able to come to ayd her left the Hulke & came roome with the Braue againe. At their comming they desired the Captaine & Master of the Braue to lend them some men and other things whereof they had neede. Which things put aboord the they returned againe to the chase of the Hulke earnestly, and with ful purpose to boord her. But the Hulke bare all night in with the coast of Spaine, and by morning were so neere land, that we fearing eyther change of wind or to be calmed gaue ouer the fight and put off to Sea againe.

May.

The first day of May being Wednesday the wind came large at Northeast.

The 3. being friday we gaue chase to another tal ship, but it was night before we spake with her: and the night grew darke sodenly in such sort, that we lost sight both of the great ship & of our consort also, hauing thus in the darke lost our pinnesse, & knowing our barke so bad of saple that we could neither take nor leue, but were rather to be taken or left of euery ship we met, we made our course for the Isle of Madera, hoping there to find our pinnesse abiding for vs.

The same day following being the 5. of May we spake with a man of warre of Rochel of 60. tons, very wel manned & brauely appointed being bound, as he said for Peru: hauing hailed each other, we parted frindly in outward shew, giuing each other a voley of shot & a great piece: but neuertheles we suspected ỳ which followed: for this Rocheller hauing take perfect view of our ship, men, & ordinance, towards euening fell on sterne of vs: and assoone as it was darke left vs, and returned to his consort which was a tal ship of 100. tonne lying then on hull to weather of vs out of ken, hauing 84. men in her, whereof 50. were smal shot, and 12. muskets, and in the ship 10. peeces of ordinance. This ship being this night certified by her consort that viewed vs, of what force we were and how bad of sayle, this greater ship tooke in 20. of the chiefest men that were in the smalest ship, and presently gaue vs chase.

The next morning being Monday and the 6. of May, we escried them in the weather of vs, so that it was in vaine to seeke by flight, but rather by fight to helpe our selues. The same day about 2. of the clocke in the afternoone they were come with vs. We hayled them, but they would not answere. Then we waued them to leewardes of vs, and they waued vs with a sword a mayne, fitting their sailes to clappe vs aboord, which we perceiuing gaue them one whole side: with one of our great shot their Master gonners shoolder was stroken away, and our Master gonner with a smal bullet was shot into the head. Being by this time grappled and aboord each of other the fight continued without ceasing one houre and a halfe. In which fight were hurt & slaine on both sides 23. of the chiefest men, hauing most of them some 6. or 8. woundes, and some 10. or 12. woundes. Being thus hurt and spoiled they robbed vs of all our victuals, powder, weapons and prouision, sauing a smal quantity of biskuit to serue vs scarce for England. Our Master and his Mate were deadly wounded, so that they were not able to come forth of their beds. I my selfe was wounded twise in the head, once with a sword, and another time with a pike, and hurt also in the side of the buttoke with a shot. Three of our passengers were hurt also, whereof one had 10. or 12. woundes our Master hurt in the face with a pike and thrust quite through the head. Being thus put to our close fights, and also much pestred with cabbens and vnseruiceable folkes we could not stirre to handle our weapons nor charge a piece: againe hauing spent all the powder in our flaskes and charges which we had present for our defence, they cut downe our netting and entred so many of their men as could stand vpon our poope and forecastle, from whence they playd extreemely vpon vs with their shot. As thus we stood resolued to die in fight, the Captaine of the Frenchmen cried to vs to yeld and no force should be offred. But after we had yelded, they knowing so many of their best men to be hurt and in danger of present death, began to grow into a new furie, in which they would haue put vs to the sword had not their Captaine charged them, and perswaded them to the contrary. Being at length pacified they fell on all handes to rifling and carying aboord all the next day vntil 4. of the clock: at which time by ouer greedy lading both their owne boate and ours, they sunke the one and split the other by the ships side: by meanes whereof they left vs two cables and ankers, all our ordinance and most part of our sailes, which otherwise had ben taken away also. Furthermore they doubting the wind would arise, and night at hand, & a tal ship al that day by meanes of the calme in sight, they came aboord vs with their ship, and tooke in their men that were in vs, who left vs not at their departing any thing worth the carying away. Being thus ransacked and vsed as is aforesaid in all sorts, we determined (as our best shift in so hard a case) to returne for England, and caused all our able and vnhurt men, to fal to newe rigging & mending our sailes, tacklings, and such things as were spilled in our fight. By this occasion, God iustly punishing our former thecuerie of our euil disposed mariners, we were of force cõstrained to breake of our voyage intended for the relefe of our Colony left the yere before in Virginia, and the same night to set our course for England, being then about 50. leagues to the Northeast of Madera.

The 7. of May being Wednesday in the forenoone the wind came large at East northeast and we haled off as farre west and by north as we could vntill the 10. of May, fearing to meete with any more men of warre, for that we had no maner of weapons left vs.

The 11. the wind larged more, and thence forth we continued our due course for England.

The 17. of May we thrust our selues west of Vsshant, & sounded, but found no ground at 110 fathoms. The same day at night we sounded againe, and found ground at 80. fathoms.

The 20. being Sonday we fell with the coast of Ireland.

The 21. in the forenoone we saw the Northside of Cornewal at the lands end.

The 22. of May we came to an anker betweene Lunday and Harting point neere vnto Chatell key, where we road vntill the next tyde, and thence we put ouer the barre, and the same day landed at Biddeford.

Our other pinnesse whose company we had lost before the last cruell fight, returned also home into Cornwall within fewe weekes after our arrival, without performing our entended voyage for the relefe of the planters in Virginia, which thereby were not a litle distressed.

To all, to whome theſe preſents ſhall come, greeting: Foraſmuch as our truſtie and welbeloued ſubiect Adrian Gylbert of Sandridge in the Countie of Deuon, Gentleman, to his great coſtes and charges, hath greatly & earneſtly trauailed and ſought, and yet doth trauel & ſeeke, & by diuers meanes indeuoureth & laboureth, that the Paſſage vnto China & the Iles of Molluccas, by the Northweſtward, Northeaſtwarde, or Northwarde, vnto which part or partes of the worlde, none of our Loyall ſubiects haue hitherto had any traffike or trade, may be diſcouered, knowen, & frequented by the ſubiects of this our Realme: Know ye therefore that for the conſiderations aforeſayd & for diuers other good conſiderations vs thereunto ſpecially mouing, We of our grace eſpeciall, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, haue giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe giue and graunt free libertie, power, and full authoritie to the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, & to any other perſon by him or his heires to be aſſigned, and to thoſe his Aſſociates and aſſiſtants, whoſe names are written in a ſedule hereunto annexed, and to their heires, and to one aſſignee of eche of them, and ech of their heires at all times, and at any time or times after the date of theſe preſents, vnder our Banners and Enſignes freely, without let, interruption, or reſtraint of vs, our heires or ſucceſſors, any lawe, ſtatute, proclamation, patent, charter, or prouiſo to the contrary notwithſtanding, to ſayle, make voyage, and by any maner of meanes to paſſe and to depart out of this our Realme of Englande, or any our Realmes, Dominions, or Territories into all or any Iles, Countries, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Portes, Bayes, Creekes, armes of the Sea, and all Hauens, and all maner of other places whatſoeuer, that by the ſayd Northweſtward, Northeaſtward, or Northward, is to be by him, his aſſociates or aſſignes diſcouered, and for and in the ſayde ſayling, voyage, and paſſage, to haue and vſe ſo many ſhips, Barks, Pinneſſes, or other veſſels of any quantitie or burthen, with all the furniture of men, victuals, and all maner of neceſſary prouiſion, armour, weapons, ordinance, targets, and appurtenances whatſoeuer, as to ſuch a voyage ſhall or may be requiſite, conuenient or commodious, any lawe, ſtatute, ordinance or prouiſo to the contrarie thereof notwithſtanding. And alſo we doe giue and graunt to the ſayde Adrian Gylbert, and his ſayd aſſociates, and to ſuch aſſignee of him, & his heires, and to the heires & one aſſignee of euery of his ſayde aſſociates for euer, full power and abſolute authoritie to trade and make their reſiance in any of the ſayd Iles, Countries, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Portes, Bayes, and Hauens, and all maner of other places whatſoeuer, with all commodities, profites, and emoluments in the ſayd place or any of them, growing and ariſing, with all maner of priuileges, prerogatiues, iuriſdictions and royalties both by ſea and land whatſoeuer, yeelding and paying therefore vnto vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, the tenth part of all ſuch golde and ſiluer oare, pearles, iewels, and precious ſtones, or the value thereof, as the ſayd Adrian Gylbert and his ſayd aſſociates, their heires and aſſignes, ſeruants, factors, or workemen, and euery or any of them ſhall finde, the ſayd tenth to be deliuered duely to our Cuſtomer, or other officers by vs, our heires or ſucceſſors thereunto aſſigned, in the Portes of London, Dartmouth, or Plymmouth, at which three places onely the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, and his ſayd aſſociates, their ſayd heires and aſſignes, ſhall lade, charge, arriue, and diſcharge all maner of wares, goods, and marchandizes whatſoeuer to the ſayd voyage, and newe trade belonging or appertaining. And moreouer, we haue giuen, graunted, and authorized, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, of our grace eſpeciall, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, doe giue, graunt, and authorize the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, and his ſayd aſſociates for euer, their heires, and their ſayde aſſignes and euery of them, that if the aforeſayd Iles, Countries, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Portes, Bayes, or Hauens, or any other of the premiſſes by the ſayd Adrian Gylbert or his aſſociates, their heires and their ſayd aſſignes, or any of them to be found by them diſcouered and traffiked vnto by any trade as aforeſayde, ſhall be by any other our ſubiects viſited, frequented, haunted, traded vnto or inhabited by the wayes aforeſayd, without the ſpeciall licence in writing of the ſayd Adrian Gylbert and his aſſociates, and their heires and aſſignes for euer, or by the moſt part of them, ſo that the ſayd Adrian Gylbert, his heires or aſſignes be one of them, that then aſwell their ſhippe, or ſhippes in any ſuch voyage or voyages vſed, as all and singular their goods, wares, and marchandizes, or any other things whatsoeuer, from or to any of the places aforesaid transported, that so shal presume to visit, frequent, haunt, trade vnto, or inhabite, shalbe forfaited and confiscated, ipso facto, the one halfe of the same goods and marchandizes, or other things whatsoeuer, or the value thereof to be to the vse of vs, our heires or successours, and the other moytie thereof to be to the vse of the said Adrian Gylbert, and his said associates, their heires and assignes for euer: and vnto the said Adrian Gylbert and his said associates, their heires and assignes wee impose, giue, assigne, create and confirme this name peculiar to be named by, to sue and to be sued by, that is to wit, by the name of the Colleagues of the fellowship for the discouerie of the Northwest passage, and them for vs, our heires and successours by that name doe incorporate, and do erect and create as one body corporate to haue continuance for euer. Moreouer vnto the sayd Adrian Gylbert, and his sayd associates, and vnto their heires and their sayd assignes for euer, by name of the Colleagues of the fellowship, for the discouerie of the Northwest passage, we haue giuen, graunted, & confirmed, and doe by these presents giue, graunt, and confirme full power and authoritie from time to time, and at all times hereafter, to make order, decree, and enact, constitute and ordeine, and appoint all such ordinances, orders, decrees, lawes, and acts, as the sayd newe corporation or body politique, Colleagues of the felowship for the discouerie of the Northwest passage, shal thinke meete, necessary, & conuenient, so that they or any of them be not contrary to the lawes of this realme, & of this our present graunt.

And wee by our Royall prerogatiue, and fulnesse of our authoritie of our grace especiall, certaine knowledge and meere motion, doe establish, confirme and ratifie all such ordinances, orders, decrees, lawes and acts to be in so full and great power and authoritie, as we, our heires or successours may or can in any such case graunt, confirme, or ratifie. And further for the better incouragement of our louing subiects in this discouerie, wee by our Royall prerogatiue, and fulnesse of authoritie for vs, our heires and successours, doe giue, graunt, establish, confirme, ordeine, ratifie and allowe by these presents, to the sayd Adrian Gylbert and to his associates, and to the heires and assignes of them and euery of them for euer, and to all other person or persons of our louing subiects whatsoeuer that shall hereafter trauell, saple, discouer, or make voyage as aforesayd to any the Iles, Mainelands, Countries or Territories whatsoeuer, by vertue of this our graunt to be discouered, that the heires and assignes of them and euery of them being borne within any of the Iles, Mainelands & Countries, or Territories whatsoeuer before mentioned, shall haue and inioy all the priuileges of free Denizens, as persons natiue borne within this our Realme of England, or within our allegiance for euer, in such like ample maner and forme, as if they were or had bene borne and personally resiant within our sayde Realme, any lawe, statute, proclamation, custome or vsage to the contrarie hereof in any wise notwithstanding. Moreouer, for the consideration aforesayde by vertue hereof, wee giue and graunt vnto the sayde Adrian Gylbert, his heires and assignes for euer, free libertie, licence and priuilege, that during the space of fiue yeeres next & immediatly ensuing the date hereof, it shal not be lawfull for any person or persons whatsoeuer, to visite, haunt, frequent, trade, or make voyage to any Iles, Mainelands, Countries, Regions, Prouinces, Territories, Seas, Riuers, Portes, Bayes, and Hauens, nor to any other Hauens or places whatsoeuer hitherto not yet discouered by any of our subiects by vertue of this graunt to be traded vnto, without the speciall consent and good liking of the sayd Adrian Gylbert, his heires or assignes first had in writing. And if any person or persons of the associates of the sayde Adrian, his heires or assignes, or any other person or persons whatsoeuer, free of this discouerie, shall doe any act or acts contrary to the tenour and true meaning hereof, during the space of the sayde fiue yeeres, that then the partie and parties so offending, they and their heires for euer shall loose (ipso facto) the benefite and priuilege of this our graunt, and shall stand and remaine to all intents and purposes as persons exempted out of this graunt: And further by vertue hereof, we giue & graunt for vs, our heires and successours at all times during the space of fiue yeeres next ensuing the date hereof, free libertie and licence, and full authoritie to the sayd Adrian Gylbert, and his heires and assignes, that if it shall happen any one or moe in any shippe or shippes sayling on their sayde voyage, to become mutinous, seditious, disorderly, or any way vnruly to the preiudice or hinderance of the hope for successe in the attempt or prosecuting of this discouerie or trade intended, to vse or execute vpon him or them so offending, such punishment, correction, or execution as the cause shall be found in iustice to require by the verdit of twelue of the companie swoorne thereunto, as in such a case appertaineth: That expresse mention of the certaintie of the premises, or of other giftes or graunts by vs to the sayde Adrian Gylbert and his associates before this time made is not mentioned in these presents, or any other lawe, act, statute, prouiso, graunt, or proclamation tion heretofore made or hereafter to be made to the contrary hereof in any wise notwithstanding. In witnesse whereof, we haue caused these our Letters to be made patents: Witnesse our selfe at Westminster, the first day of Februarie, in the fiue and twentie yeere of our Reigne.

The first voyage of Master Iohn Dauis, vndertaken in Iune 1585. for the Discouerie of the Northwest Passage, Written by Iohn Ianes Marchant, seruant to the worthipfull M. William Sanderson.

CErtaine Honourable personages and worthy Gentlemen of the Court and Countrey, with diuers worshipfull Marchants of London and of the West Countrey, mooued with desire to aduance Gods glory and to seeke the good of their native Countrey, consulting together of the likelihood of the Discouerie of the Northwest passage, which heretofore had bene attempted, but vnhappily giuen ouer by accidents vnlooked for, which turned the enterprisers from their principall purpose, resolued after good deliberation, to put downe their aduentures to prouide for necessarie shipping, and a fit man to be chiefe Conductour of this so hard an enterprise. The setting foorth of this action was committed by the aduenturers, especially to the care of M. William Sanderson Marchant of London, who was so forward therein, that besides his trauaile which was not small, hee became the greatest aduenturer with his purse, and commended vnto the rest of the company one M. Iohn Dauis, a man very well grounded in the principles of the arte of Nauigation, for Captaine and chiefe Pilot of this exploit.

Thus therefore all things being put in a readines, wee departed from Dartmouth the seuenth of June, towards the discouerie of the aforesayd Northwest passage, with two Barks, the one being of 50. tunnes, named the Sunneshine of London, and the other being 35. tunnes, named the Moonesshine of Dartmouth. In the Sunneshine we had 23. persons, whose names are these following, M. Iohn Dauis Captaine, William Eston Master, Richard Pope Masters mate, Iohn Iane Marchant, Henry Dauie gunner, William Crosse boatswayne, Iohn Bagge, Walter Arthur, Luke Adams, Robert Coxworthie, Iohn Ellis, Iohn Kelly, Edward Helman, William Dicke, Andrew Maddocke, Thomas Hill, Robert Wats Carpenter, William Russel, Christopher Gorney boy: Iames Cole, Francis Ridley, Iohn Russel, Robert Corniſh, Musicians.

The Moonesshine had 19. persons, William Bruton Captaine, Iohn Ellis Master, the rest Mariners.

The 7. of June the Captaine and the Master drewe out a proportion for the continuance of our victuals.

The 8. day the winde being at Southwest and West southwest, wee put in for Falmouth, where we remained vntill the 13.

The 13. the winde blewe at North, and being fayre weather we departed.

The 14. with contrarie winde we were forced to put into Sylley.

The 15. we departed thence, hauing the winde North & by East moderate and fayre weather.

The 16. we were driuen backe againe, and were constrained to arriue at newe Gymsbie at Sylley: here the winde remained contrary 12. dayes, and in that space the Captaine, the Master and I went about all the Ilands, and the Captaine did platte out and describe the situation of all the Ilands, rockes and harboroughs to the exact vse of Nauigation, with lynes and scale thereunto conuenient.

The 28. in Gods name we departed the winde being Easterly, but calme. They depart from Sylly.

The 29. very foggie.

The 30. foggie.

The first of July we sawe great store of Porpoſes, The Master called for an harping yron, and shot twise or thrise: sometimes he missed, and at last shot one and strooke him in the side, and wound him into the shippe: when we had him aboorde, the Master sayd it was a darlie head. July.

The 2. we had some of the fish sodden, and it did eate as sweete as any mutton.

The 3. we had more in sight, and the Master went to shoote at them, but they were so great, that they burst our yrons, and we lost both fish, yrons, pastime and all: yet neuertheleſſe, the Master shot at them with a pike, and had welnigh gotten one, but he was so strong that he burst off the barres of the pike and went away: then hee tooke the boat hooke, and hit one with that, but all would not preuaile, so at length we let them alone.

The

The firſt we ſawe a very great Whale, and euery day after we ſawe Whales continually.

The 16. 17. 18. we ſawe great ſtore of Whales.

The 19. of July we fell into a great whirling and huſtling of a tyde, ſetting to the Northwards: and ſayling about halfe a league wee came into a very calme Sea, which bent to the South ſouthweſt: Here we heard a mighty great roaring of the Sea as if it had bene the breach of ſome ſhoare, the ayre being ſo foggie and full of thicke miſt, that wee could not ſee the one ſhip from the other being a very ſmall diſtance aſunder: ſo the Captaine and the Maſter being in diſtruſt howe the tyde might ſet them, cauſed the Mooneſhine to hoyſe out her boate and to ſound, but they could not finde ground in 300. fathoms and better. Then the Captaine, Maſter, and I went towards the breach, to ſee what it ſhould be, giuing charge to our gunners that at euery glaſſe they ſhould ſhoote off a muſket ſhot, to the intent we might keepe our ſelues from looſing them: Then comming nere to the breach, we met many Ilands of yce flocing, which had quickly compaſſed vs about: then we went vpon ſome of them, and did perceiue that all the roaring which we heard, was cauſed onely by the rouling of this yce together: Our company ſeeing vs not to returne according to our appointment, left off ſhooting muſkets, and began to ſhoote faukonets, for they feared ſome miſhap had befallen vs, but before night we came aboyde againe with our boat laden with yce, which made very good freſh water. Then wee bent our courſe towarde the North, hoping by that meanes to double the land.

The rouling of the yce together made a great roaring.

Yce turned into water.

The 20. as we ſayled along the coaſt the fogge brake vp, and wee diſcouered the land, which was the moſt deformed rocky and mountainous land that euer we ſawe: The firſt ſight whereof did ſhewe as if it had bene in forme of a ſugar loafe, ſtanding to our ſight aboue the cloudes, for that it did ſhewe ouer the fogge like a white liſte in the ſkye, the tops altogether couered with ſnowe, and the ſhoare beſet with yce a league off into the Sea, making ſuch yrkſome noyſe as that it ſeemed to be the true patterne of deſolation, and after the ſame our Captaine named it, The land of Deſolation.

The land of Deſolation.

The 21. the winde came Northerly and ouerblewe, ſo that we were conſtrained to bend our courſe South againe, for we perceiued that we were runne into a very deepe Bay, where wee were almoſt compaſſed with yce, for we ſawe very much toward the North northeaſt, Weſt and Southweſt: and this day and this night we cleared our ſelues of the yce, running South ſouthweſt along the ſhoare.

Upon Thurſday being the 22. of this moneth, about three of the clocke in the morning, wee hoyſed out our boate, and the Captaine with ſixe ſaylers went towards the ſhoare, thinking to finde a landing place, for the night before we did perceiue the coaſt to be voide of yce to our iudgement, and the ſame night we were all perſwaded that wee had ſeene a canoa rowing along the ſhoare, but afterwards we fell in ſome doubt of it, but we had no great reaſon ſo to doe. The Captaine rowing towards the ſhoare, willed the Maſter to beare in with the land after him, and before he came neere the ſhore by the ſpace of a league, or about two miles, hee found ſo much yce, that he could not get to land by any meanes. Here our mariners put to their lines to ſee if they could get any fiſh, becauſe there were ſo many ſeales vpon the coaſt, and the birds did beate vpon the water, but all was in vaine: The water about this coaſt was very blacke and thicke, like to a filthy ſtanding poole, we ſounded and had ground in 120. fathoms. While the Captaine was rowing to the ſhoare, our men ſawe woods vpon the rocks like to the rocks of Newfoundland, but I could not diſcerne them, yet it might be ſo very well: for we had wood floting vpon the coaſt euery day, and the Mooneſhine tooke vp a tree at Sea not farre from the coaſt being ſixtie foote of length and fourteene handfuls about, hauing the roote vpon it: After, the Captaine came aboyde the weather being very calme and fayre we bent our courſe toward the South, with intent to double the land.

Very blacke water.

Floting wood

The 23. we coaſted the land which did lye Eaſt northeaſt and Weſt ſouthweſt.

The 24. the winde being very faire at Eaſt, we coaſted the land which did lie Eaſt & Weſt, not being able to come neere the ſhoare by reaſon of the great quantitie of yce. At this place, becauſe the weather was ſomewhat colde by reaſon of the yce, & the better to encourage our men, their alowance was increaſed: The Captaine and the Maſter tooke order that euery meſſe being fiue perſons, ſhould haue halfe a pound of bread and a kan of beere euery morning to breakfaſt. The weather was not very colde, but the ayre was moderate like to our Aprill weather in England: when the winde came from the land or the yce it was ſomewhat colde, but when it came off the ſea it was very hotte.

Colde by reaſon of yce.

They ſayle Northweſtward aboue foure dayes.

The 25. of this moneth wee departed from ſight of this land, at ſixe of the clocke in the morning, directing our courſe to the Northweſtwarde, hoping in Gods mercy to finde our deſired paſſage, passage, and so continued aboue foure dayes.

The 29. of July, we discouered land in 64. degrees 15. mi. of latitude, bearing Northeast from vs. The winde being contrary to goe to the Northwestwards, we bare in with this land to take some view of it, being vtterly voyde of the perfect of yce, and very temperate. Comming neere the coast, we found many fayre sounds & good roads for shipping, and many great inlets into the land, whereby wee iudged this land, to be a great number of Ilands standing together. Here hauing moyed our barke in good order, we went on shoare vpon a small Ilande, to seeke for water and wood. Upon this Iland we did perceiue that there had bene people: for we found a small shoe and pieces of leather sowed with sinewes, and a piece of furre, and wooll like to Beuer. Then we went vpon another Iland on the otherside of our ships: And the Captaine the Master and I, being got vp to the top of an high rocke, the people of the country hauing espied vs, made a lamentable noyse, as we thought, with great outcryes and shreechings: wee hearing them, thought it had bene the howling of wolues. At last I hallowed againe, and they likewise cryed. Then we perceiuing where they stood, some on the shoare, and one rowing in a Canoa about a smal Iland fast by them, we made a great noyse partly to allure them to vs, and partly to warne our company of them. Whereupon M. Bruton, and the master of his ship with others of their company, made great haste towards vs, and brought our Musicians with them from our shippe, purposing either by force to rescue vs, if neede should so require, or with curtesie to allure the people. When they came vnto vs, we caused our Musicians to play, our selues dauncing, and making many signes of friendship. At length there came 10. Canoas from the other Ilands, and two of them came so neere the shoare where we were, that they talked with vs, the other being in their boats a pretie way off. Their pronounciation was very hollow through the throate, and their speach such as we could not vnderstand: onely we allured them by friendly imbracings and signes of curtesie. At length one of them pointing vp to the sunne with his hande, would presently strike his brest so hard, that we might here the blowe. This he did many times, before he would any way trust vs. Then John Ellis the master of the Mooneshine, was appointed to vse his best policie to gaine their friendshippe: who strooke his breast and pointed to the sunne after their order: which when he had diuerse times done, they began to trust him, and one of them came on shoare, to whome we threwe our caps, stockings and gloues, and such other things as then we had about vs, playing with our musicke, and making signes of ioy, and dancing. So the night comming we bade them fareweell, and went aboord our barks.

Land in 64. degrees 15. mi.

The sounde where our ships did ride, was called Culberts sound.

Musicians.

The people of the country came and conferre with our men.

The next morning being the 30. of July, there came 37. Canoas rowing by our shippes, calling to vs to come on shoare: Wee not making any great haste vnto them, one of them went vp to the top of the rocke, and lept and daunced as they had done the day before, shewing vs a seales skinne, and another thing made like a timbrel, which he did beate vpon with a sticke, making a noyse like a small drumme. Whereupon we manned our boats and came to them, they all playing in their Canoas: wee came to the water side where they were: and after we had sworne by the sunne after their fashion, they did trust vs. So I shooke hands with one of them, and hee kissed my hand, and we were very familier with them. We were in so great credit with them vpon this single acquaintance, that wee could haue any thing they had. We bought fiue Canoas of them: we bought their clothes from their backs, which were all made of seales skins and birdes skinnes: their buskins, their hose, their gloues, all being commonly sowed and well dressed: so that we were fully perswaded, that they haue diuers artificers among them. Wee had a paire of buskins of them full of fine wooll like beuer. Their apparell for heate, was made of birds skinnes with their feathers on them. We sawe among them leather dressed like glouers leather, and thicke thongs like white leather of a good length. Wee had of their darts and oares, and found in them that they would by no meanes displease vs, but would giue vs whatsoeuer we asked of them, and would be satisfied with whatsoeuer we gaue them. They tooke great care one of an other: for when we had bought their boates, then two other would come and carie him away betweene them that had soulde vs his. They are a very tractable people, voyde of craft or double dealing, and easie to be brought to any ciuilitie or good order: but wee iudge them to bee Idolaters and to worship the Sunne.

Their musick.

Great familiaritie with the Sauages.

During the time of our abode among these Ilands, we found reasonable quantitie of wood, both firre, spruse and iuniper: which whither it came floting any great distance to these places where we found it, or whither it grew in some great Ilands neere the same place by vs not yet discouered, we know not. But wee iudge that it groweth there further into the lande then wee were, because the people had great store of darts & oares, which they made none accompt of, but gaue them to vs for small trifles, as poynts and pieces of paper. Wee sawe about this coaste maruellous great abundance of seales skulking together like skuls of smal fish. Wee found no fresh water among these Ilands, but only snow water, whereof we found greate pooles. The cliffes were al of such oare as M. Frobisher brought from meta Incognita. Wee had diuerse shewes of studie or Muskouie glasse shining not altogether vnlike to Christal. Wee founde an herbe growing vpon the rocks, whose fruite was sweete, full of red iuyce, & the ripe ones were like corinths. We found also birch & willow growing like shrubs low to the ground. These people haue great store of furs as we iudge. They made shewes vnto vs ỳ 30. of this present, which was the second time of our being with them, after they perceiued we would haue skins, & furs, that they would goe into the country & come againe the next day, with such things as they had: but this night the wind comming faire the Captaine & the master would by no meanes detract the purpose of our discouery. And so the last of this moneth about 4. of the clocke in the morning, in Gods name wee set saile, and were al that day becalmed vpon the coaste.

Diuers sorts of Wood.

A fruite like Corinthes.

August. Land in 66. degre. 40. mi.

The 1. of August we had a faire wind & so proceeded towards the northwest for our discouerie.

The 6. of August we discouered land in 66. de. 40. mi. of latitude altogether voyd from ỳ perill of yce: we ankered in a very faire rode, vnder a very braue mount, the cliffes whereof were as orient as gold. This mount was named mount Raleigh: the rode where our ships lay at anker was called Totnes Rode. The sounde which did compasse the mount was named Exeter sound: the foreland towards the North, was called Dyers Cape. The foreland toward the south was named Cape Walsingham. So soone as we were come to an anker in Totnes Rode vnder mount Raleigh, we espied 4. white beares at the foote of the mount. We supposing them to bee goates or wolues, manned our boats and went towards them: but when wee came neere the shore, wee found them to be white beares of a monstruous bignesse: we being desirous of fresh victual and the sport, began to assault them, & I being on land one of them came down the hil right against me: my piece was charged with haileshot and a bullet, I discharged my piece and shot him in the necke: hee roared a litle and tooke the water straight, making smal account of his hurt. Then we followed him w̄ our boate, & killed him w̄ boare speares, & two more that night. We found nothing in their mawes, but we iudged by their dung, that they fed vpon grasse, because it appeared in al respects like the dung of an horse, wherein we might very plainely see the very strawes.

The 7. we went on shoare to another beare which lay alnight vpon the top of an Iland vnder mount Raleigh, & when we came vp to him he lay fast a sleepe. I leueled at his head, & the stone of my peece gaue no fire, with that he looked vp and laid down his head againe: then I shot being charged with 2. bullets and strooke him in the head: he being but amazed fel backewardes, whervpon we ran al vpon him with horsespeares and thrust him in the bodie: yet for all that he gript away our horsespeares and went towards the water, and as he was going downe he came backe againe. Then our master shot his horsespeare and strooke him in the head, and made him to take the water, and swimme into a coue fast by, where we killed him and brought him aborde. The breadth of his forefoote from one side to the other, was 14. inches ouer. They were very fat so as we were constrayned to cast the fat away. We saw a rauen vpon mount Raleigh We found withies also growing lowe like shrubs and flowers like primroses in the same place. The coast is very mountaynous, altogether without wood, grasse or earth, and is only huge mountaines of stone, but the brauest stone that euer we sawe. The ayre was very moderate in this country.

The 8. we departed from mount Raleigh coasting along the shoare, which lyeth south southwest, and east northeast.

The 9. our men fel in dislike of their allowance, because it was to small as they thought. Whereupon we made a newe proportion: euery messe being fiue to a messe should haue 4. pound of bread a day: 12. wine quarts of bere: 6. newland fishes: and the flesh dayes a gill of pease more: so we restrayned them from their butter and cheese.

The eleuenth we came to the most southerly cape of this lande, which we named the Cape of Gods mercy: as being the place of our first entrance for the discouery. The weather being very foggie we coasted this Northland: at length when it brake vp, we perceiued that we were shotte into a very fayre entrance or passage, being in some places 20. leagues broade, and in some 30. altogether voyde of any perill of yce, the weather very tollerable, and the water of the very colour, nature and qualitie of the mayne ocean, which gaue vs the greater hope of our passage. Hauing sayled Northwest sixtie leagues in this entrance wee discouered certaine Ilandes standing in the middest thereof, hauing open passage on both sides. Whereupon our shippes deuided themselues, the one sayling on the Northside, the other on the southside, of the sayde Isles, where wee stayed fiue dayes hauing the winde at Southeast very foggie and foule weather.

The

The 14. we went on ſhoare and found ſignes of people, for we found ſtones layde vp together like a wall, and ſaw the ſkull of a man or a woman.

The 15. we heard dogs houle on the ſhoare, which we thought had bene Wolues, and therefore we went on ſhoare to kil them. When we came on lande, the dogs came preſently to our boate very gently, yet we thought they came to pray vpon vs, and therefore we ſhot at them and killed two: and about the necke of one of them we found a letheren coller, whereupon we thought them to be tame dogs. There were twentie dogs like maſtiues with pricke eares and long buſh tayles: we found a bone in the prizels of their dogs. Then wee went farther and founde two ſleads made like ours in Englande. The one was made of firre, ſpruſe and oken boards, ſawen like inch boards: the other was made all of whale bone, and there hung on the toppes of the ſleds three heads of beaſts, which they had killed. We ſaw here, larkes, rauens, and partriges. Timber ſawen. Fowle.

The 17. we went on ſhoare, and in a litle thing made like an ouen with ſtones, I found many ſmal trifles, as a ſmall canoa made of wood, a piece of wood made like an image, a bird made of bone, beads hauing ſmall holes in one end of them to hang about their necks, and other ſmall things. The coaſt was very barbarous without wood or graſſe. The rockes were very faire like marble full of vaynes of diuerſe coulors. We found a ſeale which was killed not long before, being fleane and hid vnder ſtones. An image.

Our Captaine and maſter ſearched ſtill for probabilities of the paſſage, and firſt found, ‖ that this place was all Iſlands with great ſounds paſſing betweene them. Probabilities for the paſſage.

Secondly, the water remained of one coulour with the mayne ocean without altering.

Thirdly we ſaw to the weſt of thoſe Iſles three or foure Whales in a ſkul, which they iudged to come from a weſterly ſea, becauſe to the Eaſtward, we ſaw not any whale. We neuer came into any bay before or after, but the waters colour was altered very blackiſh.

Alſo as we were rowing into a very great ſound lying ſouthweſt, from whence theſe whales came, vpon the ſuddayne there came a violent counter checke of a tide from the ſouthweſt againſt the flood which we came with, not knowing from whence it was maintayned.

Fiftly, in ſayling 20. leagues within the mouth of this entrance we had ſounding in 90. fathoms, fayre grap oſie ſand, & the further we ran into the weſtwards, the deeper was the water, ſo that hard aboord the ſhoare among theſe yles, we could not haue ground in 330. fathoms.

Laſtly, it did ebbe and flowe 6. or 7. fathome vp and downe, the flood comming from diuerſe parts, ſo as we could not perceiue the chiefe maintenance thereof.

The 18. and 19. our Captaine and Maſter determined what was beſt to doe, both for the ſafegarde of their credites and ſatiſfying of the aduenturers, and reſolued, if the weather brake vp, to make further ſearch.

The 20. the winde came directly againſt vs, ſo they altered their purpoſe, and reaſoned both for proceeding and returning.

The 21. the wind being Northweſt, we departed from theſe Iſlands, and as wee coaſted the ſouth ſhoze we ſawe many fayre ſounds, whereby we were perſwaded, that it was no firme land but Iſlands.

The 23. of this moneth the wind came ſoutheaſt very ſtormy and foule weather. So we were conſtrayned to ſeeke harborowe vpon the ſouthcoaſt of this entrance, where wee fell into a very fayre ſound, and ankered in 25. fathoms greene oſy ſand. Here we went on ſhoare, where we had manifeſt ſignes of people, where they had made their fire, and laide ſtones like a wall. In this place we ſawe 4. very faire faulcons, and M. Buton tooke from one of them his pray, which we iudged by the wings and legs to be a ſnyte, for the head was eaten off. Faulcons.

The 24. in the afternoone, the wind comming ſomewhat faire wee departed from this roade, purpoſing by Gods grace to returne for England. Their returne.

The 26. we departed from ſight of the Northlande of this entraunce, directing our courſe homewards, vntil the tenth of the next moneth.

The 10. of September we fell with The land of deſolation, thinking to goe on ſhoare, but we could get nener a good harborough. That night we put to ſea againe thinking to ſearch it the next day: but this night aroſe a very great ſtorme, and ſeparated our ſhips ſo that we loſt the ſight of the Mooneſhine. September.

The 13. about noone (hauing tryed al the night before with a gooſe wing) we ſet ſaile, & within two houres after, we had ſight of the mooneſhine againe: this day we departed from this land. They ſaile from the land of Deſolation to England, in 14. dayes.

The 27. of this moneth wee fell with ſight of Englande. This night wee had a marueilous ſtorme and loſt the Mooneſhine.

The 30. of September wee came into Dartmouth where wee found the Mooneſhine being come in not two houres before.

A true

The second voyage attempted by Master Iohn Dauis with others, for the discouerie of the Northwest passage, in Anno 1586.

THe seuenth day of May, I departed from the porte of Dartmouth for the discouery of the Northwest passage, with a ship of an hundred and twentie tunnes, named the Mermayde, a barke of 60. tunnes, named the Sunneshine, a barke of 35. tunnes named the moonelight, and a Pynace of ten tunnes named the North starre.

And the 15. of June I discouered land in the latitude of 60. degrees, and in longitude from the meridian of London westward 47. degrees, mightily pestered with yce, and snow, so that there was no hope of landing: the yce lay in some places 10. leagues, in some 20. and in some 50. leagues off the shore, so that we were constrayned to beare into 57. degr. to double the same, and to recouer a free sea, which through Goos fauourable mercy we at length obtayned.

The nine and twentieth of June, after many tempestuous stormes, wee againe discouered lande, in longitude from the Meridian of London, 58. degrees 30. minutes, and in latitude, 64. being East from vs: into which course sith it pleased God by contrary windes to force vs, I thought it very necessary to beare in with it, and there to set vp our Pynnace, prouided in the Mermayde to be our scout for this discouerie, and so much the rather, because the yeere before I had bene in the same place, and founde it very conuenient for such a purpose, well stored with flote woode, and possessed by a people of tractable conuersation: so that the nine and twentieth of this moneth wee arriued within the Iles which lay before this lande, lying North Northwest, and South Southeast, wee knowe not howe farre. This lande is very high, and mountainous, hauing before it on the West side a mightie companie of Iles full of fayre soundes, and harboroughs. This land was very little troubled with snowe, and the sea altogether voyd of yce.

The shippes being within the soundes we sent our boates to searche for shole water, where wee might anker, which in this place is very harde to finde: and as the boate went sounding and searching, the people of the country hauing espyed them, came in their Canoas towardes them with many shoutes and cryes: but after they had espied in the boate, some of our companie that were the yeere before heere with vs, they presently rowed to the boate, and tooke holde in the oare, and hung about the boate with such comfortable ioy, as woulde require a long discourse to be vttered: they came with the boates to our shippes, making signes that they knewe all those, that the yere before had bene with them. After I perceiued their ioy, and smal feare of vs, my selfe with the merchaunts, and others of the company went a shoare bearing with me twentie kniues: I had no sooner landed, but they lept out of their Canoas, and came running to mee, and the rest, and imbraced vs with many signes of hartie welcome: at this present there were eighteene of them, and to each of them I gaue a knife: they offered skinnes to mee for reward, but I made signes that it was not solde but giuen them of curtesie: and so dismissed them for that time, with signes that they shoulde returne againe after certaine houres.

The next day with all possible speede the Pynace was landed, vpon an Isle there to bee finished to serue our purpose for the discouerie, which Isle was so conuenient for that purpose, as that we were very well able to defend our selues against many enemies. During the time that the Pynace was there setting vp, the people came continually vnto vs, sometime an hundred Canoas at a time, sometime fourtie, fiftie, more and lesse, as occasion serued. They brought with them seale skinnes, stagge skinnes, white beares, seale fishe, samon peale, smal codde, dry caplin, with other fish, and hydes, such as the country did yeelde.

My selfe still desirous to haue a farther search of this place, sent one of the shipboates to one part of the land, and my selfe went to another parte to searche for the habitation of this people, with straight commaundement that there should be no iniurie offered to any of the people, neither any gunne shot.

The boates that went from me found the tents of the people made with seale skinnes set vp vpon timber, wherin they founde great store of dried Caplin, being a litle fish no bigger then a pilchard: they found bags of trayne oyle, many little images cut in wood, seale skinnes in tan tubs, with many other such trifles, whereof they diminished nothing.

They

They also found tenne miles within the snowy mountaines a plaine champion countrey, with earth and grasse, such as our moory and waste grounds of England are: they went vp into a riuer (which in the narrowest place is two leagues broad) about ten leagues, finding it still to continue they knew not how far: but I with my company tooke another riuer, which although at the first it offered a large inlet, yet it proued but a deepe bay, the end whereof in foure houres I attayned, and there leauing the boat well manned, went with the rest of my company three or foure miles into the country, but found nothing, nor saw any thing, saue onely gripes, rauens, and small birds, as larke and linnet. A goodly riuer.

The third of July I manned my boat, and went with fifty canoas attending vpon me vp into another sound, where the people by signes willed me to goe, hoping to finde their habitation: at length they made signes that I should go into a warme place to sleepe, at which place I went on shore, and ascended the toppe of an high hill to see into the country, but perceiuing my labor vaine, I returned againe to my boat, the people still following me, and my company very diligent to attend vs, and to helpe vs vp the rocks, and likewise downe: at length I was desirous to haue our men leape with them, which was done, but our men did ouerleape them: from leaping they went to wrestling, we found them strong and nimble, and to haue skill in wrestling, for they cast some of our men that were good wrestlers.

The fourth of July we launched our pinnesse, and had forty of the people to helpe vs, which they did very willingly: at this time our men againe wrestled with them, and found them as before, strong and skilfull. This fourth of July the maister of the Mermaid went to certaine Ilands to store himselfe with wood, where he found a graue with diuers buried in it, onely couered with seale skinnes, hauing a crosse laid ouer them. The people are of good stature, well in body proportioned, with small slender hands and feet, with broad visages, and small eyes, wide mouthes, the most part vnbearded, great lips, and close toothed. Their custome is as often as they go from vs, still at their returne to make a new truce, in this sort, holding his hand vp to the Sunne, with a lowd voice crieth Ylyaoute, and striketh his breast, with like signes being promised safetie, he giueth credit. These people are much giuen to bleed, and therefore stoppe their noses with deere hayre, or the hayre of an elan. They are idolaters, and haue images great store, which they were about them, and in their boats, which we suppose they worship. They are witches, and haue many kindes of inchantments, which they often vsed, but to small purpose, thanks be to God. A graue with a crosse layd ouer. The Tartars and people of Iapon are also small eyed.

Being among them at shore the fourth of July, one of them making a long oration, began to kindle a fire, in his maner: he tooke a piece of a board, wherin was a hole halfe thorow: into that hole he puts the end of a round sticke like vnto a bedstaffe, setting the end therof in traine, and in fashion of a turner, with a piece of lether, by his violent motion doth very speedily produce fire: which done, with turfs he made a fire, into which with many words, and strange gestures, he put diuers things, which we supposed to be a sacrifice: my selfe and diuers of my company standing by, they were desirous to haue me go into the smoke, I willed them like wise to stand in the smoke, in which they by no meanes would do. I then tooke one of them, and thrust him into the smoke, and willed one of my company to tread out the fire, & spurne it into the sea, which was done to shew them that we did contemne their sorcery. These people are very simple in all their conuersation, but maruellous theeuish, especially for iron, which they haue in great account. They began though our lenity to shew their vile nature: they began to cut our cables: they cut away the Moonlights boat from her sterne, they cut our cloth where it lay to ayre, though we did carefully looke vnto it, they stole our oares, a caliuer, a boare speare, a sword, with diuers other things, wherat the company and maisters being grieued, for our better security, desired me to dissolue this new friendship, and to leaue the company of these theeuish miscreants: whereupon there was a caliuer shot among them, and immediatly vpon the same a faulcon, which strange noise did sore amaze them, so that with speed they departed: notwithstanding their simplicity is such, that within ten houres after they came againe to vs to intreat peace: which being promised, we againe fell into a great league. They brought vs seale skinnes, and sammon peale, but seeing iron, they could in no wise forbeare stealing: which when I perceiued it did not minister vnto me an occasion of laughter, to see their simplicity, and willed that in no case they should be any more hardly vsed, but that our owne company should be the more vigilant to keepe their things, supposing it to be very hard in so short time to make them know their euils. They eat all their meat raw, they liue most vpon fish, they drinke salt water, and eat grasse and ice with delight: they are neuer out of the water, but liue in the nature of fishes, but onely when dead sleepe taketh them, and then vnder a warme rocke, laying his boat vpon the land, he lyeth downe to sleepe. Their weapons are all darts, but some of them haue bowe and arrowes, and slings. They make nets to take their fish, of the sinne of a whale: they

The seuenth of July, being very desirous to search the habitation of this countrey, I went my selfe with our new pinnesse into the body of the land, thinking it to be a firme continent, and passing vp a very large riuer, a great flaw of winde tooke me, whereby we were constrained to seeke succor for that night, which being had, I landed with the most part of my company, and went to the toppe of a high mountaine, hoping from thence to see into the countrey: but the mountaines were so many and so mighty as that my purpose preuailed not: whereupon I againe returned to my pinnesse, and willing diuers of my company to gather muscles for my supper, whereof in this place there was great store, my selfe hauing espyed a very strange sight, especially to me that neuer before saw the like, which was a mighty whirlewinde taking vp the water in very great quantity, furiously mounting it into the ayre, which whirlewinde was not for a puffe or blast, but continuall, for the space of three houres, with very little intermission, which sith it was in the course that I should passe, we were constrained that night to take vp our lodging vnder the rocks.

Muscles.

A strange whirlewinde.

The next morning the storme being broken vp, we went forward in our attempt, and sailed into a mighty great riuer directly into the body of the land, and in briefe, found it to be no firme land, but huge, waste, and desert Iles with mighty sounds, and inlets passing betweene sea and sea. Whereupon we returned towards our shippes, and landing to stoppe a sloud, we found the buriall of these miscreants, we found of theyr fish in bagges, plaices, and caplin dryed, of which we tooke onely one bagge, and departed. The ninth of this moneth we came to our shippes, where we found the people desirous in theyr fashion, of friendshippe and barter: our mariners complained heauily against the people, and said that my lenity and friendly vsing of them gaue them stomacke to mischiefe: for they haue stollen an anker from vs, they haue cut our cable very dangerously, they haue cut our boats from our sterne, and now since your departure, with slings they spare vs not with stones of halfe a pound weight: & will you still indure these iniuries? it is a shame to beare them. I desired them to be content, and said I doubted not but all should be well. The tenth of this moneth I went to the shore, the people following me in theyr canoas: I toyled them on shore, and vsed them with much curtesie, and then departed aboord, they following me, and my company. I gaue some of them bracelets, and caused seuen or eight of them to come aboord, which they did willingly, and some of them went into the toppe of our shippe: and thus curteously vsing them, I let them depart: the Sunne was no sooner downe, but they began to practise theyr deuilish nature, and with slings threw stones very fiercely into the Pooneright, & strake one of her men, the boatswaine that he ouerthrew withall: wherat being moued, I changed my curtesie, & grew to hatred, my selfe in my owne boat well manned, with shot, and the barks boat likewise pursued them, & gaue them diuers shot but to small purpose, by reason of their swift rowing: so small content we returned.

The 11 of this moneth there came fiue of them to make a new truce: the maister of the Admiral came to me to shew me of their comming, and desired to haue them taken, & kept as prisoners vntill we had his anker againe: but when he saw that the chiefe ringleader, & maister of mischiefe was one of the fiue, he then was vehement to execute his purpose, so it was determined to take him: he came crying Iliaout, & striking his brest offered a payre of gloues to sell, the maister offered him a knife for them: so two of them came to vs, the one was not touched, but the other was soone captiue among vs: then we pointed to him & his fellowes for our anker, which being had, we made signes that he should be set at liberty: within one houre that he came aboord, the winde came fayre, whereupon we weyed, and set saile, and so brought the fellow with vs: one of his fellowes still following our ship close aboord, talked with him, & made a kinde of lamentation, we still vsing him well, with Yliaout, which was the common course of curtesie. At length this fellow aboord vs spake foure or fiue words vnto the other, and claped his two hands vpon his face, whereupon the other doing the like, departed, as we suppose, with heauy chere. We iudged the couering of his face with his hands, and bowing of his body downe, signified his death. At length he became a pleasant companion among vs. I gaue him a new suite of frize after the English fashion, because I saw he could not indure the colde, of which he was very ioyfull, he trimmed vp his darts, and all his fishing tooles, and would make okam, and set his hand to a ropes end vpon occasion. He liued with the dry caplin that I tooke when I was searching in the pinnesse, and did eat dry Newland fish.

One of the people taken, which after died.

All this while, God be thanked, our people were in very good health, onely one young man excepted, who dyed at sea the fourteenth of this moneth, and the fifteenth according to the order of the sea, with praise giuen to God by seruice, was cast ouerboord.

The 17 of this moneth, being in the latitude of 63 degrees 8 minuts, we fel vpon a most mighty and strange quantity of ice, in one intyre masse, so bigge, as that we knew not the limits thereof, and being withall so very high, in forme of a land, with bayes and capes, and like high cliffe land, as that we supposed it to be land, and therfore sent our pinnesse off to discouer it: but at her returne we were certainely informed that it was onely ice, which bred great admiration to vs all, considering the huge quantity thereof, incredible to be reported in truth as it was, and therefore I omit to speake any further therof. This onely, I thinke that the like before was neuer seene, and in this place we had very stickle and strong currants.

We coasted this mighty masse of ice vntill the 30 of July, finding it a mighty barre to our purpose: the ayre in this time was so contagious, and the sea so pestered with ice, as that all hope was banished of proceeding: for the 24 of July all our shrowds, ropes, and sailes were so frosen, and compassed with ice, onely by a grosse fogge, as seemed to me more then strange, sith the last yeere I found this sea free and nauigable, without impediments.

The nature of fogges.

Our men through this extremity began to grow sicke & feeble, and withal hopelesse of good successe: wherupon very orderly, with good discretion they intreated me to regard the state of this businesse, and withall aduised me, that in conscience I ought to regard the safety of mine owne life, with the preseruation of theirs, & that I should not through my ouerbold nesse leaue their widowes and fatherlesse children to giue me bitter curses. This matter in conscience did greatly moue me to regard their estates: yet considering the excellency of the businesse, if it might be attained, the great hope of certainty by the last yeres discouery, & that there was yet a third way not put in practise, I thought it would grow to my great disgrace, if this action by my negligence should grow into discredit: wherupon seeking helpe from God the fountaine of all mercies, it pleased his diuine Maiesty to moue my heart to prosecute that which I hope shalbe to his glory, and to the contentation of euery Christian minde. Wherupon falling into consideration, that the Mermaid, albeit a very strong and sufficient ship, yet by reason of her burden, not so conuenient and nimble as a smaller barke, especially in such desperate hazzards: further hauing in account her great charge to the aduenturers, being at 100 li. the moneth: & that in doubtfull seruice, all the premises considered, with diuers other things, I determined to furnish the Moonelight with reuictualling & sufficient men, & to proceed in this action as God should direct me: wherupon I altered our course from the ice, & bare East southe all to recouer the next shore where this thing might be performed: so with fauorable winde it pleased God that the first of August we discouered the land in latitude 66 deg. 33 min. & in longitude from the meridian of London 70 deg. void of trouble without snow or ice. August 1.

The second of August we harboured our selues in a very excellent good road, where with all speed we graued the Moonelight, and reuictualled her: we searched this country with our pinnesse while the barke was trimming, which William Elton did: he found all this land to be only ilands, with a sea on the East, a sea on the West, and a sea on the North. In this place we found it very Great heat. hot, and we were very much troubled with a flie which is called Musketa, for they did sting grieuously. The people of this place at our first comming in caught a seale, and with bladders fast tied to him sent him vnto vs with the flood, so as he came right with our shippes, which we tooke as a friendly present from them.

The 5 of August I went with the two maisters and others to the toppe of a hill, and by the way William Elton espied three Canoas lying vnder a rocke, and went vnto them: there were in them skinnes, darts, with diuers superstitious toyes, whereof we diminished nothing, but left vpon euery boat a like point, a bullet of lead, and a pinne. The next day being the 6 of August, the people came vnto vs without feare, and did barter with vs for skinnes, as the other people did: they differ not from the other, neither in their canoas nor apparell, yet is their pronuntiation more plaine then the others, and nothing hollow in the throat. Our miscreant aboord vs kept himselfe close, and made shew that he would faine haue another companion. Thus being pounded, I departed from this land the twelfe of August, at 5 of the clocke in the morning, where I left the Mermaid at an anker: the fourteenth sailing West about fiftie leagues, we discouered land, being in latitude 66 degrees 19 minuts: this land is 70 leagues from the other from whence we came. This fourteenth day from nine a clocke at night till three a clocke in the morning, we ankered by an Iland of ice, twelue leagues off the shore, being moored to the ice.

The fifteenth day at three a clocke in the morning we departed from this land to the South, and the eighteenth of August we discouered land Northwest from vs in the morning, being a very fayre promontory, in latitude 65 degrees, hauing no land on the South. Heere we had great Great hope of a passage. hope of a through passage.

This day at three a clocke in the afternoone we againe discouered land Southwest and by South from vs, where at night we were becalmed. The nineteenth of this month at noone, by obseruation, we were in 64 degrees 20 minuts. From the eighteenth day at noone vnto the nineteenth at noone, by precise ordinary care, we had sailed 15 leagues South and by West, yet by art
A great currant to the West. and more exact obseruation, we found our course to be Southwest, so that we plainely perceiued a great currant striking to the West.

This land is nothing in sight but Iles, which increaseth our hope. This nineteenth of August at 5 a clocke in the afternoone, it began to snow, and so continued all night with foule weather, and much winde, so that we were constrained to lie at hull all night fiue leagues off the shore: In the morning, being the twentith of August, the fogge and storme breaking vp, we bare in with the land, and at nine a clocke in the morning we ankered in a very fayre and safe road and locket for all weathers. At tenne of the clocke I went on shore, to the toppe of a very high hill, where I
Ilands. perceiued that this land was Ilands: at foure of the clocke in the afternoone we weyed anker, hauing a fayre North northeast winde, with very fayre weather: at six of the clocke we were cleere
Hope of a passage. without the land, and so shaped our course to the South, to discouer the coast, whereby the passage may be through Gods mercy found.

We coasted this land till the eight and twentith of August, finding it still to continue towards the South, from the latitude of 67 to 57 degrees: we found maruellous great store of birds, guls & mewes, incredible to be reported, whereupon being calme weather, we lay one glasse vpon the lee, to proue for fish, in which space we caught 100 of cod, although we were but badly prouided for fishing, not being our purpose. This eight and twentith, hauing great distrust of the weather, we arriued in a very fayre harbor in the latitude of 56 degrees, and sailed ten leagues into the same,
Faire woods. being two leagues broad, with very fayre woods on both sides: in this place we continued vntill the first of September, in which time we had two very great stormes. I landed, and went fiue miles by ghesse into the country, and found that the woods were firre, pineapple, alder, yew, withy, and birch: here we saw a blacke beare: this place yeeldeth great store of birds, as fezant, partridge, Barbary hennes, or the like, wilde geese, ducks, blacke birds, iayes, thrushes, with other kindes of small birds. Of the partridge and fezant, we killed great store with bowe and arrowes: in this Store of cod. place, at the harborough mouth, we found great store of cod.

The first of September at tenne a clocke, wee set saile, and coasted the shore with very faire weather. The third day being calme, at noone we strooke saile, and let fall a cadge anker, to proue whether we could take any fish, being in latitude 54 degrees 30 minuts, in which place we found great abundance of cod, so that the hooke was no sooner ouerboord, but presently a fish was taken. It was the largest and best reset fish that euer I saw, and diuers fisher men that were with me sayd that they neuer saw a more snaule or better skull of fish in their lines: yet had they seene great abundance.

The

The fourth of September at fiue a clocke in the afternoone we ankered in a very good road among great ſtore of Iſles, the countrey low land, pleaſant, and very full of fayre woods. To the North of this place eight leagues, we had a perfect hope of the paſſage, finding a mighty great ſea paſſing betweene two lands Weſt. The South land to our iudgement being nothing but Iſles, we greatly deſired to go into this ſea, but the winde was directly againſt vs. We ankered in foure fathome fine land. In this place is foule and fiſh mighty ſtore. A perfect hope of the paſſage.

The firſt of September hauing a fayre North northweſt winde, hauing trimmed our barke, we purpoſed to depart, and ſent fiue of our ſailers yoong men a ſhore to an Iſland, to fetch certaine fiſh which we purpoſed to weather, and therefore left it all night couered vpon the Iſle: the brutiſh people of this countrey lay ſecretly lurking in the wood, and vpon the ſudden aſſaulted our men: which when we perceiued, we preſently let ſlippe our cables vpon the halſe, and vnder our foreſaile bare into the ſhoare, and with all expedition diſcharged a double muſket vpon them twiſe, at the noiſe wherof they fled: notwithſtanding to our very great griefe, two of our men were ſlaine with their arrowes, and two grieuouſly wounded, of whom at this preſent we ſtand in very great doubt, onely one eſcaped by ſwimming, with an arrow ſhot thorow his arme. Theſe wicked miſcreants neuer offered parly or ſpeech, but preſently executed their curſed fury. Two of our men ſlaine by the Sauages.

This preſent euening it pleaſed God further to increaſe our ſorrowes with a mighty tempeſtuous ſtorme, the winde being North northeaſt, which laſted vnto the tenth of this moneth very extreme. We vnrigged our ſhippe, and purpoſed to cut downe our maſts, the cable of our ſhut anker brake, ſo that we onely expected to be driuen on ſhoare among theſe Canibals for their prey. Yet in this deepe diſtreſſe the mighty mercy of God, when hope was paſt, gaue vs ſuccor, and ſent vs a fayre lee, ſo as we recouered our anker againe, and new moyed our ſhippe: where we ſaw that God manifeſtly deliuered vs: for the ſtraines of one of our cables were broken, we only road by an olde iunke. Thus being freſhly moyed, a new ſtorme aroſe, the winde being Weſt northweſt, very forcible, which laſted vnto the tenth day at night.

The eleuenth day with a fayre Weſt northweſt winde we departed with truſt in Gods mercy, ſhaping our courſe for England, and arriued in the Weſt countrey in the beginning of October.

Maiſter Dauis being arriued, wrote his letter to M. William Sanderſon of London, concerning his voyage, as followeth.

SIr, the Sunneſhine came into Dartmouth the fourth of this moneth: ſhe hath beene at Iſlaud, and from thence to Groenland, and ſo to Eſtotiland, from thence to Deſolation, and to our merchants, where ſhe made trade with the people, ſtaying in the countrey twenty dayes. They haue brought home fiue hundred ſeale ſkinnes, and an hundred and forty halſe ſkinnes, and pieces of ſkinnes. I ſtand in great doubt of the pinneſſe, God be mercifull vnto the poore men, and preſerue them if it be his bleſſed will.

I haue now full experience of much of the Northweſt part of the world, and haue brought the paſſage to that certainty, as that I am ſure it muſt be in one of foure places, or els not at all. And further, I can aſſure you vpon the perill of my life, that this voyage may be performed without further charge, nay with certaine profit to the aduenturers, if I may haue but your fauour in the action. Surely it ſhall coſt me all my hope of welfare, and my portion of Sandridge, but I will by Gods mercy, ſee an end of theſe buſineſſes. I hope I ſhall finde fauour with you to ſee your card. I pray God it be ſo true as the card ſhall be which I will bring to you: and I hope in God, that your ſkill in nauigation ſhall be gainefull vnto you, although at the firſt it hath not proued ſo. And thus with my moſt humble commendations I commit you to God, deſiring no longer to liue then I ſhall be yours moſt faithfully to command. From this 14 of October. 1586.

Yours with my heart, body and life to command IOHN DAVIS.

The relation of the courſe which the Sunſhine a barke of fiftie tunnes, and the Northſtarre a ſmall pinneſſe, being two veſſels of the fleet of M. Iohn Dauis held after he had ſent them from him to diſcouer the paſſage betweene Groenland and Iſland, written by Henry Morgan ſeruant to M. William Sanderſon of London.

May. THe ſeuenth day of May 1586 we departed out of Dartmouth hauen foure ſailes, to wit, the Mermaid, the Sunſhine, the Mooneſhine, and the Northſtarre. In the Sunſhine were ſixteene men, whoſe names were theſe: Richard Pope maiſter, Marke Carter maiſters mate, Henry Morgan purſer, George Dyward, Iohn Mandie, Hugh Broken, Philip Iane, Hugh Hemplon, Richard Boyden, Iohn Filpe, Andrew Madocke, William Wolcome, Robert Wagge carpenter, Iohn Bruſkome, William Aſhe, Simon Ellis.

Our courſe was Weſt northweſt the ſeuenth and eight dayes: and the ninth day in the morning we were on head of the Tarroſe of Syllie. Thus coaſting along the South part of Ireland the 11 day, we were on head of the Doyles: and our courſe was South ſouthweſt vntill ſix of the clocke the 12 day. The 13 day our courſe was Northweſt. We remained in the company of the Mermaid and the Mooneſhine vntill we came to the latitude of 60 degrees: and there it ſeemed beſt to our Generall M. Dauis to diuide his fleet, himſelfe ſailing to the Northweſt & to direct the Sunſhine, wherein I was, & the pinneſſe called the Northſtar, to ſeeke a paſſage Northward betweene Groenland and Iſland to the latitude of 80 degrees, if land did not let vs. So the ſeuenth day of June we departed from them: and the ninth of the ſame we came to a firme land of ice, which we coaſted along the ninth, the tenth, and the eleuenth dayes of June: and the eleuenth day at ſix of the clocke at night we ſaw land, which was very high, which afterward we knew to be Iſland: and the twelft day we harboyed there, and found many people: the land lyeth Eaſt and by North in 66 degrees.

Theyr commodities were greene fiſh, and Iſland lings, and ſtockfiſh, and a fiſh which is called catefiſh: of all which they had great ſtore. They had alſo kine, ſheepe, and horſes, and hay for theyr cattell, and for theyr horſes. We ſaw alſo of theyr dogges. Theyr dwelling houſes were made on both ſides with ſtones, and wood laid croſſe ouer them, which was couered ouer with turfs of earth, and they are flat on the toppes, and many of theſe ſtood hard by the ſhoare. Theyr boats were made with wood, and iron all along the keele like our Engliſh boats: and they had nailes for to naile them withall, and fiſh hooks and other things for to ketch fiſh as we haue heere in England. They had alſo braſen kettles, and girdles and purſes made of leather, and knoppes on them of copper, and hatchets and other ſmall tooles as neceſſarie as we haue. They dry theyr fiſh in the Sun, and when they are dry, they packe them vp in the toppe of their houſes. If we would go thither to fiſhing more then we do, we ſhould make it a very good voyage: for we got an hundreth greene fiſh in one morning. We found heere two Engliſh men with a ſhippe, which came out of England about Eaſter day of this preſent yeere 1586, and one of them came aboord of vs, and brought vs two lambs. The Engliſh mans name was M. Iohn Royden of Ipſwich, merchant: he was bound for London with his ſhippe. And this is the ſumme of that which I obſerued in Iſland. We departed from Iſland the ſixteenth day of June in the morning, and our courſe was Northweſt, and ſaw on the coaſt two ſmall barkes going to an harborough: we went not to them, but ſaw them a farre off. Thus we continued our courſe vnto the end of this moneth.

July. The third day of July we were in betweene two firme lands of iſe, and paſſed in betweene them all that day vntill it was night: and then the maiſter turned backe againe, and ſo away we went towards Groenland. And the ſeuenth day of July we did ſee Groenland, and it was very high, and it looked very blew: we could not come to harborough into the land becauſe we were hindered by a firme land, as it were, of ice, which was along the ſhoares ſide: but we were within three leagues of the land, coaſting the ſame diuers dayes together. The ſeuenteenth day of July we ſaw the place which our captaine M. Iohn Dauis the yeere before had named The land of Deſolation, where we could not go on ſhoare for ice. The eightenth day we were likewiſe troubled with ice, and went in amongſt it at three of the clocke in the morning. After we had cleered our ſelues thereof, we ranged all along the coaſt of Deſolation vntill the end of the aforeſayd moneth.

The

The third day of August we came in sight of Gilberts sound in the latitude of 64. deg. 15. min. which was the place where we were appointed to meete our generall and the rest of our Fleete. Here we came to an harborow at 6. of the clocke at night. August.

The 4. day in the morning the master went on shore with 10. of his men, and they brought vs foure of the people rowing in their boates aboord of the ship. And in the afternoone I went on shore with six of our men, and there came to vs seuen of them when we were on land. We found on shore three dead people, and two of them had their staues lying by them, and their olde skins wrapped about them, and the other had nothing lying by, wherfore we thought it was a woman. Wee also saw their houses neere the Sea side, which were made with pieces of wood on both sides, and crossed ouer with poles & then couered ouer with earth: we found Foxes running vpon the hils: as for the place, it is broken land all the way that we went, and full of broken Islands.

The 21. of August the master sent the boate on shore for wood, with sixe of his men, and there were one and thirtie of the people of the countrey which went on shore to them, and they went about to kill them as we thought, for they shot their dartes towards them, and we that were aboord the ship, did see them goe on shore to our men: whereupon the master sent the pinnace after them, and when they saw the pinnace comming towards them, they turned backe, and the master of the pinnace did shoote off a caliuer to them the same time, but hurt none of them, for his meaning was onely to put them in feare. Diuers times they did weaue vs on shore to play with them at the foot-ball, and some of our company went on shore to play with them, and our men did cast them downe as soone as they did come to strike the ball. And thus much of that which we did see and do in that harborow where we arriued first. Our men play at foot ball with the Sauages.

The 23. day we departed from the merchaunts where we had bene first, and our course from thence was South and by West, and the wind was Northeast, and we ran that day and night about 5. or 6. leagues, vntill we came to another harborow.

The 24. about eleuen of the clocke in the forenoone, wee entered into the aforesayd new harborow, and as we came in, we did see dogs running vpon the Islands. When wee were come in, there came to vs foure of the people which were with vs before in the other harborow, and where we rode, we had sandie ground. We saw no wood growing, but found small pieces of wood vpon the Islands, & some small pieces of sweete wood among the same. We found great Harts hornes, but could see none of the Stagges where we went, but we found their footings. As for the bones which we receiued of the Sauages, I cannot tell of what beasts they be. Sweete wood found.

The stones that we found in the countrey, were blacke and some white, as I thinke they bee of no value, neuertheles I haue brought examples of them to you.

The 30. of August we departed from this harborow towards England, & the wind tooke vs contrary, so that we were faine to goe to another harborow the same day at 11. of the clocke. And there came to vs 39. of the people, and brought vs 13. Seale skins, and after we receiued these skinnes of them, the master sent the carpenter to change one of our boates which we had bought of them before, and they would haue taken the boate from him perforce, and when they saw we they could not take it from vs, they shot with their dartes at vs, and stroke one of our men with one of their dartes, and John Filpe shot one of them into the brest with an arrow. And they came to vs againe, and foure of our men went into the shipboate, and they shot with their dartes at our men: but our men tooke one of their people in his boate into the shipboate, and he hurt one of them with his knife, but we killed three of them in their boates: two of them were hurt with arrowes in the brests, and he that was aboord our boat, was shot in with an arrow, and hurt with a sword, and beaten with staues, whom our men cast ouer boorde, but the people caught him and carried him on shore vpon their boats, and the other two also, and so departed from vs. And three of them went on shore hard by vs, where they had their dogs, and those three came away from their dogs, and presently one of their dogs came swimming towards vs hard aboord the ship, whereupon our master caused the Gunner to shoote off one of the great pieces towards the people, and so the dog turned backe to land, and within an houre after there came of the people hard aboord the ship, but they would not come to vs as they did come before. A skirmish betwixt the Sauages and our men.

The 31. of August we departed from Gilberts sound for England, and when we came out of the harborow, there came after vs 17. of the people looking which way we went.

The 2. of September we lost sight of the land at 12. of the clocke at noone. September.

The third day at night we lost sight of the Northstarre our pinnace in a very great storme, & lay a hull carying for them the 4. day, but could heare no more of them. Thus we shaped our course the 5. day South southeast, and sayling vntill the 27. of the sayd moneth we came in sight of Cape Clere in Ireland. The pinnace neuer returned home.

The

The 30. day we entred into our owne chanell.

The 2. of October we had ſight of the Iſle of Wight.

The 3. we coaſted all along the ſhore, and the 4. and 5.

The 6. of the ſayd moneth of October we came into the riuer of Thames as high as Ratcliffe in ſafetie God be thanked.

The third voyage Northweſtward, made by Iohn Dauis Gentleman, as chiefe Captaine and Pilot generall, for the diſcouerie of a paſſage to the Iſles of the Molucca, or the coaſt of China, in the yeere, 1587. Written by Iohn Ianes ſeruant to the aforeſayd M. William Sanderſon.

May.

THe 19. of this preſent moneth about midnight, we weighed our ankers, ſet ſaile and departed from Dartmouth with two barkes and a Clincher, the one named the Elizabeth of Dartmouth, the other the Sunne ſhine of London, and the Clincher called the Ellin of London: thus in Gods name we ſet forwards with the wind at Northeaſt a good freſh gale. About 3. howers after our departure, the night being ſomwhat thicke with darkneſſe, we had loſt the pinnace, the captaine imagining that the men had runne away with her, willed the maſter of the Sunne ſhine, to ſtand to Seawards, and ſee if we could deſcrie them, we bearing in with the ſhore for Plimmouth. At length we deſcried her, bare with her, and demanded what the cauſe was: They anſwered that the tiller of their helme was burſt. So ſhaping our courſe Weſt Southweſt, we went forward, hoping that a hard beginning would make a good ending, yet ſome of vs were doubtfull of it, falling in reckoning that ſhe was a Clincher, neuertheleſſe we put our truſt in God.

The 21. we met with the Red Lion of London, which came from the coaſt of Spaine, which was afraid that we had bene men of warre, but we hailed them, and after a litle conference, we deſtred the maſter to carie our letters for London, directed to my vncle Sanderſon, who promiſed vs ſafe deliuerie. And after we had heaued them a lead and a line, whereunto wee had made faſt our letters, before they could get them into the ſhip, they fell into the ſea, and ſo all our labour and theirs alſo was loſt, notwithſtanding they promiſed to certifie our departure at London, and ſo we departed, and the ſame day we had ſight of Sillie. The 22. the wind was at Northeaſt by Eaſt, with faire weather, and ſo the 23. and 24. the like. The 25. we laied our ſhippes on the Lee for the Sunne ſhine, who was a rommaging for a leake, they had 500. ſtrokes at the pumpe in a watch, the wind at Northweſt.

The 26. and 27. we had faire weather, but this 27. the pinnaces foremaſte was blowen ouerboord. The 28. the Elizabeth towed the pinnace, which was ſo much dragged of by the owners report before we came out of England, but at Sea ſhe was like to a cart drawen with oxen, Sometimes we towed her becauſe ſhe could not ſaile for ſcant wind.

The 31. day our captaine aſked if the pinnace were ſtanch, Peerſon anſwered that ſhe was as ſound and ſtanch as a cuppe. This made vs ſomething glad, when we ſawe ſhe would brooke the Sea, and was not leake.

Iune.

THe firſt 6. dayes we had faire weather: after that for 5. dayes we had fogge and rayne, the wind being South. The 12. we had cleare weather. The Mariners in the Sunne ſhine, and the maſter could not agree: the mariners would goe on their voyage a fiſhing, becauſe the yeere began to waſte: the maſter would not depart till hee had the companie of the Elizabeth, whereupon the maſter told our captaine that he was afrayd his men would ſhape ſome contrarie courſe while he was a ſleep, and ſo he ſhould looſe vs. At length after much talke and many threatnings, they were content to bring vs to the land which we looked for daily.

The 13. we had fogge and raine.

The 14. day we diſcouered land at fiue of the clocke in the morning, being very great and high mountaines, the tops of the hils being couered with ſnow. Here the wind was variable, ſometimes Northeaſt, Eaſt Northeaſt, and Eaſt by North: but wee imagined our ſelues to be 16. or 17. leagues off from the ſhore.

The 15. we had reaſonable cleare weather.

The 16. we came to an anker about 4. or 5. of the clocke after noone, the people came preſently

to

to vs after the old maner, with crying Il y a oute, and shewing vs Seale skinnes. The 17. we began to set vp the pinnace that Peerson framed at Dartmouth, with the boords which hee brought from London.

The 18. Peerson and the Carpenters of the ships, began to set on the plankes. The 19. as we went about an Island, were found blacke Pummise stones, and salt kerned on the rockes very white and glistering. This day also the master of the Sunne shine tooke one of the people, a very strong lustie yong fellow.

The 20. about two of the clocke in the morning, the Sauages came to the Island where our pinnace was built readie to bee launched, and toze the two vppet strakes, and caried them away onely for the loue of the iron in the boords. While they were about this practise, wee manned the Elizabeths boate to goe a shore to them: our men being either afrayd, or amazed, were so long before they came to shore, that our captaine willed them to staie, and made the Gunner giue fire to a Saker, and laied the piece leuell with the boate which the Sauages had turned on the one side, because we should not hurt them with our arrowes, and made the boate their bulwarke against the arrowes which wee shot at them. Our Gunner hauing made all things readie, gaue fire to the peece, and fearing to hurt any of the people, and regarding the owners profite, thought belike hee would saue a Sakers shot, doubting we should haue occasion to fight with men of warre, and so shot off the Saker without a bullet, we looking still when the Sauages that were hurt should run away without legs, at length wee could perceiue neuer a man hurt, but all hauing their legges could carie away their bodies: we had no sooner shot off the piece, but the master of the Sunneshine manned his boate, and came rowing towards the Island, the very sight of whom made each of them take that he had gotten, and flie away as fast as they could to another Island about two miles off, where they tooke the nayles out of the timber, and left the wood on the Ile. When we came on shore and saw how they had spoiled the boate, after much debating of the matter, we agreed that the Elizabeth should haue her to fish withall: wherupon she was presently caried aboord, and stowed.

Now after this trouble, being resolued to depart with the first wind, there fell out another matter worse then all the rest, and that was in this maner. John Churchyard one whom our captaine had appointed as Pilot in the pinnace, came to our Captaine, and master Buton, and told them that the good ship which we must all hazard our liues in, had three hundred strokes at one time as she rode in the harbour: This disquieted vs all greatly, and many doubted to goe in her. At length our captaine by whom we were all to be gouerned, determined rather to end his life with credite, then to returne with infamie and disgrace, and so being all agreed, we purposed to liue and die together, & committed our selues to the ship. Now the 21. hauing brought all our things aboord, about 11. or 12. of the clocke at night, we set saile and departed from those Iles, which lie in 64. degrees of latitude, our ships being now all at Sea, and wee shaping our course to goe, coasting the land to the Northwards vpon the Easterne shore, which we called the shore of our Merchants, because there we met with people which trafficked with vs, but here we were not without doubt of our ship. The 22. and 23. we had close fogge and raine.

The 24. being in 67. degrees, and 40. minutes, we had great store of Whales, and a kinde of sea birdes which the Mariners call Cortinous. This day about fiue of the clocke at night, we espied two of the countrey people at Sea, thinking at the first they had bene two great Seales, vntill we saw their oares glistering with the Sunne: they came rowing towardes vs, as fast as they could, and when they came within hearing, they held vp their oares, and cried Il y a oute, making many signes: and at last they came to vs, giuing vs birdes for bracelets, and of them I had a darte with a bone in it, or a piece of Unicorns horne, as I did iudge. This dart he made store of, but when he saw a knife, he let it go, being more desirous of the knife then of his dart: these people continued rowing after our ship the space of 3. howers.

The 25. in the morning at 7. of the clocke we descried 30. Sauages rowing after vs, being by iudgement 10. leagues off from the shore: they brought vs Salmon Peales, Birdes, and Caplin, and we gaue them pinnes, needles, bracelets, nailes, kniues, bels, looking glasses, and other small trifles, and for a knife, a naile or a bracelet, which they call Ponigmah, they would sell their boat, coates, or any thing they had, although they were farre from the shore. Wee had but few skinnes of them, about 20. but they made signes to vs that if wee would goe to the shore, wee should haue more store of Chichsanege: they staied with vs til 11. of the clocke, at which time we went to prayer, and they departed from vs.

The 26. was cloudie, the wind being at South.

The 27. faire with the same wind.

The

The 28. and 29. were foggie with clouds, the 30. day we tooke the heigth, and found our selues in 72. degrees and 12. min. of latitude both at noone and at night, the Sunne being 5. degr. aboue the horizon. At midnight the compasse set to the variation of 28. degr. to the Westward. Now hauing coasted the land which we called London coast, from the 21. of this present, til the 30. the sea open all to the Westwards and Northwards, the land on starboord side East from vs, the winde shifted to the North, whereupon we left that shore, naming the same Hope Sanderson, and shaped our course West, and ran 40. leagues and better, without the sight of any land.

72. deg. 12. mi.

London coast.

Iuly.

THe second we fell with a mighty banke of Ice West from vs, lying North and South, which banke we would gladly haue doubled out to the Northwards, but the winde would not suffer vs, so that we were faine to coast it to the Southwards, hoping to double it out that we might haue run so farre West till wee had found land, or els to haue bene thoroughly resolued of our pretended purpose.

The 3. we fell with the Ice againe, and putting off from it, we sought to the Northwards, but the wind crossed vs.

The 4. was foggie: so was the 5. also with much wind at North.

The 6. being very cleere, we put our barke with oares through a gappe in the Ice, seeing the Sea free on the West side as we thought, which falling out otherwise, caused vs to returne after we had staied there betweene the Ice. The 7. and the 8. about midnight, by Gods helpe we recouered the open sea, the weather being faire and calme, and so was the 9. The 10. we coasted the Ice. The 11. was foggie, but calme.

The 12. we coasted againe the Ice, hauing the wind at West northwest. The 13. bearing off from the Ice, we determined to goe with the shore and come to an anker, and to stay fiue or 6. daies for the dissoluing of the Ice, hoping that the sea continually beating it, and the sunne, with the extreme force of heate which it had alwayes shining vpon it, would make a quicke dispatch, that we might haue a further search vpon the Westerne shore. Now when we were come to the Easterne coast, the water something deepe, and some of our company fearefull withall, we durst not come to an anker, but bare off into sea againe. The poore people seeing vs goe away againe, came rowing after vs into the Sea, the waues being somewhat loftie. We truckt with them for a few skinnes and dartes, and gaue them beads, nailes, pinnes, needles and cardes, they pointing to the shore, as though they would shew vs great friendship: but we litle regarding their curtesie, gaue them the gentle farewell, and so departed.

The 14. we had the wind at South. The 15. there was some fault either in the barke, or the set of some currant, for we were driuē 6. points out of our course. The 16. we fell with ꝑ banke of Ice West from vs. The 17. and 18. were foggie. The 19. at one a clocke after noone, we had sight of the land which we called mount Raleigh, and at 12. of the clocke at night, wee were thwart the streights which we discouered the first yeere. The 20. wee trauersed in the mouth of the streight, the winde being at West, with faire and cleare weather. The 21. and 22. we coasted the Northerne coast of the streights. The 23. hauing sayled 60. leagues Northwest into the streights, at two a clocke after noone, we ankered among many Iles in the bottome of the gulfe, naming the same the erle of Cumberlands Iles, where riding at anker, a Whale passed by our ship and went West in among the Iles. Here the compasse set at 30. degrees Westward variation. The 24. we departed, shaping our course Southeast to recouer the Sea. The 25. we were becalmed in the bottome of the gulfe, the aire being extreme hote. Walter Buton and some of the Mariners went on shore to course dogs, where they found many Graues and Trane spilt on the ground, the dogs being so fat that they were scant able to runne.

The erle of Cumberlands Iles.

The 26. wee had a pretie storme, the wind being at Southeast. The 27. and 28. were faire. The 29. we were cleare out of the streights, hauing coasted the South shore, and this day at noone we were in 64. degrees of latitude. The 30. in the afternoone we coasted a banke of Ice, which lay on the shore, and passed by a great banke or inlet, which lay betweene 63. and 62. degrees of latitude, which we called Lumleis Inlet. We had oftentimes as we sailed alongst the coast, great rootes, the water as it were whirling and ouerfalling, as if it were the fall of some great water through a bridge. The 31. as we sayled by a head land, which wee named Warwikes Foreland, we fell into one of those ouerfals with a fresh gale of wind, and bearing all our sailes, we looking vpon an Iland of Ice betweene vs and the shore, had thought that our barke did make no way, which caused vs to take markes on the shore: at length we perceiued our selues to go very fast, and the Iſland of Ice which we ſaw before was caried very forcibly with the ſet of the current faſter then our ſhip went. This day and night we paſſed by a very great gulfe, the water whirling and roring, as it were the meetings of tides.

Auguſt.

The firſt hauing coaſted a banke of Ice which was driuen out at the mouth of this gulfe, wee fell with the Southermoſt Cape of the gulfe, which we named Chidleis Cape, which lay in 6. degrees and 10. minutes of latitude. The 2. and 3. were calme and foggie, ſo were the 4. 5. and 6. The 7. was faire and calme: ſo was the 8. with a litle gale in the morning. The 9. was faire, and we had a litle gale at night. The 10. wee had a friſking gale at Weſt Northweſt. The 11. faire. The 12. we ſawe fiue Deere on the top of an Iſland, called by vs Darcies Iſland. And wee hoiſed out our boate, and went a ſhore to them, thinking to haue killed ſome of them. But when we came on ſhore and had courſed them twiſe about the Iſland, they tooke the Sea and ſwamme towards Iſlands diſtant from that 3. leagues. When wee perceiued that they had taken the Sea, we gaue them ouer becauſe our boat was ſo ſmall that it could not carie vs, and rowe after them, they ſwamme ſo faſt: but one of them was as big as a good pretie Cowe and very fat, their freete as big as Oxe freete. Here vpon this Iſland I killed with my peece a grey hare.

The lord Darcies Iſland.

The 13. in the morning we ſaw 3. or 4. white Beares, but durſt not goe on ſhore to them for lacke of a good boat. This day we ſtroke a rocke, ſeeking for an harborow, and receiued .. leake, and this day we were in 54. deg. of latitude.

The 14. we ſtopt our leake in a ſtorme not very outragious, at noone.

The 15. being almoſt in 51. degrees of latitude, and not finding our ſhips, nor (according to their promiſe) any kind of marke, token or beacon, which we willed to ſet vp, and they proteſted to doe ſo vpon euery head land, Iſland or Cape, within 20. leagues euery way off from their fiſhing place, which our captaine appointed to be betweene 54. and 55. degrees: This 15. I ſay we ſhaped our courſe homewards for England, hauing in our ſhip but litle wood, and halfe a hogſhead of freſh water. Our men were very willing to depart, and no man more forward then Perſon, for he feared to be put out of his office of Stewardſhip: he was ſo inſaciate, that the allowance of two men was ſcant ſufficient to fill his greedie appetite: but becauſe euery man was ſo willing to depart, and conſidering our want, I doubted the matter very much, fearing that the ſeething of our mens victuall in ſalt water, would breed diſeaſes, and being but fewe (yet too many for the roome, if any ſhould be ſicke) and likely that all the reſt might bee infected therewith, wee conſented to returne for our owne countrey, and ſo we had the 16. faire with the winde at Southweſt.

The 17. wee met a ſhippe at Sea, and as farre as wee could iudge it was a Biſkaine: wee thought ſhe went a fiſhing for Whales, for in 52. degrees or thereabout, we ſaw very many.

The 18. was faire with a good gale at Weſt.

The 19. faire alſo, but with much wind at Weſt and by South.

And thus after much variable weather and change of windes, we arriued the 15. of September in Dartmouth, Anno 1587. giuing thanks to God for our ſafe arriuall.

A letter of the ſaid M. Iohn Dauis, written to M. Sanderſon of London, concerning his forewritten voyage.

GOod M. Sanderſon, with Gods great mercy I haue made my ſafe returne in health, with all my companie, and haue ſailed 60. leagues further then my determination at my departure. I haue bene in 73. degrees finding the Sea all open, and 40. leagues betweene land and land: The paſſage is moſt certaine, the execution moſt eaſie, as at my comming you ſhall fullie know. Yeſterday the 15. of September, I landed all wearie, therefore I pray you pardon my ſhortneſſe. Sandridge, this 16. of September, Anno 1587.

by triall you ſhall beſt know,

An extract of M. Lanes letter, to M. Richard Hakluyt Esquire, and another gentleman of the middle Temple, from Virginia: the right place whereof is next before the Account of master Lane. Pagina 737.

IN the meane while you shall vnderstand that since sir Rich. Greenuils departure from vs, as also before, we haue discouered the maine to bee the goodliest soile vnder the cope of heauen, so abounding with sweete trees, that bring such sundry rich and most pleasant gummes, grapes of such greatnes, yet wild, as France, Spaine nor Italy hath no greater, so many sortes of Apothecarie drugs, such seuerall kindes of flaxe, and one kind like silke, the same gathered of a grasse, as common there as grasse is here. And now within these few dayes we haue found here a Guinie wheate, whose eare peeldeth cxxv. for head, 400. vpon one eare, and the Cane maketh very good and perfect suger, also Terra Samia, otherwise Terra sigillata. Besides that, it is the goodliest and most pleasing territorie of the world (for the soile is of an huge vnknowen greatnesse, and very wel peopled and towned, though sauagelie) and the climate so wholesome, that we haue not had one sicke, since we touched land here. To conclude, if Virginia had but Horses and Kine in some reasonable proportion, I dare assure my selfe being inhabited with English, no realme in Christendome were comparable to it. For this already we find, that what commodities soeuer Spaine, France, Italy, or the East parts do yeeld vnto vs in wines of all sortes, in oiles, in flaxe, in rosens, pitch, frankincence, currans, sugers, & such like, these parts do abound with ꝑ growth of them all, but being Sauages that possesse the land, they know no vse of the same. And sundry other rich commodities, that no parts of the world, be they West or East Indies, haue, here we finde great abundance of. The people naturally most curteous, & very desirous to haue clothes, but especially of course cloth rather then silke, course canuas they also like wel of, but copper carieth ꝑ price of all, so it be maddred. Thus good M. Hakluyt and master H. I haue ioyned you both in one letter of remembrance, as two that I loue dearely well, and commending me most hartily to you both, I commit you to ꝑ tuition of the almighty. Frō the new Fort in Virginia, this 3. Sept. 1585.

Your most assured friend, Ralfe Lane.

The voiage set out by the right honorable the Earle of Cumberland, in the yeere 1586. intended for the South Sea, but performed no farther then the latitude of 44. deg. to the South of the Equinoctiall, written by Iohn Sarracoll Merchant in the same voyage.

THe 26. day of June, in the yeere 1586. and in the 28. yeere of the Queens maiesties raigne, we departed from Grauesend in two ships, the Admirall called the Red dragon, and the other the barke Clifford, the one of the burden of 260. tunnes, with 130. men, and the other of the burden of 130. tunnes, with 70. men: the captaine of the Admirall was M. Robert Withyngton, of the Viceadmirall, M. Christopher Lister, both being furnished out at the costes and charges of the right honourable the Erle of Cumberland, hauing for their masters two brethren, the one Iohn Anthonie, and the other William Anthonie.

The 24. of July we came into the sound of Plimmouth, and being there constrained by Westerlie winds, to stay till the 17. of August, wee then departed with another ship also for our Rearadmirall called the Roe, whereof M. Hawes was captaine, and a fine pinnace also called the Dorothie, which was sir Walter Raleighs. We 4. being one in the sea, met the 20. of August, with 16. sailes of Hulkes in the fleete, who named themselues to be men of Hamborough, laden and come from Lisbone. Our Admirall hailed their Admirall with curteous wordes, willing him to strike his sailes, and to come aboord to him onely to know some newes of the conuerey, but hee refused to do so, only stroke his flag and tooke it in. The Viceadmirall of the hulkes being a head, would neither strike flag nor saile, but passed on without budging, whereupon our Admirall lent him a piece of ordinance, which they repaied double, so that we grew to some litle quarell, whereupon one of the sternemost hulkes, being as I suppose more afraid then hurt, stroke amaine, our Admirall being neere him, layd him aboord, and entred with certains of his men, how many I know not, for that we were giuing chase to the Vttermost men, thinking our Admirall would haue come vp againe to vs, to haue made them all to haue stroke: but the weather growing to be very thicke and foggie, with small raine, he came not vp but kept with another of the hulkes which captaine Hawes had boorded and kept all night, and tooke out of her some prouision that they best liked. They learned of the men that were in the Hulke, that there were 7. hulkes laden in Lisbone with Spaniards goods, and because their lading was very rich, they were determined to go about Ireland, and so they let her goe againe like a goose with a broken wing.

The

The next day after being the 21. day, we eſpied 5. ſailes more, which laye along to the Eaſtwards, but by reaſon of the night which then was neere at hand, we coulde hardly come to them. Yet at laſt we hailed one of the biggeſt of them, and they told vs that they were all of Hambrough: but another ſaid ſhe was of Denmarke, ſo that in deede they knewneither what to ſay, nor what to doe. Our Admirall being more deſirous to follow his courſe, then to linger by chaſing the hulkes, called vs from purſuing them with his trumpet, and a piece of Ordinance, or els wee would haue ſeene what they had bene, and where with they had bene laden.

The 22. day becauſe of contrary winde we put into Dartmouth all 4. of vs, and tarried there 7. dayes.

The 29. we departed thence and put out to ſea, and beganne our voyage, thinking at the firſt to haue runne along the coaſt of Spaine, to ſee if we could haue mette with ſome good prize to haue ſent home to my Lord: but our Captaine thought it not the beſt courſe at the laſt, but rather kept off in the ſea from the coaſt. And vpon Saturday the 17. of September we fell with the coaſt of Barbarie, and the 18. hailed in with the roade of Sancta Cruz. The 21. day wee fell with one of the Iſlands of the Canaries, called Forteuentura. In running alongſt this Iſland, we eſpied vpon a hill by the water ſide, one wauing with a white flagge, whereupon wee manned both our boates, and ſent them towards the ſhoare, to vnderſtand what newes. They found them to be two ragged knaues and one horſeman, and they tolde vs that Lancerote was taken, and ſpoyled in Auguſt by the Turkes: when we ſaw they had nothing elſe to ſay, we left them, and proceeded in our courſe, and fell againe with the coaſt of Barbarie.

September.

Lancerota ſpoiled by the men of Algiers.

The 25. day of September about 10. of the clocke we fell with Rio de Oro, ſtanding iuſt vnder our Tropike: we ancred in the mouth of it in 8. fathome, the entrance of it is about 2. leagues ouer. And the next day our Captaine with the boate ſearched the Riuer, and found it to be as broad 14. or 15. leagues vp, as at the entrie of it, but founde no towne nor habitation, ſauing that there came downe 2. poore men, & one of them ſpake good Spaniſh, and told our Captaine, that certaine Frenchmen vſed to come thither, and laded ſome ore hides, and goates hides, but other commoditie there was none. We departed thence the 27. day, and the laſt day of the moneth being calme we went aboorde our General, and there conſented to goe for Sierra Leona, to wood and water. From thence till the 10. of October we were much becalmed with extreeme hotte weather, much lightening, and great ſtore of raine. This 10. day we ſounded, finding a great currant as wee ſuppoſed by the ripling water, which after wee founde to be an ordinarie tide, the flood ſetting to the Northweſt, and the ebb Southeaſt, and here wee had but 18. fathome water, and no lande to be ſeene: it was on the ſouthermoſt part of the ſhowles that lye in about 11. degr. but halling South offagaine, it preſently deeped vnto 50. fathome, and after halling Southeaſt, and by Eaſt, and Eaſt Southeaſt, we ſounded, but had no ground in 120. fathome.

Rio del Oro, in 23. degr. and a halfe.

October.

The 21. of October we fell with lande vpon the coaſt of Guinea, in the height of 8. degrees, a very high land, but of no great length: it was the high land ouer Sierra Leona. Wee dyde into the land, and found neere the ſhoare more water then in the offing: at the Northen ende of the high land we ancred about a mile, and ſomewhat more from the ſhoare in 11. fathome. To goe into the harbour of Sierra Leona we did borrowe vpon the Southſide, hauing no ground in 10. fathome, halfe a mile from the ſhoare. Vpon the Northſide of this harbour is very ſhoale water, but on the Southſide no feare, more then is to be ſeene.

Sierra Leona.

The 23. day being Sunday wee came to an ancre in the Bay of freſh water, and going a ſhoare with our boate, wee ſpake with a Portingall, who tolde vs that not farre off there were Negroes inhabiting, and that in giuing to the king a Buttiſio of wine, and ſome linnen cloth, hee would ſuffer vs to water and wood at our pleaſure. But our Captaines thinking it not good to giue any thing for that which they might take freely, landed, and certaine of our men with them, whereupon the Portingall and the Negroes ranne all away into the woods. Then we returned againe into our boates, and preſently went and landed in another place, thinking to haue fetcht a walke, and ſo to come to our boates againe. But wandering through a little wood, wee were ſuddenly and vnawares vpon a towne of the Negroes, whereupon they ſtrooke vp their drumme, giuing withall a great ſhowt, and off went their arrowes as thicke as haile. We were in nomber about 30. caleeuers, and 20. with our weapons, which we alſo let flie into the woods among them, and what hurt wee did, we know not.

A towne of the Negroes.

Then wee returned to our boates, and tooke wood and water at our pleaſure, and reaſonable ſtore of fiſhe, and amongſt the reſt wee hailed vp a great foule monſter, whoſe head and backe were ſo harde, that no ſworde coulde enter it: But being thruſt in vnder the belly in diuers places, and much wounded, he bowed a ſworde in his mouth, as a man would doe a girdle of lether about his hande, and likewise the yron of a boare speare: Hee was in length about nine foote, and had nothing in his bellie, but a certaine quantitie of small stones, to the value of a pottel.

November. The fourth of November wee went on shoare to a towne of the Negroes, which stoode on the Southeast side of the harbour, about a Sacar shotte from the roade, which wee founde to bee but lately built: it was of about two hundreth houses, and walled about with mightie great trees, and stakes so thicke, that a ratte could hardly get in or out. But as it chaunced, wee came directly vpon a port which was not shutte vp, where we entred with such fiercenesse, that the people fledde all out of the towne, which wee founde to bee finely built after their fashion, and the streetes of it so intricate, that it was difficult for vs to finde the way out, that we came in at. Wee founde their houses and streetes so finely and cleanely kept, that it was an admiration to vs all, for that neither in the houses nor streetes was so much dust to be founde, as would fill an egge shell. Wee founde little in their houses, except some matts, goards, and some earthen potts. Our men at their departure set the towne on fire, and it was burnt (for the most part of it) in a quarter of an houre, the houses being couered with reede and strawe.

Another great and fine towne of the Negroes.

After this we searched the Countrey about it, where we found in diuers plaines good store of rice in stackes, which our men did beate out, and brought aboord in the huske, to the quantitie of 14. or 15. tunnes in both our shippes.

The 17. day of November wee departed from Sierra Leona, directing our course for the Streight of Magellane. In this harbour diuers of our men fell sicke of a disease in the belly, which for the time was extreeme, but (God bee thanked) it was but of small continuance. Wee founde also in diuers places of the woods, images set vpon pinnes, with diuers thinges before them, as egges, meale, rice, rounde shot of stones, and diuers other thinges, such as the barbarous people had to offer vp.

When we came neere to the Line, wee found it nothing so hot as it is at Sierra Leona, by reason of the great winde and raine.

About the 24. day of November one or two of our men died, and others also were sicke of a Calentura.

January. The 2. day of Januarie wee had a little sight of lande, being about the height of 28. degr. to the Southward of the Line.

The 4. day we fell with the shoare high and bolde, being in 30. degrees, and a terse, little more or lesse. All of it to the Northward was a high land, but to the Southwarde it did presently faile, and was a very lowe land, and all sandie. About sixe leagues from the shoare wee sounded, and had about 15. or 16. fadome water, and blacke sandie ooze. Wee thought to haue gone to the shoare, and to haue watered, but we could not discerne any good harbour, and therefore wee cast off to seaward againe.

The 12. day wee found our selues in 32. degrees and 27. minutes. From the day of the Natiuitie of Christ, till the 13. day of this moneth, although the Sunne was very neere vnto vs, yet wee found no want of windes but variable as in England, and not so hotte but that a mans shoulders might well disgest a frise gowne, and his bellie the best Christmas cheere in England, yet we for our parts had no want, but such as might content honest men.

The tenth day being about 8. leagues from the shoare, and a little short of the Riuer of Plate, it was my good happe to espie a saile, which was a small Portingall bounde for the Riuer to a towne called Sancta Fee: and from thence by horse and cartes, the Marchants, and part of their goods were to be transported into Peru. This ship being about the burthen of 45. or 50. tunnes, we tooke that day about three of the clocke, wherein there was for Master or Pilote an Englishman called Abraham Cocke borne in Lee. We examined him and the rest concerning the state of the Riuer, and they tolde vs that there were in the Riuer 5. townes, some of 70. households, and some of more. The first towne was about 50. leagues vp the Riuer called Bonos Ayres, the rest some 40. some 50. leagues one from another, so that the vppermost towne is 230. leagues from the entrance of the Riuer, called Tuckaman. In the townes is great store of corne, cattell, wine, and sundry fruites, but no money of golde or siluer: they make a certaine kinde of slight cloth, which they giue in trucke of suger, rice, Marmalade, and Bucket, which were the commodities that this shippe had.

A Portingall ship taken, wherein was for Pilot Abraham Cocke an Englishman, left there before by the Minion of London 1581.

They had aboorde also 45. Negroes, whereof euery one in Peru yeelde 400. duckets a piece, and besides these, there were as passengers in her, two Portingall women and a childe.

Another Portingal taken.

The 11. day wee espied another saile, which was the consort of this Portingall, and to him also wee gaue chase, and tooke him the same day: Hee was of the burthen of the other, and had had in her good store of suger, Marmalade, and Succats, with diuers other things, which we noted downe in our booke. In this shippe also we found about 35. Negro women, and foure or fiue friers, of which one was an Irish man, of the age of three or foure and twentie yeeres, and two Portingall women also, which were borne in the riuer of Genero. Both these shippes were bought in Brasile, by a yong man which was Factor for the bishop of Tuccaman, and the friers were sent for by that bishoppe to possesse a newe Monasterie, which the bishoppe was then a building. The bookes, beades, and pictures in her, cost (as one of the Portingals confessed) aboue 1000. duckats.

An Irish fryer taken.

Of these shippes wee learned, that M. Iohn Drake, who went in consort with M. Fenton, had his barke cast away a little short of the Riuer of Plate, where they were taken captiues by the Sauages, all sauing them which were slaine in the taking: the Sauages kept them for a time, and vsed them very hardly, yet at the last Iohn Drake and Richard Faireweather, and 2. or three more of their company with them got a Canoa, and escaped, and came to the first towne of the Spaniards. Faireweather is maried in one of the townes, but Iohn Drake was caried to Tuccaman by the Pilot of this shippe, and was liuing, and in good health the last yeere. Concerning this voyage of the Portingals they told vs that it was the thirde voyage that was made into the riuer of Plate these 30. yeeres.

The newes of M. Iohn Drake.

Richard Faireweather.

The 12. of Ianuarie we came to Seale Iland, and the 14. day to the Greene Iland, where going in wee founde hard aboord the maine 8. fathome, 7. and 6. and neuer lesse then 5. fathome. There lies a ledge of rocks in the faire way, betwixt the Iland and the maine, so that you must be sure to borrow we hard aboord the maine, and leaue the ledge on the larboord side.

One of the Portingals which wee carried along with vs in our shippe, seemed to be a man of experience, and I entred into speach with him concerning the state of the Riuer: hee tolde mee that the towne of Bonos Ayres, is from the Greene Iland about 70. leagues, standing on the South side of the Riuer, and from thence to Sancta Fee, is 100. leagues, standing on the same side also. At which towne their shippes doe discharge all their goods into small barkes, which rowe and towe vp the Riuer to another towne called Ascension, which is from Sancta Fee 150. leagues, where the boates discharge on shoare, and so passe all the goods by carres, and horses to Tuccaman, which is in Peru.

The towne of Ascension standes in a very fertile place, reaping corne twise in the yeere, with abundance of wine, cattell, and fruites. In the townes of Ascension, and Tuccaman, a rapier of 20. rials, is worth 30. duckats, a box of Marmalade 20. duckats: a looking glasse a foote ouer, is worth 30. li. pictures in tables of 14. inches, 30. and 40. li. a piece.

The 16. day wee went from Greene Iland to the watering place, which is about a league to the Westwarde, where wee tooke in about 18. tunnes of water, and the 22. day came againe to Seale Iland to make prouision of Seales, where a storme arose, which put vs in some danger, by the breaking of our ancres and cables, and the winde blew so colde, that we much maruelled at it, considering the height of the place. I must needes in this place finde fault with our selues and the whole company, that riding in this Riuer 16. dayes, the chanell was not sounded, nor the way made perfect.

The 29. day we tooke into our shippe one Miles, which was left in the West Indies by master Hawkins.

The 1. of Febuary I tooke the sunne in 38. degr. And the 3. day I tooke it againe & I found it to be 41. degrees.

Februarie.

The 7. day of Febuarie our Captaine M. Lister being in one of the pises, hoysed ouer boorde his Gundelo, and went aboorde the Admirall, and being there they sent their Gundelo aboord vs, for our Master, M. Collins, and my selfe, and at our comming wee were called into the Captaines cabbin, where were set in counsell for matters touching the state of our voyage, these men whose names are vnder written.

Master Robert Withrington Captaine of the Admiral.
M. Christopher Lister Captaine of the Barke Clifford.
Iohn Anthonie, Master of the Admirall.
Thomas Hoode Pilot for the Streights.
William Anthony, Master of the Barke Clifford.
Dauid Collins. } Tristram Gennings.
Master William Withrington.
Master Beumond Withrington.
Master Wasnes. } Master Norton.

Master Wilkes,
Master Harris.
Thomas Anthonie.
Nicholas Porter.
The Master Gunner:
Alexander Gundie his mate.
John Sarracol.

This companie being all assembled together, the Master of the Admirall declared that the cause of our assemblie was to determine after good aduice, what course or way were best and most likely to all mens iudgements to be taken. First for the good preferment of my Lordes voyage, then the health of our men, and lastly the safegard of our ships, and further shewed his minde to vs all in these wordes, as neere as I could carry them away.

My masters, my Lords determination touching this our voyage is not vnknowen vnto you all, hauing appointed it to be made, and by the grace of God to be performed by vs for the South sea. But for as much as we doe all see the time of the yeere to be farre spent, as also the windes to hang contrary, the weather drawes on colder and colder, the nights longer and longer, our bread so consumed that we haue not left aboue two moneths bisket, our drinke in a maner al spent, so that we haue nothing but water, which in so colde a Countrey as the Streights, if we should get in, and be forced there to winter, would no doubt be a great weakening to our men, and a hazard of the ouerthrowe of the voyage: these things considered, both our Captaine, Master Hood, and I, doe rather thinke it good for the wealth of our voyage, the health of our men, and safetie to our shippes, to goe roome with the coast of Brasill, where by Gods grace wee shall well victuall our selues, both with wine which is our greatest want, and other necessaries.

Besides, it is giuen vs here to vnderstande, by the Portingals which we haue taken, that there is no doubt, but that by Gods helpe and our endeuour, wee shall be able to take the towne of Bayea at our pleasure, which if wee doe put in practise, and doe not performe it, being somewhat aduised by them, they offer to loose their liues. And hauing by this meanes victualed our selues, wee may there spende vpon the coast some three or foure moneths, except in the meane time wee may happen vpon some good thing to content my Lorde, and to purchase our owne credits: otherwise, wee may take the Spring of the yeere, and so proceede, according to my Lords directions. And assure your selues (by the assistance of God) wee will not returne without such benefite by this voyage, as may redound to my Lords profite, and the honour of our Countrey. Now if there bee any of you, that can giue better course and aduise, then this which I haue deliuered, let him speake, and wee will not onely heare him, but thanke him for his counsell, and followe it.

To this speach of M. Anthonie, M. Lister our Captaine answered in this sort: M. Withrington, & M. Anthonie both, you know, that the last wordes that my Lord had with vs in such a chamber was, that in any case we should follow our voyage onely for the South sea, except by the way, we might perchance meete with such a purchase, as that we might returne with 6000. pounds: and therefore I see no safetie, howe wee may dare offer to goe backe againe, being so neere the Straights as we are: for my part I neither dare nor wil consent vnto it, except we be further forced, then yet we are. My accompt is this, that he that dieth for this yeere is excused for the next, and I rather choose death, then to returne in disgrace with my Lord.

Hereunto both the Captaine & M. of the Admirall replied that they were all of that minde: yet notwithstanding, that in going roome the voyage was in better possibilitie to be performed, then in wintring either in the Streights, or at Port S. Iulian, all things considered. And so agreeing, and concluding all in one, they were determined presently to beare vp.

The next day being the 8. of Febuarie, there fell out many and diuers speaches on eche part concerning the altering of our course, some would continue for the Straights, and othersome would not. Whereupon a viewe was taken in both shippes of victuals, and reasonable store was found for both companies: and the winde withall comming to the North, we determined to take out of the prizes the best necessaries that were in them, and so cast them off, and to plie for the Streights.

They returne being in the latitude of 44. degrees.

All this time we helde on our course, and the 15. day wee found our selues in the height of 44. degrees, but then the winde came to the South, with much raine, winde, colde, and other intemperate weather, continuing in that sort 5. or 6. dayes, in which time we hulled backe againe into the height of 42. degrees.

Sunday being the 20. of Febuarie, our Admirall being something to the leeward of vs, and the ſtorme ſomewhat ceaſed, put abroade his flagge in the mizen ſhrowds, as a token that hee would ſpeake with vs, and thereupon wee bare roome with him, and hauing hailed one another, Captaine Withrington ſhewed the diſpoſition of all his companie, which was rather to go roome with the coaſt of Braſil, then to lie after that ſort in the ſea with foule weather, and contrary windes. Our Captaine on the other ſide, ſhewed the contrary diſpoſition of his men, and company, willing notwithſtanding to proceede: but in the ende, both the ſhippes fell aſunder, and our Captaine ſaid, Seeing then there is no remedie, I muſt be content, though againſt my wil.

The 21. day the weather grewe faire, and the winde good at the South for the Streights, yet our Admirall bare roome ſtill, we ſuppoſing he would haue taken the benefite of the time: whereupon our whole companie beganne to thinke of the inconueniences that would ariſe by deuiding our ſelues, and looſing our Admiral, being very willing to continue their courſe, and yet not without the company of the Admirall. And then wee beganne to caſt about after him, and at the laſt bare with him, and hee tolde vs, that vpon a ſecond viewe of the victuals, hee founde their ſtore ſo ſlender, and their want ſo great, that there was no remedie for them but to ſeeke ſome meanes to be relieued, which was the onely cauſe that hee bare Northward. This ſpeache made vs of the Barke, to enter into a newe conſultation: and wee founde many of our men weake, and all our caleuers not ſeruiceable, and the Smiths that ſhould mende them to be in the Admirall. Wee conſidered alſo, that by breaking of companie, eche ſhippe ſhoulde be the more weakened: we continued in this conſultation till the 24. day, and in all that time founde Maſter Captaine Liſter moſt deſirous to accompliſh, and to fulfill the voyage, and not willing in any caſe to turne his ſhippe, but that the deſire which we all had to continue in conſort with our Admirall, made vs to thinke wel of his companie, and in fine, an agreement and concluſion was thus made on all ſides, to follow the Admirall, without any more talke of the Streights till the Spring.

The 10. day of March, it fell out ſo vnfortunately, that Samuel Teller our Maſters mate, fell ouer boord, and ſo periſhed, we being not able by any meanes to recouer him. 5 March.

The 28. day being in the height of 21. degr. we eſpied a ſaile, which we iudged came out of the Streights, and had rich lading, but the night being at hand, wee loſt her very vnluckely, and the next day could haue no ſight of her.

The 5. day of April we fell with the lande of Braſilia, in the height as I iudge of 16. degrees and a terſe, and our Captaine went then aboorde the Admirall, where they concluded to ſende the pinneſſe and our boate a ſhoare for freſh water, becauſe wee ſtoode in neede of it, which did ſo with 18. good men, and three or foure tunne of water caſke. They were from vs, till the 8. day in the morning, at which time wee eſpied them againe, and that day wee came all together into the roade of Camanao, where there came a Canoa aboorde vs, and one of the chiefeſt Portingals that belonged to the place. Here wee tooke in beeſes, hogges, water and wood at our pleaſure, hauing almoſt no man able to reſiſt vs, but ſome of our Portingals ſtole from vs in the Canoa. 5 April.

The 11. day wee entred into the hauen of Bayea, where wee were receiued at the point comming in with two great pieces of Ordinance, which diſcharged bullets at vs 5. times a piece, but they loſt ſhotte and powder, and did vs no harme. After we had paſſed the point, wee hailed in for the roade as cloſe as the winde would permit vs, but could not come ſo neere as we deſired, and therefore we came to an ancre a faire birth off the towne, not without great ſtore of ſhotte from thence, but yet our harme was none at all for ought they could doe. They come into the riuer of Bayea.

At our comming in, wee founde in the roade eight ſhippes and one caruell, of the which one was a hulke or double flie boate of the burden of 250. tunnes, hauing in her 24. pieces of good Ordinance: ſhee with the reſt of the ſhippes, together with the towne, gaue vs ſhotte, and ſhotte, but not one touched ſo much as any of our ſailes. And leaſt wee ſhoulde ſeeme in the meane time to be idle, wee repayed for euery ſhot of theirs, two or three ſometimes at the ſhippes and the towne together.

The next day at night wee thought to haue hailed in with the ſhippes, and to haue fetched out ſome of them: but the winde blewe then off the ſhoare, ſo that we could not poſſibly doe it. And againe the next day at night we concluded to goe with our owne two boates, and two other boates of the Countrey which we had taken before, which went with caruel ſailes into the roade, and accordingly perfourmed the ſame, notwithſtanding the ſhotte of the enemie. The Moone did ſhine, and gaue very good light, and in wee went with our caruels and boates, and the ſhotte came about our eares as thicke as haile: but the Portingals and the reſt, perceiuing vs no whitte at all to ſhrinke or bee diſmayed, forſooke their ſhippes, and beganne to prouide to ſaue themſelues, ſome with their boates, ſome by ſwimming, and ſo wee entred the ſhippes with a great ſhowte, and found few to reſiſt vs: but yet the ſhoare not being a cables length from vs, they did ſo plie both their great and ſmall ordinance at vs, that it much annoyed vs: But yet for all that we made light of their ſhotte, and our men of the Barke Clifforde entred the Admirall and Vice admirall, and our Admirals men entred two other ſhippes of the like burden, and preſently euery one cut the cables in the Hauſe, and ſo by the helpe of God in deſpight of them all, wee brought away foure of them. The leaſt whereof was of the burthen of one hundreth and thirtie Tunnes.

They take 4. ſhips out of the harbor of Bayea, notwithſtanding the ſhot of the enemie.

In this broile the hulke ſhotte at vs many times, but did no hurt at all: but at the laſt wee comming by the hulke towing our newe prizes, wee hailed them and demaunded whence they were. they anſwered vs of Flaſhing, and then we commaunded him to waye ancre, and to come after vs: And not daring to refuſe it, hee did ſo, and brought with him a caruell with fourtie or fiftie butts of wine in her, and another ſmall barke, which had little or nothing in her: and rode by vs as one of our companie, and was a ſhippe of the burthen of 250. tunnes. Our hard happe was to finde no great matter, either of Marchandiſe or victuals in theſe ſhippes, ſauing in one of them we found 4. butts of wine, in another 2. in another one, and ſome fiſh, and all the reſt of their lading was on ſhoare.

All this was done vpon Eaſter eue, and we gaue thankes to God, that wee had ſpedde ſo well: and that very night there came a boate from the Towne, with a Dutch Marchant, and one Portingal, to offer ſome ranſome for the ſhips, as they ſaid, but as I iudge rather to eſpie our ſtrength: we kept them that night aboord, and the next day we ſent them to our Admirall.

The next day being Eaſter day aroſe a very great ſtorme, inſomuch that our caruel which we firſt tooke brake from vs, and one of our newe prizes alſo, by meanes of the breaking of her cable, ſlipt away: whereupon, although the winde was great, and the ſea troubleſome, yet we ſent certaine of our men in our boate, to recouer them if they might, but we feare, that the rage of the weather hath cauſed vs to leeſe our men, and prizes to.

In the middeſt of this ſtorme, our two Spaniards which wee tooke in the Riuer of Plate, ſeeing vs all buſie about our prizes, beganne to thinke howe they might eſcape our handes, and ſuddenly ſlipt both out of one of the Cabbins windowes, and by ſwimming gotte a ſhoare, a thing which ſeemed to vs impoſſible, conſidering the outrage of the weather.

This ſtorme continued long, and preuented vs of making our intended attempt againſt the towne, hauing as much to doe as poſſibly we might, in keeping our ſhips and prizes from running a ſhoare, and falling into the hands of thoſe that ſtood gaping greedily for our ruine.

The 19. day the ſtorme being a litle ceaſed, wee all waied and came to an Iſlande that lyeth nere Northweſt from the Bay, and the 20. day wee went on ſhoare, and our Carpenters ſet vp our pinneſſe.

The 23. day the people of the Countrey came downe a maine vpon vs, and beſet vs rounde, and ſhot at vs with their bowes, and arrowes, but in ſhort time we cauſed them to retire, and many of them were caried away by the helpe of their fellowes, although wee had ſome of our men hurt with ſome of their arrowes.

The 24. day we receiued out of the caruell 12. butts of wine, and 4. barrels of oyle, and halfe a quarter.

The 26. of Aprill our pinneſſe was launched: and the ſame day came downe vnto vs a great number of Portingals and Indians, with whom we ſkirmiſhed the ſpace of 2. houres to their coſt.

The 2. day of May the Admirals boate went a ſhoare with 14. men to fill water, and preſently being on ſhoare, they were intrapped with two or 300. Indians which aſſaulted them, and ſlew one or two of our men, but the reſt eſcaped notwithſtanding the nomber of the enemie, and came ſafe againe with water to the ſhippe. We ſuffered this loſſe by meere negligence, and want of circumſpection.

The 5. day the Captaine of the Admiral himſelfe, tooke a ſmal barke, his owne litle caruel, our pinneſſe & the Dutchmans boate, & at night went to ſhoare to get victuals, amongſt the bullockes which were in the fields: and in the morning they were gone ſo farre, that they were out of ſight. Which being perceiued by ꝑ enemie, they preſently made ready their gally for Admirall, with 4. caruels, with as many men in them as poſſibly could thruſt in and ſtand one by another: and they bare ouer with the North ſhoare to meete with our pinneſſe & boats: whereupon our men fell into great danger, although M. Liſter our Captaine diſſwaded M. Withrington from that attempt, by laying before him the danger both of himſelfe & vs alſo, being ſo far one from the other. But being once gone, there was no remedy but they were to abide whatſoeuer might happen: we in the barke Clifford, although we were weakly left, yet perceiuing ꝑ gally to make after our men, we waied and purſued the Gallie, as neere the ſhoare as we could conueniently come for want of water: the Hulke alſo waied, and came after vs, to followe the enemie, but the enemie with his oares gotte ſight of our Pinneſſe, and boates before we could, and bare directly with them: which being eſpied of our men, and they ſeeing no way to auoide them, made themſelues readie, (notwithſtanding the great odds) to fight it out like men, and to liue, and die together. The courſe that they tooke for their beſt aduantage vppon the ſudden, was this: they went all into the Pinneſſe, and made faſt the Dutchmans boate to one ſide, and the ſmall Caruell to the other ſide, and ſo waited the comming of the enemie, giuing them firſt of all a peece of Ordinance for their welcome, which they preſently repaied againe with a peece out of the prowe of the Gallie, and preſently after, with three or foure ſmall braſſe peeces, charged with haile ſhotte, and ſo giuing a mightie ſhoote, came all aboord together, crying, entra, entra, but our men receaued them ſo hotly, with ſmall ſhots and pikes, that they killed them like Dogges. And thus they continued aboord them, almoſt a quarter of an howre, thinking to haue deuoured our men, pinneſſe, and all. And ſurely to mans iudgement, no other thing was likely, in regard of their great number, and the fewnes of our men, for they at the firſt thought that all was their owne: but God, who is the giuer of all victories, ſo bleſſed our ſmal companie, & ſo ſtrengthned their armes, and minds to fight, that the enemie hauing receaued a mightie foile, was glad to ridde himſelfe from their handes: and whereas at their entrance, we eſteemed them to be no leſſe then betwixt two hundred, and three hundred men in the Gallie, we could ſcarſe perceaue twentie men at their departure ſtande on their legges, but the greater part of them was ſlaine, many deadly wounded, their oares broken, and ſhe departed from our men, hanging vpon one ſide, (as a Sowe that hath loſt her left eare) with the number of dead and wounded men, that lay one vpon another. And whereas their comming aboord was in a great brauado, with drumme, ſhooting, and crying, they departed without either noiſe of drumme, or ſpeech.

A marueilous deſeate of the Portingals by a few of our men.

We loſt in this conflict of our men three onely, which were Alexander the Maſter Gunners mate, Laurence Gambrell a proper yong man of Hampton, and another that was Maſter Benmans man. Some alſo were hurt with the arrowes of the enemie, but the wounds are curable: and thus it pleaſed Almightie God, of his great goodnes, to giue victorie to 50. or 60. Engliſhmen, againſt 6. or 700. Portingals and Indians, for which we ceaſed not to giue ſuch dutifull thankes to his Maieſtie, as ſo miraculous a victorie deſerued.

Now touching the purpoſe of our men, who made that attempt for freſh victuals, their labour was not hing loſt, but in deſpite of the enemie, they brought to our ſhips 16. or 17. yong bullocks, which was to our great comforts, and refreſhing. As for vs that were in our ſhip, we could not come neere them by two mile, or more, to giue them any aide, yet we ſuppoſe that the countenance of our ſhippes was an encouragement to our men, and ſome manner of feare to the enemie.

Now whereas our opinion concerning the number of the Portingals, and Indians, which were ſlaine, as aforeſaid, was grounded at that time vpon our probable coniecture, not being able other wiſe to come to the knowledge thereof: you ſhall vnderſtande, that the next night after the fight, there came aboord vs, two Indians vpon a Gyngatho, who were runne away from their Maſters: and they told vs for a very good trueth, that the Gallie went out from the Towne with 400. men in her, but there came not backe to the Towne againe aliue, aboue thirtie of them all: and I amongſt the reſt, being deſirous to knowe of one of them, what the newes was at the Towne, he anſwered me with great laughter: Todo eſta cacadoo en Terra.

The twelfth day, I was ſent for to come aboord the Admirall, about the Hulke: where vpon the complaint of the Dutch men, Maſter Withrington entred into bande to them for the payment of their fraight, but howe my Lorde will like that bande of debt at our returne, I knowe not. I gaue him my aduiſe, and counſell, to get his band againe into his hands.

The thirteenth day, our Captaine ſent out of our ſhippe certaine victuals vnto the Admirall, as one butte of bighe riſe, two cheſts of cleane riſe, one barrell of oatmeale, one barrell of peaſon, and one barrell of oyle, becauſe they were ſomewhat ſcanted of victuals, and we at this time are to haue out of the Admirall our part of fiue and twentie cheſts of fine ſuger, and more, of eight cheſts, and fiue cheſts that were taken in the Baye of Todos Santos, at the Engenios, more of one hundred and thirtie hats, and other diuers pillages, which were taken in the priſes, and at the ſhoare.

The 14 day, being Sunday, it was concluded amongſt vs all, not to leaue the Towne of Bayea ſo, but notwithſtanding the time that they had to ſtrengthen themſelues, and the Towne, yet to giue an attempt for the winning of it: and therefore we prounded our Pinneſſes, Caruels, and boates, for the enterpriſe: and as we were departing from our ſhippes, the winde turned directly rectly contrarie to our courſe, ſo that our determination for that time was broken, and we returned againe to our ſhippes: and to ſay the trueth, if the weather and wind had ſerued, our attempt had bene very deſperate, conſidering the number of Portingals and Indians which were then gathered together, to be 7. or 8000. and their artillerie vpon the ſhoare, playing vpon vs: but neuertheleſſe, we had proceeded, if the windes had fauoured vs.

The 16. day we went to certaine Ingenios of the Portingals, where we found the people fled, and we entred their houſes without reſiſtance. We founde in their purging houſe 1000. pots of ſuger, ſome halfe purged, ſome a quarter, and ſome newly put into the pots: ſo that euery man tooke his pot of ſuger for their prouiſion, and ſet all the reſt on fire.

The 17. day we all waied to goe to another Ingenio, to ſee if we could finde there better ſuger, and in the way, we met with a pyſe, which was a Caruell, which we found driuing with the weather, and entred her, and had in her onely three Fawlcons of yron, which our pinneſſe brought away, and ſette the ſhippe on fire. Dalamor in the ſmall pyſe ranne ſo farre in, that he brought his ſhippe on ground, where ſhe laye three or foure howres, till ſuch time as there came from the Towne fiue Caruels full of men, which being perceaued of vs, our Captaine, with our men, went to him to aide him. The Caruels came within Fawlcon ſhot of vs, but durſt come no neerer, leaſt they might haue taſted of the like banket, that they receaued the laſt time. About halfe flood, came the Gally againe, and three Caruels more, but before they came, the barke was a floate, and ſet ſaile: and then they all went to gard their Ingenios, which we had purpoſed to viſite: but the night comming on, perſwaded vs to the contrary.

The 19. day we ſet ſaile to goe into the roade of Bayea againe, with our pinneſſes, and a flag of truce, to ſee if we could recouer our foure men, which remained aliue of thoſe ten, that periſhed in our boate, of whome we ſpake before, which foure were vnfortunately fallen into their hands: but they at our approching neere the towne, ſhot at vs, and we as ready as they, gaue them in all 17. ſhot, and ſo ankered a little from the Towne, to ſee what they would doe.

The 20. day riding ſtill before the Towne, our Admirall ſent a Negro a ſhoare, with letters from the Portingals, that wee had priſoners a boord: the effect of which letters, was, that if wee might haue our men releaſed, and deliuered vs, they ſhould haue theirs from our ſhips.

The next day in the morning, in ſteede of their bloodie flagge, they put vp two white flagges, and ſent a Gingatho off to vs with two Indians, with letters of anſwere from the Gouernour: but they would not conſent in any caſe that we ſhould haue our men, and willed their Portingals to take their captiuitie patiently, for they would not redeeme them: a motion they made in their letters, to buy againe one of their pyſes, which wee had taken out of the roade: but our Admirall anſwered them, no, ſeeing they detained our men, wee would keepe both their men, and ſhippes too. The ſame euening wee wayed, and came out of the Hauen, halfe a league to Seaward.

The 22. we ſet ſaile to ſea, and the 23. came to an Iſland 12. leagues to the Southward of Bayea, to wood, and water.

The 24. day being abroad with our pinneſſes, we met with a Canoa, wherein was one Portingall, and ſixe Indians: we ſhot at the Canoa, and killed an Indian, and tooke the Portingall, and one of the Indians, and brought them aboord our ſhippes: we there examined them, and the Portingall confeſſed that there was a ſhippe laden with meale, and other victuals, bound for Fernanbucke, but put into a creeke, becauſe ſhe durſt not goe along the coaſt, hearing of our ſhippes. Whereupon we manned both our pinneſſes, and tooke the Portingall with vs, to goe and ſeeke the ſame ſhippe, but that night we could not finde her.

The 26. day we went againe, and found her, being hailed vp into a creeke, where a man would haue thought a ſhippe boate could not haue entred: we found her in deede laden with meale principally: but ſhe had alſo in her fourteene cheſts of ſuger, of which two were in powder, and twelue in loaues. This ſhippe was of the burden of one hundred and twentie tunnes, and a new ſhippe, this being the firſt voyage that euer ſhe made, and as the Portingall confeſſed, ſhe was freighted for Fernanbucke, but the men of Bayea hauing great want of bread, bought both the ſhip and her lading, and ſo thought to ſtay her in this creeke, till wee were gone off the coaſt: but it was our good happe, to diſappoint their pretenſe, and to fetch her from thence, where they thought her as ſafe as if ſhe had bene at Lisbone.

The 28. day we deuided the meale amongſt vs, according to the want of euery ſhippe.

The 30. day, 16. or 17. Dutchmen went with their boate from the Hulke to ſhoare, to fill water: and vpon a ſudden they were aſſaulted with 50. or 60. Portingals, and ſo many more Indians armed with ſhot, and other weapons, and they ſlew their Maſter, & Purſer, and the reſt were hurt.

hurt,but yet escaped with their liues: a good warning for vs, to be circumspect, and carefull in our landing.

The last day of May,we cast off one of our prises, which we called the George, and our Admirall,and the Hulke tooke the men,and other necessaries out of her,into them. The same day the Portingals which had hurt the Dutch men,came to the shoare,and dared vs to come a land: wherevppon we went into our pinnesses with 40. shotte: but the cowardly villanes ranne all away to the hils,from the water side: but Walter Lister,with nine men, followed them, and they fled still before them,and durst not stay their approch: so they came backe againe, and wer filled water quietly,and at our pleasure.

The third day of June,our Captaine Walter Lister,hauing a great desire for the performance of this voyage according to my Lords direction,went to our Admirall,and requested him to giue him 6. buts of wine, 1. barrell of oile, 3. or 4. barrels of flesh,and to haue Thomas Hood,and 7. or 8. seamen,for some of our landmen, and by Gods helpe,he with the barke Clifford, would alone proceede for the south sea: but the Admirall mightily withstoode his motion, and would grant no iote of his particular requests. June.

The 7. of June,hauing no vse at all of our prises,we burnt one,and cast off another, and filled our owne shippes with the necessaries of them.

The 8. day we put off to sea,but yet with much adoe came againe to our ankring place,because of the weather.

The 10. day,the Admirall sent for vs to come aboord him, and being come,he opened a Carde before all the companie, and tolde vs, that my Lordes voyage for the South sea, was ouerthrowen for want of able men, and victuals, and that therefore he thought it best to plye for some of the Ilands of the West India, or the Azores, to see if they could meete with some good purchase, that might satisfie my Lorde. These wordes were taken heauily of all the companie, and no man would answer him, but kept silence,for very griefe to see my Lordes hope thus deceaued, and his great expenses and costs cast away. The common sort seeing no other remedie, were contented to returne as well as he.

The 16. day,we espied a saile,whereupon our pinnesse,and Dalamor gaue her chase, and put her a shoare vpon the Iland,where the men forsooke her,and ran away with such thinges as they could conueniently carry: our pinnesse boorded her, and found little in her: they tooke out of her 9. chests of suger,and one hogge,and 35. peeces of pewter, and so left her vpon the sands.

From this time forward,we began to ply northwards,and the first of July fel with the land a- July.
gaine,where we fished,and found reasonable good store. I tooke the latitude that day,and founde our selues in 10. deg. 22. minuts.

The 7. day we determined to fall with Fernanbucke, and we came so neere it, that Dalamor (as he told vs) espied some of the ships that were in the harbour: yet notwithstanding we all fel to leeward of the riuer,and could not after that, by any meanes recouer the height of it againe: but we ceased not on all parts,to endeuour the best we could, and oftentimes lost companie for a day or two,one of another,but there was no remedie,but patience, for to Fernanbucke wee could not come,hauing so much ouershot it to the northward,and the wind keeping at the south,& southwest.

The 20. day I tooke the Sunne in 5. deg. 50. minuts, which was 2. deg. to the northward of Fernanbucke,and the further we went,the more vntowardly did the rest of our ships worke,either to come into hauen,or to keepe companie one with another. And truly I suppose, that by reason of the froward course of the Admirall,he meant of purpose to lose vs: for I know not how the neerer we endeuoured to be to him,the further off would he beare from vs,and we seeing that,kept on our owne course,and looke to our selues as well as we could.

The 24. day,our whole companie was called together to consultation,for our best course: some would goe for the West India,some directly north for England, and in conclusion, the greater part was bent to plie for our owne Countrey,considering our necessaries of victuals, and freshe water,and yet if any place were offered vs in the way,not to omit it,to seeke to fill water.

The 26. day in the morning,we espied a lowe Iland,but we lost it againe,and could descry it no more. This day we found our selues in 3. deg. 49. minuts.

The 27. day we searched what water we had left vs, and found but 9. buts onely, so that our Captaine allowed but a pinte of water for a man a day,to preserue it as much as might be, wherwith euery man was content,and we were then in number 50. men and boyes.

The 1. of August,we found our selues 5. degrees to the Northward of the line, all which mo- August.
neth we continued our course homeward, without touching any where: toward the ende whereof,a sorrowfull accident fell out in our Hulke,which being deuided from vs in a calme,fel a fire by some some great negligence, and perished by that meanes in the seas, we being not able any waies to helpe the shippe, or to saue the men.

The 4. day of September, we had brought our selues into the heigth of 41. degrees, 20. minuts, somewhat to the northwards of the Ilands of the Azores: and thus bulting vp and downe with contrarie windes, the 29. of the same moneth, we reached the coast of England, and so made an ende of the voyage.

A very exact and perfect description of the distances from place to place, from the riuer of Plate, till you come to Pette Guaras, northward, and beginning againe at the riuer of Plate, till you come to the ende of the Streights of Magellan, Southwards, with the degrees of latitude, wherein euery place standeth.

The riuer of Plate.

THe Riuer of Plate standeth in 35. degrees, 10. minuts, vpon the North side of the point there lieth an Iland, a league off the shoare.

Lobato.

From Lobato to the Cape Santa Maria, the land lieth northeast, and southwest, and betweene them are 55. leagues.

Santa Maria.

Southeast from the Cape of Santa Maria, there lieth an Iland two leagues off the shoare: and there is a good roade steede betweene it and the maine, and the maine land is lowe land.

The port of S. Pedro.

From the Cape of Santa Maria, to the port of Santo Pedro, you haue 42. leagues, and all low land, and the land lieth Northeast, and southwest: and on the South side of the port of Santo Pedro, there lieth a point of a sand, which lieth a good league off the shoare.

Martin de Souza. Laguna.

From the porte of Santo Pedro, to the port of Martin de Souza, you haue 52. leagues, and the land lieth Northeast, and Southwest, and from the porte of Martin de Souza, to the Laguna, you haue 42. leagues, and the land higher. The course is northeast, and by north, and Southwest, and by South: and there is an Iland 2. leagues off the shoare, where there is a good roade steede for ships.

Dunde Reca.

From the Laguna to the porte of Dunde Reca, you haue 5. leagues, and it is a very good roade for all windes, sauing a northeast wind: and from the porte of Dunde Reca, to the riuer of Patus, you haue 10. or 11. leagues, and the land lieth north, and south, and stands in 29. degrees.

The riuer of Patus. Santa Catherina.

The mouth of that riuer doth shut with an Iland, called S. Katherins Iland, which is a great Iland of 8. or 9. leagues long, which Iland lieth north, and South: and on the East side, it hath no roade, but one small Iland, which lieth at the south ende, and another at the north ende, called the Iland of Arburetso, which sheweth as a great Baye, going in betweene S. Katherins Iland, and the maine: in which Baye you may come to an anker, and there are many small Ilands: and the northern ende of S. Katherins Iland standes in 28. degrees.

The riuer of S. Francisco.

From S. Katherins Iland, to the riuer of S. Francisco, you haue 26. leagues, and the land lieth north, and south, and the riuer of S. Francisco hath a great mouth, and lieth vp East, and West, and hath three Ilands, where you may come to an anker, and the maine land is high, and ragged.

Cannanea.

From the riuer of S. Francisco to Cannanea, you haue 15. leagues, the lande lieth northeast, and southwest, and in the mouth, there is a small Iland, that riseth like a saddle, and is a good roade, and stands in 26. degrees, and the maine land is high, and ragged.

S. Vincent.

From Cannanea to S. Vincent, you haue 40. leagues, and the land lieth northeast, and by east, and southwest, and by west. S. Vincent stands in 23. degrees, 30. minuts, and hath a small Iland in the mouth, bearing west, northwest off you, and is called the Hennes gillard.

S. Sebastians Iland.

From S. Vincent to S. Sebastians Iland, you haue 12. leagues, and the course lieth east north east, and west southwest, and this Iland is a great Iland, and when you come out of the Sea, it sheweth like a Cape land, and southwest from that Iland, there lieth a small Iland, called the Iland of Alcatrarzes, and sheweth a high pinnacle.

The Iland of Alcatrarzes. Angra-deris.

From S. Sebastians Iland, to Angra-deris, you haue 16. leagues, and the land lieth east northeast, and west southwest, and from Angra-deris, to the riuer of Genero, you haue 18. leagues. The riuer of Genero stands in 23. degrees, and riseth with high hils, and one of the hils sheweth like the toppe of a shippe, and hath in the mouth many small Ilands, and a high pinnacle on the West side, and is called the suger loafe.

The riuer of Genero.

Cape Frio.

From the riuer of Genero, to Cape Frio, you haue 18. leagues, and the land lieth East, and west, and this Cape when you come out of the Sea, sheweth like an Iland, and round: and when you come neere, it sheweth like a rocke, with many white strokes in it, and in the highest part of it

it.

it riſeth broken, which is a good marke, and ſtands in 23. degrees, and to the Northward of the Cape, but two leagues from it is the Baye Formoſa, and hath in the mouth of it 4. or 5. ſmall Iſlands, and betweene the maine and them, is a good roade, and on the north ſide the Baye, there is a ſtone houſe by a ſmall riuer. The Baye Formoſa.

From Cape Frio, to the Baye of Saluador, you haue nine leagues, and on the South ſide of the ſame Baye, there are many Iſlands, and the land lieth north and ſouth, vntill you come to S. Iames Iſland, which is 12. leagues to the northward of the Cape. This Iſland of S. Iames, is two leagues off the ſhoare, and hath two Iſlands hard by it, that ſhewe all one thing, and there is a good roade betweene the maine, and the Iſland, a Fawlcon ſhot off the Iſland, and there is no danger, but that which you ſee. This Iſlande ſtands in 22. degrees, and 20. minuts, and hath vpon it wood, water, and fowle. The Baye of Saluador. The Iſland of S. Iaye.

From the Iſland of S. Iames, to the Cape of S. Thome, you haue 8. leagues, and the land lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and ſtands in 22. degrees. Cape S. Thome.

From the Cape of S. Thome, to Para yua, you haue 8. leagues, and the land lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and ſtands in 21. degrees, 40. minuts. Para yua.

From Para yua to Mannage, you haue 5. leagues, and the land lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and ſtands in 21. degrees. Mannage.

From Mannage to Tapemere, you haue 5. leagues, and the land lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and ſtands in 21. degrees. Tapemere.

From Tapemere to Gleretebe, you haue 4. or 5. leagues, and the land lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and the ſaid point of Gleretebe hath a ledge of rockes, which lieth a league and a half off into the ſea, and the point is lowe land, and ſtands in 20. degrees, 45. minuts. Gleretebe.

From the point of Gleretebe to Guarrapare, you haue 7. leagues, and the courſe lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt: this Guarrapare hath an Iſland lying off it, which is round, and is called Iſland Saluado, or barren, lying a league and a halfe off the ſhoare, and the maine lande is high hils, and ragged, which is a good marke, and ſtands in 20. degrees, 30. minuts, and to the northward of this Guarrapare, you haue 3. Iſlands, which lie about 3. leagues off the maine lande, and betweene the maine and them, halfe a league off the ſhoare is a good roade. Guarrapare.

From Guarrapare to Spiritus Santus, you haue 8. leagues, and the land lieth North and by Eaſt, and South, and by Weſt, and Spiritus Santus hath a ledge of rocks, lying off the northeaſt point: and from this point about two leagues vp into the lande, you ſhall ſee a round high hill, which ſtands alone by himſelfe, which is very ragged, which is called the hill of Maſter Alue, or Maſter Hill, and you ſhall ſee hence a great way off at ſea. This Spiritus Santus is a great Baye, and hath many ſmall Iſlands in the middes, or mouth, and the riuer lieth vp northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and ſtands in 20. degrees large. Spiritus Santus.

From Spiritus Santus to the riuer Mangus, you haue 6. leagues, and the land lieth North, and South, and this riuer Mangus maketh vp in the land 3. hils, like round Iſlands, which is a good marke, and ſtands in 19. degrees, 40. minuts. The riuer Mangus.

From the riuer Mangus to the riuer Doulce, you haue 7. or 8. leagues, and the land lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and it is very flat, a league and a halfe off the ſhoare, and the land is lowe land, and vp in the land is a high hill, which lieth along, as the coaſt lieth, and this riuer ſtands in 19. degrees, 20. minuts. Rio Doulce.

From riuer Doulce to Crearere, you haue 17. leagues, and the land lieth North, and South, and this Crearere on the ſouth ſide, ſheweth as 4. openings a league one from another, and two of them high land, and the other two lowe land, and they are all ſo alike, that it ſheweth all one riuer, till you come neere it, and ſtands in 18. degrees, 45. minuts. Crearere.

From Crearere to Maranepe, you haue ten leagues, and the land lieth North, and by Eaſt, and South, and by Weſt, and hath in the mouth of the riuer a white cleefe, which ſheweth like a ſheete, which is a good marke, and ſtands in 18. degrees, 15. minuts. Maranepe.

From Maranepe to Parrewepe, you haue 5. leagues, and the land lieth northeaſt, and ſouthweſt, and off this Parrewepe, lieth a high point of land, with many trees on it, and becauſe it is all ſhoale to ſeaward, from the mouth of the harbour, you ſhall ſee the ſhoales of Aburalus, and when you goe from Parrewepe, you ſhall ſet a league off into the ſea, and then you ſhall goe northeaſt, becauſe of the Baye, which is very dangerous, and when you ſee the ſhoales to ſeaward, you ſhall runne in 6. or 7. fathom, and finde ſoft ſande: then are you in the channell directly, and when you come as high as the point of Parawepe, by the way that you haue made, you ſhall finde your ſelf a league off: and in finding your ſelfe more then a league off, hall neere in for feare of running on the ſhoales to ſeaward. Parrewepe. The ſhoales of Aburalus.

From

The riuer of Caruels. From Parrewepe to the riuer of Caruels, you haue 3. leagues, and the Channell will shewe you how you shall steere away, and you may boldly borrowe on the shoales to seaward, because the mouth of the riuer of Caruels is very shoald, and hath many sands.

The red cliffe. From the riuer of Caruels, to the ende of the red cliffe, you haue 5. or 6. leagues, and this way you haue no danger: but take heede of the breakings that you see: but as for the shoales of Goshow, they doe not breake, therefore looke well out.

The shoales of Goshowe.

The cliffe of Corebabo. From the ende of the red cliffe to Corebabo, you haue two leagues, and take heede that you go not aboue a league and a halfe off the shoare: for in all this way from the red cliffe to Corebabo, there lieth a point of sand, and assoone as you be past the point of the rockes, you shall steere right with the sand northeast, till you come within a stones cast of it, and then steere hence East, till you thinke the shoales are a sterne of you to seaward, and then turne to your way, about the coast, and this point of Corebabo, stands in 17. degrees.

Porte Seguro. From this point of Corebabo to porte Seguro, you haue 28. leagues, and the land lieth north, and south, and take heede when you come as high as porte Seguro, of the shoales to Seaward, which are very ill. This porte Seguro, hath great red cliffs which stand at the foote of the towne: and if you doe meane to goe into the harborough, bring your selfe East, and West off the cliffs, and then steere right with them, till you come within the point of the rockes, and then steere hence South: for the North side of the Riuer is all shoalde, and the Riuer stands in 16. degrees, 30. minuts.

Santa Cruz. From the riuer of porte Seguro, to Santa Cruz, you haue 3. leagues, and it is a good harborough for small ships: but take heede of the dangers that you see.

Rio Grande. From Santa Cruz, to the arme of the grand riuer, you haue 9. or 10. leagues, and take heede that in all this way you come not within 3. leagues of the shoare: for there lie many shoaldes in the way, and the land lieth North northeast, and South southwest, and ouer the arme of this Rio Grande, you shall see 3. hils of wood, which shewe like Islands, which is a very good marke, and stands in 15. degrees, 30. minuts.

Illeas. From Rio Grande to Illeas, or the Islands, you haue 18. leagues, and the land lieth north, and South, and in this way you haue no shoaldes, but 3. or 4. leagues off: and if you will goe into the Islands, keepe alwaies along the shoare, in sight of the sande, for otherwise you can not see the Islands, because they are litle, and assoone as you see them, steere right with the greatest of them, and betweene the shoare, and there is very good riding, and if you will goe into the riuer, the Channell lieth from the greatest Island to the mouth of the riuer, north, and south, and stands in 14. degrees 45. minuts.

The riuer of Contas. From the riuer Illeas, to the riuer of Contas, you haue 8. leagues, and the land lieth north, and south: this riuer hath many rockes lying in the mouth of it, and to seaward there lieth a small Iland, like a rocke: if you will goe into the riuer of Contas, borrow neere that rocke, for on the other side it is all flat.

Camamo. From the riuer of Contas to Camamo, you haue 6. leagues, and this Camamo hath a wide mouth, and off the point of the North shoare, you shall see an Island, which is called the Island of Cayepe: take heede you come not too neere it, for it hath many shoalds off it: but borrowe on the south side, for there goeth in the Channell, where you shall finde 5. or 6. fathome water: and from thence to Guepena, you haue 3. leagues.

The Island of Cayepe.

Guepena. From Guepena to Tenyere, you haue 4. leagues, and Tenyere on the south side sheweth a high hill, which bearing northwest of you, will rise like a Gallie, with his keele vpward, and if you will goe in, be bold to borrow on the south side, and you shall goe in 5. or 6. fathome, and stands in 13. degrees: this high hill is called the Moore of S. Pablo.

The Moore of S. Pablo. Bayea. From the Moore of S. Pablo to Bayea, you haue 12. leagues, and the course is northeast, and southwest, and if you see white sand, you are to the northward of Bayea, in the point of Lappeane, which point sheweth white peeces in the land, like cloth a dying. and Bayea stands in 12. degrees 30. minuts.

Riuer Royall. From Bayea to the riuer Royall, you haue 26. leagues, and the lande lieth Northeast, and southwest, and the point of Tapeane stands in 13. degrees. If you goe out of Bayea, for the northward, you must hall off east, and by north, till you be 30. or 40. leagues off from the currant.

The riuer of S. Francisco. From riuer Royall to the riuer of S. Francisco, you haue 17. leagues, and the lande lieth northeast, and southwest, and stands in 11. degrees large.

Gurra point. From the riuer of S. Francisco, to the point of Gurra, you haue 15. leagues, and the lande lieth north northeast, and south southwest, and stands in 10. degrees, 20. minuts.

Camare Guba From the point of Gurra, to the cleffs of Camare Guba, you haue 6. leagues, & these are great high high cleeffs, which is a good marke, and it is a good road steede for all westerly winds and from these cleeffes to the riuer of Stones you haue 5. leagues, and the land lyeth north northeast, and south southwest.

From the riuer of Stones to the Cape Saint Augustine you haue 12. leagues, and the land lyeth north northeast, and south southwest, and this cape when you come out of the sea, seemeth a hill like a saddle, which standeth alone, lying next hand east and by north, and west and by south from the cape vp into the land, and comming along the coast the cape lyeth out, and sheweth as litle woods vpon it, and bushes in parts, and 5. leagues to the southward you shall see the Iland of Saint Alexo, which is a smal lowe Iland, which is a good marke, and the Cape of S. Augustin stands in 8. degrees, 30. minuts. Cape Saint Augustine. The Iland of Alexo. The Cape of S. Augustine.

From the Cape Saint Augustin to Fernambucke, you haue 8. leagues, & the land lyeth north and by east, and south and by west, and the marke of Fernambucke is the Towne it selfe, standing vpon a high hil by the water side, which sheweth like to ỹ cape it selfe, & stands in 8. degrees large. Phernambucke.

From Fernambucke to the Iland of Tamereca you haue 4. leagues, and it hath on the south point of the riuer redde cleeffes, and if you will goe into the riuer, bring your selfe northeast, and southwest by the red cleeffs, and so beare into the bay, whereas you shal haue 9. or 10. foote water. The land of Tamereca.

From the riuer of Tamereca to Parryba you haue 15. leagues, and the land lyeth north and by east, and south and by west, and stands in 6. degrees, 45. minuts. Parryba.

From Parryba to Tappoam you haue 10. leagues, & the land lyeth north northeast, and south southwest, and from Tappoam to the harborough of Munks you haue 7. leagues, and the land lyeth northwest and southeast, and the port of Munks stands in 5. degrees, 30. minuts. Tappoam. The harborow of monks

Here followeth the like description of the coast from the riuer of Plate to the Streights of Magelan.

CApe Saint Marie on the northside of the riuer of Plate stands iust in 35. degrees: from the same Cape Saint Marie to Cape Saint Anthony which is the South Cape of the riuer of Plate, you haue 28. leagues, and the said Cape stands in 56. degrees, 20. minuts: the course betweene them is south southwest, and north northeast. Cape S. Anthonie.

Note that East of the mouth of the riuer of Plate 25. leagues off, there lyeth a shoald, which they call Baxos de Castiliana: he that will shape his course from Cape Saint Marie to goe to the southward must hale off southeast, till he bee in 36. degrees, then south southeast hal a degree, for that you shall giue a birth to the said shoald, as also to the shoalds of Saint Anthony, and sounding in 40. or 41. fadom, you shall find russet sand, then hale away southwest, and by south till you come to 40. degrees, where you shall find great store of weeds, and you shall be 20. leagues off the shoare. Baxos de Castilliana.

From Cape Saint Anthony, to the cape of great sandy hilles is 48. leagues, they lye southwest and by south, and northeast and by north: 18. leagues off Saint Anthony lyeth a riuer called the riuer of Saint Anne, which hath in the mouth many flats and shoals, therfore you must come no neerer the shoare, then 40. fadom, to goe cleere of them.

From the Cape of the sand hilles to Cape Saint Andrewe, you haue 31. leagues, and halfe way betweene them both you haue bayes and riuers, which are ful of shoales: the both Capes lie southwest and by west, and northeast and by north. Cape Saint Andrewe.

From Cape S. Andrewe to the Sunken bay you haue 30. leagues, the said bay standeth in 39. degrees, 50. minuts, it lyes west south west, and east northeast. The Sunken bay.

From the said Sunken bay to the plaine point you haue 25. leagues, the point stands in 41. degrees, 30. minuts: they lye south southwest, and north northeast, and from this point to the deep water bay you haue 35. leagues: they lye west southwest and east northeast: the Deepe water bay stands in 42. degrees, 20. minuts. The plaine Point. The deepe water bay.

From the Deepe water bay to the harborough of Lyons you haue 37. leagues: the cape ouer the sandy bay lyeth south southeast, and north northwest: out of the said Deepe, you may saile hard aboord the shoare being bolde. From the riuer of Plate to the said bay you haue no harborough for any great ship. The harborough of Lions and by west, and North and by east, and halfe way betweene them both, there is a bay.

From that bay to the harborough of Lyons a bould coast, with lowe land and white cleeffs: the said harborough stands in 44. degrees, when you come to 43. somwhat more, looke out for a ledge of rockes that lyeth on the north side of the harborough hard aboord the shoare.

From the said harborough of Lyons to ỹ cape with woods you haue 30. leagues: they lie south Cape of woods.

The round cape. 18. Leagues to the Northward of the round Cape you haue a riuer which lyeth in west, and is called the riuer of Crauises: you shall knowe when you are thwart of the riuer, by certaine redde streames that you shal find like tydegates, which are going streames. The coast lyeth from this harborough to the round Cape of woods, southeast and by south, and northwest, and by North: the said Cape of woods stands in 45. degrees, 30. minuts.

Cape Blanke. From the sayd cape of Woods, to cape Blanke, or the white Cape, you haue 32. leagues, the coast lyeth south and by west, and north and by east: the said white Cape stands in 45. degrees, and about 3. leagues to the northward of the Cape, the land lyeth north northwest all vp right white cleeffes, which be in number 6. and the last of them is the biggest, and broadest, and shewes like a saple: and in the head of the said Cape is a round hill, which sheweth like a cloud: about this cape lye certaine rockes, hard aboord the shoare, and 3. cables length off the shoare you shall haue 25. fadom, and ouer the white cleeffs, the lande is plaine, and among the cleeffs which the Sea hath made, the sea spoutes vp, like the spouting of Whales, and vpon the Cape there are some little woods, and here you haue people inhabiting, of whom take heede: the vpper part of the cape lyeth south and north a league in breth, and hath in the middle a ledge of rockes aboue water, and on the south side of this Cape, you haue a harborough where is good ankering, but in the middst there is a rocke of which take heede.

Port S. Iulia. From thence to Port Saint Iulian is 37. leagues: the course is south and by west, and north and by east: of this port Saint Iulian on the southside of the entering of the harborough lye rocks like Towres, he that goeth in there must borrowe on the northside of the harborough, and within the harborough you shal find two Ilands where you may anker hard by them: this harborough stands in 49. degrees.

The Ilands of Sampson. Betweene the harborough of port Saint Iulian and cape Blanke lye the Ilands of Sampson which are 8. in number.

The hill of S. Anne. From the port of Saint Iulian to the hill of Saint Anne, is 35. leagues: the coast lyeth southwest and northeast a very plaine land, but onely one hill, and to the Southwards, are smal Hammockes, which hammocks stand in 50. degrees 30. minuts.

The riuer of S. Anne. The riuer de Cruz. From the riuer of Saint Anne, to the riuer de Cruz, you haue 8. leagues. The Cruz is northeast, and southwest. To the northward of the riuer de Cruz, is a high land of two leagues long, and playne on the toppe which lyeth south and north, and falleth on either side like a saddle: This coast is shoald foure leagues off: but you may borrowe on the shoare in 20. fadom.

The riuer of Galgos. From the riuer de Cruz, to the riuer of Galgos, you haue 25. leagues: the course lieth northeast, and southwest, and it stands in 52. degrees, and 10. minuts, and for a marke of it, there is a hill, and on the highest of this hill it is plaine, and the northeast end is steepe vp and downe, and hath white and browne cleeffs, the vpper edge of them blacke: and vnder the hill on the east side it sheweth like a paire of staires, with a blacke point into the sea: halfe a league to the southward of this point is a bay, which is at the entring of the riuer Galgos, where it doth ebbe and flowe, 12. fadom water in the riuer, take heede you go not to farre in because it is dangerous, therefore goe no further in, then 18. fadom.

The streights of Magelan. Cape Virgin Marie. From the riuer Galgos to the entrie of the streights of Magelan, called the Cape of the Virgin Marie is 8. leagues, the course is, south southeast, and north northwest, and 4. leagues before you come to this Cape, you shall see high steepe cleeffs, and gray full of black scarres, the sea beating against them like the spowting of whales, but a very wholesome shoare, where you may anker for a Southwest wind: the highest of this cape is like to Cape Saint Vincent in Spaine: at the east side of this cape is a ledge of rockes, which hath a sand about it, which is full of pittes, where you shal haue deepe water and by and by ground: this sand sheweth it selfe at low water, therefore you must be sure to stemme the shoare halfe a myle till you haue brought the sayd Cape west northwest off you: then goe away southwest till you come to the lowest, where you shall haue 10. or 12. fadome water. This place is called the Purification: and halfe a league within this land, is a Towne called the name of Iesus: From this said Cape you shall haue a cleeffe come from the cape, at the end of this cleeffe the Towne stands, and is in altitude, 52. degrees, 30. minutes, and from the said Cape entring the Streights, on the northwest side within 14. leagues, it beginnes to be narrower, and narrower, till you come to the highest place of the narrowest entrie, which lyeth west northwest, and east southeast: and in the sayd streightes, goe a third part of the chanell to the north shoare, because there is a ledge of rockes on the south side, and also you shall see land there: therefore you must giue them a good birth: and hauing past this first streight, go away west southwest 8. leagues till you come to a cape called S. Gregorie, with a high cleeffe,

The purification. Nombre de Iesus which S. Candish found destroyed.

and a good road, from the northweſt to the ſouthweſt: truſt not the people of this Cape, for they are trecherous.

At this Cape begins the 2. ſtreight, and is called our Ladie of Grace: it lyeth weſt ſouthweſt, and eaſt northeaſt 3. leagues, and in comming off this ſtreight, you ſhall ſee 3. Ilands weſt off you, and you may ſayle in among them, hauing reſpect that you come not into the Bayes, for they are dangerous. From the 3. Ilands ſeeke the Chanel of the ſtreights weſt ſouthwards, till you come to the 53. degrees, 30. minuts: where you ſhall find a point called the point of Saint Anne, and northnorthweſt from thence, you ſhall ſee two or three plaines, in one of which ſtands a towne called the Towne of King Philip, and in paſſing the Bulwarke and a great tree, you may come to anker, where you may moore your ſhip in 4. fadoms.

A letter of Maſter Thomas Candiſh, to the right honorable the Lord Chamberlaine, one of her Maieſties moſt honorable priuie Counſell touching the ſucceſſe of his voyage about the world.

RIght honorable, as your fauour heretofore hath ben moſt greatly extended towards me, ſo I humbly deſire a continuance thereof: And though there be no meanes in me to deſerue the ſame, yet the vttermoſt of my ſeruices ſhal not be wanting, whenſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe your honour to diſpoſe thereof. I am humbly to deſire your honour to make knowne vnto her Maieſtie the deſire I haue had to do her Maieſtie ſeruice in the performance of this voyage. And as it hath pleaſed God to giue her the victorie ouer part of her enemies, ſo I truſt ere long to ſee her ouerthrowe them all. For the places of their welth, whereby they haue maintained and made their warres, are nowe perfectly diſcouered: And if it pleaſe her Maieſtie, with a verie ſmal power ſhe may take the ſpoyle of them all. It hath pleaſed the Almighty to ſuffer me to circumpaſſe the whole Globe of the world, entring in at the ſtreight of Magelan, and returning by the cape Bona Sperança. In which voyage I haue either diſcouered or brought certaine intelligence of al the rich places of the world that euer were knowne or diſcouered by any Chriſtian. I nauigated alongſt the coaſt of Chili, Peru, and Noua Spagna, where I made great ſpoyles: I burnt and ſunke 19. ſayles of ſhippes ſmall and great. All the villages and townes that euer I landed at, I burnt and ſpoyled: And had I not bene diſcouered vpon the coaſt, I had taken great quantitie of treaſure. The matter of moſt profit vnto me was a great ſhip of the Kings which I tooke at California, which ſhip came from the Philippinas, being one of the richeſt of Marchandiſe, that euer paſſed thoſe Seas, as the kings Regiſter and Marchants accompts did ſhew, for it did amount in value to * in Mexico to be ſold: which goods, (for that my ſhippes were not able to containe the leaſt part of them,) I was inforced to ſet on fire. From the cape of California, being the vttermoſt part of all Noua Hiſpania, I nauigated to the Ilandes of Philippinas hard vpon the coaſt of China, of which Countrie I haue brought ſuch intelligence as hath not bene heard of in theſe parts. The ſtatelines and riches of which countrie I feare to make report of, leaſt I ſhould not be credited. For if I had not knowne ſufficiently the incomparable welth of that countrey, I ſhould haue ben as incredulous thereof, as others will be that haue not had the like experience. I ſayled along the Ilands of Maluccas, where finding ſome of the heathen people I was well intreated, where our country men may haue trade as freely as the Portingals, if they will themſelues. From thence I paſſed by the cape of Bona Sperança, and found out by the way homeward the Iland of Saint Helena, where the Portingals vſe to releeue themſelues: And from that Iland God hath ſuffred me to returne into England. All which ſeruices with my ſelfe I humbly proſtrate at her Maieſties feete, deſiring the Almightie long to continue her raigne amongſt vs. For at this day ſhee is the moſt famous and victorious prince that liueth in the world. Thus humbly deſiring pardon of your honour for my tedioulnes, I leaue your Lordſhip to the tuition of the Almightie. Plimmouth this 9. of September 1588.

Your honours moſt humble to command,
Thomas Candiſh.

The worthy and famous voyage of Maſter Thomas Candiſhe made round about the globe of the earth, in the ſpace of two yeeres and leſſe then two monethes, begon in the yeere, 1586.

The worſhipful and worthy gentleman Maſter Thomas Candiſh of Suffolke hauing in the yeere 1585. Furniſhed out a ſhip wherein he went as Captaine with ſir Richard Greeneuill to Virginia, in which courſe he paſſed by the Canaries, and ſo to the Iſles of Dominica, Hiſpaniola, Saint Iohn de Porto ricco, the Lucaios, and Florida in the weſt Indies, thus fleſhed and ſomewhat hardened vnto the Sea, immediatly after his comming home began to take in hand a voyage into the South ſea, and conſequently round about the globe of the world, which he alſo perfourmed with inuincible courage with great good gouernement, and incredible celeritie, to the great admiration of all men of iudgement. Hauing therefore at his owne proper coſt new built from the keele and furnyſhed with all thinges neceſſarie for two yeeres prouiſion a haue ſhippe called the Deſire of a hundred and fortie, and a leſſer of threeſcore tunnes whoſe name was the Content, ioyning thereunto a Barke of 40. tunnes named the Hugh gallant, in which ſmall fleete were ſixe ſcore and fiue men, The 7. day of June 1586. he departed from London and came to Harewich, and ſayled from thence the 29. of the ſame moneth. He arriued at Plimmouth the 8. day of July, from whence he ſet ſayle the 21. thereof. Thus he proceeded on his voyage vntill the 25. day, at which time one Maſter Hope dyed which had bene grieuouſly wounded a litle before he went to Sea. The 26. day wee met with foure great Biſkaine ſhippes on which we beſtowed eighteene great ſhot and ſhrewdly tore that ſhip which we in the Admiral aſſayled: but we left her and the others, leſt we ſhould looſe the reſt of our conſorts, being nine of the clocke at night.

June the 10. 1586.

He departed from Plimmouth the 21. of July.

Auguſt.

The 6. day of Auguſt we fell with the Iſland of Forteuentura, & ſayled thence to cape Blank, and ſo to the coaſt of Guinea vnto a harborough called Sierra Leona, where hauing conference with the Negroes we fell at variance, ſo that threeſcore of our men went on ſhoare, and draue them from their towne, and ſacked their houſes, and burnt their dwellings. And the 29. of the ſame moneth we departed from them, where going fiue leagues from the place we came to an Iland called Inſula Verde, where we found plantans, and other fruites, and freſh water, being an Iſland of the Negroes huſbandrie.

September.

The firſt of September we burned here ſome 150. houſes becauſe of their bad dealing with vs and al Chriſtians: in this place we redeemed a Portingal whom by treaſon they had caught and held in very miſerable captiuitie. The 13. day we went from thence: the 30. we paſſed the Equinoctiall lyne.

October. Nouember.

Thus we ſayled forth vntill the 25. of October, at which time we came to the continent of Braſill, and coſting along vntill the end of that moneth, the firſt of Nouember we ankered vnder an Iſland called Saint Sebaſtians, where we road three and twenty daies betweene the mayne and it. There we ſtoyed our ſelues with freſh water and fuell, and built a newe pinneſſe of teene tunnes. On the nynth day died one Robert Smith of the diſeaſe called Scurbuto, which is an infection of the blood and the liuer.

December.

The 23. of Nouember we left this Iſland. On the firſt of December died one Robert Tates of the diſeaſe aforeſayd: and ſo coſting along vntill the 16. of this moneth wee diſcouered an harborough which we named the Port of Deſire, according to our ſhips name, being almoſt as bigge as the haborough of Plimmouth: In this place we had gulles, puets, penguyns, and ſeales in aboundance to all our comforts and great refreſhing: this Port is ſomewhat on this ſide of Port Saint Iulian. And ſayling from this harborough toward the Streights, before wee came to the entrance thereof, we eſpied certaine poore ſtaruen Spanyards trauayling ouer land toward the riuer of Plate: whereof we tooke one into our ſhip of whom we vnderſtood that of both the two Colonies planted in the ſtraight of Magelan by Pedro Sarmiento there were but 22. men onely left aliue, all the reſt being vtterly periſhed for hunger, to the number of fiue hundred perſons.

The port of Deſire.

January 1587.

On the firſt day of January we put into the Streight of Magelan, and on the 8. we came vnto two Iſlands named by Sir Frauncis Drake the one Bartholomewe Iſland, becauſe he came thither on that Saints day, and the other Pengin Iſland, on which we powdred three tunnes of Penguins for the victualing of our ſhippe: and on the 9. day we came vnto a towne of the Spanyardes erecting in March 1584. called by them the Citie of King Philippe, but by vs the the Towne of famine, because we euidently sawe the inhabitants, all sauing the aforesayde 22. had bene most miserably starued: we tooke away with vs sixe pieces of their ordinance, whereof three were brasse, and three were yron, and were glad to hasten from this place for the most noysome stench and vile sauour wherewith it was infected through the contagion of the Spaniards pined and dead carkeises. The towne of king Philip in ꝑ straights ruined and abandoned.

Thus sayling through the Straights, the 20. day of Januarie in the midway we espied Sauages of a reasonable stature, and went to them, and conferred with them: but such was their brutishnes and their trecherie, that they would haue betraped vs vnder the shewe of amitie: but we espying their treason gaue the first onset, and euery shot of vs chose his man, and by that meanes slewe some, and hurt more, the rest escaped. So hauing many flawes of Southerly and Southwesterly winde, we were kept within the Straights vntill the 23. of Februarie. Trecherous Sauages in ꝑ Straights of Magellan. Februarie.

The same day we passed out of the Straights into the Sea called by Magelan, Mare pacificum, the peaceable or the calme Sea: Thus we plyed vp along the coast of Chili by the Iland of La mocha, which standeth in the Southerly latitude of 38. degrees vntill the 14. of March, where we rid vnder an Iland called Sancta Maria, on which Iland we landed 80. men armed in the morning betimes, and there came vnto vs the Countrey people which intreated our Generall very well, and presented him with many sortes of meates: for there we had at our commandement Spanish wheate, potatos, hogs, hens, dryed dogfish, and diuers other good things, to our contentment. Chili. March.

The 20. day we departed thence, running along vntill the 28. which day being at the Sea, we felt an earthquake in the latitude of 33. we were put into a Bay called the Bay of Quintera on the 30. of this moneth, where the first of April we had ten of our men slaine, and two taken captiues by the Spaniards: which great misfortune light vpon our men through their great reachlesnesse and want of circumspection, being suddenly surprised by the enemie when they little thought of him. But on the third day of the same moneth the Hugh went forth to Seaward, and found an Iland hauing great store of Pellicanes & Penguyns vpon it, whereof they brought good store vnto vs: and so furnishing our selues here with fresh water, which we tooke in despite of them all, we left them and their cruell Harborough, and put out of the Bay the fifth of April. The Bay of Quintera. April.

Thus ranging along, we haled in with a Porte called Mormorano, where we found a canoa and an Indian in it which was fishing, and had caught a very large Tony wherewith he presented vs, and in our conference with him, he shewed vs their Towne which was base and rude, but their gouernment and behauiour very strange: for when any of them dyeth they bury all his goods and stuffe with him, as hookes, nets, canoa, and other trifles. So sayling along that shore, one of our shippes called the Content, entred into a Bay, where a great deale of wine of Castilia was buried in Botisios in the sand, to the quantitie of some three hundreth tunnes, wherewith she laded her selfe hauing lost our companie, but they found vs againe at a Towne called Arica, where they gaue vs of their wine. In this Harborough we found a great ship, and foure Barks, which we tooke and kept vntill such time as wee had taken out of them the best things for our owne prouision: then we burned them all sauing one Barke which wee kept, and named it the George, because we tooke her on Saint George his day. The Porte of Mormorano. Arica. A great ship and 4. Barks taken & burnt.

The 25. day of April we went from Arica, sayling to the Seawards all night, and in the morning we espied a small Barke, and manning our Pinnesse, wee tooke her, wherein were three Spaniards, one Greeke, and one Dutch man: being examined, they confessed that they came from the Bay of Quintera, where we lost our foresayd twelue men, and that their intent was to goe for Lima to giue aduise to the Viceroy for to prouide force to cut vs off: but their pretence through Gods mercifull prouidence was preuented: one of these Spaniards was a reasonable Pilot for those Seas. Thus we continued our course alongst the coast of Peru vntill the fourth day of May, vpon which day our Spanish Pilote led vs into a Bay called Pisca, where wee would haue gone on shoare, but the Sea was so growen that we could not: yet on the Southermost side of the Bay there was a Village called Paraca, where seuen of our men went on land and found figs, pomegranates, and pomegranate wine. The Barke of aduise taken. May. Pisca Bay. Paraca a village.

And on the sixt of May we went from Paraca, and in our course we descried to Seaward two sayles, and gaue them chase, and tooke them: the one was laden with meale and marmalade, the other with marchants goods, as sapes of diuers sortes and colours, castle or white sope, a kinde of pease called garuanſaes, cordouan skins, montego de porco, which is hogs grease clarified or refined, and molasſos or sirrope of sugar, beanes, and one or two thousand hens aliue: Hereupon we gate vs into a Bay called Cheripa, where we laded our ships with part of these commodi- Two shippes taken. ties, and burnt the rest ships and all, hauing put the men that were in them on land, and departed from thence the tenth of May. Thus sayling forwarde wee haled into a Bay called Payto, where we tooke a Barke vnrigged & landed three score men, and tooke the Towne, out of which we driue about three hundreth persons which fled with bag and baggage, whome we pursued so fast, that they were forced to leaue their lodings behinde them: In the ende we set their Towne on fire, because they sought not to redeeme the same. And because wee found small store of treasure here, we came away the same night. On the second of May we went to the Iland of Puna, where we trimmed our ships and refreshed our men, though somewhat to our costes: for on the second day of June our men thinking themselues to be sure and safe ynough, foure score or an hundreth Spaniards, with two hundreth Indians (for there was a Towne of Indians in the Iland bigger then Graueseud) set vpon fifteene or sixteene of our men being halfe a sleepe and halfe awake, & slew fiue or sixe, and tooke two or three of them before any supply could come vnto them: at the comming whereof they all ran away like greyhounds, our men for reuenge burnt their Towne, and spoyled their fieldes and gardens, but first wee tooke the fruites of the Iland, as goats, hogs, hennes, figs, oranges, limons, besides other wholsome herbes in great quantitie. So after we had trimmed our Fleete wee came away: but for a farewell wee first set foure of their shippes on fire, whereof one was two hundreth tunnes, the rest an hundreth a piece, being all vpon the stocks in building: we also fired another of foure hundreth tunnes called the great Saint Luce riding before the Towne to be mended, because they haue neuer another so good a place to lying their shippes on ground as that is, on all the coast of Peru.

After we had taken in fresh water we went from thence the 11. day of June, and the 12. day we passed the Equinoctiall line, continuing our course Northward all that moneth: About the beginning of July as we ranged along the backside of Noua Hispania neere vnto Guatimala (where there is an hill that burneth continually) we espried a newe shippe of 200. tunnes, wherein were two Spaniards, two Nassilians, two Venetians, and one Fleming: in which shippe was litle or nothing but her balast, we tooke her sayles, and ropes, and fire wood to serue our turns, set her on fire and kept the men, of which number we brought one called Michael Sancius a Pilot into England. On the next day we tooke another shippe, the men being escaped with their boate on land, which after wee had taken certaine victuals out of her, wee also set on fire: This was the shippe of Aduiso to giue warning of vs, sent from Lima to the coast of Noua Hispania.

They double the Equinoctiall line.

Another ship taken & burnt.

The second ship of Aduiso taken & burnt.

The 28. of July we came to the Porte of Aguatulco, in which we found a shippe laden with cacaos, a fruite like almonds much esteemed in those partes, and taking the spoyle thereof, we set the shippe and Towne on fire for company: the people ranne away at the sight of our little Pinnesse, our shippes lying three leagues off at that time: There were some foure score houses in this Towne being an Hauen that belongeth to Mexico. In this place we had great store of pitch, which stood vs in great stead for our shippes, and some quantitie of wine of Castilia as they call it.

The Towne of Aguatulco burnt.

August.

The fourth day of August we departed from this place, and comming foorth wee tooke a shee tortoyse, which had aboue foure hundreth and odde egs in her, which egs we eate and found them to be good meate. The 13. of August we fell with an Hauen of Noua Hispania called Puerto de Natiuidad, about the latitude of 19. degrees, where we had conference with foure Indians, and there we tooke the Poste of Aduiso that ranne by land on horse, whose horse wee slewe and tooke him prisoner. Wee burnt two shippes of two hundreth tunnes the piece, which were in building in the harborough: And sixe leagues from thence there was a litle Iland or rocke replenished with abundance of birds, whereof we gate good store to our great refreshing: there were also innumerable sort of parrots as big as hens: and in another Hauen hard by, called Puerto de Saint Iago, we dragged for pearles, and tooke some store. The third day of September we came away hauing newe trimmed our Pinnesse, which was wonderfull leake with wormes. The eight day of the same we came into a Bay called the Bay of Compostella, where our men went two leagues vp into the Countrey early in the morning, and tooke a Spaniarde and his wife, a Raguslean and his wife, with an Indian and his wife, and brought them away vnto our Generall, who set the women at libertie, and they redeemed their husbands with fruites, as plantans, mameias, pinceples, oranges, and limons, of all which is great abundance, as the Spaniarde sayd, tanto como tierra as great plentie as there is of earth. On the 12. of September wee came to an Iland two leagues from thence called S. Andrew, where we had foules, and seales, and guanos, of which we made very good victuall: howbeit they would scarcely take salt but for one night and a day only. The 16. of the same moneth wee came vnto a Bay called Massaclan, where where we had fruite and fish, but were in great danger of our enemies: Wee trauersed from thence vnto the Southermost cape of California, where beating vp and downe we discouered a Port called by the Spaniards Agua Segura, and found good store of fresh water: we lay off & on of this cape vntill the fourth of Nouember, on which day in the morning wee espied the goodly shippe comming from the Philippinas called Saint Anna the great, being of seuen hundreth tunnes: we chased her vntill noone, so fetching her vp, we gaue them fight to the losse of twelue or fourteene of their men, and the spoyle and hurt of many more of them, whereupon at last they yeelded vnto vs: In this conflict we lost onely two of our men. So on the first of the sayde Nouember we went into the Port of Agua Segura, where wee ankered and put nine score prisoners on land: and ransacking the great shippe, wee laded our owne two shippes with fourtie tunnes of the chiefest marchandise, and burnt all the rest aswell shippe as goods, to the quantitie of sixe hundreth tunnes of rich marchandise, because we were not able to bring it away: This was one of the richest vessels that euer sayled on the Seas, and was able to haue made many hundreths wealthie, if we had had meanes to haue brought it home.

At length hauing furnished our selues with water & wood, and made vs ready for the Sea, we set sayle the twentie of Nouember & came away. From Cape California, we shaped our course toward the Ilands of the Ladrones, and by the prouidence of God wee came vnto them in two and fourtie dayes, the distance being three and twentie hundreth leagues: The first Iland of the Ladrones where we touched is called Guana, the inhabitants are theeuish and trecherous: they met vs at Sea three leagues off in small canoas, admirable to beholde for their swiftnesse in sayling, with which people wee had some traffike vntill the euening, and so wee left them directing our course vnto the Ilands of the Philippinas vntill the fourteenth of Ianuarie, on which day we fell with an Iland called Tadaia: and from thence we passed by the Iland of Luçon or Manilla, vntill we came to an Iland called Capul, where wee had hens, hogs, potatos, cocos, and other fruites for traffike with the Indians, making our abode there vntill the 24. of the foresayde Ianuarie. Then proceeding on our voyage through the infinite nombers of Ilands towards those rich Ilands of Maluco, we passed by Mindanao, which is the last Iland that the Spaniards inhabite that way: So we ranne betweene Cebele or Batachina and Borneo vntill the twelfth day of Februarie.

And on the 28. and last of the same we put through betweene the Straights of Iaua maior, and Iaua minor, and ankered vnder the Southwest part of Iaua maior, where the inhabitants being Gentiles brought vnto vs hennes, geese, hens egges, ducke egges, beeues, buffes, melons, plantans, and an hundreth sortes of fruites most strange and wonderfull for greatnesse and goodnesse, euen whole tuncks full being a kinde of barks made like vnto our barges: These people did intreate vs wonderfull well, and came as duely to traffike with vs in our ship as wee doe in our markets and shoppes, and brought from their King diuers presents to our Generall, and caried diuers rich gifts from our Generall to their King: The King sent many of his kinsmen and chiefe Courtiers a shipborde to entertaine him, being men of very good behauiour: they sit crosse legged, they would faine haue had our General come to their Kings chiefe towne, because he was not well able to come downe vnto our shippe being a man of great age, and as they reported, very neere an hundreth and fiftie yeeres olde, but our Generall excused himselfe and that with reason: Hee would haue sent his sonne in his owne steade, but that hee was at warre against another King in the Iland their enemie: This olde Kings name was Raia Bolamboam.

The 16. of March we set sayle from Iaua maior toward the Cape of Bona Sperança: and on the 11. day of May we fell with the land of Aethiopia, neere vnto a place called Capo falso, being thirtie and odde leagues from the Cape of Bona Sperança. And on the 19. of May wee had sight of the Cape of Bona Sperança, which is the promontorie that all trauailers desire to double.

The seuenth of June wee fell with the Ilande of Saint Helena, and on the eight day wee ankered vnder it, where wee continued twelue dayes, finding it a place to our great contentment: for there we had goats, hogs, figs, oranges, limons, pomegranates, and many wholsome herbes for the gathering: But he that will haue of the cattell must trauaile a mile and an halfe vp into the steepie mountaine to kill them: we found a Church and thirtie or fourtie houses builded to lodge the Portingales, in their comming from the East Indies: There was one only banished man there which liued as an Hermite, but hee was dead before our arriuall. The twenty of June we departed from the Iland of Saint Helena shaping our course from thence for England.

Our men stayed 12. dayes in the Iland of S. Helena.

The

July. The fourth of July 1588. we passed the equinoctiall line, which was the fourth time that we had trauersed the same in this our iourney. The 24. day of August wee had sight of two Ilands of ꝑ Asores the one called Flores, the other Coruo, and directed our way from them for the August. September. Lisard vntill the third of September, at which time we espied a Flemish Hulke that came from Portingale, which tolde vs the ioyful newes of our Fleets good successe against the huge armie of the Spaniards. And on the fift day we met with a ship of Southhampton, which had taken a Brasilian pryse, whose Captaine informed vs at large of the trueth of that which had passed: We tooke some refreshing of them, which was recompensed with treble curtesie, and so entred into the narrow Seas where we had as terrible a night as euer men endured: for all our sayles were blowen quite away: but making as good shift as we could with certaine olde sayles wee had within boorde, on the next morning being the ninth of September 1588. like wearied men through the fauour of the Almightie, we gate vnto Plymmouth: where the Townes men receiued vs with all humanitie. In this voyage we burnt twentie sayles of Spanish shippes, besides diuers of their Townes and Villages.

And the sayd Sir Water Raleigh doeth further couenant, and graunt by these presents for him, his heyres, and assignes, to and with the sayd Thomas Smith, William Sanderson, and the rest aforesayd their heires & assignes, that he the said sir Water Raleigh, his heyres, or assignes, vpon sufficient & reasonable request made to him by the persons aforesayd, or any of them, their heires, or assignes, shal and wil at any time, or times hereafter, ratifie, affirme, and approue by his deede, or deedes, or by any other conueiance, or conueiances in lawe, the corporation heretofore made by him the sayde Sir Water Raleigh, consisting of one Gouernour, and twelue assistants, as by his sayd Indenture made to John White and others, more plainely doth appeare, for the more perfect, and better assurance, and sure making of the saide corporation, if any imperfection, and want in law thereof bee. And further, that hee the sayde Sir Water Raleigh, his heyres, and assignes, shall, and will, as much as in him or them lieth, procure, and indeuour to obtaine, the Queenes maiesties letters patents, for ratification, approbation, and more sure confirmation, of the sayde corporation, and societie with al prerogatiues, commodities, iurisdictions, royalties, priuiledges, and preheminences, whatsoeuer graunted, and couened by her Maiestie, to the saide Sir Water Raleigh, his heires or assignes, or by him the sayd Sir Walter Raleigh, to the said John white, and others, as by his said indenture of graunt made to the sayde John White, and others more plainely appeareth. In witnesse whereof, the parties to these presents, haue hereunto interchangeably put their hands, and seales, the day and yeere first aboue written.

A briefe remembrance, for want of further aduertisements as yet, of a voyage made this present yeere, 1589. by William Michelson Captaine, and William Mace of Ratliffe, Master of a shippe called the Dogge, to the bay of Mexico in the West India.

THe foresaide shippe called the Dogge, of the burden of threescore and ten tunnes was furnished, and armed forth with the number of 40. men: it departed from the coast of England in the moneth of May, directly for the west India: It fell with the Bay of Mexico, and there met with diuers Spanish ships at sundry times, whereof three fell into her lappes, and were forced to yeelde to the mercy of the English: the last that they met with in the Bay, was a Spanish man of warre, whome the English chased, and after three seuerall fightes, vpon three diuers dayes, pressed him so farre, that he intreated a parle, by putting out a flagge of truce: the parle was graunted, and certaine of the Spaniards came aboorde the English. Where after conference about those matters that had passed in fight betwixt them, they receiued reasonable intertaynment and a quiet farewel. The Spanish, as if they had ment to requite the English curtesie, inuited our men to their ship, who perswading themselues of good meaning in the Spanish, went aboord: but honest and friendly dealing, was not their purpose, suddenly they assaulted our men, and one with a dagger stabde the English pilot to the hart and slewe him, and others were serued with the like sauce, only william Mace the Master, and two others, notwithstanding all the prepared trappes of the enemie, lepe ouer boorde into the sea, and so came safe to their owne shippe: and directing his course for England, arriued at Plimmouth the 10. day of September last, laden with wines, pyon, Roans which is a kinde of linnen cloth, and other rich commodities, looking for the arriuall of the rest of his consorts, whereof one, and the principal, hath not long since obtayned his port. Thus much in generall termes onely, I haue as yet learned, and receiued touching this voyage, extracted out of letters sent from the foresayd William Mace, to Master Edward Wilkinson of Toure Hill in London. My principall intention by this example, is to admonish our nation of circumspection in dealing with that subtill enemie, and neuer to trust the Spanish further, then that their owne strength shalbe able to master them: for otherwise whosoeuer shall through simplicitie trust their curtesie, shall by trial taste of their assured crueltie.

The

The voyage ſet foorth by Maſter Iohn Newton, and Maſter Iohn Bird Marchants of London to the kingdome and Citie of Benin in Affrica, with a ſhip called the Richard of Arundell, and a pinneſſe in the yeere, 1588. briefely ſet downe in this letter following, written by the chiefe Factor in the voyage to the foreſaid Marchants at the time of the ſhips firſt arriual at Plymmouth.

WOrſhipfull Sirs, the diſcourſe of our whole proceeding in this voyage, will aſke more time and a perſon in better health then I am at this preſent, ſo that I truſt you will pardon me, till my comming vp to you: in the meane time let this ſuffice. Whereas we departed in the moneth of December from the coaſt of England with your good ſhip the Richard of Arundell and the pinneſſe, we held on our direct courſe towards our appointed port, and the 14. day of Febꝛuary following we arriued in the hauen of Benin, where we found not water ynough to carrie the ſhip ouer the barre, ſo that we left her without in the road, and with the pinneſſe, and ſhip boate into which we had put the chiefeſt of our marchandiſe, we went vp the riuer to a place called Goto, where we arriued the 20. of Febꝛuary, the foꝛeſaid Goto being ꝑ neereſt place that we could come to bywater, to goe foꝛ Benin. From thence we preſently ſent Negroes to the king, to certifie him of our arriuall, and of the cauſe of our comming thither: who returned to vs againe the 22. day with a noble man in their company to bring vs vp to the Citie, and with 200. Negroes to carrie our commodities: hereupon the 23. day we deliuered our Marchandiſe to the Kinges Factoꝛ, and the fiue and twentith day we came to the great Citie of Benin, where we were well intertained: The ſixe and twentith day wee went to the Court to haue ſpoken with the King, which (by reaſon of a ſolemne feaſt then kept amongeſt them) we could not doe: but yet wee ſpake with his Viadore, oꝛ chiefe man, that hath the dealing with the Chriſtians: and we conferred with him concerning our trading, who anſwered vs, that we ſhoulde haue all thinges to our deſire, both in pepper and Elephants teeth.

The firſt of March, we were admitted to the kings preſence, and he made vs the like curteous anſwere foꝛ our traffique: the next day we went againe to the Court, where the foꝛeſaid Viadore ſhewed vs one baſket of greene pepper, and another of dꝛie in the ſtalkes: we deſired to haue it pluckt from the ſtalkes, and made cleane, who anſwered, that it would aſke time, but yet it ſhould be done: and that againſt another yeere it ſhould be in better readines, and the reaſon why we found it ſo vnpꝛepaꝛed was, becauſe in this kinges time no Chriſtians had euer reſoꝛted thither, to lade pepper. The next day there were ſent vs 12. baſkets, and ſo a little euery day vntil the 9. of March at which time we had made vpon 94. ſerons of pepper, and 28. Elephantes teeth. In this time of our being at Benin, our natures at this firſt time not ſo well acquainted with that climate, we fell all of vs into the diſeaſe of the feuer, whereupon the Captaine ſent me downe with thoſe goods which we already had receiued, to the reſt of our men at Goto, where being arriued, I found all the men of our pinneſſe ſicke alſo, and by reaſon of their weakenes not able to comꝛey the pinneſſe and goods downe to the place where our ſhip roade: but by good happe within two houres after my comming to Goto, the boate came vp from the ſhip, to ſee how all things ſtood with vs, ſo that I put the goods into the boate, and went downe towards the ſhip: but by that time I was come aboꝛd, many of our men dyed: namely, Maſter Benſon, the Cowper, the Carpenter, and 3. or 4. moꝛe, and my ſelfe was alſo in ſuch a weake ſtate that I was not able to returne againe to Benin. Whereupon I ſent vp Samuel Dunne, and the Chiꝛurgian with him to our men that were aboue to let them blood, if it were thought needefull: who at their comming to Benin, found the Captaine and your ſonne William Bird dead, and Thomas Pennyſteeue very weake, who alſo dyed within two dayes after their comming thither. This ſoꝛowful accident cauſed them with ſuch pepper and teeth, as they could then finde, ſpeedely to returne to the ſhippe, as by the Cargaſon will appeare: at their comming away the Viadore told them, that if they could oꝛ would ſtay any longer time, he would vſe all poſſible expedition to bring in moꝛe commodities: but the common ſickneſs ſo increaſed, and continued amongſt vs all, that by the time our men which remayned were come aboaꝛde, wee had ſo many ſicke, and dead of our company, that wee looked all foꝛ the ſame happe, and ſo thought to looſe both our Shippe, life, Countrie and all. Very hardly and with much adoe could we get vp our ankers, but yet at the laſt by the mercie of God hauing gotten them vp, but leauing our pinnace behind vs, we got to ſea, and ſet ſayle, which was vpon the 13. of Aprill. After which by litle and litle our men began to gather vp their crums and to recouer ſome better ſtrength: and ſo ſailing betwixt the Iſlands of Cape Verde, and the mayne, we came to the Ilandes of the Açores vpon the 25. of July, where our men began a freſh to growe ill, and diuers dyed, among whom Samuell Dunne was one, and as many as remained liuing, were in a hard caſe: but in the midſt of our diſtreſſe, it fell ſo well out, by Gods good prouidence, that we mett with your ſhippe the Barke burre, on this ſide the North cape, which did not onely keepe vs good company, but alſo ſent vs 6. freſh men aboord, without whoſe helpe, we ſhould ſurely haue taſted of many inconueniences. But by this good meanes, we are now at the laſt arriued in Plymmouth, this 9. day of September: and for want of better health at this time, I referre the further knowledge of more particularities, till my comming to London.

Yours to command
Anthonie Ingram.

Of Theodore. The moſt ſolemne, and magnificent coronation of Pheodore Iuanowiche, Emperor of Ruſsia &c. the 10. of Iune, in the yeere 1584. *ſeene and obſerued by Maſter Ierom Horſey gentleman, and ſeruant to her Maieſtie, a man of great trauell, and long experience in thoſe partes: wherewith is alſo ioyned the courſe of his iourney ouer land from Moſco to Emden, the right place of which diſcourſe, is immediatly after the Embaſſage of Sir Ierom Bowes, in the ſecond part of this hiſtorie: which being fully printed, before this matter came to my hands, I am forced here to annexe it, leaſt ſo rare a thing ſhould be ſuppreſſed, and the diligent ſeruice of the foreſaid gentleman not knowne as well as others of the ſame nature.

WHen the old Emperor Iuan Vaſilewich dyed, (being about the 18. of Aprill, 1584. after our computation) in the Citie of Musko, hauing raigned 54. yeeres, there was ſome tumult, and vprore among ſome of the nobilitie, and comminaltie, which notwithſtanding was quickly pacified. Immediatly the ſame night, the Prince Boris Fedorowich Godonoua, Knez Iuan Fedorowich, Meſthis Slaſsky, Knez Iuan Petrowich Susky, Mekita Romanowich and Bodan Iacoulewich Belſkoy, being all noble men, and chiefeſt in the Emperors Will, eſpecially the Lord Boris, whom he adopted as his third ſonne, and was brother to the Empreſſe, who was a man very well liked of all eſtates, as no leſſe worthy for his valure and wiſedome, all theſe were appointed to diſpoſe, and ſettle his ſonne, Feodore Iuanowich, hauing one ſworne another, and all the nobilitie, and officers whoſoeuer. In the morning the dead Emperor was layd into the Church of Michael the Archangell, into a hewen ſepulcre, very richly decked with veſtures fit for ſuch a purpoſe: and preſent Proclamation was made, (Emperor Feodore Iuanowich of all Ruſſia &c.) Throughout all the Citie of Moſco, was great watch and ward, with ſouldyers, and gunners, good orders eſtabliſhed, and officers placed to ſubdue the tumulters, and mainteine quietnes: to ſee what ſpeede and pollicie was in this caſe vſed was a thing worth the beholding. This being done in Moſko, great men of birth and accompt, were alſo preſently ſent to the bordering Townes, as Smolensko Vobsko, Kaſan, Nouogorode &c. with freſh garriſon, and the old ſent vp. As vpon the 4. of May a parliament was held, wherein were aſſembled, the Petropolitane, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Priors, and chiefe clergie men, and all the nobilitie whatſoeuer: where many matters were determined not pertinent to my purpoſe, yet all tended to a new reformation in the gouernement: but eſpecially the terme, and time was agreed vpon for the ſolemnizing of the new Emperors coronation. In the meane time the Empreſſe, wife to the old Emperor, was with her child the Emperors ſonne, Charewich Demetrie Iuanowich, of one yeres age or there abouts, ſent with her father Feodor Feodorowich Nagay, and that kindred, being 6. Brothers, to a Towne called Owglets, which was giuen vnto her, and the yong Prince her ſonne, with all the landes belonging to it in the ſhire, with officers of all ſortes appointed, hauing allowance of apparel, iewels, dyet, horſe &c. in ample maner belonging to the eſtate of a princeſſe. The time of mourning after their vſe being expired, called Sorachyn, or forte orderlie daies, the day of the ſolemnizing of this coronation, with great preparations, was come, being vpon the 10 day of June, 1584. and that day then Sunday, he being of the age of 25. yeeres: at which time, Maſter Ierom Horſey was orderly ſent for, and placed in a fit roome to ſee all the ſolemnitie. The Emperor comming out of his Pallace, there went before him, the Petropolitan, tan, Archbishops, Bishops, and cheefest Monkes, and Clergie men, with very rich Copes, and Priestes garmentes vpon them, carying pictures of our Ladie &c. with the Emperors Angell, banners, censers, and many other such ceremonious things, singing all the way. The Emperor with his nobilitie in order entred the Church named Blaueshina, or Blessednes, where prayers, and seruice were vsed, according to the maner of their Church: that done, they went thence to the Church, called Michaell the Archangell, and there also vsed the like prayers, and seruice: and from thence to our Ladie Church, Prechista, beeing their Cathedrall Church. In the middest thereof was a chayre of maiestie placed, wherein his Auncestors vsed to sit at such extraordinarie times: his robes were then changed, and most riche and vnualuable garmentes put on him: being placed in this Princely seate, his nobilitie standing round about him in their degrees, his imperiall Crowne was set vpon his head by the Metropolitan, his Scepter globe in his right hand, his sword of Justice in his left of great riches: his 6. Crownes also, by which he holdeth his kingdoms were set before him, & the Lord Boris Pheodorowich was placed at his right hand: then the Metropolitan read openly a booke of a small volume, with exhortations to the Emperor to minister true Justice, to inioy with tranquilitie the Crowne of his auncestors, which God had giuen him, and vsed these words following.

Through the will of the almightie & without begining God which was before this world, whom we glorifie in the Trinitie, one onely God, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, maker of all things, worker of all in all euery where, fulfiller of al things, by which wil, & working, he both liueth, & giueth life to man: that our only God which enspireth euery one of vs his only children with his word to discerne God through our Lord Iesus Christ, and the holy quickning spirit of life, now in these perilous times establish vs to keepe the right Scepter, and suffer vs to raigne of our selues to the good profit of the land, to the subduing of the people, together with the enemies, and the maintenance of vertue: and so the Metropolitan blessed and layd his crosse vpon him. After this, he was taken out of his chaire of Maiestie, hauing vpon him an vpper robe adorned with precious stones of all sortes, orient pearles of great quantitie, but alwaies augmented in riches: it was in waight 200. pounds, the traine, and parts thereof borne vp by 6. Dukes, his chiefe imperiall Crowne vpon his head very precious: his staffe imperiall in his right hand of an vnicornes horne of 3. foot and a halfe in length beset with riche stones, bought of Marchants of Ausburge by the old Emperor in An. 1581. and cost him 7000. Markes sterling. This Jewel M. Horsey kept somtimes, before the Emperor had it. His scepter globe was caried before him by ỳ prince Boris Pheodorowich, his rich cap beset with rich stones & pearles was caried before him by a Duke: his 6. Crownes also were caried by Demetrius Iuanowich Godonoua, the Emperors vncle, Mekita Romanowich the Emperors vncle, Steuan Vasiliwich, Gregory Vasiliwich, Iuan Vasiliwich brothers, of the blood roiall. Thus at last the Emperor came to the great Church doore, & the people cried, God saue our Emperor Pheodore Iuanowich of all Russia. His horse was there readie most richly adorned, with a couering of imbroodered pearle & precious stones, saddle, & all furniture agreeable to it, reported to be worth 300000. markes sterling.

There was a bridge made of 150. fadome in length, 3. manner of waies, 3. foote aboue ground and two fadome broad, for him to goe from one Church to the other with his Princes and nobles from the presse of the people, which were in number infinite, and some at that time pressed to death with the throng. As the Emperor returned out of the Churches, they were spred vnder foote with cloth of gold, the porches of the Churches with red veluet, the bridges with scarlet, & stammell cloth from one church to another: and as soone as the Emperor was passed by, the cloth of gold, veluet & scarlet was cut, and taken of those that could come by it, euery man desirous to haue a piece, to reserue it for a monument: siluer, and gold coyne, then mynted of purpose was cast among the people in great quantity. The lord Boris Pheodorowich was sumptuously, & richly attired, with his garments decked with great orient pearle, beset with all sorts of precious stones. In like rich manner were appareled al the family of the Godonouaes in their degrees, with the rest of the princes, & nobility, whereof one named Knez Iuan Michalowich Glynskie, whose robe, horse, & furniture, was in register found worth C. thousand markes sterling, beeing of great antiquity. The Empresse being in her pallace, was placed in her chaire of Maiestie also before a great open window: most precious, & rich were her robes, and shining to behold, with rich stones, & orient pearle beset, her crowne was placed vpon her head, accompanied with her Princesses, & Ladies of estate: then cried out the people, God preserue our noble Empresse Irenia. After al this the Emperor came into the Parliament house which was richly decked: there he was placed in his royal seate adorned as before: his 6. crownes were set before him vpon a table: the basin, and ewer royall of gold held by his knight of garde with his men standing two on each side in white apparel of cloth of siluer, called Kindy, with scepters, and battle axes of gold in their hands: the Princes, and nobilitie were all placed according to their degrees all in their riche roabs.

The Emperor after a short oration, permitted euery man in order to kisse his hande: which being done, he remoued to a princely seate prepared for him at the table: where he was serued by his nobles in very princely order. The three out roomes being very great, and large were beset with plate of golde, and siluer round, from the ground vp to the vaults one vpon the other: among which plate were many barrels of siluer and golde: this solennitie, and triumphe lasted a whole weeke, wherein many royall pastimes were shewed and vsed: after which the chiefest men of the nobilitie were elected to their places of office, and dignitie, as the Prince Borris Fedorowich, was made chiefe Counsaylor to the Emperor, Master of the horse, had the charge of his person, Liuetenant of the Empire, and Warlike engins, Gouernour or Liuetenant of the Empire of Cazan, and Astracan and others: to this dignitie were by Parliament, and gift of the Emperor giuen him many reuenues, and rich landes, as there was giuen him, and his sor euer to inherite a prouince called Vaga, of 300. English myles in length, and 250 in bredth, with many townes and great villages populous and welthy, his yeerely reuenue out of that prouince, is 35. thousand markes sterling, being not the 5. part of his yeerely reuenue. Further, he and his house be of such authoritie, and power, that in 40. dayes warning they are able to bring into the field 100. thousand Souldiers wel furnished.

The conclusion of the Emperors Coronation was a peale of ordinance, called a peale royall two myles without the Citie, being 170. great pieces of brasse of all sortes, as faire as any can be made, these pieces were all discharged with shot against bulwarkes made of purpose: 20. thousand hargubusers standing in 8. rankes two myles in length, appareled all in veluet, coloured silke and stammels, discharged their shot also twise ouer in good order: and so the Emperor accompanied with all his princes and nobles, at the least 50. thousand horse departed through the Citie to his pallace. This royall coronation would aske much time, and many leaues of paper to bee described particularlie as it was performed: it shall suffice, to vnderstand that the like magnificence was neuer seene in Russia.

The coronation, and other triumphes ended, all the nobilitie, officers, and marchants according to an accustomed order euery one in his place, and degree brought rich presentes vnto the Emperor, wishing him long life, and ioy in his kingdome.

The same time also Master Ierom Horsey aforesaid, remayning as seruant in Russia for the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, was called for to the Emperor, as he sate in his imperiall seate, and then also a famous Marchant of Netherland being newely come to Mosco, (who gaue him selfe out to bee the king of Spaines subiect) called Iohn de Wale, was in like sort called for. Some of the nobilitie would haue preferred this subiect of the Spaniard before Master Horsey seruant to the Queene of England, whereunto Master Horsey would in no case agree, saying, he would haue his legges cutt off by the knees, before he would yeeld to such an indignitie offred to his Soueraigne the Queenes Maiestie of England, to bring the Emperor a present, in course after the King of Spaines subiect, or any other whatsoeuer. The Emperor, and the Prince Boris Fedorowiche perceiuing the controuersie, sent the Lord Treasorer Peter Iuanowiche Galauyn, and Vasilie Shalcan, both of the Counsell, to them, who deliuered the Emperor backe, Master Horseys speech: whereupon he was first in order (as good reason) admitted and presented the Emperor in the behalfe of the English Marchants trading thither, a present wishing him ioy, and long to raigne in tranquilitie, and so kissed the Emperours hand, he accepting the present with good liking, and auowching, that for his sisters sake Queene Elizabeth of England, he would be a gracious Lord to her Marchants, in as ample manner as euer his father had ben: and being dismissed, he had the same day sent him 70. dishes of sundry kinds of meats with 3. carts laden with all sorts of drinkes very bountifully. After him, was the foresaid subiect of the Spanish king admitted with his present, whom the Emperor willed to be no lesse faythfull and seruiceable vnto him, then the Queene of Englands subiects were and had ben, and then the king of Spaines subiects should receiue fauor accordingly.

Al these things thus in order performed praises were sung in all the churches. The Emperor, & Empresse very deuoutly resorted one foote, to many principal Churches in the Citie, and vpon Trinitie Sunday betooke them selues to a progresse, in order of procession, to a famous monasterie called Sergius, and the Trinitie, 60. myles distant from the Citie of Mosco, accompanied with a huge armie of noble men, gentlemen and others, mounted vpon goodly horse, with furniture accordingly.

The Empresse of deuotion tooke this iourney on foote all the way, accompanied with her Prinprincesses, and ladyes, no smal number: her garde, and gunners were in number 20000. her chiefe Counseller or attendant was a noble man of the blood Royal her vncle of great authoritie, called Demetrie Iuanowich Godonoua.

All this progresse ended, both the Emperour, and Empresse returned to Mosco: shortly after the Emperour by the direction of the prince Boris Fedorowich, sent a power into the lande of Siberia, where all the rich Sables, and Furres, are gotten. This power conquered in one yeere and a halfe, 1500. myles. In the performance of this warre, there was taken prisoner the Emperour of the countrie called Chare Sibersky: and with him many other Dukes, and noble men, which were brought to Mosco, with a garde of souldiers, and gunners, who were received into the citie in very honourable maner, and do there remayne to this day.

Chare Siberskie prince of Siberia taken prisoner and brought to Mosco.

Hereupon the corrupt officers, Iudges, Iustices, Captaines, and Lieutenants though the whole kingdome were removed, and more honest men substituted in their places, with expresse commaundement, vnder seuere punishment to surceasse their old bribing, and extortion which they had vsed in the old Emperours time, and now to execute true iustice without respect of persons: and to the ende that this might bee the better done, their landes, and yerely stipends were augmented: the great tasks, customs, and dueties, which were before layd vpon the people in the old Emperours time, were now abated, and some wholy remitted, and no punishments commanded to be vsed, without sufficient and due proofe, although the crime were capital, deseruing death: many Dukes and noble men of great houses, that were vnder displeasure, and imprisoned 20. yeeres by the old Emperour, were now set at libertie and restored to their landes: all prisoners were set at libertie, and their trespasses forgiuen. In summe, a great alteration vniuersally in the gouernment followed, and yet all was done quietly, ciuilly, peaceably, without trouble to the Prince, or offence to the Subiect: and this hedde great assurance, and honour to the kingdome: and all was accomplished by the wisdome especially of Irenia the Empresse.

These things being reported & carryed to the eares of the kings, & princes that were borderers vpon Russia, they grew so fearefull and terrible to them, that the Monarch of all the Scythians called the Crimme Tartar or great Chan himselfe, named Sophet Keri Alli, came out of his owne country to the Emperour of Russia, accompanyed with a great number of his nobilitie well horsed, although to them that were Christians they seemed rude, yet they were personable men, and valiant: their comming was gratefull to the Emperour, and their intertaynement was honourable, the Tartar prince hauing brought with him his wiues also, receiued of the Russe Emperour, intertainement, and princely welcome according to their estates.

Sophet Keri Alli king of the Crimmes, arriuall at Mosco.

Not long after, 1200. Polish gentlemen, valiant Souldiers, and proper men came to Mosco offering their seruice to the Emperour, who were all intertayned: and in like sorte many Chirkasses, and people of other nations came and offered seruice. And, alsoone as the report of this newe created Emperour was spred ouer other kingdomes of Europe, there were sent to him sundry Ambassadours to wish him ioy, and prosperitie in his kingdome: thither came Ambassadours from the Turke, from the Persian, the Bogharian, the Crimme, the Georgian, and many other Tartar princes. There came also Ambassadours from the Emperour of Almaine, the Pole, the Swethen, the Dane, &c. And since his coronation no enemie of his hath preuailed in his attempts.

It fell out not long after, that the Emperour was desirous to send a message to the most excellent Queene of England, for which seruice he thought no man fitter then M. Ierom Horsie, supposing that one of the Queenes owne men and subiects would be the more acceptable to her. The summe of which message was, that the Emperour desired a continuance of that league, friendship, amitie and intercourse of traffique which was betweene his father, and the Queenes Maiestie and her subiects, with other priuate affayres besides, which are not to bee made common. M. Horsey hauing receiued the letters, and requests of the Emperour, prouided for his iourney ouer land, and departed from Mosko the 5. day of September, thence to Otuer, thence to Torshook, to great Nouogorode, to Vobskye, and thence to Nyhouse in Liuonia, to Wenden, and so to Riga: (where he was beset, & brought forth with before a Cardinal, called Rageuill, but yet suffered to passe in the ende:) From thence to Myto, to Golden, and Libou in Curland, to Memel, to Koningsburgh in Prussia, to Meluin, to Dantzike, to Stetine in Pomerland, to Rostok, to Lubek, to Hamborough, to Breame, to Emden, and by sea to London. Being arriued at her Maiesties royall court, and hauing deliuered the Emperours letters, with good fauour, and gratious acceptance, he was forthwith againe commanded to repasse into Russia, with other letters from her Maiestie to the Emperour, and Prince Boris Fedorowich, answering the Emperours letters, and withall requesting the fauour and friendship, which his father had yeelded to the English Merchants: and hereunto was he earnestly also solicited by the Merchants of London themselues of that company, to deale in their behalfe: being thus dispatched from London by sea, he arriued in Mosco the 20. of April 1586. and was very honorably welcommed. And for the merchants behoofe, obtayned all his requests, being therein specially fauoured by the noble prince Boris Fedorowich, who alwayes affected M. Horsey with speciall liking. And hauing obtayned priuiledges for the merchants, hee was recommended from the Emperour againe, to the Queene of Englande his mistresse, by whome the prince Boris, in token of his honorable, and good opinion of the Queenes Maiestie, sent her highnesse a royall present of Sables, Luzarns, cloth of golde, and other riche things. So that the company of English marchants, next to their thankfulnes to her Maiestie, are to account M. Horses paines their special benefite, who obtained for them those priuiledges, which in twentie yeeres before would not be granted.

The maner of M. Horseys last dispatch from the Emperour because it was very honourable, I thought good to record. He was freely allowed post horses for him, and his seruants, victuals, and all other necessaries for his long iourney: at euery towne that he came vnto from Mosco to Vologda, which is by lande 500. myles, hee receiued the like free, and bountifull allowances, at the Emperours charge. New victuall, & prouision were giuen him vpon the riuer Dwina at euery towne by the kings officers being 1000. of their miles in length. When he came to the new castle called Archangel he was receiued of the Duke Knez Vasili Andrewich Isuenogorodski by the Emperours commission into the Castle, gunners being set in ranks, after their vse, where he was sumptuously feasted: from thence he was dispatched with bountifull prouision, and allowance in the Dukes boate with 100. men to rowe him, 100 gunners in other boats to conduct him, with a gentleman captaine of the Gunners. Comming to the roade, where the English, Dutch, and French shippes ridde, the gunners discharged, and the ships shot in like maner 46. pieces of their ordinance, and so he was brought to his lodging at the English house vpon Rose Island.

And that which was the ful. and complet conclusion of the fauour of the Emperour and Boris Federowich toward M. Horsey, there were the next day sent him for his further prouision vpon the sea by a Gentilman and a Captaine the things following.

16. liue oxen,	2. swannes.
70. sheepe.	65. gallons of meade.
600. hennes.	40. gallons of Aquauitæ
25. fleeches of Bacon.	60. gallons of beare.
80. bushels of meale.	3. pong beares.
600. loaues of bread.	4. hawks.
2000. egges.	Store of onyons, and garlike.
10. geese.	10. fresh salmons.
2. cranes.	A wilde boare.

All these things were brought him downe by a gentleman of the Emperours, and another of prince Boris Fedorowich, and were receiued in order by Iohn Frese seruant to M. Horsey, together with an honorable present, and reward from the Prince Boris, sent him by Francis Cherry an Englishman: which present was a whole very rich peece of cloth of gold, and a fayre payre of Sables. This Gentleman hath obserued many other rare things concerning those parts, which hereafter (God willing) at more conuenient time, and leasure shall come to light.

Pheodor Iuanowich the newe Emperours gratious Letter of priuiledge to the English Marchants word for word: obtayned by M. Ierom Horsey. 1586.

THrough the wil of the almightie and without beginning God, which was before this world, whome we glorifie in the trinitie, one only God, the father, the sonne, and the holy ghost, maker of all thinges, worker of all in all euery where, fulfiller of all things, by which will and working, he both loueth, and giueth life to man, That our only God, which inspyreth euery one of vs his only Children with his woorde, to discerne God through our Lord Iesus Christ, and the holy quickning spirit of life now in these perilous times, Establish vs to keepe the right Septer, and suffer vs of our selues to raigne to the good profite of the land, and to the subduing of the people, together with the enemies, and to the maintenance of vertue.

We Pheodor, the of spring of Iohn, the great Lord, Emperour, King and great Prince of all Russia, of Volademeria, Moscouia, and Nouogorode, king of Kasan, king of Astracan, Lord of Plesko, & great prince of Smolenskay, of Twer, Yougoria, Perme, Vatkay, of Bolghaire and others, Lord and great Prince of the land of the lower Nouogorod, Chernegay, Rezan, Polotskay, Rostow, Yeroslaue, the white lake, Leifland, Owdor, Condence, and Ruler of all Seberia, and all the Northside, and Lord of many other Countries.

I haue gratified the marchants of England, to wit, S. Rowland Hayward, & Richard Martin Aldermen,

I haue licensed them to saile with their ships into our dominyon, the lande of Dwina with all kind of commodities to trade freely and vnto our kingdome and the citie of Mosco and to all the cities of our Empire of Moscouia.

And the english merchants, S. Rowland Hayward, & his societie desired vs, that we would gratifie them to trade into our kingdome of Moscouia, & into our heritage of great Nouogorod, and Plesko, and into al parts of our kingdome, to bye, and sell, with their wares, without custome.

Therfore we for our sisters sake Queene Elizabeth, & also because that they aledge, that they had great losse & hinderance by the venture of the sea, & otherwise, haue gratified the said english merchants, S. Rouland Hayward & his societie, freely to come into our kingdome of Moscouia, & into all our dominions with al kind of commodities, to trade, trafficke freely, & at their pleasure with all kinde of their commodities: also I haue commanded not to take any maner of custome for their goods, nor other customs what soeuer, That is to say, neither for palling by any place by water, nor for launching, neither for palling thrugh any place by land, neither for the vessels or boates, nor for their heads, nor for palling ouer bridges, nor for ferying ouer at any place, neither for acknowledgement at any place where they shall come, nor any manner of custome or duety, by what name soeuer.

Only they shal not bring vnto them into our dominions, neither recarry out of our dominions, or father any other mens goods, but their owne, neither sell them, nor barter them away for them.

Also our naturall people shall not buy and sell for them, or from them, neither shall they retayne or keepe any of our naturall subiects goods, or pawnes by them to coulour them.

Also they shall not send any of their Russe seruants about into any citie to ingrosse, or buy vp commodities, but into what cittie they themselues shal come, they shall buye and sell, and shall sell their owne commodities and not ours.

And when they shall come into our inheritance of great Nouogorod, and Plesko and thrugh all our dominions with their commodities, then our noblemen and captaines, & euery one of our officers, shall suffer them to depart according to this our letter, & shall take no custome at all of them, for any of their commodities, neither for palling thrugh or palling by, nor for passage ouer any bridges, nor shall take of them any other dutie whatsoeuer name they haue.

Also into what places of our dominion, or when they shal happen to come, and to proceed to buy or sell, and whersoeuer they shall passe thrugh with goods not buying of any commodities, neither will sell their owne, then in those cities and townes they shall take no maner of custome or duetie of them, accordingly as before.

And I haue gratified them and giuen them free leaue to trafficke thrugh out all the dominions of our kingdome, in all cities with their goods to buy and sell al manner of commodities, without any duety or custome, whatsoeuer.

And the English merchants, where they are desirous to buy, or sell, or barter their wares with our merchants, whole wares for wares, they shal sell their commodities whole, and not by retaile: That is to say, neither by small weight, nor by the yard, to sell or barter in their own houses, & they shal sell and barter their wares wholy, Cloth by the packe, and by the whole cloth, and Dammaske and veluet by the peece, and not by the yard, and al maner of commodities that are to be sold by weight, not to sel by the smal weights, as by the pound, and ounce, but by whole sale: also they shal sell wines by the pype, and by the gallon, quart, or Stoope they shall not sell.

And they shal buye, sell, and exchange their owne commodities themselues, and the Russe merchants shall not make sales, or exchange for them or from them any of their commodities, neither shall they themselues conuay or carie thrugh any other mans goods at no place in stead of their owne: and which of the english merchants wil at any time sell his commodities at Colmogro or Vologda, or Yeroslaue they may, and of their commodities throughout al our cities and dominions, our noblemen, captaines, and euery of our officers shal take no manner of custome, according as it is written in this our gratious letter: and throughout all our dominions and cities they shall hire carriers, and vessels with men to labour, at their owne charge, to transporte their goods.

So likewise, whensoeuer the english merchants, are disposed to depart out of our kingdome into any other countrie or into their owne land, if our pleasure be, they shall take our goods with them from our Treasurie, and shal sell them, and exchange them for such commoditie as is commodious for our kingdome, and shall deliuer it into our Treasurie, & with those our commodities, our Noblemen and captaines, and euery of our officers shal let them passe thrugh all our cities also without custome according to these our letters.

Also

Also when so euer the English merchants shal haue sold their own goods, & bought themselues commodities, and will depart out of Mosco, then they shall manifest themselues to our chiefe Secretary, Andrew Sholkaloue, in the office where the Ambassadours are alwaies dispatched.

And if the English merchants comming, haue had any mischance by the sea, insomuch that the ship be broken, or if that ship do come to any part of our countrie: then we wil cause the goods to be sought out in true Iustice, and to be giuen to the English people, which at that time shalbe here resident in our countrie: and if so be that it so fall out that at that time there be no English men within our realme: then will we cause these goods to be laide vp in a place together, and when the people of England shall come into our realme, then we will commaund all those goods to be deliuered to the said English people.

Also wee haue gratified all the English merchants, with the house of one Vrie, here in the Mosco right ouer against S. Maximes church behind the market, and they shal dwell in the same house according as before time, and they shall keepe one alwaies in the house to keepe it, either a Russe, or one of their owne people.

Also the English merchants shal possesse their houses, to wit, at Yeroslaue, Vologday, Colmogro, and the house at the hauen of the sea, and they shall dwel in those houses, according as our goodnesse hath bene to them heretofore: and we haue commaunded, that there shal not be taken of them no yeerely rent, nor no maner of custome, taxe, rent or any other duetie whatsoeuer for those houses, neither shall pay any duetie, or taxe with any of the townes men of those places, and in euery one of those houses, to wit, at Yeroslaue, Vologday, and Colmogro, they shall haue men to keepe their houses, two or three of their owne countrie people, strangers, or else Russes, men of the meanest sort, which shalbe no marchants, that they may lay their goodes in those houses, and they may sell the commodities out of those their houses to whome they please, according to this our gratious letter: and those that keepe their houses shall not sell or buye no part of there commoditie, except they be there or giue order, whereby they be not deceiued by them.

So likewise I haue gratified them with their house at the sea hauen, at the mouth of Pawdazemskay, and we haue commaunded, that they shall not carrie their goods from thence to the new castell S. Michael tharchangel, but shall ariue, and do as they haue done heretofore with their wares at that their house, and shall vnlade their commodities out of their ships and shall lade them againe with Russe cõmodities, euen there at that their house without interruption: only they shall permit our officers of Colmogro & swome men to write vp those commodities, both the commodities of England, & those of Russeland, what the marchants shal declare themselues, and no otherwise, but they shal not ouerlooke their commodities, neither shall they vnbinde any of their packs.

And when the English merchants are disposed to sende into their owne countrie, to wit, any of their owne people on lande through any other kingdome whatsoeuer, they shall not sende their people without our kingly knowledge and commaundement, and which of their people so euer they do meane to send out of our kingdome, into their own country, then they shall send those their people, not without our kingly Maiesties knowledge, to wit, those that go of pleasure without carrying any commodities with them, and they shal haue a letter of passe giuen vnto them, out of the office where the Ambassadours haue alwayes their dispatch.

And who so euer hath any thing to doe with them in matters of controuersie, either concerning marchandize or iniuries, then they are to be iudged by our treasurers and Secretarie of the Ambassadours office to doe iustice betweene both parties, and to seeke out the trueth of matters in all things, and whatsoeuer cannot be found out by the Lawe, shalbe tryed by othe and lots: whose lot so euer is taken forth, him to haue right.

And in what place of all our kingdome, in what citie so euer, they or their people shalbe, and that there happen any matter of controuersie, either concerning marchandise, iniuries, or otherwise, that they haue occasion to set vpon any man by lawe, or that any seeke vpon them, concerning what matter so euer in all our kingdome and cities, then our lieutenants, captaines, and our officers shall giue them Iustice, and shall minister all true iustice betweene them, seeking out the truth: and what cannot be truly sought by law, shalbe sought out by othe and lot: whose lot soeuer is taken out, him to haue right accordingly as before, and the Iudges or Iustices shall take of them no kinde of dutie, for matters of law no where throughout all our Realmes. This letter is giuen in our princely Pallace within the cittie of Mosco, in the yeere from the foundation of the world, seuen thousand foure score and fiftene, in the moneth of Febuary.
